Conjoint will, joint will, mutual wills, legal phrases of obscure (without much discrimination. Especially (a) A testament or act by two persons jointly uniting in the same instrument, as their will to take effect after the death of both. (b) A similar instrument to take effect as to each on his or her death. These two classes are more properly termed joint or compact. (c) Wills made in connection by two persons pursuant to a compact binding each to the other to make the dispositions of property thus declared. (d) Wills made to bequeath the effects of the one first dying to the survivor. These two classes are particularly the last are more appropriately termed mutual. The legal effect of such wills is often a matter of doubt. Factum of a will. See factum. Freedom of the will, a mental attribute the existence of which is disputed. The phrase is taken in different senses by different thinkers: (a) The power of doing right on all occasions. (b) That freedom of which we have an immediate consciousness in action. This is, however, only the consciousness of being able to overcome some unspecified resistance to some unspecified extent, which implies and is implied in the fact of resistance, and is in fact but an aspect of the sense of action and reaction. (c) The power of acting from an inward spontaneity, not altogether dominated by motives. This is what most of the metaphysical advocates of the freedom of the will specifically contend for. It is a limitation of the action of causality, even in the material world. Some would restrict the spontaneous power of the mind to making parts answer without variation of their relative, but this is untenable, since the law of action and reaction, which would thus be vitiated is far more accurately proved than that of the conservation of energy, the evidence for which is imperfect while the objections to it are weighty. It is contended on the one hand that such spontaneity is an indispensable condition of moral action, and on the other that if it exists it has no direct reference to morals. By accepting this, so far as a being is spontaneous in the sense, he is free from the moral law as well as from that of causation and that there is neither sense nor justice in holding him responsible for mere agonistic effects of pure non-causes. Responsibility if unargued, ought to imply that a man's conduct can be regulated by principles or efficient causes, and is not free from the influence of causation. Free will, liberty; freedom. Liberty as to choice in faith or conduct; also the faculty of will as being free, or not absolutely subject to causation.

Certainly there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief . . . affecting free will in thinking, as well as in acting. Bacon, Truth (ed. 1887).

We thus, in thought, never escape determination and necessity. It will be observed that I do not consider this inability to the notion any disproof of the fact of free-will.
Sir W. Hamilton, Works, p. 611.

Good will. (a) Favor, kindness. (b) Sincerity, right intention.

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will. Phil. i. 15.

His willes†, of his own will, voluntarily.

> A thyng that no man wol, his wylles, heide.
> Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 7?? (Hatt. MS.).

Ill will, enmity, unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice. Compare good will and will. Inofficious will. See inofficious. Joint will, mutual wills. See conjoint will. Officious will. See officious. Register of wills. See register[2]. Roman will, a form of ancient Roman will which in later times was allowed in the Eastern Empire, and generally known as the Roman will, combining something of the form of the manciputory with the efficacy of the Prætorian testament. See testament, Manse. Simple will. See simple. Statute of Wills, the name commonly designating a British or an American statute regulating the power to make wills; more specifically, an English statute of 1540 (superseded by the Wills Act) by which persons seised in socage were allowed to devise all their lands except to bodies corporate, and persons seised in chivalry were allowed to devise two thirds (sometimes also called the Wills Act. Tenant at will. See tenant[1]. To have one's will, to obtain what is desired. To work one's will, to act absolutely according to one's own will, wish, pleasure, or fancy, do entirely what one pleases (with something).

> For tho' the Giant Ages heave the hill
> And break the shore, and evermore > Make and break, and work their will,
> What know we greater than the soul?
> Tennyson, Death of Wellington.

Wills Act, an English statute of 1837 (7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict., c. 26) which repealed the Statute of Wills, and enacted that all property may be disposed of by will. It required wills to be in writing, signed at the foot, and attested by two witnesses, and declared the effect of certain words and phrases in them. The amendment of 1852 (15 and 16 Vict., c. 24) relates to the position of the signature. With a will, with willingness and earnestness, with all one's heart, heartily.

Mr. Herbert threw himself into the business with a will.
Dickens, Great Expectations, xiv.

will[2] (wil), v.; pret. and pp. willed, ppr. willing (pres. ind. 3d pers. wills). [< ME. willen, willen (pret. willede), < AS. willian (pret. willode), will, demand, desire; < AS. wilnian, > ME. wilnen, desire, wish (see wilful); secondary verb, from the primitive verb represented by will[1]. The two verbs (will[1] and will[2]) early became confused, more esp. in cases in which the auxiliary verb was used as a principal verb.] I. trans. 1. To wish; desire. [Archaic.]

> There, there Hortensio, will you any wife?
> Shak. T. of the S., I. 1. 60.

> A great party in the state
> Willed me wed to her.
> Tennyson, Queen Mary, I. 4.

2†. To command; order; direct; bid; require; request; direct; tell; bid; order; command.

Within half an houre after, Mr. Isaac willed the said Hugh to go to Mr. Ralegh and will her to send the said lady a couple of the best chickens.
Darrell Papers, 1586 (in Hall's Society in Elizabethan Age, App. II.).

Sir Ladron, your sonne and my cousin willed me . . . that I should write vnto you the sorrow which I conceiued of the sickenesse your Lordship hath had.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 180.

Now here she writes, and wills me to repent.
Marlowe, Jew of Malta, III. 4.

Gaston and his company . . . wrote a letter to Onkus, willing him to deliver their friend Miantunnomoh.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 158.

3. To determine by act of choice; decide; decree; ordain; betide, to intend; purpose.

All such Buttes and Bogge shrubs as may be found to serue we will shalbe filled with Tarras-style.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 308.

Two things he willeth, that we should be good, and that we should be happy. Barrow, Sermons, III. iv.

Man in his state of innocency had freedom and power to will and to do that which was well pleasing to God; but yet mutably, so that he might fall from it.
C. Mather, Mag. Chris., v. 1

Man always wills to do that which he desires most, and when he does not feel himself obliged by the sentiment of duty to do that which he desires less.
Mandeley, Body and Will, p. 92.

We shall have success if we truly will success, not otherwise. O. W. Holmes, Essays, p. 118.

4. To dispose of by will or testament; give as a legacy; bequeath: as, he willed the farm to his nephew.

Servants and their families descended from father to son, or were sometimes willed away, the servant being given within limits his choice of a master.
The Century, XXXVI. 277.

5. To bring under the influence or control of the will of another; subject to the power of another's will. [Recent.]

The one to be willed would go to the other end of the horse, if desired, whilst we agreed upon the thing to be done. Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, I. 57, note.

II. intrans. 1. To wish; desire; prefer; resolve; determine; decree.

As will the rust, so willeth Winchester. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 162.

You, likewise, our late guests, if so you will,
Follow us. Tennyson, Princess, v.

2. To exercise the will.

See how my sin-bemangled body lies,
Not having pow'r to will, nor will to rise!
Quarles, Emblems, iv. 8.

He that shall turn his thoughts inwards upon what passes in his own mind when he wills, shall see that the will or power of volition is conversant about nothing but that particular determination of the mind, whereby barely, by a thought, the mind endeavours to give rise, continuation, or stop to any action which it takes to be within its power. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. § 20.

will[3]†, a. [Sc. also wull; < ME. will, wille, < Icel. villr (for vilhr*), wild: see wild.] Astray; wrong; at a loss; bewilderd.

Adam went out ful wille o wan
Quoted in Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), Gloss., p. 213.

All wery I wex and wyll of my gate
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2369.

And wull and waif for eight lang years
They sall'd upon the sea
Romer Hapmond (Child's Ballads, I. 253).

will[3]†, v. i. [< will[3], a.] To wander; go astray; be lost, at a loss, or bewildered. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2350.

willcock (wil'kok), n. Same as willock.

willed (wild), a. [< ME. willed; < will[1], n., + -ed[2].] 1. Having a will; determined as to will: usually in composition, as in self-willed, weak-willed.

He is wylled that comynge anyon and trete schold be had Paston Letters, I. 15.

2. Brought under the influence or control of the will of another.

willemite (wil'em-īt), n. [Named after Willem I., king of the Netherlands.] A mineral of resinous lustor and yellowish-green or flesh-red color, a native silicate of zinc. It is of rare occurrence in Europe, but is found abundantly in New Jersey, and there constitutes a very valuable zinc ore. Troostite is a crystallized variety containing some manganese.

willer (wil'ėr), n. [< will[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who wishes; a wisher: used in some rare compounds: as, an ill-willer. — 2. One who wills.

He pleased to cast a glance on two considerations — 1. What the will is to which, 2. Who the willer is to whom, we must submit. Barrow, Sermons, II. xxxvi.

The problem can never be solved as long as contact of any sort is allowed between the willer and the willed. Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, II. 10.

willet (wil'et), n. [So called from its cry; cf. pull-willet.] A North American bird of the snipe family, the semipalmated tattler or stone curlew, Symphemia semipalmata. It is a large, stout tattler with semipalmated toes (see cut under semipalmate), stout bill, bluish feet, and much variegated plumage, especially in summer, the wings being mirrored with white and lined with black, the length is about 16 inches. It abounds in temperate North America, and especially in the United States, it extends north to or at least breeds throughout its range, and winters in the Southern states. Some related tattlers are occasionally mistaken for the species, and called willet by sportsmen. See Symphemia.

Willet (Symphemia semipalmata).

Across the dune, curlews, gulls pelicans, water-turkeys, and willets were feeding. Harper's Mag., LXX. 723.

willful, willfully, etc. See wilful, etc.

willick, n. A Scotch variant of willock.

willie, a. Same as willy[1].

willie-fisher (wil'i-fish'ėr), n. The common tern or sea-swallow. See cut under Sterna. [Forfar, Scotland.]

willie-hawkie (wil'i-hâ'ki), n. The little grebe, or dabchick. C. Swainson. [Antrim, Ireland.]

willie-man-beard (wil'i-man-bērd'), n. The sea-stickleback, Spinachia vulgaris. Compare cut under stickleback. [Local, Eng.]

willie-muftie, n. See willy-mufty.

willing (wil'ing), n. [< ME. willing; verbal n. of will, v.] Inclination; desire; intention.

The evil natures, and the evil principles, and the evil manners of the world, these are the causes of our imperfect willings and weaker actings in the things of God. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 13.

willing (wil'ing), a. [< ME. willing, for earlier wilnende, < AS. wilnende, wellende, ppr. of wilnian, will: see will[1]. Willing in mod. use also represents the ppr. of will[2].] 1. Favorably disposed; ready; inclined; desirous: as, willing to work; willing to depart.

I shall be willing, if not apt, to learn.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, ii. 1.

King Henry, having entred a Throne in a Storm, was willing now to have a Calm. Baker, Chronicles, p. 177.

If others make easier conditions of blessedness, no wonder if their doctrine be entertained by those who are willing to be happy but unwilling to leave their sins. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ii.

I never hear any thing of the Countess [of Oxford] except just now, that she is grown tired of sublunary affairs, and willing to come to a composition with her lord Walpole, Letters, II. 2.

The 21st day Captain Eaton came to an Anchor by us; he was very willing to have conserted with us again Dampier, Voyages, I. 153.

2. Voluntary; cheerfully given, granted, done, or borne: as, willing service; willing poverty.

I raise him thus, and with this willing kiss I seal his pardon Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, iv. 1.

And Ulysses' soul and all the rest,
Are held with his melodious harmony
In willing chains and sweet captivity
Milton, Vacation Exercise, l. 52.

The chief is apt to get an extra share [of the spoils], either by actual capture, or by the willing award of his comrades H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 542.

3. Characterized by promptness or readiness in action; free from reluctance, laziness, or slowness: as, a willing horse; a willing hand.

Mount the decks, and call the willing wind.
Pope, Odyssey, ix. 655.

4†. In harmony or accord; like minded.

I am perswaded the Devill himself he was never willing with their proceedings. N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 22.

= Syn. 1. Minded. — 2. Spontaneous, etc. See voluntary.

willing-hearted (wil'ing-här'ted), a. Well-inclined; heartily consenting.

And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered offered an offering of gold unto the Lord. Ex. xxxv. 22.

willingly (wil'ing-li), adv. [< ME. willingly; < willing + -ly[2].] In a willing manner. Specifically — (a) Of one's own will, choice, or consent; voluntarily, knowingly.

Heer I sware that never willingly
In werk ne thought I nil yow disobeye
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 306.

By labour and intense study, . . . joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to after times as they should not willingly let it die. Milton, Church-Government, ii., Int.

(b) Readily; cheerfully.

Not . . . as it were of necessity, but willingly.
Philem. 14.

Proud of employment, willingly I go.
Shak., L. L. L., II. 1. 35.

They would willingly have beene friends, or have given any composition they could willingness (wil'ing-nes), n. 1. The state or character of being willing; free choice or consent of the will; readiness.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 90.

I would expend it with all willingness.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 180.

Satan o'ercomes none but by Willingnesse.
Herrick, Temptations.

Many brauados they made, but, to appease their fury, our Captaine prepared with as seeming a willingnesse (as they) to incounter them
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 177.

Constraint in all things, makes the pleasure less;
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness.
Dryden, Aurungzebe, ii. 1.

They are after another declared their conviction of their errors, and their willingness to receive baptism.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 6.

2†. Good will; readiness.

We, having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness rids way.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 3. 21.

= Syn. 1. Forwardness, Willingness. See forwardness.

will-in-the-wisp (wil'in-thē-wisp), n. Same as will-o'-the-wisp.

Willisian (wil'is-i-an), a. [< Willis (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Thomas Willis, an English anatomist, famous for his researches on the brain and nerves. Specifically, in anat.: (a) Noting a remarkable anastomosis of arteries at the base of the brain. See circle of Willis, under circle. (b) Noting the old enumeration of nine pairs of cranial nerves (now counted as twelve pairs).

Willis's disease. Diabetes.

williwaw (wil'i-wâ), n. [Origin obscure.] A sudden, violent squall of wind. Also spelled willywaw.

These whirlwind squalls formerly called, by the seamen in Tierra del Fuego, williwaws. They may be truly termed hurricane squalls — like those at Gibraltar, in a violent Levanter. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 125.

will-less (wil'les), a. [< will[1] + -less.] 1. Lacking will-power; having no will or volition; not volitional.

A merely knowing, quite will-less being.
Du Prel, Philos. of Mysticism (trans. 1889), II. 3.

2. Involuntary.

Your blind duty and will-less resignation.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, I. xv.

willock (wil'ok), n. [Cf. Sc. willick, a young heron, also the puffin.] The common murre or guillemot, Uria troile or Lomvia troile, a bird of the auk family, abundant on both coasts of the North Atlantic. Also willcock. See cut under murre[2]. [Local, British.]

will-o'-the-wisp (wil'o-thē-wisp), n. 1. The ignis fatuus; hence, any person or thing that deludes or misleads by dazzling, visionary, or evanescent appearances. Also will-in-the-wisp, will-with-a-wisp, and Jack o' lantern.

All this hide and seek, this will-o-the wisp, has no other meaning than a Christian marriage for sweet Mrs. Belinda. Vanbrugh, Provoked Wife, v. 3.

Wicked sea will-o'-the wisp!
Wolf of the shore! dog, with thy lying lights
Thou hast betray'd us on these rocks of thine!
Tennyson, Harold, ii. 1.

2. A common fresh-water alga, Nostoc commune; so named from its sudden and seemingly mysterious appearance. See Nostoc.

willow[1] (wil'o), n. and a. [Also dial. willy; < ME. widowe, widow, welughe, welwe, welge, < AS. welig = MD. welighe, wilghe, later wilge, D. wilg = MLG. LG. wilge, willow; root uncertain. For other names, cf. sallow[2] and withy.] I. n. 1. A plant of the genus Salix, consisting of trees, shrubs, and rarely almost herbaceous plants, of the many species a few are of decided economic worth as furnishing osiers (osier willow, crack willow, purple wil-

Black Willow (Salix nigra).

a, branch with female aments; g, male aments; s, capsule, opening; b, seed; c, leaf.

low, white willow), or for their wood (crack willow, white willow), or for their bark, which in northern Europe is esteemed equal to oak-bark for tanning. Many are excellent for fixing loose sands, some serve for hedges, while several are highly ornamental. A few plants with some similarity to the willow have borrowed its name. See osier, sallow, and the phrases below.

Now wydewe, bumbee, bromes, thing that eenth
Let plaunte.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

2. The wood of the willow; hence, in base-ball and cricket, the bat. — Almond or almond-leaved willow, a moderate-sized tree, Salix amygdalina, found in wet grounds in the northern Old World, having the leaves white, but not silky beneath. It is much cultivated for basket-making. Also French willow. — Babylonian willow (of Psalm cxxxvii.), probably a species of poplar, Populus Euphratica. The weeping willow (Salix once supposed to be the tree, fancy associating its pendulous branches with the hanging of the harps. The oleander is sometimes selected as the tree. Compare weeping willow.—Bay willow. (a) Salix pentandra, a shrub or small tree of Europe and temperate Asia, having broadly ovate or oblong leaves, which are thick, smooth, and shining, rendering it highly ornamental. (b) See willow-herb.—Bedford willow. See crack willow.—Bitter willow. See purple willow.—Black willow. (a) A tree of moderate size, Salix nigra, widely distributed in North America, commonly found bending over watercourses. The wood is of little value, the bark contains salicylic acid, and is a popular domestic febrifuge. See cut on preceding page. (b) The variety Scouleriana of Salix fluviatilis, found on the western coast of North America, a small tree with the wood light, hard, strong, and tough. (c) Same as bay willow (a). [Local, Eng.]—Brittle willow. Same as crack willow.—Crack willow, a tall handsome tree, Salix fragilis, so called because the twigs break easily from the branches. It is native in Europe and Asia, and is often cultivated, affording, with the closely related white willow, the best willow-timber. A hybrid, S. fissurigena, of this and the white willow is the Bedford or Leicester willow, whose bark is said to contain more tannin than oak-bark, and more salicin than most of the genus.—Desert willow, a small tree of willow-like habit, Chilopsis salicina, of the Bignoniaceæ, found in arid regions in the southwestern United States and northern Mexico. The flowers, borne in terminal racemes, have a funnel-form corolla swollen out above, an inch or two long, colored white and purplish; the pods resemble those of Catalpa.—Diamond willow, a form of the heart-leafed willow (see below) growing on the banks of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers, having remarkable diamond-shaped scars due to the arrest of wood growth at the base of atrophied twigs. It is made into unique canes.—Dwarf gray willow. Same as sage-willow.—French willow. (a) Same as almond willow. (b) See willow-herb.—Glaucous willow, the pussy-willow.—Glossy willow, same as shining willow.—Goat willow, the great sallow, Salix caprea. See sallow[1].—Golden willow or osier. See white willow.—Ground willow, Salix arctica, and perhaps other dwarf northern species. See Salix.—Heart-leafed willow, Salix cordata, the most widely distributed and variable American willow, a tall shrub with the leaves narrow but heart-shaped at the base. A variety, S. rostrata is the diamond willow (see above).—Hedge willow, the sallow, Salix caprea.—Hoop willow. Same as ring willow.—Huntington willow, the white willow.—Leicester willow, the crack willow.—Long-leafed willow Same as sandbar willow.—Osier willow. See osier; also almond willow, purple willow, white willow.—Persian willow, See willow-herb.—Prairie willow, a grayish shrub, Salix humilis, related to the sage willow, growing 3 to 8 feet high, common on dry plains etc. in the United States.—Primrose willow. See Jussiæa.—Purple willow, a shrub or small tree, Salix purpurea, found through Europe and temperate Asia. Also called basket willow, rose, and whipcord willow. Its bark is rich in salicin, and so bitter that it is not gnawed by animals, hence this willow is specially recommended for [illegible]-proof hedges. It is at the same time one of the best osier willows.—Pussy willow. See pussy willow.—Ring or ring-leafed willow, a variety of the weeping willow with the leaves curled into rings.—Rose willow. See purple willow.—Rosebay willow. See willow-herb.—Sage willow. See sage-willow.—Sallow willow, the common sallow, Salix caprea.—Sandbar willow, Salix longifolia, a small tree often forming dense clumps of great beauty on river sandbars and banks. It is very common throughout the Mississippi basin, and reaches its greatest development in northern California and Oregon.—Shining willow, a river-bank shrub or small tree, Salix lucida, of North America, closely allied to the bay willow of Europe, the leaves with a long tapering point, smooth and shining on both sides. It is among the most beautiful of willows, and is becoming popular in cultivation.—Silky willow, (a) The white willow. (b) Salix Sitchensis, a low much-branched tree of the Pacific coast from California northward.—Swamp willow, the pussy-willow.—Sweet willow, the sweet gale, Myrica Gale; also, the bay willow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—To wear the willow, to put on the trappings of woe for a lost lover.

> Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
> I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 225.

Virginia or Virginian willow. See Itea.—Water willow. See water-willow.—Weeping willow, a large tree, Salix Babylonica, distinguished by its very long and slender pendulous branches, a native, not of Babylon but of eastern Asia, now common in cultivation in Europe and America. Only the feminine plant is known in western countries, but it spreads to some extent by the drifting and rooting of its broken branches. It is considered an emblem of mourning, and is often planted in graveyards. The Kilmarnock weeping willow is a remarkable variety of the common sallow. There is an American weeping willow sold in nurseries, which is a partly pendulous form of the European purple willow.—Whipcord willow. See purple willow.—White willow, Salix alba otherwise called Huntington and silky willow, perhaps the most common cultivated species, a fine tree becoming from 50 to 80 feet high, the leaves ashy-gray or silky-white on both sides. Its wood is smooth, light, soft, tough, and not subject to splintering, and is used for a great variety of purposes. It makes a good gunpowder charcoal, for which purpose it is grown in New Jersey and Delaware. The typical form is the variety S. sarmica, or blue willow. The variety S. vitellina, the golden willow or osier, with yellow twigs, is largely grown for basket-making.—Wheatle willow, Salix Myrsinites, a low, sometimes closely procumbent shrub, under a foot high, with small round, ovate, or lanceolate leaves found in the mountains of the northern Old World.—Willow scale. See scale[1].—Willow span-worm, one of a number of geometrid larvæ which feed upon willow, as the pink-striped, the larva of Dellinia variolaria of the United States.—Willow tussock-moth, a North American tussock-moth, Orgyia definita, whose larva seems to feed only on willow—a peculiar fact, since other tussock-moth larvæ are rather general feeders.—Yellow willow, the variety chrysocoma of Salix alba. See white willow, above.

willow[1] (wil'ō), v. t.; pret. and pp. willowed, ppr. willowing. [< willow[1], n.] To beat, as cotton, etc., with willow rods, in order to loosen it and eject the impurities; hence, to pick and clean, as any fibrous material; treat with the willow or willowing-machine.

> Fine stuff, such as willowed rope.
> Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 86.

willow[2] (wil'ō), a. [< willow[1], n.] 1. Made of the wood of the willow; consisting of willow.—2. Of the color of the bark of young willow-wood; of a dull yellowish-green color.—Willow pattern, a design in ceramic decoration, introduced by J. Turner in his Caughley porcelain in 1780. The design is Chinese in character, but is not exactly copied from any Chinese original. It is always in blue on white or bluish white ground.—Willow tea. See tea[1].

Willow Pattern.

willow[3] (wil'ō), n. [Also willy, willey; short for willow-machine or willowing-machine.] A power-machine for extracting dirt and foreign matter from hemp and flax, for cleaning cotton, and for tearing open and cleaning wool preparatory to spinning. The machines used for these different materials vary in size, but are essentially alike, and consist of a revolving cylinder armed with spikes in a cylindrical casing also armed with spikes. A part of the casing forms a grid or sieve, through which the waste falls by gravity or is drawn by a suction blast. In certain cotton manufactures it follows the opener, or is used in place of it, and is followed by the scutcher. Also called cotton cleaning machine, devil, opening machine, willower, willowing machine, willow-machine, and willying-machine.

willow-beauty (wil'ō-bū'ti), n. A British geometrid moth, Boarmia rhomboidaria.

willow-bee (wil'ō-bē), n. A kind of leaf-cutting bee, Megachile willughbiella (wrongly willoughbyella), which builds its cells in willows, as originally described by Francis Willughby (1671).

willow-beetle (wil'ō-bē'tl), n. Any one of more than a hundred species of beetles which live upon the willow; specifically, a leaf beetle, Phyllodecta vitellinæ, which damages willows in England and on the continent of Europe, its larvæ feeding on the leaves and pupating underground.

willow-cactus (wil'ō-kak'tus), n. See Rhipsalis.

willow-caterpillar (wil'ō-kat'ėr-pil-ėr), n. Any one of the many different lepidopterous larvæ which feed upon the willow, specifically, the larva of the viceroy (which see).

willow-cimbex (wil'ō-sim'beks), n. A very large American saw fly, Cimbex americana, Willow-cimbex (Cimbex americana), natural size.

whose large whitish larvæ feed on the foliage of the willow, elm, birch, and linden, frequently entirely defoliating large trees. See Cimbex.

willow-curtain (wil'ō-kėr'tān), n. In hydraul. engin., a form of floating dike made of willow wands, used in western rivers in the United States as a shield against the current, and to prevent the wearing of the banks.

willow-dolerus (wil'ō-dol'e-rus), n. A small saw fly, Dolerus arvensis, blue-black in color, found frequently on willows in the United States in May and June.

willowed (wil'ōd), a. [< willow[1] + -ed[2].] Abounding with willows. [Rare.]

> No longer steel-clad warriors ride
> Along thy wild and willowed shore.
> Scott, L. of L. M., iv. 1.

willower (wil'ō-ėr), n. [< willow[1] + -er[1].] Same as willow[3].

willow-fly (wil'ō-fli), n. A pseudoneuropterous insect of the family Perlidæ; any perlid or stone-fly; especially, one whose larva is used for bait, as the yellow sally, Chloroperla viridis of England, or Nemoura variegata of the same country. See cut under Perla.

willow-gall (wil'ō-gâl), n. Any one of numerous galls upon willow-shoots and -leaves, made mainly by gall-midges (Cecidomyiidæ), but often by gall making saw-flies of the genera Euura and Nematus. Examples of the former are the pine cone willow gall of Cecidomyia strobiloides and the cabbage-sprout willow-gall of Cecidomyia salicis brassicoides. Examples of those made by saw-flies are the willow apple-gall of Nematus salicis-pomum, the willow egg-gall of Euura salicis ovum, and the willow bud-gall of Euura salicis gemmæ.

Cabbage-sprout Willow-gall.

willow-garden (wil'ō gär'dn), n. A sportsmen's name for a swale grown with willows.

> Snipe in the spring not unfrequently take to swampy thickets of black alder, and what are known as "willow gardens," with spongy bottoms, for shelter and food.
> Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 161.

willow-ground (wil'ō ground), n. A piece of swampy land where osiers are grown for basket-making.

willow-grouse (wil'ō grous'), n. The willow-ptarmigan.

willow-herb (wil'ō-ėrb), n. 1. A plant of the genus Epilobium, so named from the willow-like leaves of E. angustifolium, the great willow-herb. This is the most conspicuous species, a native of Europe, Asia, and North America, abounding especially in recent forest-clearings, hence in America also called fire-weed. It grows from 4 to 7 feet high, and bears a long raceme of showy pink-purple flowers. Other British names are rose bay, bay willow, Persian, and especially French willow. E. latifolium of arctic Europe, Asia, and North America, reaching Colorado in the mountains, is a much lower plant with similar showy flowers. E. obcordatum is a beautiful dwarf species of the mountains of California. E. luteum, found from Oregon northward, is peculiar in its yellow flowers. Many species are not at all showy. The great willow-herb and others have an unofficinal medicinal use. The Indian name fe-tipsi-weepy survives in some books. See also cut under exsuccous.

The inflorescence of Willow-herb (Epilobium angustifolium). a, capsule opening; b, seed.

2. See Lythrum.—French willow-herb, the French willow. See def. 1.—Hooded willow-herb, the skullcap, Scutellaria.—Night willow-herb, the evening primrose Œnothera biennis.—Spiked willow-herb, Epilobium angustifolium, formerly E. spicatum.—Swamp willow-herb, Epilobium palustre.

willowing-machine (wil'ō-ing ma-shēn'), n. Same as willow[3].

willowish (wil'ō-ish), a. [< willow[1] + -ish[1].] Resembling the willow; like the color of the willow. I. Walton, Complete Angler, i. 5.

willow-lark (wil'ō-lärk), n. The sedge-warbler. Pennant, 1768. (Imp. Dict.) willow-leaf (wil'ō-lef), n. One of the elongated filaments of which the solar photosphere appears to be composed, especially in the neighborhood of sun-spots. The name was proposed by Nasmyth, but is no longer in general use since as a rule the photospheric granules are not of a form to justify it.

willow-machine (wil'ō ma-shēn'), n. Same as willow[3].

willow-moth (wil'ō-môth), n. A common British tineoid moth, Cerodrema quadripunctata, a pale mottled species whose caterpillar does much damage to stored grain.

willow-myrtle (wil'ō-mėr'tl), n. A myrtaceous tree with willow-like leaves, Agonis flexuosa, of western Australia, growing 40 feet high.

willow-oak (wil'ō-ōk), n. An American oak, Quercus Phellos, found from New York near the coast to Texas and north to Kentucky and Missouri. Its leaves are narrow and entire, strongly suggesting those of a willow. It grows some 70 feet high, and affords a heavy and strong, rather soft, wood, somewhat used for fuel, for spokes of wheels and in building. Also peach-oak, sand-jack. See cut under oak. Upland willow-oak, Quercus cinerea, a tree reaching 45 feet high, found from Fortress Monroe to Texas on sandy barrens and dry upland ridges. The leaves are somewhat broader than those of the willow-oak, leathery, and white-downy beneath. Also blue jack and sand jack.

willow-peeler (wil'ō-pē'lėr), n. A machine or device for stripping the bark from willow-wands, as a crotch with sharp edges, through which the wand is drawn. Also called willow-stripper.

willow-ptarmigan (wil'ō-tär'mi-gan), n. The common ptarmigan of North America, Lagopus albus, having in winter white plumage with a black tail, but no black stripe through the eye; distinguished from rock-ptarmigan. Also willow-grouse. The name originally applied to the European bird named L. salicetī. See dalripa and type[2].

willow-sawfly (wil'ō-sâ'fli), n. Any one of the different saw-flies which breed upon willow, as Cimbex americana, Dolerus arcensis, Nematus ventralis, and a number of others. Phyllœcus integer is a North American species whose larvæ bore into the young shoots of willow, whence it is specified as the willow shoot saw fly. See willow cimbex and willow dolerus.

willow-slug (wil'ō-slug), n. The larva of any saw fly, as Nematus ventralis, which infests willows. That of the species named more fully called yellow-spotted willow slug, has some economic consequence in connection with the osier industry.

willow-sparrow (wil'ō-spar'ō), n. Same as willow-warbler. [Local, Eng.]

willow-thorn (wil'ō-thôrn), n. Same as sallow-thorn. See Hippophaë.

willow-warbler (wil'ō-wâr'blėr), n. A small sylvine bird of Europe, Sylvia or Phylloscopus trochilus; the willow wren. It is about 5 inches long, greenish above, whitish below, and very abundant in summer in the British Islands in woods and copses. See chaff-chaff. Yellow-browed barred willow-warbler. See yellow-browed warbler, under warbler.

willow-weed (wil'ō-wēd), n. 1. One of various species of Polygonum, or knotweed, as P. amphibium, P. Persicaria, or P. lapathifolium. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—2. The purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria.

willow-wort (wil'ō-wėrt), n. 1. The common loosestrife, Lysimachia vulgaris, or the purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria.—2. A plant of the order Salicaceæ, the willow family. Lindley.

willow-wren (wil'ō-ren), n. The willow-warbler: a common British name and also book-name.

willowy (wil'ō-i), a. [< willow[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding with willows.

Where willowy Camus lingers with delight!
Gray, Ode for Music.

Steadily the millstone hums
Down in the willowy vale.
Bryant, Song of the Sower.

2. Resembling a willow; flexible; drooping; pensile; graceful.

Willsia (wil'si-ä), n. [NL., named after one Wills.] A generic name based on medusoids of certain gymnoblastic hydroid polyps, apparently coryniform, which produce other medusoids like themselves by means of proliferating stolons; also, a designation of such medusoids. In the example figured the stolons are developed at the bifurcation of each of the four principal radiating canals of the swimming bell, each stolon ending in a knob which is a bunch of thread-cells and giving rise along one side to a series of buds which successively from the free end toward the other end, acquire the character of complete medusoids. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 132.

A, the medusoid with developing stolons; B, a bud developed on a stolon; a, gland of tentacle; b, tentacle; c, cavity of tentacle; d, tentacle with vesicle; e, f, g, h, four developing medusoids, the last nearly ready to be detached; i, k, stolons.

Willughbeia (wil-ū-bē'ä), n. [NL. (Roxburgh, 1814), named for Francis Willughby, 1635–72, an English naturalist, who wrote on the use of sap in plants.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Apocynaceæ and tribe Carisseæ. It is characterized by climbing stems, flowers in dense cymes with a five-parted salver-shaped corolla bearing its stamens near the base of its tube, and followed by a large globose berry with hard pericarp and abundant pulp, in appearance resembling an orange. By its axillary (not terminal) cymes it is further distinguished from the related climbing genus of India-rubber plants, Landolphia, for which the name Willughbeia has also been used. The genus includes 8 or 10 species, natives of India, Malacca, and Ceylon. They are sarmentose shrubs, generally tendril-bearing and climbing to great heights. The leaves are opposite, short-petioled, and feather-veined. The W. elastica of many writers, an India-rubber plant of Borneo, is now classed as Urceola.

will-willet (wil'wil'et), n. [Cf. willet, pill-willet.] 1. Same as pill-willet.—2†. The American oyster-catcher: as, "the will-willet or oyster-catcher," Bartram, Travels (ed. 1791). Lawson, 1709.

will-o'-the-wisp, n. Same as will-o'-the-wisp, 1.

will-worship (wil'wėr'ship), n. [A lit. rendering of Gr. ἐθελοθρησκία; < will[3] + worship.] Worship according to one's own fancy; worship imposed merely by human will, not by divine authority; supererogatory worship.

Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will worship. Col. ii. 23.

Let not the obstinacy of our halfe Obedience and will Worship bring forth that Viper of sedition that for these foure-score Yeares hath been breeding to eat through the entrails of our Peace. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

will-worshiper (wil'wėr'ship-ėr), n. One who practises will-worship.

He that says "God is rightly worshipped by an act or ceremony concerning which himself hath no way expressed his pleasure" is superstitious or a will-worshipper.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, II. iii. 14.

willy[1] (wil'i), a. [< ME. willy, willi (= G. willig, willing); < will[1] + -y[1].] 1†. Willing; ready; eager.

All wight men in wer, willy to fight,
And boldly the bekirt, britnet thare fos.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7713.

Be the whilke like man that is willy
May wynne the lifle that laste schall ay.
York Plays, p. 458.

I have assayde youre suster, and I fonde her never so willy to noon as she is to hym, ryght as he that hir londe stande cleer. Paston Letters, I. 98.

2. Self-willed; wilful. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

willy[2] (wil'i), n. A dialectal variant of willow[1].

willy[3] (wil'i), n. [< ME. wilie, < AS. wilige, a basket made of willow twigs, < welig, a willow: see willow[1]. Cf. weel[2].] A willow basket; a fish-basket. [Prov. Eng.]

willy[4] (wil'i), n. Same as willow[2].

willyard (wil'yärd), a. 1. Wilful; obstinate; unmanageable.

"He's a gude creature," said she, "and a kind; it's a pity he has sae willyard a pownie."
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvi.

Eh, sirs, but human nature's a willful and willyard thing.
Scott, Antiquary, xxv.

2. Shy; awkward; confused; bewildered.

But oh! for Hogarth's magic pow'r!
To show sir Bardie's willyart glow'r,
And how he star'd and stammer'd.
Burns, On Meeting with Lord Daer.

[Scotch in both senses.]

willying-machine (wil'i-ing-ma-shēn'), n. Same as willowing-machine.

willy-mufty, willie-muftie (wil'i-muf'ti), n. The willow-warbler. [Local, Eng.]

willy-nilly (wil'i-nil'i), a. or adv. 1. Will he or will he not; will ye or will ye not; willing or unwilling. See will[1], will[2].—2. Vacillating; shilly-shallying.

Someone saw thy willy-nilly nun
Vying a tress against our golden fern.
Tennyson, Harold, v. 1.

Also silly-silly.

willy-wagtail (wil'i-wag'tāl), n. The white or pied wagtail. [Local, Eng.]

willywaw, n. See williwaw.

Wilmot proviso. See proviso.

wilnt, v. [< ME. wilnen, wilnien, < AS. wilnian, < wilna, wish, desire: see will[1], will[2].] I. trans. 1. To wish; desire.

If she wilneth fro the for to passe,
Thanne is she fals, so love here wel the lasse.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 614.

And wolnest to have alle the World at thi commandement, thou schalle leve the with outen fayle or thou leve it. Mandeville, Travels, p. 295.

2. To receive willingly; consent or submit to.

To penaunce and to pouerte he mot putte hym-selue,
And muche wo in this worlde wilnen and wolden.
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 61.

3. To resolve; determine.

If a man haue synned longe bifore,
And axe mercy And a-mende his myn, Repente, and wilne to synne no more,
Of that man god gladder is Than of a child synneles y-bore.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 75.

II. intrans. To have a desire; long (for); yearn or seek (after).

The cherl . . . hixt it hastely to hane what it wold gerne, Appeles & alle thinges that childern after wilnen.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 89.

wilning†, n. [Verbal n. of wilna, v.] Desire; inclination; will.

In the beestys the love of hyr lyvynges ne of hyr beinges ne couth nat of the wilnynges of the sowle, but of the lyggynynygis of nature.
Chaucer, Boethius, iii. prose 11.

wilsome[1] (wil'sum), a. [< ME. wilsom; < will[3] + -some. Cf. wilsome[2].] 1. Wilful; obstinate; stubborn. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]—2†. Loved; desirable; amiable.

Thus was the kowherd out of kare kindeli holpen,
He & his wilsum wif wel to liuen for euer.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 5394.

3. Fat; indolent. [Prov. Eng.]

wilsome[2] (wil'sum), a. [< ME. wilsum, wilsom, wildsom (prob. after Icel. villusamr, erroneous, false); < wild[1] (cf. wild[2]) + -some. Prob. confused with wilsome[1].] 1. Wandering; devious.

Mony wylsum way he rode,
The lek as I herde say.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 699.

Allas! what nyles that feende
Thus wilsum wayes make vs to wende.
York Plays, p. 144.

2. Doubtful; uncertain.

In erthe he was ordand ay,
To warne the folke that wilsom wore
Of Criatis comyng.
York Plays, p. 97.

[Provincial in both senses.]

wilsomeness (wil'sum-nes), n. [ME.; < wilsome[1] + -ness.] Wilfulness; obstinacy. Wyclif, Ecclus. xxxi. 40.

Wilson's blackcap. See blackcap, 2 (c), and cut under Myiodioctes.

Wilson's bluebird. The common eastern bluebird of the United States, Sialia sialis (formerly S. wilsoni). See cut under Sialia.

Wilson's fly-catching warbler. See warbler, and cut under Myiodioctes.

Wilson's phalarope. See Steganopus (with cut).

Wilson's sandpiper. See sandpiper, and cut under stint, 3.

Wilson's snipe. See snipe[1], and cut under Gallinago.

Wilson's stint. See stint, 3.

Wilson's stormy petrel. See Oceanites.

Wilson's tern. See tern[1] and Sterna (with cut).

Wilson's theorem. See theorem.

Wilson's thrush. See veery (with cut).

wilt[1] (wilt), v. [Also welt, dial. variants of wilk, welk (= G. welk, withered, verwelken, fade, wither): see welk[1].] I. intrans. 1. To droop or fade, as plants or flowers when cut or plucked; wither.

To wilt, for wither, spoken of green herbs or flowers, is a general word. Ray.

The frosts have fallen and the flowers are drooping, summer wilts into autumn. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 5.

2. To become soft or languid; lose energy, pith, or strength. [Colloq., U. S.]

II. trans. To cause to droop or become languid, as a plant; take the stiffness, strength, or vigor out of; hence, to render limp and pithless; depress.

Despots have wilted the human race into sloth and imbecility. Dwight.

She wanted a pink that Miss Amy had pinned on her breast . . . and died, holding the wilted stem in her hand. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 1.

wilt[2] (wilt). The second person singular present indicative of will[1].

Wilton carpet. See carpet.

wiluite (wil'ū-īt), n. [< Wilui (see def.) + -ite[2].] 1. A variety of grossular garnet from the Wilui (Vilui) river in eastern Siberia.—2. A variety of vesuvianite from the same locality. Also viluite.

wily (wī'li), a. [Early mod. E. also wilie, wylie; < ME. wily, wyly; < wile[1] + -y[1].] Full of wiles; subtle; cunning; crafty; sly.

But above all (for Gods sake) Sea, beware,
Be not intrapt in Wymens wyly snare.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Magnificence.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw.
Pope, R. of the L., v. 62.

=Syn. Cunning, Artful, Sly, etc. (see cunning[1]), designing, deceitful, foxy, diplomatic, delusive, insidious.

wily-beguiled, a. The deceiving of one's self in attempting to deceive another: used only in the phrase to play wily-beguile (or wily-beguily).

They, playing wily-beguile themselves, think it enough inwardly to favour the truth, though outwardly they carry favour.
J. Bradford, Writings (Parker Soc., 1853), I. 375.

"Playing wily-beguile": deceiving. A proverbial expression. Vide Ray, Proverbs (ed. 1817), p. 46.
(Note to the above passage.)

CA. I am fully resolved.
P. Well, yet Cheron looke to it, that you play not now wily beguily your selfe.
Terence in English (1614). (Nares.)

wim (wim), v. [Cf. wimble[2].] To winnow grain. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wimberry, n. See whinberry.

wimble[1] (wim'bl), n. [Also Sc. wimmle, wumil, wummle, wummel; < ME. wimbel, wymble, wymbyl, wimmel; cf. MD. wimpel, a wimble, = Dan. vimmel, an auger, = OSw. vimla (Molbech), an auger (not to be identified with Icel. veimul*, which occurs but once, in comp. veimiltyta, applied to a crooked person, but said by Cleasby to mean 'wimble-stock' (tyta, a pin?)); appar. connected with MD. weme, a wimble, wemelen, bore, this verb being appar. connected with wemelen, turn about, whirl, vibrate. The relations of these forms are uncertain. The word is certainly not allied, as Skeat makes it, to Dan. vindel-trappe = Sw. vindeltrappa = G. wendeltreppe, a spiral staircase, G. wendelbohrer, an auger, etc., words connected with the E. verb wind[1]: see wind[1]. From the MD. form is derived OF. guimbelet, gimbelet, gubelet, > ME. gymlet, > E. gimlet, gimblet: see gimlet.] 1†. A gimlet.

Unto the pith a ffrensh wymble in bore,
Threste in a braunche of roggy wilde olyve.
Threste ynne it faste
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 190.

'Tis but like the little Wimble to let in the greater Auger.
Selden, Table-Talk, p. 20.

2. In mining, an instrument by which the rubbish is extracted from a bore-hole: a kind of shell-auger. Some varieties of wimble, suitable for boring into soft clay, are called wimble-scoops.—3. A marble-workers' brace for drilling holes in marble.

wimble[1†] (wim'bl), v. t. [< ME. wymblen, wymmelen (= MD. wemelen), bore, pierce with a wimble; from the noun.] To bore or perforate with or as with a wimble.

Thus we se Mars furiouse, thus Greeks euery harbory scaling,
Vp fretting the pilers, wanting long wymbeled entryes.
Stanihurst, Æneid, ii.

And wimbled also a hole thro' the said coffin. Wood.

wimble[2] (wim'bl), v. t.; pret. and pp. wimbled, ppr. wimbling. [Perhaps a corruption of winnow.] To winnow. Withal's Dict. (ed. 1608), p. 83.

wimble[3†] (wim'bl), a. [With excrescent b (as in 'wimble[1]'), < Sw. vimmel (in comp. vimmelkantig), whimsical, giddy, Sw. dial. vimmla, be giddy or skittish (cf. MD. wemelen, turn around, move about, vibrate, etc.), equiv. to vimmra (> vimmrig, skittish, said of horses), freq. of vima, be giddy, allied to Icel. vim, giddiness (> E. whim, with intrusive h: see whim); cf. Dan. vimse, skip about, vims, brisk, quick: see whim.] Active; nimble.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he lepped light Spenser, Shep. Cal., March.

Buckle thy spirits up, put all thy wits
In wimble action, or thou art surprised Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., iii. 2.

wimbrel (wim'brel), n. Same as whimbrel.

wimming-dust (wim'ing-dust), n. Chaff. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wimple (wim'pl), n. [< ME. wimpel, wympel, wympyl, wimpil, wimpul*, < AS. wimpel*, found twice in glosses, in the spelling wanpel, wimple, covering for the neck, = D. wimpel, streamer, pendant, = MLG. wimpel, wumpel = OHG. wimpal, a head-cloth, veil, MHG. G. wimpel, head-cloth, banner, pennon (> OF. guimple, F. guimpe, nun's veil. > E. gimp: see gimp[2]), = Icel. vimpill = Sw. Dan. vimpel, pennon, pendant, streamer.] 1. A covering of silk, linen, or other material laid in folds over the head and round the chin, the sides of the face, and the neck, formerly worn by women out of doors, Wimple, from a statue of Jeanne d'Evreux, Queen of France, consort of Charles IV. The statue probably dates from about 1325. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier français.") and still retained as a conventual dress for nuns. Isa. iii. 22.

Ful semely hir wimpel pinched was.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 151.

When she saugh hem com, she ros a-geins hem as she that was curteys and well lerned, and voyded hir wymple.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 561.

White was her wimple, and hue veil,
And her loose locks a chaplet pale
Of whitest roses bound.
Scott, L. of L. M., v. 17.

2. A plait or fold. [Scotch.] — 3†. A loose or fluttering piece of cloth of any sort; a pennon or flag. Heale.

wimple (wim'pl), v.; pret. and pp. wimpled, ppr. wimpling. [< ME. wimplen; < wimple, n.] I. trans. 1. To cover with or as with a wimple or veil; deck with a wimple; hide with a wimple.

Upon an amblere esily she sat,
I-wimpled wel, and on hir heed an hat
As brood as is a bokeler or a targe
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 470.

Fleming fell asleep that night thinking of the nuns who once had slept in the same quiet cells, but neither wimpled nun nor cowled monk appeared to him in his dreams.
Longfellow, Hyperion, III. 3.

2. To hoodwink. [Rare.]

This wimpled, whining, purblind wayward boy
Shak., 1 K. I., III. 1. 181.

3. To lay in plaits or folds; draw down in folds.

The same [veil] hide
Under a vele that wimpled was full low
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 4.

II. intrans. 1. To resemble or suggest wimples; undulate; ripple: as, a brook that wimples onward.

Among the bonnie, winding banks,
Where Doon rins, wimplin' clear.
Burns, Hallowe'en.

She wimpled about to the pale moonbeam,
Like a feather that floats on a wind-tossed stream
J. R. Drake, Culprit Fay.

2†. To lie in folds; make folds or irregular plaits.

For with a vele, that wimpled every where,
Her head and face was hid, that none to none appeare.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 5.

wim-sheet (wim'shēt), n. A provincial English form of winnow-sheet.

win[1] (win), v.; pret. won (formerly also wan, still provincial), pp. won, ppr. winning. [< ME. winnen, wynnen (pret. wan, won, pl. wannen, wonnen, pp. wonnen, wonnen, wunne), < AS. winnan (pret. wan, won, pp. wunnen), fight, labor, contend, endure, suffer, = OS. winnan = OFries. winna = D. Lg. winnen = OHG. gawinnan, MHG. G. gewinnen, attain by labor, win, conquer, get, = Icel. vinna = Sw. vinna = Dan. vinde (for vinne*), work, toil, win, = Goth. winnan (pret. wann*, pp. wunnans), suffer, endure pain; cf. Skt. √ van, get, win, also Lold dear. From the same root are ult. E. winsome, wean, weed, wone, woon.] I. trans. 1. To acquire by labor, effort, or struggle; secure; gain.

To flee I wolde full fayne
For all this world to wynne
Wolde I not se hym slayne
York Plays, p. 141.

All you affirm, I know,
Is but to win time; therefore prepare your threats
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, v. 4.

We hope our cheer will win
Your acceptation
B. Jonson, New Inn, Prol.

Man praises man. Desert in arts or arms Wins public honor.
Cowper, Task, vi. 655.

Specifically—(a) To gain by competition or conquest; take, as from an opponent or enemy; obtain as victor.

The Emperour Alexaundre Anuterid to come;
He wonn all the world & at his wille aght.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 615.

Those proud titles thou hast won of me.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 4. 78.

King Richard won another strong hold, . . . from whence ye Monks being expulsed, he reposed there all his store.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 22.

It had been an ancient maxim of the Greeks that no more acceptable gifts can be offered in the temples of the gods than the trophies won from an enemy in battle.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 208.

(b) To earn: as, to win one's bread.

He wyneth nat that wynneth his foule,
Piers Plowman (C), xxiii. 15.

2. To obtain; derive; get: as, to win ore from a mine.

But alle thing hath tyme,
The day is short and it is passed prime;
And yet ne won I nothing in this day.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 179.

In these two places the prisoners are engaged in quarrying and cutting stone at Borgham, they win stone on account of the Government, at Tjurko, granite for private contractors.
Hepworth Dixon, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 508.

3. To be successful or victorious in: as, to win a game or a battle.

Th' report of his great acts that over Europe ran,
In that most famous Field he with the Emperor won.
Drayton, Polyolbion, iv. 314.

He that would win the race must guide his horse Obedient to the customs of the course.
Cowper, Truth, l. 15.

4. To accomplish by effort; achieve, effect, or execute; succeed in making or doing.

He couldе neuer in one hole daye with a meately good wynde wynne one myle of the course of the water.
Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, (ed. Arber), p. 133).

Thickening their ranks, and wedged in firm array,
The close-compacted Britons won their way.
Addison, The Campaign.

5. To reach; attain to; arrive at, as a goal or destination; gain; get to.

Ye wynde inforced us moche and so streyght ayenst us that our gouernours sawe it was not possyble for vs to wynne nor passe Cape Maleo.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 63.

Before they could win the lodge by twenty paces, they were overtaken.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

Soon they won
The top of all the topful heavens.
Chapman, Iliad, v. 761.

And when the stony path began
By which the naked peak they won,
Up flew the snowy ptarmigan.
Scott, Marmion, iii. 1.

6†. To cause to attain to or arrive at; hence, to bring; convey.

Tour in the tolle out of tone brought,
Wan hym wightly away wondit full sore
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6980.

He sall fordo thi fader ayn,
And vnto welth wynne him ogayn.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

Do that I my ship to haven winne
Chaucer, Anelida and Arcite, l. 20.

"Sir," quod she, "I knowe well youre will is not for to hane me I-loste." "I-loste" sadde he, "nay, but I-wonne to grete honour."
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), III. 671.

7. To gain the affection, regard, esteem, compliance, favor, etc., of; move to sympathy, agreement, or consent; gain the good will of; gain over or attract, as to one's self, one's side, or one's cause; in general, to attract.

Thy virtue won me, with virtue preserve me.
Sir P. Sidney.

She a beautiful and therefore to be wooed,
She is a woman, therefore to be won.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3. 79.

His face was of that doubtful kind
That wins the eye but not the mind
Scott, Rokeby, v. 16.

8. To prevail on; induce.

Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him?
Shak., 1 G. of V., III. 1. 67.

Who easily being won along with them to go,
They altogether put into the watery plain.
Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 430.

9. In mining, to sink down to (a bed of coal) by means of a shaft; prepare (a bed of coal) for working by doing the necessary preliminary dead-work, also applied to beds of ironstone and other ores. [Eng.] In the United States the word win, as used in mining, has frequently a more general meaning. It is thus defined in the glossary of the Pennsylvania survey: "To mine, to develop, to prepare for mining." See winning.

The shaft [at Monkwearmouth] was commenced in May, 1826. It was continued for eight and a half years before the first workable coal was reached, and it was only in April, 1846, twenty years afterwards, that the enterprise was proved successful by the winning of the "Hutton Seam." Jevons, The Coal Question (2d ed.), p. 66.

To win one's blue, one's shoes, one's spurs, the broose, the kern, the toss, the whetstone. See the nouns. — To win the go, to win the prize; be victor; come off first, excel all competitors. [Scotch.]

II. intrans. 1†. To strive; vie; contend.

Storm striveth al the winne,
Thanne winne and winter winnen.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 17.

2. To struggle; labor; work. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Thauh ȝe be trewe of ȝoure tonge and trewelich wynne,
And be as chast as a chyld that nother chit ne fyghteth
Piers Ploughman (C), ii. 176

3. To succeed; gain one's end; especially, to be superior in a contest or competition; gain the victory; prove successful: as, let those laugh who win.

So rewe on me, Robert, that no red haue,
Ne neuere weene to wynne for craft that I knowe Piers Ploughman (A), v. 251.

Nor is it aught but just
That he who in debate of truth hath won Should win in arms. Milton, P. L., vi. 122.

Charles Fox used to say that the most delightful thing in the world was to win at cards.
Mortimer Collins, Thoughts in my Garden, II. 81.

4. To reach; attain; make one's way; succeed in making one's way: with to. [Obsolete or provincial.]

Bes wakond and warly, wyn to my chamber,
There swiftly to awoire vpon swete chalogheis),
All this forward to fulfill ye feat with your hond
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 649.

I wynne to a thing. I reiche to it. Je attayns. . . .
This lerne is farre northren Palsgrave, p. 782.

And arme you well, and make you redy,
And to the walle ye wynne
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 99).

Eh, my rheumattay be that bad howiver be I to win to the burndn'? Tennyson, Queen Mary, iv. 3.

I will not be her judge. Perhaps when we win to the greater light we may see with different eyes
W. Black, In Far Lochaber, xxiv.

5. To get; succeed in getting: as, to win in (to get in); to win through; to win loose; to win up, down, or away; to win on (to get on, either literally or figuratively). [Obsolete or provincial.]

"Say me, frende," quoth the freke with a felle chere,
"How wan thou in to this won in wedeg so fowle?"
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), II. 140

She hath ynough to doen, hardily,
To winnen from hire fader, so trow I Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1125.

Ye canna win in this nicht, Willie,
Nor here ye canna be.
For I've nae chambers out nor in,
Nae ane but barely three Willie and May Margaret (Child's Ballads, II. 133).

We'll come nae mair unto this place,
Cou'd we won safe awa'.
King Malcolm and Sir Colvin (Child's Ballads, III. 381).

Win thro' this day with honour to yourself,
And I'll say something for you Tennyson, Queen Mary, iv. 2.

To win by a head. See head. To win in a canter. See canter. To win on or upon. (a) To gain favor or influence: as, to won upon the heart or affections.

I at last, unwilling, . . .
Thought I would try if shame could win upon 'em
B. Jonson, Apol. to Poetaster.

You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others Dryden.

(b) To gain ground on; gain upon

The rabble . . . will in time Win upon power. Shak., Cor., i. 1. 224.

Thus, at half ebb, a rolling sea
Returns and wins upon the shore Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, l. 140.

win[1]† (win), n. Strife; contention.

With al manḳin
He haueth ulth (envy) and win.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 8

win[2] (win), v. t.; pret. and pp. winned, ppr. winning. [Abbr. of wind[2], v.] To dry or season by exposure to the wind or air; as, to win hay; to win peats. [Scotch and Irish.]

winberry, wimberry (win'-, wim'ber'i), n.; pl. winberries, wimberries (-iz). [Also sometimes whimberry; a dial. form, with shortened vowel, of whimberry.] A whortleberry.

Here also was a profusion of raspberries, and a blue berry not unlike a large wimberry, but growing on a bush often several feet in height.
J. A. Lees and W. J. Clutterbuck, B. [British] Columbia, 1887, xii.

win-bread (win'bred), n. [< win[1], v., + obj. bread.] That which earns one's living or one's wealth and advancement, as a mechanical trade, the sword of a soldier of fortune, etc. [Rare.]

The sword of the military adventurer, even of knightly dignity, is sometimes called the gagne pain or win-bread (won bred), signifying that it is to his brand the soldier must look for the advancement of his fortune Hewitt, Anc. Armour, II. 253.

wince[1] (wins), v.; pret. and pp. winced, ppr. wincing. [Formerly also winch, wench; < ME. winsen, winsen, wynsen, winchen, wynchen, wenchen, < OF. winchir, guinchir, guincher, guencher, guenchir, guencer, ganchir*, wince, = Pr. guenchir, evade, < OHG. wenkan, MHG. wenken, G. wanken, totter, start aside; cf. OHG. wankōn, wanchon, waver, < winchan, MHG. winken (pret. wank), move aside, nod, G. winken, nod, = E. wink: see wink[1], v.] I. intrans. 1. To shrink, as in pain or from a blow; start back: literally or figuratively.

qwarelles qwayntly swappez thorowe knyghtez
With bryne so wekyrly, that wynche they never.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2104.

Rubbe there no more, least I wench, for deny I will not that I am wrong on the withers Lyly, Erphues and his England, p. 387.

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angerly.
Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 81.

Some fretful tempers wince at ev'ry touch;
You always do too little or too much.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 325.

Philip winced under this allusion to his unfitness for active sports. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 3.

2†. To kick.

Poul, . . . whom the Lord hadde chosun, that long tyme wynside agen the prick[e] Wyclif, Prologue on Acts of Apostles.

3†. To wriggle; twist and turn.

Long before the Child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl.
Prior, Alma, i.

II.† trans. To fling by starting or kicking.

A galled jennet that will winch him out o' the saddle.
Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, ii. 1

wince[1] (wins), n. [< wince[1], v.] The act of one who winces; an involuntary shrinking movement or tendency; a slight start back or aside, as from pain or to avoid pain.

It is the pitcher who will notice the unavoidable wince that is the proof of a catcher's sore hand.
W. Camp, St. Nicholas, XVII. 829.

wince[2] (wins), n. [A corrupt form of winch[1].] In dyeing, a simple hand machine for changing a fabric from one dye-vat to another. It consists of a reel placed over the division between the vats. The fabric, placed over it and turned either way, is transferred from one dye to another. When several vats are placed in line, and contain dyes, mordants, soap suds, water, etc., a wince or reel is placed between each two and the combined apparatus becomes a winding machine. In such a machine the vats are called wince-pots or wince pits. Also winch.

wince[3] (wins), v. t.; pret. and pp. winced, ppr. wincing. [< wince[2], n.] In dyeing, to immerse in the bath by turning the wince or winch.

For dark grounds the pieces were finally winced in weak solution of bleaching powder, to rinse the full shade of color. O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 110

wince-pit, wince-pot (wins'pit, -pot), n. One of the vats of a winding-machine. See wince[2].

wincer (win'sėr), n. [< wince[1] + -er[1].] One who winces, shrinks, or kicks. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus, Pref. (Latham) wincey (win'si), n. [Also winsey, supposed to be an abbr. of "linsey-woolsey, which is supposed to be a rimingvariation of linsey woolsey, a word subject to much manipulation.] A strong and durable cloth, plain or twilled, composed of a cotton warp and a woolen weft. Heavy winceys have been much worn as skirtings, and a lighter kind is used for men's shirts. They are sometimes made entirely of wool.

winch[1] (winch), n. [Also, corruptly, wince, wynce, and dial. wink; < ME. winche, wynche, the crank of a wheel or axle, < AS. wince, a winch; prob. orig. 'a bent' or 'a bent handle,' akin to wink[1] and winkle, and so ult. to wince[1].] 1. The crank, projecting handle, or lever by which the axis of a revolving machine is turned, as in the common windlass, the grindstone, etc. See cut under Pronyʼs dynamometer.

One of them [musicians] turned the winch of an organ which he carried at his back Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 330.

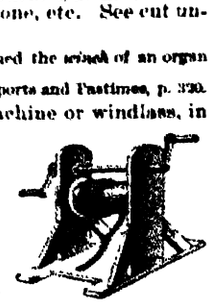
2. A kind of hoisting-machine or windlass, in which an axis is turned by means of a crank-handle, and a rope or chain is thus wound round it so as to raise a weight. There are various forms of winches. Either the crank may be attached to the extremity of the winding-roller or axis, or a large spur-wheel may be attached to the roller, and turned by a pinion on a separate crank shaft (as shown in the cut), this arrangement giving greater power.



Winch.

There was a coal-mine . . . which he used frequently to visit, going down to the workings in a basket lowered by a winch. Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 778.

3. The reel of a fishing-rod. — 4. Same as wince[2]. — Gipsy winch. See gipsy-winch. — Spun-yarn winch, a small winch with a fly-wheel, used on board ship for making spun yarn. — Steam-winch, a winch driven by steam, in common use on steam-vessels for loading and discharging cargo.

winch[1] (winch), *v. t. [< winch[1], n.] To hoist or haul by means of a winch.

He, being placed in a chaire, . . . was winched vp in that chaire, and fastened vnto the mainyard of a galley, and hoisted vp with a crane, to shew him to all.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 128.

winch[2] (winch), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal form of wince[1].

Winchester bushel. See bushel[1], 1.

Winchester goose†. [Also called Winchester pigeon, said to allude to the fact that the stews in Southwark were in the 16th century under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester.] A bubo; hence, a person affected with bubo. Shakspere has the phrase "goose of Winchester," T. and C., v. 10. 55. [Old slang.]

Winchester gun or rifle. See rifle[2].

Winchester pint. A measure a little more than a wine-pint and less than a beer-pint.

wincingt, a. [< ME. wynsynge; ppr. of wince[1], v.] Kicking; hence, skittish; lively.

Wynsynge she was as is a joly colt.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 77.

wincing-machine (win'sing-ma-shēn'), n. In dyeing, an apparatus consisting of a series of vats containing dyes, mordants, soap-suds, etc., with a winch or reel between each two. See wince[2].

Winckel's disease. A disease occurring in infants, the chief symptoms of which are jaundice, bloody urine, and cyanosis. It commonly terminates fatally in a few days.

wincopipe† (wing'kō-pip), n. The scarlet pimpernel, Anagallis arvensis. See wink-a-peep.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 827.

wind[1] (wind), v.; pret. and pp. wound (occasionally but less correctly winded), ppr. winding. [< ME. winden, wynden (pret. wand, wond, pl. wunden, wonden, wounden, wonde, pp. wunden, wonden), < AS. windan (pret. wand, wond, pp. wunden) = OS. windan = OFries. winda = D. LG. winden = OHG. wintan, windan, MHG. winden, G. winden = Icel. vinda, turn, wind, = Sw. vända = Dan. vinde, turn the eyes, squint, = Goth. windan (in comp. bi-windan, du-ga-windan), wind; cf. F. gaunder, It. ghindare, wind up, < MHG.; root unknown. From the verb wind[1] are ult. E. wend[1], wand, wander, window, windlass[1], windlass[2], windle, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To move in this direction and in that; change direction; vary from the direct line or course; bend; turn; double.

But evere the heed was left bihynde,
For ought I couthe pulle or wynde
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1810.

The yerde is bet that bowen wol and wynde
Than that that brest. Chaucer, Troilus, i. 257.

So swift your judgments turn and wind. Dryden.

2. To go in a crooked or devious course; meander: as, the stream winds through the valley; the road winds round the hill.

When that this leonesse hath dronke her fille,
Aboute the welle gan she for to wynde.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 518.

It was difficult to descend into the valley to the north east, in which we returned, and, winding round the vale to the west came to Beer-Kmir.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 63.

The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea.
Gray, Elegy.

White with its sun-bleached dust, the pathway winds
Before me. Whittier, Pictures, ii.

3. To make an indirect advance; "fetch a compass"; "beat about the bush."

You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance.
Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 134.

You must not talk to him.
As you do to an ordinary man,
Honest plain sense, but you must wind about him.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, ii. 1.

4. To twine; entwine one's self or itself round something: as, vines wind round the pole. — 5†. To twist one's self or worm one's way into or out of something.

O thou that would'st winde into any figment or phantasme to save thy Mitre
Milton, Church-Government, i. 5.

†6. To turn or toss about; twist; squirm.

4 Thou art so lothly and so old also,
And therto comen of so lough a kynde,
That litel wonder is though I walwe and wynde.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 246.

7. To have a twist or an uneven surface, or a surface whose parts do not lie in the same plane, as a piece of wood.—†8. To return.

Thus girneo the gere in ziasterdayes mony, & wynter wyndes ayayn.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 531.

To wind on with, to follow the same course as; keep pace with.

To such as walk in their wickedness, and wind on with the world, this time is a time of wrath and vengeance.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 221.

To wind up, to come to a conclusion, halt, or end; conclude; finish.

Mrs. Parsons . . . expatiated on the impatience of men generally; . . . and wound up by insinuating that she must be one of the best tempers that ever existed.
Dickens, Sketches, Tales, x 2.

He was trading up to Parsonsfield, and business run down, so he wound up there, and thought he'd make a new start. S. O. Jewett, Deephaven, p. 175.

Winding shaft, the shaft in any mine which is used for winding, or in which the ore, coal, etc., are raised or wound (see II., 7) to the surface.

II. trans. 1. To cause to move in this direction and in that; turn.

Every word gan up and down to wynde,
That he had seyd, as it come hire to mynde
Chaucer, Troilus, ii 601.

He endeavours to turn and wind himself every way to evade the force of this famous challenge. Waterland.

2. To bend or turn at will; direct according to one's pleasure; vary the course or direction of; hence, to exercise complete control over.

She is the clerenesse and the verray light
That in this derke world me wynt and ledeth
Chaucer, Good Women, l 85.

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 1. 109.

3. To turn or twist round and round on something; place or arrange in more or less regular coils or convolutions on something (such as a reel, spool, or bobbin) which is turned round and round; form into a ball, hank, or the like by turning that on which successive coils are placed, or by carrying the coils round it: as, to wind yarn or thread.

You have wound a goodly clew
Shak., All's Well, i. 3. 188.

†4. To form by twisting or twining; weave; fabricate.

For that same net so cunningly was wound
That neither gutle nor force might it distraine.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 82.

5. To place in folds, or otherwise dispose on or around something; bind; twist; wrap.

This hand, just wound about thy coal-black hair.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1. 84

Wind the penance-sheet
About her!
Browning, Count Gismond.

6. To entwist; infold; encircle: literally or figuratively.

Echo gan other in his armes take,
And with her nekkes eche gan other wynde.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 671.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Shak., M. N. D., iv. 1. 45.

You talk as if you meant to wind me in,
And make me of the number.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, ii 1.

Mr. Allerton being wound into his debts also upon particular dealings. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 302.

And wind the front of youth with flowers
Tennyson, Ancient Sage.

7. To haul or hoist by or as by a winch, whim, capstan, or the like: as, to wind or warp a ship out of harbor; specifically, in mining, to raise (the produce of the mine) to the surface by means of a winding-engine; hoist. The term wind, as well as draw, is often employed in Great Britain, while hoist is generally used in the United States. In the early days of mining, ore and coal were almost exclusively raised by hand-, horse-, or steam-power, in buckets or kibbles; at the present time, in both England and the United States, this is done by means of a winding-engine which turns a drum on which a rope (generally of steel wire) is wound and unwound, and by means of which a cage (see cage, 3 (d)) is raised or lowered, on which the loaded cars are lifted to the surface, and the empties returned to the pit-bottom. The dimensions of engines, drums, and cages in large mines are sometimes very great, as is also the velocity with which the machinery is moved. Thus, in the Monkwearmouth colliery, Durham, England, the winding-drums are 25 feet in diameter, the rope weighs 6½ tons, the cage and load 7½ tons; the vertical distance through which the cage is raised is 320 yards, and the time occupied in lifting it and discharging the cars is two minutes and four seconds.

The Hollanders . . . layd out headsmen, and wound themselues out of the way of vs. Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 710.

8. To insinuate; work or introduce insidiously or stealthily; worm.

As he by his bould confidence & large promises deceived them in England that sente him, so he had wound him selfe in to these mens high esteeme & best.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p 171

They have little arts and dexterities to wind in such things into discourse. Dr. H. More.

9†. To contrive by resort to shifts and expedients (to effect something); bring; procure or get by devious ways.

We'll haue some trick and wile
To winde our younger brother out of prison
That lies in for the Rape
Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy, iii. 1.

He with his former dealings had wound in what money he had in yr partnership into his owne hands.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 301.

10†. To circulate; put or keep in circulation.

Amongst the rest of the Plantations all this Summer little was done but securing themselues and planting Tobacco, which passes there as current Silver, and by the oft turning and winding it some grow rich but many poore. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 88.

There is no State that winds the Penny more nimbly, and makes quicker Returns (than Luca)
Howell, Letters, I. i. 41.

11. To adjust or dispose for work or motion by coiling a spring more tightly or otherwise turning some mechanical device; as, to wind a clock or a watch. See to wind up (f), below.

When he wound his clock on Sunday nights the whirr of that monitor reminded the widow to wind hers.
T. Hardy, Trumpet-Major, iii.

To wind a ship, to bring it round until the head occupies the place where the stern was. To wind off, to unwind; uncoil. To wind up. (a) To coil up into a small compass, as a skein of thread; form into a ball or coil round a bobbin, reel, or the like. Hence (b) To bring to a final disposition or conclusion; finish; arrange and adjust for final settlement, as the affairs of a company or partnership on its dissolution.

I could not wind it [the discourse] up closer.
Howell, Letters, I vi 8.

The Author, upon the winding up of his Action, introduces all those who had any Concern in it.
Addison, Spectator, No 357.

Signor Jupe was to "enliven the varied performances at frequent intervals with his chaste Shakspearian quips and retorts." Lastly he was to wind them up by appearing in his favourite character of Mr. William Button.
Dickens, Hard Times, I 8.

(c) To tighten, as the strings of certain musical instruments, so as to bring them to the proper pitch; put in tune by stretching the strings over the pegs.

Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute.
Waller, Of Poets and Hylas.

Hence figuratively. (d) To restore (harmony or concord) to a natural or healthy condition.

The untuned and jarring senses O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!
Shak., Lear, iv. 7. 16.

(e) To bring to a state of great tension; subject to a severe strain or excitement; put upon the stretch.

They wound up his temper to a pitch and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Bp. Atterbury.

Our [= us] was at last wound up to the height of expectation. Goldsmith, Voltaire.

(f) To bring into a state of renewed or continued motion as a watch or clock, by coiling anew the spring or drawing up the weights.

When an authentic watch is shown,
Each man winds up and rectifies his own Suckling, Aglaura, Epil.

Hence figuratively. (g) To prepare for continued movement, action, or activity; arrange or adapt for continued operation; give fresh or continued activity or energy to; restore to original vigor or order.

Fate seemed to wind him up for fourscore years
Yet freshly ran he on ten winters more Dryden.

Is there a tongue like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding-up!
Young, Love of Fame, I 282.

(h) To hoist; draw; raise by or as by a winch.

Let me see thy hand. This was ne'er made to wash,
Or wind up water, least clothes or rub floor.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb ii. 2.

Winding-up Act, in Eng. law, an act providing for the dissolution of joint-stock companies, and the winding up of their affairs, more specifically 7 and 8 Vict., c. 111 (1844), followed and amended by 8 and 10 Vict., c. 28 (1845), 11 and 12 Vict., c. 45 (1848), 12 and 13 Vict., c. 108 (1849), 13 and 14 Vict., c. 83 (1850), 19 and 20 Vict., c. 47 (1856), 20 and 21 Vict., c. 14, c. 78 (1857), and superseded by The Companies' Act (1862), 25 and 26 Vict., c. 89.

wind[1] (wind), n. [< ME. wind, wynd, < AS. wind = OS. OFries. D. LG. wind = OHG. MHG. wint, G. wind = Icel. vindr = Sw. Dan. vind = Goth. winds, vinths, wind, air in motion, = W. gwynt = L. ventus, wind, = Gr. ἄητης, a blast, gale, wind, = Skt. vāta, wind; lit. 'that which blows,' being orig. from the ppr. (cf. Gr. ἀείς (ἀέντ-), blowing, ppr.) of a verb (Skt. √ vā) seen in Goth. waian, etc., G. wehen, blow, Russ. veiate, blow (> veterŭ, wind), etc., Lith. vejas, wind, from which is also ult. derived weather; see weather. From the E. wind, besides the verb and the obvious derivatives or compounds, are derived window, winnow, etc.; from the L. are ult. E. vent[2], ventilate, vesture, etc. (see also vent[1]).] 1. Air naturally in motion at the earth's surface with any degree of velocity; a current of air as coming from a particular direction. When the air has only a slight motion it is called a breeze; when its velocity is greater, a fresh breeze, and when it is violent, a gale, storm, or hurricane. The ultimate cause of winds is to be found in differences of atmospheric density produced by the sun in its unequal heating of different parts of the earth. These original differences of density give rise to vertical and horizontal currents of air which constitute and establish the general atmospheric circulation, and determine permanent belts of relatively high and low pressure over the earth's surface. Differences of pressure, in turn, produce their own differences of density at the earth's surface, and thereby become a secondary cause of winds. The general system of atmospheric circulation, with respect both to surface-winds and to their correlative upper currents, is described under trade-wind. In accordance with the character of their exciting cause, winds may be divided into—(1) constant, the trade winds and anti-trade winds, which depend upon the permanent difference of temperature between the equatorial regions and higher latitudes; (2) periodic, the monsoons and land- and sea-breezes which arise respectively from a seasonal and diurnal difference of temperature between land and sea; (3) cyclonic and anticyclonic winds associated with or constituting progressive areas of high and low pressure, the ultimate origin of which especially of those in high latitudes, is not satisfactorily determined; (4) whirlwinds and (certain) squalls, which arise when the air is in a condition of unstable equilibrium, and are developed as a part of the process by which stability is regained (this class includes the most violent winds, such as the tornado), and these occur when the instability is the combined effect of a high temperature and a high humidity, a condition favorable to the development of the greatest possible gradients of density, and hence of the most terrific manifestations of wind; (5) special, winds which logically belong to the preceding classes, but which by reason of special characteristics, arising frequently from local topography, have received special appellations, as the sirocco, the harmattan, the mistral, the foehn, the chinook, etc. Winds are also commonly named from the point of compass from which they blow, as a north wind, an east wind, a southwest wind. The winds were personified and worshiped as divinities by the ancients, and representations of them are frequent in ancient art, particularly in Greek sculpture and vase-painting.

And erly on the Tewysday, whiche was seynt Thomas daye, we made sayle, and passed by the coostes of Slauony and Hystria with easy wynde.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 9.

By reason of contrary windes we put backe againe to Prolemo, because we could not fetch Sapientia.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 166.

2. A direction from which the wind may blow; a point of the compass, especially one of the cardinal points. [Rare.]

Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain.
Ezek. xxxvii. 9.

3. Air artificially put in motion by any force or action: as, the wind of a bellows; the wind of a bullet or a cannon-ball (see windage).

Which he disdaining whisked his sword about,
And with the wind thereof the king fell down.
Marlowe and Nashe, Tragedy of Dido, ii. 1.

The whiff and wind of his fell sword.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 495.

4. Air impregnated with animal odor or scent.

Else counsellors will but take the wind of him
Bacon, Of Counsel.

5. In musical instruments the sound of which is produced by a stream of compressed air or breath, either the supply of air under compression, as in the bellows of an organ or in a singer's lungs, or the stream of air used in sound-production, as in the mouth of an organ pipe, in the tube of a flageolet, or in the voice.

Their instruments were such as in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.
Dryden, Flower and Leaf, l. 527

6. Breath; also, power of respiration; lung-power. See second wind, below.

To move me more in wasting of this wynde,
For I have weldy weghte, as semethe me.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 70

My wynde is stoppyd gon in my breste
Coventry Mysteries, p. 220.

Woman, thy words and thy wynds thou not waste.
York Plays, p. 356.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 5. 104.

How they spar for wind, instead of hitting from the shoulder. O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

7. The part of the body in the region of the stomach, a blow upon which causes a temporary loss of respiratory power by paralyzing the diaphragm for a time. It forms a forbidden point of attack in scientific boxing. [Slang.]

He gets him and pokes him in divers parts of the body, but particularly in that part which the science of self-defence would call his wind. Dickens.

8. The wind-instruments of an orchestra taken collectively, including both the wood wind (flutes, oboes, etc.) and the brass wind (trumpets, horns, etc.).—9. Anything light as wind, and hence ineffectual or empty; especially, idle words, threats, bombast, etc.

Nor think thou with wind
Of aery threats to awe. Milton, P. L., vi. 782

10. Air or gas generated in the stomach and bowels; flatulence.

Knowledge . . .
Oppresses else with surfeit, and soon turns Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.
Milton, P. L., vii. 130

11. A disease of sheep, in which the intestines are distended with air, or rather affected with a violent inflammation. It occurs immediately after shearing. — A capful of wind. See capful. A fair wind, a wind that enables a sailing ship to head her course with the sails full. All in the wind. See all. A sheet in the wind. See sheet[1]. Bare wind[1]. See bare[1]. Before the wind See before. Between wind and water. (a) In that part of a ship's side or bottom which is frequently brought above the water by the rolling of the vessel or by the fluctuation of the water's surface. Any breach effected by shot in this part is peculiarly dangerous.

They had a tall man-of-war to convoy them, but, at the first bout, it was shot between wind and water, and forced to make towards land.
Court and Times of Charles I., II. 42

Hence, figuratively. (b) Any part or point generally where a blow or attack will most effectually injure.

Shot him between wind and water
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, iv. 1

He had hit his destines in the Master vein, and struck his former Jealousie between wind and water, so that it sunk in the instant.
Fuller, Hist. of Edward II (ed. 1840), p. 11

Broken wind, a veterinary term for a form of paroxysmal dyspnœa, which seems to depend on asthma combined with a varying amount of emphysema: also loosely used for other dyspnœic conditions. See broken winded and wind-broken. By the wind. See by[1]. Cardinal winds. See cardinal. Close to the wind. See close[2], adv. Down the wind. (a) In the direction of and moving with the wind: as, birds fly quickly down the wind. (b) Toward ruin, decay, or adversity. Compare to whistle off, under whistle, v. t.

The more he prayed to it [the image] to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still.
Sir R. L'Estrange.

Head to wind. See head. Hot winds of the plains, southwesterly winds in Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas, which occur during the summer season, and by their extreme heat and dryness prove exceedingly destructive to vegetation. How the wind blows or lies. (a) The direction or velocity of the wind. (b) Figuratively, the position or state of affairs; how matters stand at a particular juncture: as, trifles show how the wind blows.

Miss Sprong, her confidante, who, seeing how the wind lay, had tried to drop little malicious hints . . . until the old lady had cut them short. Farrar, Julian Home, iv.

In the wind, astir; afoot.

Go to, there 's somewhat in the wind, I see.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, iii. 3.

What the blazes is in the wind now?
Dickens, Oliver Twist.

In the wind's eye, in the teeth of the wind, directly toward the point from which the wind blows; in a direction exactly contrary to that of the wind. Is the wind in that door? Is that how the case stands? is that the state of affairs?

Thou. I am come to intreat you to stand my friend, and to favour me with a longer time, and I will make you sufficient consideration.
Usurer. Is the wynde in that doore? If thou hast my money, so it is; I will not defer a day, an houre, a minute.
Greene and Lodge, Looking Glasse for London and Eng.

Leading wind. See leading. Mountain and valley winds, in meteor., diurnal winds blowing up the sides of mountains and the trough of valleys during the day, and down during the night. They are due to differences of temperature arising from unequal heating and radiation whereby the air at the summits of hills and mountains is heated during the day to a higher temperature than the air at the same level over the valleys or lowlands, causing a current up the valleys and mountain sides, conversely during the night the air at the summit is cooled by radiation to a lower temperature than the air at the same level over the lowlands, causing a downward surface flow of cold air. In narrow valleys this current sometimes attains great strength, as in the case of the Wisper wind of the Rhine. North wind of California, a dry desert-bearing north wind experienced on the Pacific slope of the United States but especially in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys of California. When occurring during the growing season, it is exceedingly injurious to vegetation. On extra or heavy wind. See n. and a. On the wind, as near as possible to the direction from which the wind blows. In the position or trimmed in the manner of a vessel that is sailing "by the wind." Periodic winds. See def. 1. Plate of wind. See plate. Red wind, a wind which blasts fruit or corn; a blight. Halliwell.

The goodliest trees in the garden are soonest blasted with red winds. Abp. Sandys, Sermons, p. 106. (Davies.)

Robin Hood wind, a wind in which the air is saturated with moisture at a temperature near the freezing-point, the moisture rendering it especially raw and penetrating; a thaw-wind. Running of the wind. See running. Second wind, a regular state of respiration attained during continued exertion after the breathlessness which had arisen at an earlier stage. Slant of wind. See slant. Soldier's wind. See soldier. Thaw-wind, a wind prevailing during a thaw. In general, since it becomes saturated with moisture at a temperature only a little above freezing it is peculiarly raw and penetrating. To beat the wind. See beat[1]. To break wind, carry the wind, eat up into the wind, gain the wind. See the verbs. To get one's wind, to recover one's breath: as, they will up and at it again when they get their wind. Colloq. [—] To get the wind of, to get on the windward side of.

All the three Biskainers made toward our ship, which was not carelesse to get the winde of them all.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 166.

To get (take) wind, to get wind of. See get[1]. To haul the wind. See haul. To have a free wind. See free. To have in the wind, to be on the scent or trail of; perceive and follow.

A hare had long escaped pursuing hounds. . . .
To save his life, he leap'd into the main,
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

To have the wind of. Same as to have in the wind.

My son and I will have the wind of you.
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 133.

To keep the wind. See keep. — Too near the wind, mean, stingy, cheese-paring. [Naut. slang.] — To raise the wind. See raise[1]. To recover the wind of. See recover[2]. To sail close to the wind. (a) To sail with the ship's head just so near to the wind as to fill the sails without shaking them; sail as closely against the direction of the wind as possible. (b) To border closely upon dishonesty or indecency: as, beware in dealing with him, he sails rather close to the wind. (c) See sail[1]. — To shake a vessel in the wind. See shake. To slip one's wind. See slip[1]. To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind, to act wrongly or recklessly and in time be visited with the evil effects of such conduct. Hos. viii. 7. — To take the wind out of one's sails. See sail[1]. To take wind, to leak out. To touch the wind. See touch. To whistle down the wind, to whistle for a wind. See whistle. Wind-scale. See scale[3]. = Syn. 1. Wind, Breeze, Gust, Flaw, Blast, Storm, Squall, Gale, Tempest, Hurricane, Tornado, Cyclone, etc. Wind is the general name for air in motion, at any rate of speed. A breeze is gentle and may be fitful; a gust is pretty strong, but especially sudden and brief; a flaw is essentially the same as gust, but may rise to the force of a squall; a blast is stronger and longer than a gust; a storm is a violent disturbance of the atmosphere, generally attended by rain, hail, or snow; a squall is a storm that begins suddenly and is soon over, perhaps consisting of a series of strong gusts; a gale is a violent and continued wind lasting for hours or days, its strength being marked by such adjectives as stiff and hard; a tempest is the stage between a gale and a hurricane. hurricane being the name for the wind at its greatest height, which is such as to destroy buildings, uproot trees, etc. A tornado and a cyclone are by derivation storms in which the wind has a circular or rotatory movement (see defs.).

wind[2] (wind), v. t.; pret. and pp. winded (in some uses, erroneously, wound), ppr. winding. [< ME. winden, wynden (= MD. winden = OHG. wintan), expose to the wind, air; < wind[2], n. With reference to blowing a horn, the verb wind[2], owing to the alternative (poetical) pron. wind, and prob. to some vague association of a horn as being usually curved, with the verb wind[1], has been confused with the verb wind[1], whence the irreg. pret. and pp. wound. It is possible, however, that the irreg. pret. and pp. wound arose out of mere conformity with the other verb, as the pret. rang, pp. rung (instead of ringed), of the verb ring[2], and the pret. wore, pp. worn, of the verb wear[1], arose out of conformity to similar forms of the similar verbs sing, swear, etc.] 1. To force wind through with the breath; blow; sound by blowing: as, to wind a horn: in this sense and the three following pronounced wind.

The last Miracle is the third time of Michaels winding his horne, when God shall bring forth all the Iewes.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 221.

Gawain . . . raised a bugle hanging from his neck,
And winded it, and that so musically
That all the old echoes hidden in the wall
Rang out like hollow woods at hunting-tide.
Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

3. To produce (sound) by blowing through or as through a wind-instrument.

But gin ye take that bugle-horn,
And wind a blast sae shrill,
Rose the Red, and White Lilly (Child's Ballads, V. 178).

3. To announce, signal, or direct by the blast of a horn, etc. [Rare.]

Was pleasure, as we look'd behind,
To see how thou the chase rould'st wind,
Cheer the dark blood-hound on his way,
And with the bugle rouse the fray!
Scott, L. of L. M., v. 29.

4. To perceive or follow by the wind or scent; nose.

We winded them by our noses — their perfumes betrayed them. Johnson, Dryden.

5. To expose to the wind; winnow; ventilate. — 6. To drive or ride hard, as a horse, so as to render scant of wind. — 7. To rest, as a horse, in order to let him recover wind.

windage (win'dāj), n. [< wind[2] + -age.] 1. In gun.: (a) The difference allowed between the diameter of a projectile and that of the bore of the gun from which it is to be fired, in order to allow the escape of some part of the explosive gas, and to prevent too great friction. (b) The rush or concussion of the air produced by the rapid passage of a shot.

The last shot flying so close to Captain Porter that with the windage of the bullet his very hands had almost lost the sense of feeling.
R. Paske (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 626).

(c) The influence of the wind in deflecting a missile, as a ball or an arrow, from its direct path, or aside from the point or object at which it is aimed; also, the amount or extent of such deflection. (d) The play between the spindle of the De Bange gas-check and its cavity in the breech-screw: it is expressed in decimal parts of an inch, and is measured by the difference between the diameters of the spindle and its cavity. — 2. In surg., same as wind-contusion.

windas, windass (win'das), n. [Early mod. E. also windace, wyndace; < ME. windas, wyndas, windasse, a windlass, < MD. windaes, D. windas (> OF. quindas, guyndas, F. guindas), windlass, lit. a 'winding-beam,' = Icel. vindāss, a rounded pole which can be wound round, windlass, < D. winden = Icel. vinda, wind (= E. wind), + aes = Icel. ass, pole, main rafter, sail-yard, = Goth. ans, a beam. Hence, by confusion with windlass[1], the modern form windlass[2].] 1†. Same as windlass[2].

Thor may no man out of the place it dryve
For noon engyn of wyndas or polyve.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 176.

Gote soon crosse bowis, and wyndaces to bynd them with, and quarrels. Paston Letters, I. 82.

2. A fanner for winnowing grain. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

windbag (wind'bag), n. A bag filled with wind; hence, a person of mere words; a noisy, empty pretender. [Slang.]

windball (wind'bâl), n. 1. A ball inflated with air; a balloon.

Generally the high stile is disgraced and made foolish and ridiculous by all words affected, counterfait, and puffed up, as it were a windball carrying more countenance then matter. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 166.

2. In surg., a cause of death or injury formerly supposed to lie in the passage of a projectile in close proximity to the person injured. See wind-contusion.

Where life is destroyed by the influence of the wind-ball. J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 279.

wind-band (wind'band), n. 1. A company of musicians who use only or principally wind-instruments; a brass or military band. — 2. The wind-instruments of an orchestra or band taken collectively. See wind[2], 8. — 3. A long cloud supposed to indicate stormy weather. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wind-beam (wind'bēm), n. A beam tying together the rafters of a pitched roof: same as collar-beam.

windberry (wind'ber'i), n.; pl. windberries (-iz). The cowberry, Vaccinium Vitis-Idæa. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wind-bill (wind'bil), n. In Scots law, an accommodation bill. See accommodation.

wind-bore (wind'bōr), n. 1. The extremity of the suction-pipe of a pump, usually covered with a perforated plate to prevent the intrusion of foreign substances. — 2. In mining, same as auger-piece.

windbound (wind'bound), a. Prevented from sailing by contrary winds; detained by contrary winds: as, windbound ships.

The next day we fasted, being windbound, and could not passe the sound.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

wind-brace (wind'brās), n. See brace[1].

wind-break (wind'brāk), n. Something to break the force of the wind, as a hedge, a board fence, or a row of evergreen trees; any shelter from the wind.

Under the lee of some shelving bank or other wind-break. F. Hamilton, Hunting Trips, p. 176.

wind-break (wind'brāk), v. t. To break the wind of. See wind-broken.

> 'Twould wind-break a mule to vie burdens with her.
> Ford.

windbroach† (wind'brōch), n. The hurdy-gurdy or vielle.

> Nero, a base blind fiddler, or player on that instrument which is called a windbroach.
> Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, ii. 30.

> For an old man to pretend to talk wisely is like a musician's endeavouring to fumble out a fine sonata upon a wind-broach.
> Tom Brown, Works, II. 234. (Davies.)

wind-broken (wind'brō'kn), p. a. Diseased in the respiratory organs; having the power of breathing impaired by chest-disease: as, a wind-broken horse. Also broken-winded.

wind-changing (wind'chān jing), a. Changeful as the wind; fickle. [Rare.]

> Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1. 57.

wind-chart (wind'chärt), n. A chart showing the wind-directions at a given time, or the directions prevailing during any period of the year over any region of the earth. Wind-charts for the ocean, of which the "Wind and Current Charts of the British Admiralty and the "Pilot Charts" of the United States Hydrographic Office are examples, constitute an important aid to navigators.

wind-chest (wind'chest), n. In organ-building, a chest or box immediately below the pipes or reeds, from which the compressed air is admitted to them by means of valves or pallets. See organ[1] and reed-organ.

wind-colic (wind'kol'ik), n. Intestinal pain caused by flatulence.

wind-contusion (wind'kon-tū'zhon), n. In surg., a contusion, such as rupture of the liver or concussion of the brain, unaccompanied by any external mark of violence, supposed to be produced by the air when rapidly displaced by the velocity of a projectile, as a cannon-ball. It is now, however, considered to be occasioned by the projectile itself striking the body in an oblique direction, the comparative escape of the external soft tissues being accounted for by the degree of obliquity with which the missile impinges on the elastic skin, together with the position of the internal structures injured relatively to the impingement of the ball on one side and hard resisting substances on another. Also called windage.

wind-cutter (wind'kut'ėr), n. In organ-building, the upper lip of the mouth of a flue-pipe, against which the stream of air impinges when the pipe is sounded.

wind-dial (wind'di'al), n. A dial showing the changes in the direction of the wind by means of an index or pointer connected with a wind-vane.

> The Wind Dial lately set up at Grigsby's Coffee and Chocolate House, behind the Royal Exchange, being the first and only one in any publick House in England, and having given great Satisfaction to all that have seen it, and being of Constant use to those that are in any wise Concerned in Navigation.
> Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, III. 56.

wind-dog (wind'dog), n. A name popularly applied to fragments of rainbows seen on detached clouds. Also wind-gall.

wind-dropsy (wind'drop'si), n. Emphysema; tympanites.

wind-egg (wind'eg), n. An infecund or otherwise imperfect egg, as one which will produce nothing but wind (gas); a soft-shelled egg, such as may be laid by a hen that is comparatively old or has been injured.

winder[1] (win'dėr), n. [< wind[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who winds, rolls, or coils: as, a bobbin-winder.

> They consist of sewing boys, shoe-binders, winders for weavers, and girls for all kinds of slop needlework.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 352.

2. An instrument or a machine for winding thread, etc. (a) A contrivance like a small windlass revolving a spool or reel upon which the thread is wound. (b) A large adjustable frame which can be passed through the opening of a skein and then increased in diameter so as to hold it firmly for winding off. (c) A small stick, strip, or notched slate upon which thread can be wound: a substitute for a spool or reel.

3. The key or utensil used to wind up the spring-work of a roasting-jack.

> To keep cats and lusty servants out of the kitchen, always leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads.
> Swift, Advice to Servants (Cook).

4. A plant that twists itself round others.

> Winders and creepers; as ivy, briony, hops.
> Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 586.

5. A winding-step of a staircase.

winder[2] (win'dėr), n. [< wind[2] + -er[1].] 1. One who winds or sounds a horn.

> Winder of the horn,
> When mouthed wild-boar roasting tender corn > Anger our huntsmen.
> Keats, Endymion, i.

2 (win'dėr). A blow which takes away the breath. — 3. A fan. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

winder[3] (win'dėr), v. t. [< winder[2], n.; prob. in part a dial. corruption of winnower* for winnower.] To fan; clean or winnow with a fan: as, to winder grain. Brockett. [Prov. Eng.]

windfall (wind'fâl), n. [< wind[1] + fall[1], v.] 1. Something blown down by the wind, as fruit from a tree, or a number of trees in a forest.

> When they did spread, and their boughs were become too great for their stem, they became a windfall upon the sudden.
> Bacon, True Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates (ed. 1887).

> she a noblest gone int' t orchard, to see if she can find wind-falls enough for t' make a pie or two for t' lads.
> Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, vi.

2. An unexpected piece of good fortune, as an unexpected legacy.

> This man, who otherwise beforetime was but poor and needy by these windfalls and unexpected cheats became very wealthy. Holland, tr. of Plutarch's Morals, p. 1237.

3. The tract of fallen trees, etc., which shows the path of a tornado. — 4. A violent gust of wind rushing from coast-ranges and mountains to the sea. — 5. The down rush of air occurring on the leeward side of a hill or mountain at a distance from its base.

windfall† (wind'fâl), a. Windfallen. [Rare.]

> You shall have leaves and windfall boughs enow, > Near to these woods, to roast your meat withal.
> Marlowe and Nashe, Dido, Queen of Carthage, I. 1. 172.

windfallen (wind'fâ'ln), a. Blown down by the wind.

> To gather windfall sticks.
> Drayton, Polyolbion, xiii. 182.

windfanner (wind'fan'ėr), n. Same as wind-hover.

wind-fertilized (wind'fėr'ti lizd), a. In bot., fertilized with pollen borne by the wind, as flowers: anemophilous, as conifers, grasses, sedges, etc.

windfish (wind'fish), n. The fall-fish, or silver chub, Semotilus bullaris, the largest cyprinoid of eastern North America. See Semotilus.

wind-flower (wind'flou'ėr), n. 1. A plant of the genus Anemone, chiefly the wood-anemone, A. nemorosa: so called by translation of the classic name of an anemone or other plant anciently associated with the wind. The wind-flowering reputation of this plant appears to have been centered chiefly by the name. The wind flower is a small herb, found in Europe, northwestern Asia, and North America, bearing a whorl of three trifoliate leaves and a single delicate white or commonly pinkish vernal flower. The American passion flower, A. patens var. Nuttalliana, bears the name specifically in the western United States.

> Bids thou where the poppy grows,
> With wind-flowers frail and fair > Bryant, Arctic Lover.

2. The marsh-gentian, Gentiana Pneumonanthe. Treas. of Bot.

wind-furnace (wind'fer'nās), n. Any form of furnace using the natural draft of a chimney without the aid of a bellows or blower; a natural-draft furnace; a laboratory-furnace provided with a tall chimney.

> The crucible is then placed in a wind-furnace, and slowly heated as long as fumes escape. Ure, Dict., IV. 551.

wind gage (wind'gāj), n. 1. An instrument for ascertaining the velocity and force of wind; an anemometer. See anemometer. — 2. An apparatus or contrivance for measuring or indicating the amount of the pressure of the wind in the wind chest of an organ. — 3. Mil., a graduated attachment to the sights of a fire-arm or cannon by which allowance can be made, in aiming, for the effect of the wind upon the projectile.

wind-gall[1] (wind'gâl), n. [< wind[2] + gall[2].] Distension of the synovial bursa at the fetlock joint of the horse, such as may be felt on each side of the tendons behind the joint. Also called gall.

> His horse . . . full of windgalls, sped with spavins
> Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 53.

> Neither Spavin, Splinter, nor Wind gall > Etherege, She Would if She Could, ii. 2.

wind-gall[2] (wind'gâl), n. [< wind[2] + gall[2]; as in water-gall, weather-gall.] Same as wind-dog.

> "Wind-dogges," . . . fragments or pieces (as it were) of rainbows sometimes called wind-galles seen on detached clouds. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 23.

wind-galled (wind'gâld), a. Having wind-galls.

> Did you think I was Wind-gall'd? I can sing too, if I please.
> Steele, Tender Husband, iii. 1.

wind-gap (wind'gap), n. See gap, 2.

wind-gun (wind'gun), n. Same as air-gun.

> Forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
> And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.
> Pope, Dunciad, i. 181.

wind-hatch (wind'hach), n. In mining, the opening or place where ore is taken out of the earth.

windhawk (wind'hâk), n. The windhover or kestrel.

wind-herb (wind'ėrb), n. See Phlomis.

wind-house (wind'hous), n. A house built partly underground to serve as a shelter or place of refuge in hurricanes.

windhover (wind'huv'ėr), n. A kind of hawk, the kestrel, Falco tinnunculus or Tinnunculus vinularius: so called from its hovering in the face of the wind. See kestrel. Also called windhibber, windcuffer, windfanner, windhawk, windsucker, tannet-hawk, stanel, etc.

> About as long
> As the wind-hover hangs in balance.
> Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

windily (win'di-li), adv. With high wind; in a way that betokens wind.

> The stars were glittering windily over before this crimson melted out of the east.
> W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, iv.

windiness (win'di-nes), n. 1. The state of being windy or tempestuous: as, the windiness of the weather or season. — 2. Flatulence. — 3. Tendency to generate wind (gas): as, the windiness of vegetables. — 4. Tumor; puffiness; vanity; boastfulness.

> The swelling windiness of much knowledge.
> Brereswood's Languages, Pref.

winding[1] (win'ding), p. a. [Ppr. of wind[1], v.] 1. Curving; spiral: as, a winding stair.

> The staires are winding, having a stately rayle.
> Coryat, Crudities, I. 33.

2. Full of bends or turns: as, a winding path.

> The ascent [of mount Tabor] is so easy that we rode up the north side by a winding road.
> Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 64.

> Across the court-yard, into the dark
> Of the winding pathway in the park,
> Curate and lantern disappear.
> Longfellow, Baron of St. Castine.

3. Warped; twisted; bent; crooked: as, a winding surface.

winding[1] (win'ding), n. [< ME. wyndynge; verbal n. of wind[1], v.] 1. A turn or turning; a bend; flexure; meander: as, the windings of a road or stream.

> The dogge endentyng, barryngs, swndynge, palynge, wyndynge or bendynge and semblable wast of ground in vanites. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

> They [the ways] were wonderfull hard, all stony and full of windings. Coryat, Crudities, I. 93.

> To follow the windings of this river.
> Addison, Remarks on Italy (Works, ed. Bohn, I. 337).

> The windings of the mazes. Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

2. A twist in any surface, so that all its parts do not lie in the same plane; a casting or warping. Gwilt. Compound winding When the field-magnets of a dynamo are fitted with two coils, one of which is placed in circuit with the armature and external leads, while the other is connected across the terminals as a shunt, the dynamo is said to be compound wound, and the winding compound winding. Differential winding, see differential. In winding, warped, out of the straight: applied by joiners to a plece of wood when two of its opposite corners stand higher than the other two. Out of winding, brought to a plane: said of a surface: a workmen's phrase. Series winding. A dynamo is said to be series wound, or to have a series winding, when its field-magnet coil is joined in series with the armature coil. Shunt winding. When the field-magnet coils of a dynamo are designed for, and connected as, a shunt on the armature coil the dynamo is said to be shunt wound, and the method of winding shunt winding.

winding[2] (win'ding), n. [Verbal n. of wind[2], v.] A call by the boatswain's whistle.

winding-engine (win'ding en'jin), n. Any steam motor employed to turn a drum around which a hoisting-rope is drawn; in a mine, an engine by which the ropes are wound on and unwound from the drums, for raising or lowering the bucket, kibble, or cage on which the mined material is brought to the surface. Also called drawing-engine and hoisting-engine.

windingly (win'ding-li), adv. In a winding manner, with curves, bends, or turns.

> The stream that creeps > Windingly by it. Keats, Endymion, i.

winding-pendant (win'ding-pen'dant), n. Naut., a pendant hooked at the fore- or main-masthead with its bight secured as far out as necessary on the foreyard or main-yard, and having a heavy tackle, called a winding-tackle, depending from its lower end, used for lifting heavy weights.

winding-rope (win'ding-rōp), n. In mining, the rope which connects the cage with the drum of the winding-engine. Formerly the winding-ropes were of hemp or manila; at the present time steel wire is chiefly used, and both flat and round ropes are employed. In one of the largest Belgian coal mines, in which the lift is 765 yards, the rope (which tapers toward the bottom) weighs 6 tons.

winding-sheet (win'ding-shēt), n. 1. A sheet in which a corpse is wrapped.

> These arms of mine shall be thy winding sheet;
> My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 114.

2. Solidified drippings of grease from a candle which cling to the side of it and present some resemblance to drapery in its folds and creases. The appearance of this has been fancied to be an omen of death or other misfortune.

> He . . . fell asleep on his arms, . . . a long winding-sheet in the candle dripping down upon him.
> Dickens, Tale of Two Cities, ii. 4 winding-stairs (win'ding-stārz), n. A ladder-shell; a scalaria; a wentletrap. See cut under Scalaria.

> The Dutch call these shells winding-stairs
> P. P. Carpenter, Lect. Mollusca, 1861

winding-sticks (win'ding-stiks), n. pl. In joinery, two short sticks or strips of wood with parallel edges, placed across the two ends of a board to test its freedom from warps or winds.

winding-tackle (win'ding-tak'l), n. A heavy tackle for use with a winding-pendant.

winding-up (win'ding-up'), n. The act of one who winds up, in any sense.

> It is curious that in the winding-up of each of these pieces the same expedient is employed.
> Gifford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. xii.

wind-instrument (wind'in"stru-ment), n. A musical instrument the sound of which is produced by a stream of compressed air, usually by the breath. Chief of such instruments is the human voice. Wind instruments blown by the breath are divided into two classes, wood-wind instruments, including the flute, flageolet, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, English horn, etc., and brass or metal-wind instruments, including the trumpet, horn, trombone, tuba, ophicleide, etc. Wind-instruments sounded by air mechanically compressed include the pipe-organ and the reed-organ, together with the bagpipe, and, in a certain sense, the Æolian harp. The method of tone-production in all these instruments, except the last, is either the vibration induced in a stream of air by directing it against a sharp edge, as in the flute and in flue-pipes in the organ, or the vibration induced in an elastic tongue or reed in or over an orifice through which a stream of air is driven, as in the voice, the clarinet, and the reed-organ. Sometimes both methods are used in the same instrument, as in the pipe-organ.

> With a wind instrument my master made,
> In five days you may breathe ten languages,
> As perfect as the devil or himself
> T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, i. 3.

windlace, n. Same as windlass[1].

windlass[1] (wind'las), n. [Early mod. E. also windlace, windlasse, windlesse, wyndelesse; perhaps < ME. windels* (= MLG. windelse, a winding, handle-work, Ld. windels, a winding, as the winding of a screw, or the ornamental work on a sword-hilt), < AS. windan, etc., turn, wind: see wind[1], and cf. windle.] 1. A winding or turning; a circuitous course; a circuit.

> Howar that fetteth the wyndelesse in huntyng - hoeur.
> Palsgrave, p. 231.

> Amonge theis he appoynted a fewe horsemen to mainge som what abrode for the greater appearance, bidding them fetche a windlasse a great waye about, and to make al toward one place. Golding, tr. of Cæsar, fol. 208.

> I now fetching a windlesse, that I might better have a shoote. Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 270.

Hence — 2. Any indirect, artful course; circumvention; art and contrivance; subtleties.

> Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
> With windlasses and with assays of bias,
> By indirections find directions out.
> Shak., Hamlet, ii. 1. 65.

windlass[1] (wind'las), v. [Early mod. E. also windlace; < windlass[1], n.] I. intrans. 1. To take a circuitous path; fetch a compass.

> A skilful woodsman by windlassing presently gets a shoot which without taking a compass he could never have obtained. Hammond, Works, IV. 616. (Latham.)

2. To adopt a circuitous, artful, or cunning course; use stratagem; act indirectly or warily.

> She is not so much at leasure as to windlace, or use craft, to satisfy them. Hammond, Works, IV. 506. (Latham.)

II. trans. To bend; turn about; bewilder.

> Your words, my friend (right healthful caustics) blame
> My young mind marred, whom love doth windlace so.
> Sir P. Sidney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 139).

windlass[2] (wind'las), n. [Early mod. E. also windlas, a corruption of wendas, windlasse, by confusion with windlass[1].] 1. A modification of the wheel and axle, used for raising weights, etc. One kind of windlass is the winch used for raising water from wells, etc., which has an axle turned by a crank, and a rope or chain for raising the weight by being wound round the axle. A simple form of windlass, much used in ships for raising the anchors or obtaining a purchase on other occasions, consists of a strong beam of wood placed horizontally and supported at its ends by iron spindles which turn in collars or sockets inserted in what are termed the windlass-bitts. This large axle is pierced with holes directed toward its center, in which long levers or handspikes are inserted for turning it round when the anchor is to be weighed or any purchase is required. It is furnished with pawls to prevent it from turning backward when the pressure on the handspikes is intermitted. Different arrangements of gearing are applied to a windlass to exert increased power, and steam-windlasses, in which a small steam-engine is made to heave the windlass round, have come largely into use. Compare capstan (with cut), and cut under winch.

Windlass.

a, a, ratchet heads; b, b, drumheads; c, c, whelps built around a spindle which is journaled in the cheeks d, d. The pawls are pivoted on the post; the e, e, and sustain the strain while the handspikes, which rotate the windlass by being placed like spokes in the holes of the drumheads, are being shifted for a new purchase.

2†. A handle by which anything is turned; specifically, a winch-like contrivance for bending the arbalist or crossbow. See crossbow.

> The arblast was a cross-bow, the windlace the machine used in bending that weapon. Scott, Ivanhoe, xxviii., note.

Differential or Chinese windlass, a windlass with a barrel differing in diameter in different parts, the rope winding upon the larger and unwinding from the smaller portion. The amount of absolute lift and of the power exerted is determined by the difference in the two diameters of the barrel. Spanish windlass (naut.), an extemporized purchase made by winding a rope round a roller and inserting a lever in a hitch or bight of the rope. By heaving round the lever a considerable strain is produced.

windlass[2] (wind'las), v. [< windlass[2], n.] I. intrans. To use a windlass; raise something as by a windlass.

> Let her [Truth] rest, my dear sir, at the bottom of her well, . . . none of our windlassing will ever bring her up. Miss Edgeworth, Helen, xiv.

II. trans. To hoist or haul by means of a windlass.

> The stern line began to draw, and the sloop was windlassed clear of the stone pile and saved.
> The Century, XXXIX. 226.

windle (win'dl), n. [< ME. windel, as in comp. gan-windel, a wheel on which yarn is wound, < AS. windel (= MD. windel, a wheel, pulley, roll, cradle, = MLG. windle, a roll, etc.), < windan, etc., turn, wind: see wind[1], and cf. windlass[1].] 1. An implement or engine for turning or winding: used in different senses locally.

> To force the water . . . with devise of engines and windles up to the top of the hill.
> Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxxvi. 15.

> Speak her fair and canny, or we will have a ravelled hasp on the yarn-windles. Scott, Pirate, v.

> From a windle the thread is conducted to the quills.
> S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

2. The windthrush or redwing, Turdus iliacus. See cut 2 under thrush[1]. [Devonshire, Eng.] — 3. A dry measure, equal to about 3¼ Winchester bushels. The official returns for 1879 showed that it was not then entirely obsolete. It is there stated as 220.8½ imperial bushels of wheat, 180.50 bushels of barley, or 220.62 8/7 bushels of beans.

> 80 windels of barley . . . £40.
> H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App., i.

windlest, n. An obsolete form of windlass[2], Coles, Palgrave.

windless (wind'les), a. [< wind[2] + -less.] 1. Free from or unaffected by wind; calm; unruffled.

> A windless sea under the moon of midnight. Keats.

> A windless cloudless even. William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

2. Wanting wind; out of breath.

> Binding his hands and knitting a handkercher about his eyes, that he should not see, and when they had made him sure and fast, then they laid him on until they were windless. Harman, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 96.

windlesse†, n. An obsolete form of windlass[1].

windlestraw (wind'll-strâ), n. [Also Sc. windlestrae, < AS. windelstreow, straw for plaiting, < windel, a woven basket, etc., + streów, etc., straw: see windle and straw[1].] 1. The old stalk of various grasses, as the tufted hair-grass, Deschampsia (Aira) cæspitosa, the dog's-tail, Cynosurus cristatus, or Apera (Agrostis) Spica-venti.

> Tall spires of windlestraw
> Threw their thin shadows down the rugged slope.
> Shelley, Alastor.

2. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea: same as jackstraw, 5. [Local, Eng.]

windlift (wind'lift), n. [A perversion of windlass, windlesse, the second element being made to simulate lift[1].] A windlass.

> A Wind-lift to heave up a great scandal.
> Roger North, Examen, p. 324.

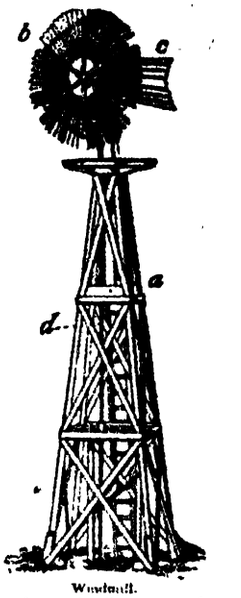
windling (wind'ling), n. [< wind[2] + -ling[1].] A branch blown down by the wind. [Prov. Eng.]

wind-marker (wind'mär'ker), n. A movable arrow or other device for showing on a chart the direction of the wind at any point.

windmill (wind'mil), n. [< ME. windmille, windmelle, windmulle, windmilne, wyndemylne = D. windmolen = MHG. wintmul, G. windmühle; < wind[2] + mill[1], n.] 1. A mill or machine for grinding, pumping, or other purposes, moved by the wind; a wind-motor; any form of motor for utilizing the pressure of the wind as a motive power. Two types of machines are used, the horizontal and the vertical. The vertical motor consists essentially of a horizontal shaft called the wind-shaft, with a combination of sails or vanes fixed at the end of the shaft, and suitable gearing for conveying the motion of the wind-shaft to the pump or other machinery. The older types of windmill used four vanes or sail-frames called whips, covered with canvas, arrangements being provided for reefing the sails in high winds. To present the vanes to the wind, the whole structure or tower carrying the windmill was at first turned round by means of a long lever. Later the top of the tower, called the cap, was made movable. Windmills are now made with many wooden vanes forming a disk exposed to the winds, and fitted with automatic feathering and steering machinery, governors for regulating the speed, apparatus for closing the vanes in storms, etc. These improved windmills are chiefly of American invention, and are largely used in all parts of the United States for pumping water. Horizontal windmills employ an upright wind-shaft, and movable vanes placed in a circle round it, the vanes feathering when moving against the wind.



Windmill.

a, frame; b, sails; c, vane; d, pump-rod.

Old Windmill at Bridgehampton, New York.

> I saugh him carien a wind-melle
> Under a walshe-note shale.
> Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1280.

2. A visionary scheme; a vain project; a fancy; a chimera.

> He lived and died with general councils in his pate, with wind-mills of union to concord Rome and England, England and Rome, tiermany with them both.
> Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 102. (Davies.)

To fight windmills, to combat chimeras or imaginary opponents: in allusion to Don Quixote's adventure with the windmills.

windmill-cap (wind'mil-kap), n. The movable upper part of a windmill, which turns to present the sails in the direction of the wind. See windmill.

windmill-grass (wind'mil-gras), n. A showy grass, Chloris truncata, of southeastern Australia: so named apparently from its six to ten long spreading flower-spikes.

windmill-plant (wind'mil-plant), n. Same as telegraph-plant.

windmilly (wind'mil-i), a. [< wind[2] + mill[1] + -y[1].] Abounding with windmills. [Rare.]

A windmilly country this, though the windmills are so damp and rickety. Dickens, Uncommercial Traveller, xxv.

windock†, winnock (win'dǫk, win'ǫk), n. Same as window. [Scotch.]

The foirsaidis — wer diuerss and syndrie tymes callit at the tolbuith windok. Acts James VI. (1581), p. 229. (Jamieson.)

Listening the doors and winnocks rattle. Burns, A Winter Night.

windolett, n. A false spelling of windowlet.

windoret (win'dōr), n. [A perversion of window, simulating door.] A window.

Nature has made man's breast no windowes,
To publish what he does within doors
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 369

window (win'dō), n. [Early mod. E. windowe; < ME. windowe, wyndowe, windoge, windohe (the orig. guttural showing in the Sc. wendak, windock, winnock), < Icel. vindauga (= Norw. vindauga = Dan. vindue for vindoje*, the form vindue being prob. < Icel.), window, lit. 'wind-eye,' < vindr, wind, + auga, eye; see wind[2] and eye[1], n. The AS. words were eágdura, 'eyedoor,' and eágthyrl, 'eyethirl,' i. e. 'eyehole.' The G. word for window is fenster = Sw. fönster, from the L.] 1. An opening in the wall of a building for the admission of light and air. In modern buildings this opening is usually fitted with a frame in which are set movable sashes containing panes of glass or other transparent material, the whole frame with the sashes, etc., also being known as the window. Many windows are not designed to be opened. Glass was employed in windows among the ancient Romans, and came into extensive use among other nations in the course of the eleventh century. See cuts under basement-light, mullioned, rose-window, and wheel-window.

Fowerti dais after this,
Arches windoge undon it is,
The Hausen ut-fleg, hu ai it gan ben,
Ne cam he nogt to the arche a-gen.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 602.

My chaunbre was Ful wel depeynted, and with glas
Were al the windowes wel y-glased,
Ful clere, and nat an hole y-crased.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 323.

The prentices made a riot upon my glass windows the Shrove-Tuesday following.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iv. 4.

2. An aperture or opening resembling a window or suggestive of a window.

The windows of heaven. Gen. vii. 11.

The window of my heart, mine eye.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 848.

Hence —3. In anat., one of two holes in the inner wall of the tympanum, called respectively the oval window and the round window, fenestra ovalis and fenestra rotunda. See fenestra.— 4. A cover; a lid.

Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 116.

5. A figure formed by lines crossing one another.

The Fav'rite child, that just begins to prattle, . . .
Is very humorsome, and makes great clutter,
He has Windows on his Bread and Butter.
W. King, Art of Cookery.

6†. A blank space.

I will, therefore, that you send unto me a collation thereof, and that your said collation have a window expedient to set what name I will therein.
Cranmer, Works (Parker Soc.), II. 249.

Back of a window. See back[1].— Blind window. See blind[1].— Clustered window, a window consisting of three or more lights grouped together. Examples are especially frequent in medieval architecture.— Coupled windows, dormant window†, false window, fan-shaped window. See the adjectives, and cuts under coupled windows and dormer-window.— French window, a window having two sashes hinged at the sides, and opening in the middle. Goldsmiths' window, a very rich claim in which the gold shows freely. [Mining slang, Australia.]— House out of windows†. See house[1].— Jesse window. See Jesse.— Lattice-window. See lattice, 2 (with cuts).— Low side window. Same as lychnoscope.— Oriel-window. See oriel (with cut).— Stool of a window. See stool.— Venetian window, a window which has three separate lights.— Window tax, window duty, a tax formerly levied in Great Britain on windows of houses, latterly on all in excess of six in number. It was abolished in 1851, a tax on houses above a certain rental being substituted. (See also dormer-window, lancet-window, rose-window, wheel-window.)

window (win'dō), v. t. [< window, n.] 1. To furnish with a window or with windows.

Within a windowed niche of that high hall
Sate Brunswick's fated chieftain.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 22.

2. To make openings or rents in.

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness.
Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 31.

3. To place in a window.

Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome and see Thy master thus? Shak., A. and C., iv. 14. 72.

window-bar (win'dō-bär), n. 1. One of the parts of the frame of a window or window-sash.—2. A bar of wood or iron for securing a window or the shutters of it when closed.— 3. A horizontal bar fitted in a window or doorway, to prevent a child from falling through.— 4. pl. Latticework, as on a woman's stomacher. Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 116.

window-blind (win'dō-blind), n. A blind, screen, or shade for a window. See blind[1].

window-bole (win'do-bōl), n. Same as bole[4], 1.

I was out on the window-bole when your auld back was turned, and awa' down by to has a baff at the popinjay.
Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

window-curtain (win'dō-kėr'tạn), n. Same as curtain, 1 (b).

window-frame (win'dō-frām), n. The frame of a window, which receives and holds the sashes.

window-gardening (win'dō-gär'ning), n. The cultivation of plants indoors before a window.

The boxes used in window gardening are made of a great variety of materials, etc. Henderson, Handbook of Plants.

window-gazer (win'dō gā'zėr), n. An idler; one who gazes idly from a window.

Her sonnes gluttonous her daughters window-gazers.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 306.

window-glass (win'dō-glàs), n. Glass suitable for windows, or such as is commonly used for windows, especially the commoner kinds, as distinguished from plate-glass or other more costly varieties. Spread window-glass. Same as broad glass (which see, under broad).

window-jack (win'do-jak), n. Same as builders' jack (which see, under jack).

window-latch (win'do-lach), n. A catch or locking-device for holding a window-sash open or shut.

window-lead (win'dō-led), n. Same as came[3], 2.

windowless (win'do-les), a. [< window + -less.] Destitute of windows.

It is usual . . . to huddle them together into naked walls and windowless rooms
H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, I. 277. (Davies.)

I stood still at this end, which, being windowless, was dark. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xvii.

windowlet (win'dō-let), n. [< window + -let.] A little window.

If wak'd they cannot see, their eyes are blind,
Shut up like windowlets Middleton, Solomon Paraphrased, xvii.

window-lift (win'dō lift), n. A strap or a handle by which to raise a window sash, especially in a carriage or a railway-car.

window-lock (win'dō lok), n. A device for fastening the sash of a window so that it cannot be opened from the outside.

window-martin (win'do-mär'tin), n. The common martin of Europe, Chelidon urbica; the house-martin or window-swallow. See cut under martin.

window-mirror (win'dō-mir'ọr), n. A mirror fastened outside of a window and adjustable at any angle, to reflect the image of objects in the street to the view of persons in the room, who may thus see without being seen.

window-opener (win'dō op'n*ė*r), n. A lever or rod by which a window, ventilator, sash, a panel in the raised roof of a railway-car, etc., may be opened and held in any desired position.

window-oyster (win'dō-ois'tėr), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Placunidæ, Placuna placenta. Also window-shell.

window-pane (win'do-pān), n. 1. One of the oblong or square plates of glass set in a window-frame.—2. The sand-flounder. [New Jersey.]

window-sash (win'dō-sash), n. The sash or light frame in which panes of glass are set for windows. See sash[1].

window-screen (win'dō-skrēn), n. Any device for filling all or part of the opening of a window, particularly if it is ornamental, as the pierced lattices of the Arabs; also, the glass filling of a stained or painted window.

Chartres [cathedral] . . . singularly fortunate in retaining its magnificent jewel-like window screens
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 306.

window-seat (win'do-sēt), n. A seat in the recess of a window.

window-sector (win'do-sek'tọr), n. A bar or plate of metal in the form of a sector of a circle, used to control the movement and position of a window or ventilator in the raised roof of a railway-car. E. H. Knight.

window-shade (win'dō-shād), n. A contrivance for shutting out or tempering light at a window; a variety of window-blind, usually a piece of holland or similar material, arranged to roll up on a roller, and to cover the window when pulled out.

window-shell (win'dō-shel), n. Same as window-oyster.

window-shutt (win'dō-shut), n. A window-shutter.

When you bar the window-shutts of your lady's bed-chamber at nights, leave open the sashes.
Swift, Advice to servants (Chamber-maid).

window-shutter (win'do-shut'ėr), n. A shutter used to darken or secure a window.

window-sill (win'do-sil), n. The sill of a window. See sill, 1.

window-stile (win'do stil), n. One of the vertical bars in a window-sash.

window-stool (win'do stōl), n. See stool.

windowyt (win'do-i), a. [< window + -y[1].] Exhibiting intersecting lines or little crossings like those of the sashes of a window.

Poor fish, beset
With strangling snare, or windowy net
Donne, The Bait.

windpipe (wind'pip), n. [Early mod. E. wyndpype; < wind[2] + pipe[1], n.] The tube passing from the larynx to the division of the bronchi which conveys the air in respiration to and from the lungs. See trachea, and cut under mouth.

wind-plant (wind'plant), n. The wind-flower, Anemone nemorosa. See cut under anemone.

wind-pole (wind'pōl), n. See the quotation.

Taking, with Dove, north east and south-west (true) as the wind poles, all intermediate directions are found to be more or less assimilated to the characteristics of those extremes, as they are nearer one or other.
Pilt Roy, Weather Book, p. 178.

wind-pox (wind'poks), n. Varicella or chicken-pox.

wind-pressure (wind'presh'ụr), n. 1. The pressure of the wind on any object in its path. The pressure of the wind blowing perpendicularly on a flat surface is usually deduced from its velocity by means of the equation $P = kA v^2$, where P is the pressure in pounds, v the velocity in feet per second, A the area of the surface in square feet, and k a numerical constant whose value for ordinary temperatures and barometric pressures is variously given from 0.0019 to 0.0032.
2. In organ-building, the degree of compression in the compressed air in the storage-bellows and the wind chests.

wind-pump (wind'pump), n. A pump moved by wind.

wind-record (wind'rek'ọrd), n. A record of wind velocities or directions; especially, a continuous registration made by an anemograph or self-recording anemometer; an anemogram.

windringt (win'dring), n. [Possibly a misreading for winding or wandering.] Winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the windring brooks.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 128.

wind-rode (wind'rōd), a. Naut., riding with head to wind instead of to current. Compare tide-rode.

wind-root (wind'rōt), n. The pleurisy-root, Asclepias tuberosa.

wind-rose (wind'rōz), n. 1. A table or diagram showing the relative frequency of winds blowing from the different points of the compass, or the relative amount of total wind movement for each direction; also, a table or diagram showing the connection between the wind-direction and any other meteorological element: thus, a thermal wind-rose shows the average temperature prevailing with winds from different directions.— 2. See rose[1] and Romeria.

windrow (wind'rō), n. [Also, corruptly, winrow, < wind[2] + row[2], n.] 1. A row or line of hay raked together for the purpose of being rolled into cocks or heaps; also, sheaves of corn set up in a row one against another in order that the wind may blow between them.— 2. A row of peats set up for drying; a row of pieces of turf, sod, or sward cut in paring and burning.— 3. Any similar row or formation; an extended heap, as of dust thrown up by the wind.

Each day's dust, before the next day came, was swept into windrows or whirled away altogether by intermittent gusts charging up the slope from the valley.
The Century, XXXI. 83.

4. The green border of a field, dug up in order to carry the earth to other land to mend it; so called because land in rows and exposed to the wind. Ray, Eng. Words (1691), p. 120.

windrow (wind'rō), v. t. [< windrow, n.] To rake or put into the form of a windrow.

wind-sail (wind'sal), n. 1. A wide tube or funnel of canvas serving to convey a current of fresh air into the lower parts of a ship.— 2. One of the vanes or sails of a windmill.— To trim a wind-sail, to turn the opening of the wind-sail toward the wind.

wind-scale (wind'skāl), n. See scale[3].

wind-sèd (wind'sēd), n. A plant of the composite genus Arctotis.

wind-shaft (wind'shaft), n. See windmill, 1.

wind-shake (wind'shāk), n. A flaw in the timber of exogenous trees. See shake, n., 7, and anemony.

If you come into a shop, and find a bow that is small long, heavy, and strong, lying straight, not winding, not marred with knot gall, wind-shake, wem, fret, or pinch, buy that bow of my warrant.
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 107.

wind-shaken† (wind'shā'kn), a. Same as wind shaken. [Rare.]

The wind-shaken surge, with high and monstrous mane, Seems to cast water on the burning bear.
Shak., Othello, II. i. 14.

wind-shaken (wind'shā'kn), a. 1. Driven or agitated by the wind; tottering or trembling in the wind.

He's the rock, the oak not to be wind shaken.
Shak. Cor., v. 2. 117.

2. Impaired by the action of the wind: as, wind-shaken timber.

wind-shock (wind'shok), n. Same as wind-shake.

wind-side (wind'sīd), n. The windward side. Mrs. Browning.

Windsor bean, chair, Knight, soap. See bean[1], 2, chair, etc.

wind-spout (wind'spout), n. A waterspout, tornado-funnel, or other form of whirlwind.

wind-storm (wind'storm), n. See storm.

windstroke (wind'strōk), n. A paralysis of spinal origin in the horse.

windsucker (wind'suk'ėr), n. 1. The wind hover or kestrel. [Kent, Eng.]

Klatrillos or windsuckers that filling themselves with winde, fly against the wind evermore.
Nashe, Lenten Stuffe (Harl. Misc., VI. 170).

2. A person ready to pounce on any one, or on any blemish or weak point.

There is a certain saviour windsucker, that hovers up and down, laboriously engrossing all the air with his luxurious ambition, and buzzing into every one my detraction.
Chapman, Iliad, Pref. to the Reader.

But it would be something too extravagant for the veriest wind sucker among commentators to start a theory that a revision was made of his original work by Marlowe after additions had been made to it by Shakespeare.
Swinburne, Shakespeare, p. 55.

3. A crib biter.

wind-sucking (wind'suk'ing), n. The noise made by a horse in crib-biting.

wind-swift (wind'swift), a. Swift as the wind.

Therefore hath the wind swift Cupid wings.
Shak., R. and J., II. vi. 8.

windthrush (wind'thrush), n. The redwing, Turdus iliacus. Also called wanward and windle. See cut 2 under thrush[1]. [Prov. Eng.]

wind-tight (wind'tīt), a. So tight as to prevent the passage of wind or air.

Stages . . . wind tight and water-tight.
Sp. Hall, Remains, p. 16. (Latham.)

wind-trunk (wind'trungk), n. In organ-building, a duct which conducts the compressed air from the bellows to a wind chest. See cut under organ.

wind-up (wind'up), n. [< wind up: see wind[1].] The conclusion or final adjustment and settlement of any matter, as a speech, business, entertainment, etc.; the closing act; the close.

Very well married, to a gentleman in a great way, near Bristol, who kept two carriages! That was the wind up of the history.
Jane Austen, Emma, xxii.

I must be . . . careful . . . to . . . have a regular wind up of this business.
Dickens, Bleak House, xviii.

windward (wind'wārd), a. and n. [< wind[2] + -ward.] I. a. On the side toward the point from which the wind blows: as, windward shrouds.

II. n. The point from which the wind blows: as, to ply or sail to windward.

To windward, the pale green water ran into a whitish sky.
W. C. Russell, Jack's Courtship, xxii.

To get to the windward of one, to get the advantage of one; get the better of one; take the wind out of one's sails.

To lay or cast an anchor to windward, to adopt measures for an ease or security.

windward (wind'wārd), adv. [< wind[2] + -ward.] Toward the wind: opposed to leeward.

wind-way (wind'wā), n. 1. In mining, a passage for air. 2. In organ-building. See pipe[1], 2 (a).

wind-wheel (wind'hwēl), n. A wheel moved by the wind and used as a source of power, as in the windmill, wind pump, etc.

windy (win'di), a. [< ME. windy, wyndi, < AS. windig, full of wind (< wind, wind (see wand[2]), + -ig[1].] 1. Consisting of wind; formed by gales.

The windy tempest of my heart.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., II. v. 80.

2. Next the wind; windward.

Still you keep o' the windy side of the law.
Shak., T. N., III. 4. 181.

3. Tempestuous; boisterous; as, windy weather.

The windy Seas.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 5.

4. Exposed to or affected by the wind.

The building rook 'ill caw from the windy tall elm-tree.
Tennyson, May Queen, New-Year's Eve.

5. Wind-like; resembling the wind.

Her windy sighs.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 51.

The windy breath
Of soft petitions.
Shak., K. John, II. i. 477.

6. Tending to generate wind or gas in the stomach; flatulent: as, windy food.

This drink is windy, and so is the Fruit [plantain] eaten raw, but boil'd or roasted it is not so.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 314.

7. Caused or attended by gas in the stomach or intestines.

A windy colic.
Arbuthnot, Aliments.

8. Affected with flatulence; troubled with wind in the stomach or bowels. Dunglison. — 9. Airy; unsubstantial; empty; vain.

What windy joy this day had I conceived.
Milton, S. A., l. 1574.

Here's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured.
South.

10. Talkative; boastful; vain. [Colloq.]

Yet after these blustering insolences and windy ostentations all this thing is but a man, and that, God knows, a very foolish one.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 52.

windy-footed (win'di-fūt'ed), a. Wind-swift; swift-footed. [Rare.]

The windy-footed dame.
Chapman.

wine (win), n. [< ME. win, wyn, < AS. win = OS. O'Fries. win = D. wijn = MLG. wīn = LG. wien = OHG. MHG. wīn, G. wein, wine, = Icel. vín = Sw. Dan. vin = Goth. wein = It. Sp. vino = Pg. vinho = F. vin = Slav. OBulg. Serv. vino = Bohem. víno = Pol. wino = Russ. vino = Olr. fin, Ir. Gael. fion, < L. vinum, wine, collectively grapes, = Gr. οἶνος, wine, allied to οἰή, the vine; cf. L. vitis, the vine, vinea, vine, etc. From the L. vinum are also alt. E. vine, vignette, vinous, vinegar, vinaigre, vintner, etc.] 1. The fermented juice of the grape or fruit of the vine, Vitis. See Vitis. Wines are distinguished practically by their color, their hardness or softness on the palate, their flavor, and then being still or effervescing. The differences in the quality of wines depend upon differences in the varieties of vine, and quite as much on the differences of the soils in which the vines are planted, in the exposure of the vineyards, in the treatment of the grapes, and in the mode of manufacturing the wines. When the grapes are just fully ripe, the wine is generally most perfect as regards strength and flavor. The leading character of wine, however, must be referred to the alcohol which it contains, and upon which its intoxicating powers principally depend. The amount of alcohol in the stronger ports and sherries as found in the market is from 16 to 24 per cent., in hock, claret, and other light wines, from 7 per cent. Wine containing more than 14 per cent. of alcohol may be assumed to be fortified with brandy or other spirit. Among the most celebrated ancient wines were those of Lesbos and Chios of the Greeks, and the Falernian and Cæcuban of the Romans. Among the principal modern wines are port, sherry, Bordeaux, Burgundy, champagne, Madeira, Rhine, Moselle, Tokay, and Marsala. The principal wine producing countries are France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Greece, Cape Colony, Australia, and the United States.

That mon much merthe con make,
For wyn in his hed that wende.
Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 990.

He [God] causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth, and wine that maketh glad the heart of man.
Ps. civ. 14, 15.

Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape
Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine.
Milton, Comus, l. 47.

2. The juice, fermented or unfermented, of certain fruits or plants, prepared in imitation of wine obtained from grapes: as, gooseberry wine; raspberry wine.

Perhaps you'd like to spend a couple of shillings, or so, in a bottle of currant wine by and by?
Dickens, David Copperfield, vi.

3. Figuratively, intoxication produced by the use of wine.

Noah awoke from his wine.
Gen. ix. 24.

Fled all the boon companions of the Earl,
And left him lying in the public way;
So vanish friendships only made in wine.
Tennyson, Geraint.

4. A wine-drinking; a meal or feast of which wine is an important feature; specifically, a wine party at one of the English universities.

A death's head at the wine.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

Wines are an expiring institution at Oxford. Except in the form of semi public festivities, such as Freshmen's Wines or Mods Wines they hardly survive.
Dickens's Dict. Oxford, p. 128.

5. In phar., a solution of a medicinal substance in wine: as, wine of coca; wine of colchicum. — 6. Same as wine-glass: a trade-term. — Adam's wine. Same as Adam's ale (which see, under Adam). — Antimonial, bastard†, burnt wine. See the adjectives. — Bitter wine of iron, citrate of iron and quinine with tincture of sweet orange peel and syrup in sherry. — China wine, a name erroneously applied to Chinese samshoo. Comet wine. See comet. — Concrete oil of wine. Same as ethereal oil (a). — Cowslip wine. See cowslip. — Diuretic wine, a solution of squills, digitalis, juniper, and potassium acetate in white wine. — Flowers of wine. See flower. — Gascon wine. See Gascon. — Gooseberry wine. See gooseberry. — Green wine, a technical name for wines during the first year after making. — Heavy oil of wine. Same as ethereal oil (a) (which see, under ethereal). — High wines. See high. — La Rose wines, good claret of the second quality, resembling in flavor Château La Rose which is produced in the same district. — Liqueur wine. See liqueur, 1 (a). — Low wine, in distillation, the result of the first run of the still from the fermented liquor or wash. It is about as alcoholic as sherry. — Oil of wine, ethereal oil, a reputed anodyne, but used only in the preparation of other compounds. — Palm wine. Same as toddy, 1. — Pelusian wine. See Pelusian. — Quinine wine, sherry with sulphate of quinine in solution. Rhenish wine, hock, or wine of the Rhine: the old name, now somewhat uncommon except in poetry and fiction. Compare Rhine wine. — Rhine wine, wine produced on the banks of the Rhine, especially the still white wines of that region, formerly known as hock. — Sops in wine†. See sop. — Sparkling wine. See sparkle. — Spirit of wine, alcohol. — Steel wine. Same as wine of iron. — Stronger white wine, a name used in the formulas of the United States Pharmacopœia to designate sherry. — Tears of strong wine. See tear[2]. — To drink wine ape†, to drink so as to act foolishly.

I trowe that ye drunken han wyn ape,
And that is whan men playen with a straw.
Chaucer, Prol. to Manciple's Tale, l. 44.

White wine, wine light in color and transparent. Especially (a) In the British islands, during the eighteenth century and until about 1860, almost exclusively Madeira and sherry. (b) More recently in the British islands, and generally in the United States, the much lighter colored wines of France, as Chablis and Sauternes, and the wines of Germany. Wine of citrate of iron, a solution of ammonio-ferric citrate with tincture of sweet orange peel and simple syrup in sherry. Wine of colchicum-root, a vinous extract of colchicum root containing 40 per cent. of the active ingredient of the drug. Wine of colchicum-seed, a vinous extract of colchicum seeds, containing 15 per cent. of the active ingredient of the drug. Wine of iron (vinum ferri of the British Pharmacopœia) sherry with iron tartrate in solution. Wine of one ear. See ear[3]. Wine of opium, a solution of two ounces of opium in a pint of sherry, flavored with cinnamon and cloves. Also called Sydenham's laudanum. Wine of Wales, metheglin; mead. S. Dowell, Taxes in England, IV. 73. Wine whey, a drink made by mixing wine with sweetened milk. The milk being curdled and separated, either by the wine or in some other manner, the flavored whey forms the beverage. Wormwood wine, see wormwood. Yard of wine. See yard of ale under yard[1]. (See also ginger wine, rice-wine.)

wine (win), v.; pret. and pp. wined, ppr. wining. [< wine, n.] I. trans. To fill, supply, or entertain with wine.

To wine the King's Cellar.
Howell, Letters, II. 54.

A Philadelphia political club would dine and wine two Free Trade members of Congress.
The American, VII. 230.

II. intrans. To drink wine. [Colloq.]

Hither they repair each day after dinner "to wine."
Alma Mater, I. 25 (B. H. Hall, College Words and Customs [Boston, p. 491).

wine-bag (win'bag), n. 1. A wine-skin. — 2. A person who indulges frequently and largely in wine. [Colloq.]

wineball† (win'bâl), n. [< ME. wyneballe; < wine + ball[1].] Same as wine-stone.

Wynne ballus (wyne balle). . . . Pilatæria, vel pile tartaree (vel pileus tartaricus).
Prompt. Parv., p. 529.

wineberry (win'ber'i), n. [< ME. wyneberie, wynberye, < AS. winberge, grape, < win, wine, + berie, berge, berry; see wine and berry[1]. Hence in variant form winberry.] 1†. The grape.

After mete, peeres, nottys, strawberries, wyneberries, and hard chese.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 122.

The fygge, and als so the wyne-berye.
Thomas of Erceldoune (Child's Ballads, I. 169).

2. The red or black currant, or the gooseberry. [Prov. Eng.] — 3. A Japanese species of raspberry recently introduced into the United States. — 4. The whortleberry. See winberry. — 5. Same as togt-plant. — New Zealand wineberry, wineberry shrub. Same as Scot-plant.

winebibber (win'bib'ėr), n. One who drinks much wine; a tippler; a drunkard.

The Son of man is come eating and drinking, and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!
Luke vii. 34.

winebibbery (win'bib'ėr-i), n. The habits or practices of winebibbers.

The secret antiquities and private history of the royal wine-bibbery.
Fraser's Fashionable, Sept., 1872.

winebibbing (win'bib'ing), n. and a. I. n. The habit of drinking wine to excess; tippling; drunkenness.

II. a. Drinking much wine; toping.

Brussels suited Temple far better than the palaces of the boar-hunting and wine-bibbing princes of Germany.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

wine-biscuit (win'bis'kit), n. A light biscuit served with wine.

wine-blue (win'blö), n. See blue, 1.

wine-bottle (win'bot'l), n. A bottle for holding wine.

Wine-bottles old, and rent, and bound up. Josh. ix. 4.

wine-bowl (win'bōl), n. An elaborate drinking-cup, large, and without a stand or stem; a bowl intended for use in drinking wine.

Maples, or maple wine-bowls, were for centuries in common use in England.
A. P. Humphrey, Art Journal, 1883, p. 182.

Winebrennerian (win-bre-né'ri-an), a. and n. [< Winebrenner (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining to Winebrenner or to the Winebrennerians: as, Winebrennerian doctrines.

II. n. A member of a Baptist denomination called officially the Church of God. It was founded in Pennsylvania by John Winebrenner, a clergyman of the German Reformed Church, and was organized in 1830–39. Its distinctive tenet is that feet-washing is "obligatory upon all Christians."

wine-bush (win'bùsh), n. A bush or sign marking the presence of a wine-shop or tavern.

There stood near to the tomb a very small hut, also thatched, and declared to be a tavern by its wine-bush.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxxvi.

wine-carriage (win'kar'āj), n. A utensil for holding a single bottle of wine, of basket form, but having wheels allowing it to be rolled smoothly along the table.

wine-cask (win'kask), n. A strong tight cask, made for holding wine for ripening or transportation.

wine-cellar (win'sel'ār), n. [< ME. wyne-celer, < wine + cellar.] A cellar, or an inclosed part of a cellar, reserved for the storage of wine. Such a place, when used for claret and other light wines, should have an equable temperature, not too warm. On the other hand, Madeira, port, and similar strong wines, as well as spirits, are supposed to improve by exposure to warmer air. They are often kept in a different cellar, or in an upper story of the house.

Thi wyne celer in colde Septembrion
Wel derk and fern from bathes, oste and stable, Mydding, cisterne and thynges everichoon
That evel smelle.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 17.

wine-colored (win'kul'ord), a. Of the color of red wine; vinaceous.

wine-conner (win'kon'ėr), n. A wine-taster, an inspector of wines. Compare ale-conner.

Tastevin . . . A Broker for Wine-marchants; a Wine-conner.
Cotgrave.

wine-cooler (win'kö'lėr), n. A vessel in which bottled wine is immersed in a cool liquid, as in water containing ice, to cool it before it is drank. Wine-coolers for use at table are generally of a reversed conical form, and of silver silver-plated ware, or the like.

wine-drunk† (win'drungk), a. [< ME. wyn-drunke; < wine + drunk.] Drunken with wine; intoxicated.

Ne wurth thu never so wod, ne so wyn drunke.
Rel. Antiq., I. 178.

wine-fat (win'fat), n. [< wine + *fat*2.] The vat or vessel into which the liquor flows from a wine-press. Isa. lxiii. 2.

winefly (win'fli), n. 1. A small fly, of the genus Psophila, which lives in its earlier stages in wine, cider, and other fermented liquors, and even in strong alcohol.—2. Any one of several small flies of the genus Drosophila, which breed in decaying fruit, pomace, and marc.

wine-fountain (win'foun'tān), n. An urn-shaped vessel with cover and faucet: usually a piece of plate, as of silver or of silver-gilt, and characteristic of the eighteenth century.

wine-glass (win'glás), n. A small drinking-glass for wine. The name is usually given to that size and shape of glass which is especially appropriated to the wine most in use: thus, in some places, the small glass for sherry will bear this name, and the others be called by special names, as claret-glass or champagne-glass.

wineglassful (win'glas-fúl), n. As much as a wine-glass can hold; as a conventional measure, two fluidounces.

wine-grower (win'grō'ėr), n. One who owns or cultivates a vineyard where wine is produced.

wine-growing (win'grō'ing), n. The cultivation of the grape with a view to the making of wine.

wineless (win'les), a. [< wine + -less.] Lacking wine; not using, producing, or containing wine; unaccompanied by wine: as, a wineless meal.

A wineless weak wine as one may say, that either drinketh flat and hath lost the colour, or else is much delayed with water.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 500.

You will be able to pass the rest of your wineless life in ease and plenty.
Swift, To Gay, Nov. 10, 1730.

The well known fact that wineless libations were made to the Muses.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 3.

wine-marc (win'märk), n. In wine-manuf., the refuse matter which remains after the juice has been pressed from the fruit. See *marc*2.

As many grapes as have been among wine-marc, or the refuse of kernels and skins remaining after the presse, are hurtfull to the head.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxiii. 1.

wine-measure (win'mezh'ūr), n. An old English system of measures of capacity differing from beer-measure, the gallon being about five sixths of the gallon of the latter, and containing only 231 cubic inches. It remained in use until the establishment of the imperial gallon in 1825 and its gallon is the standard of the United States. In wine-measure, 1 tun = 2 pipes = 3 puncheons = 4 hogsheads = 6 tierces = one tierce = 42 gallons; one gallon = 2 pottles = 4 quarts = 8 pints. See also gill and gallon.

wine-merchant (win'mėr'chant), n. One who deals in wines and other alcoholic beverages, especially at wholesale, or in large quantities.

wine-oil (win'oil), n. The commercial name for an oil found in a peculiarly rich brandy made from the ferment and stalks left from wine making. It has a strong flavor of cognac. Also called cognac-oil and huile de marc.

wine-palm (win'pam), n. A palm from which palm wine is obtained; a toddy-palm. See toddy and toddy-palm. Compare burrit.

wine-party (win'par'ti), n. A party at which wine is a chief feature; a drinking party.

There were young men who despised the lads who indulged in the coarse hospitalities of wine parties, who prided themselves in giving recherché little French dinners.
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xv.

wine-piercer (win'per'sėr), n. In her., a bearing representing an instrument for tapping casks. It somewhat resembles a gimlet with a heavy handle set crosswise to the shaft.

wine-press (win'pres), n. A press in which the juice is squeezed from grapes.

I have used wine to fall from the wine presses . . . none shall tread with shouting.
Jer. xlviii. 33.

wine-room (win'röm), n. 1. A room in which wine is kept or stored.—2. A room where wine is served to customers; a bar-room.

winery (wī'nė-ri), n.; pl. wineries (-riz). [< wine + -ery.] An establishment for making wine.

Several large cementing have been established within four years as well as packing establishments for raisins, and wineries.
Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1885, p. 186.

wine-sap (win'sap), n. A highly esteemed American apple.

wine-skin (win'skin), n. A vessel for holding wine, made of the nearly complete skin of a goat, hog, or other quadruped, with the openings of the legs, neck, etc., secured. Compare bottle, 3, and utre.

No man putteth new wine into old wine skins . . . but they put new wine into fresh wine skins.
Mark ii. 22 (R. V.).

wine-sops† (win'sops), n. pl. Same as sops in wine. See sop.

Bring the Fruites there with many Gellifloures sweete,
And the Cullambynes, let us haue the Wynesops.
R. Hilde, Eng. Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 89.

wine-sour (win'sour), n. A kind of plum. Halliwell.

wine-stone (win'ston), n. A deposit of crude tartar or argol which settles on the sides and bottoms of wine-casks.

wine-taster (win'tas'tėr), n. 1. One whose business it is to taste or sample wines.—2. Same as sampling-tube. Compare pipette, 2.

wine-tree† (win'trē), n. [< ME. wintre, < AS. wintreow, a grape-vine, < win, wine, + treow, tree; see wine and tree.] A grape-vine.

Mi drunpile ic stod at a wintre,
That mide wunne bugen thre
Swuch hi blowende and ithen bar
The beste rpa, worth i war
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2920.

wine-vault (win'vâlt), n. 1. A vaulted wine-cellar; hence, any wine-cellar, or place for the storage of wines.—2. Generally in the plural, a place where wine is tasted or drunk; often used as equivalent to tavern or "saloon."

wine-warrant (win'wor'ant), n. A warrant to the keeper of a bonded warehouse for the delivery of wine.

winey, a. See winy.

wineyard†, n. [< ME. wynyard, wineyord, wingeard, < AS. wingeard, a wineyard, < win, wine, + geard, yard: see wine and *yard*2. Cf. vineyard.] Same as vineyard.

Nimeth & kercheth us, leofman ufon the gunge uoxes,
That breoth the ueole prokunges that sturieth the wingeardes.
Ancren Riwle, p. 256.

wing (wing), n. [Formerly also weng; < ME. wenge, wenge, also (with intrusive h) hwenge, whenge, < Icel. vængr = Sw. Dan. vinge, a wing. The AS. word for 'wing' was fether; cf. L. penna, Gr. πτέρυξ, wing, from the same ult. source: see feather and *pen*2.] 1. In vertebrate zoöl., the fore limb, anterior extremity, or appendages of the scapular arch or shoulder girdle, corresponding to the human arm, fitted in any way for flight or aërial locomotion; or the same limb, however rudimentary or functionless, of a member of a class of animals which ordinarily have this limb fitted for flight. That modification of a limb which makes it a wing occurs in several ways (a) In ornith. by the reduction and consolidation of terminal bones of the fore limb, the reduction of the free carpal bones to two, a peculiar construction and mechanism of the joints, a composition of the fleshy parts, and an extension of surface by the peculiar integumentary outgrowths called feathers (see cuts under Ichthyornis and pygostyle). Such a limb, in nearly all birds, is serviceable for aërial flight, in a few birds, as dippers, which fly through the air, also for swimming under water, in some, as penguins, only for swimming, in which case the wing is flipper-like or finlike, in some, as the ostrich, it serves only as an aid in running, in some, as the cassowary, and apteryx, it is practically functionless. It appears to have been wanting in the moas. It is a weapon of offense and defense in some birds, as the swan, and others in which it is provided with a horny spur. It is terminated with a claw or claws in some birds. The principal feathers of the wing are the remiges, covers or flight feathers, those which are seated upon the hand being the primaries, those of the forearm secondaries, those of the upper arm tertiaries and scapularies, those of the thumb bastard quills; the smaller feathers overlying the bases of the remiges, are collectively known as coverts (see cut under covert, 6.) The various shapes of birds' wings depend to some extent upon the proportions of the bones, especially those of the pinion (see Stenothorax), but mainly upon the development of the flight-feathers, and the lengths of these relatively to one another. Among birds which can fly probably no one shape is sharply distinguished from all others, so that the terms in technical use are simply descriptive of size, contour, and the like as long, short, narrow, broad (or ample), pointed, rounded, vaulted, etc., requiring no further explanation (see names of the sets of feathers used above, and phrases below). (b) In mammal., by the cutaneous extension of bones of the hand and fingers, upon which, and between which and the body and leg, is stretched an extension of integument, the whole limb being lengthened, as well as its terminal segment, and there being other peculiarities of osseous structure and mechanism, as the apparent absence of one of the two bones of the forearm by extreme reduction of the ulna. Such is the condition of the forelimb of bats, or Chiroptera, which alone are provided with true wings and capable of true flight, for the so-called wings of various other mammals described as "flying," as the flying-squirrel, flying-phalanger, etc., are more properly parachutes or patagia, and their flight is only a prolonged leap. See cuts under bat, flying fox, and Pteropodidæ. (c) In herpet. by a modification of the fore limb comparable to that of a bat's, but peculiar in the enormous extension of an elongated digit, and its connection with other digits and with the body by an expansion of the integument as in the extinct flying reptiles, the pterodactyls. (See cut under pterodactyl.) The flying apparatus of certain arboreal reptiles, as the Draco volans, is a rib-like bone, not a true wing. (d) In ichth., a mere enlargement of the pectoral fins enables some fishes to sustain a kind of flight; and, as the pectoral fins answer to the fore limbs of higher vertebrates, this case comes under the definition of a wing. See cut under flying fish.

Wing of bird: feathers of the wing-tract (pteryla alata): a, detail of the wing of the pied wagtail (Motacilla lugubris); b, wing tip, at end of longest primary; c, c, the plexus, borne upon the manus consisting of ten primaries and the primary coverts, together with the spuria, or bastard wing; d, appearance of the wing in the middle of the posterior border of wing; e, e, e, seven secondaries, overlaid by greater, median and lesser rows of secondary coverts, the innermost are forming a speculum; f, f, three tertiaries, specialized outer secondaries; g, rest of the wing, toward the anatomical shoulder; h, anterior border of the wing.

Wing of bat: expansion of skin from [illegible]

2. In entom., an expansion of the crust of an insect, suffering for flight, or a homologous expansion, however modified in form, or function, or even functionless so far as aërial locomotion is concerned, such a formation (though at variance by analogy of function with the wing of a vertebrate) is entirely different structure, having no homology with the fore limb of a vertebrate. It consists of a fold of integument, supported on a tubular framework of so-called nerves or veins, which may be in communication with the trachem or breathing-organs, and is consequently a respiratory as well as a locomotory organ. Most insects are provided with functionally developed (thoracic) wings, of which there are usually two pairs (mesothoracic and metathoracic); but both may be entirely suppressed, or either pair may be more rudimental (see cuts under *halter*1 and Stylops), or the anterior pair may be converted into a horny case covering the other pair, as in the great order Coleoptera, where the anterior pair are converted into elytra, and in Orthoptera, in which they become tegmina. (See wing-case.) The form, structure, and disposition of insects' wings are very variable, but quite constant in large groups, and therefore a basis of the division of insects into orders, and of their classification: whence the terms Coleoptera, Neuroptera, Lepidoptera, Orthoptera, Diptera, Aptera, etc. See phrases below, and cuts under nervure and venation.

Wing of Butterfly: expanse of scaly integument. 1, 2, front, costal, or cephalic margin; 3, apex or tip; 4, outer, distal, or apical margin; 5, inner or anal angle; 6, inner, posterior, or anal margin; 7, 7, base. Several nerves or veins appear, separating wing-cells.

3. In other invertebrates, some part resembling or likened to a wing in form or function; an alate formation, as the expanded lip of a strombus.—4. An organ resembling the wing of a bird, bat, or insect, with which gods, angels, demons, dragons, and a great variety of fabulous beings, as well as some inanimate objects, are conceived to be provided for the purpose of aërial locomotion or as symbolical of the power of omnipresence.

As far as Boreas claps his brazen wings
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., I. 2.

O, welcome, pure eyed Faith, white-handed Hope,
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings.
Milton, Comus, l. 214.

5. Loosely or humorously, the fore leg of a quadruped; also, the arm of a human being.

If Scottish men tax our language as improper, and smile at our wing of a rabbit, let us laugh at their shoulder of a capon. Fuller, Worthies, Norfolk, II. 445.

6. Figuratively, a means of travel, progress, or passage; usually emblematic of speed or elevation, but also used as a symbol of protecting care. See under one's wing, below.

Riches . . . make themselves wings. Prov. xxiii. 5.

Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings Mal. iv. 2.

Thou art so far before
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. Shak., Macbeth, I. 4. 17.

This quiet soil is as a noiseless wing
To waft me from distraction.
Byron, Childe Harold, III. 86.

7. The act or the manner of flying; flight, literally or figuratively.

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king.
Shak., Phœnix and Turtle, l. 10.

He [Plato] penetrated into the profoundest mysteries of thought, and was not deterred from speculations of boldest flight and longest wing. Jour. Spec. Phil., XIX. 52.

8†. Kind; species. Compare feather, 4. [Rare.]

Of all the mad rascalls (that are of this wing) the Abraham-man is the most phantasticke.
Dekker, Belman of London (ed. 1608), sig. C 3.

9. Something resembling or likened to a wing. (a) In anat., a part likened to a wing, an ala, or alate part: as, the wings of the sphenoid bone. See ala, 2, and cut under sphenoid. (b) That which moves with or receives a wing like motion from the action of the air, as a fan used to winnow grain, the vane or sail of a windmill, the feather of an arrow, or the sail of a ship. (c) In bot., a membranous expansion or thin extension of any kind, such as that of certain capsules, of samaras, etc.; also, one of the two lateral petals of a papilionaceous flower. See ala, 1, tetrapterous, and cut under papilionaceous. (d) In ship-building, that part of the hold or space between decks which is next the ship's side, more particularly at the quarter; also, the overhang-deck of a steamer before and abaft the paddle-boxes, bounded by a thick plank called the wing-scale, which extends from the extremity of the paddle-beam to the ship's side. (e) In arch., a part of a building projecting on one side of the central or main part. (f) In fort., the longer side of a crown-or horn-work, uniting it to the main work. (g) A leaf of a gate, double door, screen, or the like, which may be folded or otherwise moved back. (h) The laterally extending part of a plowshare, which cuts the bottom of the furrow. (i) In engin. (1) An extension end-wise of a dam, sometimes at an angle with the main part Wings in Plants.

1, the winged stems of Euonymus sagittatus; 2, the winged seed of Tecoma radicans.

(2) A side dam on a river-shore for the purpose of contracting the channel. (3) A lateral extension of an abutment. See wing-wall. R. H. Knight. (j) One of the sides of the stage of a theater; also, one of the long narrow scenes which fill up the picture on the side of the stage. See cute under stage. (k) One of the two outside divisions of an army or fleet in battle-array: usually called the right wing and left wing, and distinguished from the center.

And this nombre of folk is with outen the pryncipalle Hoost, and with outen Wenges ordeynd for the Bataylle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 275.

The Earl of Mar the right wing guided.
Battle of Alford (Child's Ballads, VII. 239).

The defence of the artillery was committed to the left wing. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 12.

(l) A shoulder-knot, or small epaulet, specifically, a projecting piece of stuff, perhaps only a raised seam or welt, worn in the sixteenth century on the shoulder, at or near the insertion of the sleeve.

I would have mine such a suit without difference, such stuff, such a wing, such a sleeve.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, III. 1.

(m) A strip of leather or the like attached to the skirt of the runner in a grain-mill to sweep the meal into the spout. (n) The side or displayed part of a dash-board. (o) A projecting part of a hand seine on each side of the central part, or bag, serving to collect the fish, and lead them into the bag. (p) A thin, broad, projecting piece on a gudgeon, to prevent it from turning in its socket.

10. A flock or company (of plover). W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 533. — Angle of the wing, in ornith., the carpal angle, the bend or flexure of the wing. See shoulder, n., 5. — Anterior wings, in entom., the upper front, or fore wings, when there are two pairs; the mesothoracic wings. In any case. — Bastard wing, in ornith., same as alula. See cuts there and under covert. — Bend of the wing. Same as angle of the wing. — Convoluted, deflexed, dentate, digitate, divergent, erect, falcate wings. See the adjectives. Dragon's wings. See dragon. Expanse or extent of wing, in zool., wing-spread. See expanse, n., 2, and spread, n., 12. — False wing, in ornith., the bastard wing, alula, or ala spuria. See alula (with cut), and cut under covert. — Flexure of the wing. See flexure. Folded wings. See *fold*1, v., Diptera, Vespidæ, and wasp, 1. — Gray-goose wing†, a feather of a goose as used on an arrow.

Our Englishmen in fight did chuse
The gallant gray goose wing.
True Tale of Robin Hood (Child's Ballads, V. 370).

Inferior margin of a wing, inferior surface of a wing, inferior wings. See inferior. Inner margin of the wing. See inner. Length of wing, in ornith., the shortest distance from the flexure or carpal angle to the point of the wing or wing-tip. — Metathoracic wings. See metathoracic. On or upon the wing. (a) Flying: as, to shoot birds on the wing.

The bird
That flutters least is longest on the wing.
Cowper, Task, vi. 931.

(b) Figuratively, in motion, traveling, active; busy.

I have been, since I saw you in town, pretty much on the wing, at Hampton, Twickenham, and elsewhere.
Gray, Letters, I. 369.

(c) Taking flight, departing; vanishing.

Your wits are all upon the wing, just a-going.
Vanbrugh, Confederacy, iv. 1.

Petiolate wing. See petiolate. — Plane wings. See *plane*1. Plicate wings. Same as folded wings. — Point of the wing, in ornith., the end of the longest primary. See wing-tip. Posterior margin of the wing. See posterior. Posterior wings, in entom., the under or hinder wings, when there are two pairs, the metathoracic wings, in any case. — Reversed, spurious, superior wings. See the adjectives. — Tail of the wing. See *tail*1. — Tectiform wings, in entom., roof-shaped wings; wings held sloping like the roof of a house when the insect rests. — To clip the wings. See *clip*2. To drop to wing. See drop. — To make or take wing, to fly; take flight; depart.

Light thickens; and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood
Shak., Macbeth, III. 2. 51.

It is a fearful thing
To see the human soul take wing
In any shape, in any mood.
Byron, Prisoner of Chillon, viii.

Tumid wing. See tumid. — Under one's wing, under one's protection, care, or patronage: with reference to the sheltering of chickens under the wings of the hen, as in the New Testament use.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that sleest prophetis and stonyst hem that ben sent to thee, hou oft wold I gedre togidre thi sonys, as an henne gedreth togidre hir chikenys vndir hir wengis, and thou woldist nat? Wyclif, Mat. xxiii. 37.

Under wings, in entom., the posterior wings, when there are two pairs more or less overlaid by the upper wings. — Unequal wings. See unequal. — Upper wings, in entom., the anterior wings, when there are two pairs, or their equivalents, as elytra and tegmina, which overlie the posterior wings wholly or partly. — Vertical wings, in entom., wings held upright when the insect rests, as those of a butterfly; erect wings. — Wing-and-wing, the condition of a ship sailing before the wind with studding-sails on both sides: said also of fore-and-aft vessels (schooners) when they are sailing with the wind right aft, the foresail boomed out on one side, and the mainsail on the other. Also goose-winged. — Wings conjoined, in her. See ord - Wings displayed, in her., having the wings expanded: said of a bird used as a bearing.

wing (wing), v. [< wing, n.] I. trans. 1. To equip with wings for flying; specifically, to feather (an arrow).

Marriage Love's object is; at whose bright eyes
He lights his torches, and calls them his skies.
For her he wings his shoulders.
B. Jonson, The Barriers.

So the struck eagle, stretch'd upon the plain, . . .
View'd his own feather on the fatal dart,
And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart.
Byron, Eng. Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l. 198.

2. Figuratively, to qualify for flight, elevation, rapid motion, etc.; especially, to lend speed or celerity to.

'Foot, all this is wrong!
This wings his pursuit, and will be before me.
I am lost for ever!
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, v. 1.

Ambition wings his spirit. Lust's Dominion, I. 2.

3. To supply with wings or side parts, divisions, or projections, as an army, a house, etc.; flank.

They thus directed, we will follow
In the main battle, whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 300.

Close to the limb of the sun, where the temperature and pressure are highest, the hydrogen is in such a state that the lines of its spectrum are widened and winged.
C. A. Young, The Sun, p. 197.

4. To brush or clean with a wing, usually that of a turkey.

Shut in from all the world without,
We sat the clean-winged hearth about.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

5. To bear in flight; transport on or as on wings.

I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough.
Shak., W. T., v. 3. 133.

His arms and eager eyes ejecting flame,
Far wing'd before his squadron Tancred came.
Brooke, tr. of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, iii.

6. To perform or accomplish by means of wings.

This last and Godlike Act atchiev'd,
To Heav'n she wing'd her Flight.
Prior, The Viceroy, st. 44.

From Samos have I wing'd my Way.
Congreve, Semele, iii. 1.

He [Rip Van Winkle] looked round, but could see nothing but a crow winging its solitary flight across the mountain
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 52.

7. To traverse in flight.

The crows and choughs that wing the midway air
Show scarce so gross as beetles. Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 13.

Not man alone, but all that roam the wood,
Or wing the sky, or roll along the flood.
Pope, Essay on Man, III. 120.

8†. To carve, as a quail or other small bird.

Wynge that partrych. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 266.

Good man' him list not spend his idle meals
In quinsing plovers, or in winging quails.
Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. ii. 44.

9. To wound or disable in the wing, as a bird; colloquially, to wound (a person) in the arm or shoulder, or some other not vital part.

What are the odds now that he doesn't wing me? These green horns generally hit everything but the man they aim at. Colman the Younger, Poor Gentleman, v. 2.

II. intrans. To fly; soar; travel on the wing.

We, poor unfledged,
Have never wing'd from view o' the nest.
Shak., Cymbeline, III. 3. 28.

As the bird wings and sings,
Let us cry, "All good things Are ours!" Browning, Rabbi Ben Ezra.

wing-band (wing'band), n. Same as wing-bar.

wing-bar (wing'bär), n. A colored bar or band across a bird's wing; technically, such a band formed by the tips of the greater or median wing-coverts, or both of these, and placed between the wing-bow and the wing-bay. Such are found in uncounted different birds. See cut under solitary.

wing-bay (wing'bā), n. The plumage-marking of a bird formed by the secondary feathers of the wing, when the wing is closed and these feathers differ in color from the rest of the plumage: so called because in the black-breasted red game type of coloring this marking is of a bay color. See speculum, 3 (b), and first cut under wing.

wing-beat (wing'bēt), n. A wing-stroke; one completed motion of the wing in the act of flying.

wing-bow (wing'bō), n. In poultry, and hence in other birds, the plumage-marking on the shoulder or bend of the wing: distinctive coloration of the lesser coverts collectively: thus, in the black-breasted red gamecock the wing-bows are crimson. See cuts under Agelæus and sea-eagle.

wing-case (wing'kās), n. The hard, horny case or cover which overlies the functional wing of many insects, especially of Coleoptera; the elytrum. In hemipterous insects the wing-cases are technically called hemelytra. Wing-cases are always the modified fore wings; when these wings are but little modified, as in orthopterous insects, they are called tegmina. See cuts under beetle, chrysalis, elasma, Coleoptera, and halpoidid. Also wing-cover.

wing-call (wing'sel), n. In entom., any one of the spaces between the nerves or veins of the wing. See cuts under nervure, venation, and wing.—Didymous, petiolate, radiated wing-cells. See the adjectives.

wing-compass (wing'kum'pas), n. A compass with an arc-shaped piece which passes through the opposite leg, and is clamped by a set-screw.

wing-conch (wing'kongk), n. A wing-shell.

wing-cover (wing'kuv'ėr), n. In entom., same as wing-case.—Mutilated wing-covers. See mutilated.

wing-covert (wing'kuv'ert), n. In ornith., any one of the small feathers which overlie or underlie the flight-feathers of the wing; a covert of the wing. See covert, n., 6 (with cut), tectrices, and first cut under wing.—Under wing-coverts. See under.

winged (wingd or wing'ed), a. [< ME. winged, wenged; < wing + -ed[2].] 1. Having or wearing wings, in any sense: as, the winged horse (Pegasus); the winged god (Mercury); a winged (feathered) arrow; a winged ship.

> Steer hither, steer your winged pines,
> All beaten mariners. W. Browne, Syrens' Song.

There is also a little contemptible winged creature, an inhabitant of my aerial element.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 28.

2. In her., having wings. Specifically—(a) Noting a bird when the wings are of a different tincture from the body. [Rare.] (b) Noting an object not usually having wings: as, a winged column.

3. In bot., anat., and conch., alate; alated; having a part resembling or likened to a wing: as, a winged shell or bone; a winged seed. See cuts under sphenoid, wing-shell, and wing, n., 9 (c).—4. Abounding with wings, and hence with birds; swarming with birds. [Rare.]

> The wing'd air dark'd with plumes.
> Milton, Comus, l. 780.

5. Moving or passing on or as on wings; swift; rapid.

> Ther nighte I seen
> Wenged wondres faste fleen
> Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 2118.
>
> Come, Tamburlaine! now whet thy winged sword.
> Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., II. 3
>
> With Fear oppress'd,
> In winged Words he thus the Queen address'd.
> Congreve, Hymn to Venus.

6. Soaring; lofty; elevated; sublime.

> How winged the sentiment that virtue is to be followed for its own sake, because its essence is divine!
> J. S. Harford, Michael Angelo, v.
>
> He [Emerson] looked far away over the heads of his hearers with a vague kind of expectation, as into some private heaven of invention, and the winged period came at last obedient to his spell. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 303

7. Disabled in the wing; having the wing broken.

> You will often recover winged birds as full of life as before the bone was broken. Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 16.

Winged bull, an Assyrian symbol of force and domination, of frequent occurrence in ancient Assyrian architectural sculpture, in which pairs of winged human-headed bulls and lions of colossal size usually guarded the portals of palaces. These figures were evidently typical of the union of the greatest intellectual and physical powers. Layard.—Winged catheter, a soft-rubber catheter from the fenestrated end of which project two processes which serve to retain the instrument after it has entered the bladder.—Winged elm. See wahoo, 3.—Winged fly, an artificial fly with wings, used by anglers: distinguished from the palmer, which has the form of a caterpillar.—Winged fungus. See Peziza.—Winged leaf, a pinnate or pinnately divided leaf.—Winged Lion. (a) See lion of St. Mark, under lion. (b) [l. c.] See winged bull, above.—Winged pea, a plant of the former genus Tetragonolobus, now Lotus, having a section in Lotus. The pod is four-winged.

Assyrian Winged Human-headed Bull.

436

—Winged petiole, a petiole with a thin wing-like expansion. See cuts under exostbosis and Quassia.—Winged pigweed, screw, etc. See the nouns.

wingedly (wing'ed-li), adv. In a winged manner; on, with, or by wings.

> Nor with aught else can our souls interknit
> So wingedly. Keats, Endymion, i.

winger (wing'ėr), n. [< wing + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wings, in any sense.—2. A small cask or tank for holding water, stowed in the wing of a ship, where the space is much reduced by the approaching lines of the hull. (See wing, n., 9 (d).) Tanks are accurately fitted to the sloping sides of the ship.

wing-feather (wing'feтн'ėr), n. Any feather of the wing; especially, a wing-quill, flight-feather, or remex.

wing-fish (wing'fish), n. A flying-fish; especially, a flying-gurnard; in the United States, any species of Prionotus. See cut under sea-robin.

wing-footed (wing'fut'ed), a. 1. Aliped; having winged feet; hence, rapid; swift.

> Next Venus in his sphear is Maias soune, > Loves messenger, wing-footed Mercurie.
> Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 115.
>
> Wing-footed I have them farther off doth bear.
> Drayton, Polyolbion, x. 322.

2. In conch., pteropod. P. P. Carpenter.

wing-formed (wing'fôrmd), a. Shaped like a wing, in any sense; aliform; alate.

wing-gudgeon (wing'guj'ọn), n. A short winged shaft of metal used as a journal for wheels having wooden axles. The wing is inserted into the end of the wood, and is secured firmly by shrinking on heated bands of wrought iron. E. H. Knight.

Wing-gudgeon.
a, gudgeon; b, b, wings.

wing-handed (wing'han'ded), a. Having the hands or fore limbs modified as wings; chiropterous, as a bat.

wing-leafed (wing'lēft), a. Having pinnate or pinnately divided leaves: as, a wing-leafed palm: contrasted with fan-leafed.

wingless (wing'les), a. [< wing + -less.] 1. Having no wings; hence, unable to fly; technically, in zool., apteroous; not alate; not winged, in any sense.

> Our freedom chain'd quite wingless our desire,
> In sense dark-prison'd all that ought to soar
> Young, Night Thoughts, ii. 848.

2. In ornith., specifically, having rudimentary wings, unfit for flight; impennate or squamipennate, as any ratite bird or penguin: as, the wingless kiwis (Apterygidæ).

winglessness (wing'les-nes), n. The state or character of being wingless.

> Winglessness occurs in other insects through other causes than those which obtain in Madeira. Nature, XLIII. 430.

winglet (wing'let), n. [< wing + -let.] A little wing. Specifically—(a) In ornith., the bastard wing, or alula. (b) In entom. (1) The alula, a membrane under the base of the elytra of many Coleoptera.

> When he took off the winglets, either wholly or partially, the buzzing ceased.
> Kirby and Spence, Entomology, II. 306.

(2) The pterygium, a lateral expansion on each side of the end of the rostrum, found in many weevils.

wing-membrane (wing'mem'brān), n. The skin of the wing of a bat; the alar membrane.

wing-nervure (wing'nėr'vūr), n. In entom., a nervure (which see, with cut).—Uncinate wing-nervures. See uncinate.

wing-net (wing'net), n. A winged kind of stake net, used in the St. Lawrence salmon fishery.

wing-pad (wing'pad), n. One of the undeveloped, pad-like wings of an active pupa, as of a young grasshopper. See cut under Calopteryx.

wing-passage (wing'pas'āj), n. Naut., a passage along the sides of a ship in the hold. Thearle, Naval Arch., ¶ 154.

wing-pen (wing'pen), n. An inclosure for salt or ice in the hold of a vessel.

wing-post (wing'pōst), n. A post or messenger which travels on the wing; a carrier-pigeon. [Rare.]

> Probably our English would be found as docible and ingenious as the Turkish pigeons which carry letters from Aleppo to Babylon, if trained up accordingly. But such practices by these wing posts would spoil many a land post. Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland, II. 490.

wing-quill (wing'kwil), n. In ornith., one of the remiges or flight-feathers. See remex, and cuts under covert, n., 6, and wing, n., 1 (a).

wing-rail (wing'rāl), n. On railways, a guard-rail at a switch. E. H. Knight.

wing-scale (wing'skāl), n. In entom., same as squamula, 1 (b).

wingseed (wing'sēd), n. See Ptelea and Pterospermum.

wing-sheath (wing'shēth), n. In entom., same as elytrum, 1. Also wing-case, wing-cover.

wing-shell (wing'shel), n. 1. A gastropod of the family Strombidæ: so called from the alate lip of the aperture. See also cut under Strombus.—2. A bivalve of the family Arcavidæ; a hammer-oyster.—3. A pteropod or wing-snail.—4†. A wing-case or wing-cover. N. Grew.—False wing-shells, the spout-shells or Aporrhaidæ. See cut under Aporrhais and spout-shell.

Wing-shell (Strombus gigas), one seventh natural size.

wing-shooting (wing'shō'ting), n. The act or practice of shooting flying birds.

> They [fowling-pieces] were probably intended for wing-shooting, but could not have been made until several years after the invention of the flint lock.
> W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 88.

wing-shot (wing'shot), a. and n. I. a. 1. Shot in the wing.—2. Shot while on the wing. See wing-shooting.

II. n. 1. A shot made at a bird on the wing.—2. One who shoots flying birds.

wing-snail (wing'snāl), n. A pteropod or sea-butterfly. See cuts under Carolinia and Pneumoderma.

wing-spread (wing'spred), n. The distance from tip to tip of the extended wings, as of a bat, bird, or insect; extent of wing; alar expanse.

wing-stopper (wing'stop'ėr), n. 1†. A rope having one end clenched to a cable, and the other to the ship's beam.—2. A cable-stopper used in the wings or sides of the hold in old days when rope cables were used.

wing-stroke (wing'strōk), n. The stroke or sweep of the wings; a wing-beat.

wing-swift (wing'swift), a. Swift of wing; of rapid flight.

wing-tip (wing'tip), n. The point of the wing; the apex of the longest primary of a bird's wing. This is often the end of the first primary, which may exceed in length the next one by as much as or by more than the second surpasses the third. The most pointed wings result from this conformation, and the wing is generally the more rounded the further removed the longest primary is from the first one. A sharp yet strong wing results from the greatest length of the second or third primary, supported nearly to its end by those next to it on each side; and, in general, two or three feathers, of nearly or quite equal lengths, compose the wing-tip.

wing-tract (wing'trakt), n. In ornith., the pteryla alaris; that special tract or pteryla upon which grow the feathers of the wing, excepting the scapulars (which are situated upon the humeral tract). See pteryla, and first cut under wing.

wing-transom (wing'tran'sum), n. Naut., the uppermost or longest transom in a ship. Also called main transom. See cut under transom.

wing-wale (wing'wāl), n. See wing, n., 9 (d).

wing-wall (wing'wâl), n. One of the lateral walls of an abutment, forming a support and protection to it. E. H. Knight.

wingy (wing'i), a. [< wing + -y[1].] 1. Having wings.

> The cranes,
> In feather'd legions, cut th' ætherial plains:
> But, if some rushing storm the journey cross,
> The wingy leaders all are at a loss
> Rowe, tr. of Lucan, v. 1022.

2. Soaring as on wings; aspiring; lofty.

> As for those wingy mysteries in divinity, and airy subtleties in religion, which have unhinged the brains of better heads, they never stretched the pia mater of mine.
> Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, I. § 6.
>
> Youth a gallant trophies, bright
> In Fancy a rainbow ray, invite > His wingy nerves to climb
> Beattie, Ode to Hope, st. 1.

3. Rapid; swift.

> With wingy speed outstrip the eastern wind.
> Addison, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii.

wink[1] (wingk), v. [< ME. winken, wink, move the eyelids quickly (pret. wonk, wonk, wonk), < AS. wincan* (pret. wonc*, pp. wunccn*); also ME. winken (pret. winkede), < AS. wincian, wink; = MD. wincken, wencken = OHG. win-

ckan, move aside, reel, nod, MHG. winken (pret. wank), nod, also totter, reel, wince, G. winken (pret. winkte), nod, make a sign, = Sw. vinka, beckon, wink, = Dan. vanke, beckon; cf. Icel. vanka, wink, rove, = Sw. vanka = Dan. vanke, rove, stroll; akin to AS. wancol, wavering, E. wankle, etc.: see wankle, wench[1], wince[1], winch[2], etc.] I. intrans. 1. To close and open the eyelids quickly; of the eyes, to be opened and shut quickly; blink; nictitate.

Here is three studied, ere ye'll thrice wink
Shak., L. L. L., I. 2. 74

2. To shut the eyes; close the eyelids so as not to see.

Unnethes wiste he how to loke or wynke
Chaucer, Troilus, I. 301.

A skilfull Gunner, with his left eye winked, Levels directly at an Oak hard by,
Whereon a hundred groaning Culvers cry
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 7.

3. To be wilfully blind or ignorant; avoid notice or recognition, as of an annoying or troublesome fact; ignore; connive: often followed by at.

If golde spenke for her in the present tense,
The offender deputed for th offence
Will wincke at smale faultes & remit correction.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 45.

You are forc'd to wink and seem content,
Congreve, tr. of Juvenal's Eleventh Satire.

We may surely wink at a few things for the sake of the public interest, if God Almighty does, and if He didn't, I don't know what would have become of the country.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, vii.

4†. To close the eyes in sleep; sleep.

For wel I woot, although I wake or winke,
Ye rekke not whether I flete or sinke.
Chaucer, Complaint to Pity, l. 100.

Go to bedde bi tyme, & wynke
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 50.

5. To convey a hint, wish, insinuation, etc., by a quick shutting and opening usually of one eye.

Waryn Wisdome wynked vppon Mede,
And seide, "Madame, I am 3owre man, what so my mouth langheth."
Piers Plowman (B), iv. 154.

Patience perceyued what I thought, and wynked on me to be stille.
Piers Ploweman (B), xiii. 85.

Wink at the footman to leave him without a plate.
Swift.

"Very well, sir," cried the squire, who immediately smoked him, and winked on the rest of the company, to prepare us for the sport Goldsmith, Vicar, vii.

I blush to say I've winked at him, and he has winked at me!
W. S. Gilbert, Gentle Alice Brown.

6. To twinkle; shine with quick, irregular gleams; flash; sparkle.

Whether the Heav'ns incessant agitation,
Into a Star transforming th' Exhalation,
Kindle the same, like as a coal that winkt
On a sticks end (and seemed quite extinct),
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 21.

And every Lamp, and every Fire,
Did at the dreadful Sight wink and expire Cowley, Pindaric Odes, xiv. 13.

O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim
Keats, Ode to a Nightingale.

Winking muscle, the sphincter or orbicular muscle of the eyelids, the action of which closes the eye, the winker: technically called palpebralis and orbicularis palpebrarum. See cut under muscle.

II. trans. 1. To close and open quickly: as, to wink the eyelids or the eyes.

Lady Clavering, giving the young gentleman a delighted tap with her fan, winked her black eyes at him Thackeray, Pendennis, xxv.

2. To move, force, or remove by winking: as, to wink back one's tears.

wink[1] (wingk), n. [< ME. wink, sleep, = OHG. wanch, sideward movement, nod, MHG. wanc, wink, G. wank, nod; from the verb.] 1. A quick shutting and opening of the eyelids; especially, such a movement of one eye made as a signal; hence, a hint, insinuation, command, etc., conveyed by or as by winking.

Eternall Father, at whose wink
The wrathfull Ocean's swelling pride doth sink,
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 5.

But why won'd you ne'er give a Friend a Wink then?
Wycherley, Country Wife, v. 4.

In an instant my coachman took the wink to pursue
Steele, Spectator, No. 454.

2†. A nap; sleep.

Thenne wakede I of my wink, me was wo with alle
That I nedde [had not] sadloker I-slept.
Piers Plowman (A), v. 3.

3. The time required for winking once; a very short space of time; a moment: referring usually to sleep.

We never Slept wink ashore all night, but made sail ever.
Chapman, Odyssey, xvi. 491.

He 's harped them all asleep:
Except it was the king's daughter Who ne wink ony'thing get.
The Water o' Wearie's Well (Child's Ballads, I. 196).

In a wink the false love turns to hate.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

4. A twinkle; a sparkle; a flash.

A wink from Hesper falling Fast in the wintry sky
Comes through the even blue,
Dear, like a word from you.
W. E. Henley, Echoes xl.

Forty winks, a short nap. [Colloq.]

Old Mr. Tramsome, . . . since his walk, had been having forty winks on the sofa in the library.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xliii.

To tip one the wink. See tip[2].

wink[2] (wingk), n. [Short for winkle[1].] A periwinkle. See periwinkle[2], and first quotation under wash, n., 13. [Prov. Eng.]

The wink men, as these periwinkle sellers are called, generally live in the lowest parts, and many in lodging houses
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 78.

wink-a-peep (wingk'a-pēp), n. [As wink-and-peep.] The scarlet pimpernel, or shepherd's weather-glass, Anagallis arvensis: so named from its closing or winking in damp weather and opening or peeping in fair weather. By Bacon called winecupipe (which see). Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

winker (wing'kėr), n. [< wink[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who winks.

Soldiers, winkers, and whisperers.
Pope.

2. One of the blinders of a horse; a blinker. —3. An eyelash; also, the eye. [Colloq.]—4. The nictitating or winking membrane of a bird's eye; the third eyelid.—5. The winking muscle (which see, under wink[1], e.).—6. In an organ, a small bellows, compressed by a spring, attached to the side of a wind-trunk so as to regulate slight variations in the tension of the air within. Also called concussion-bellows.

winker-leather (wing'kėr-leтн'ėr), n. In saddlery, a glazed piece of heavy leather which forms the outside of a winker or blind.

winker-muscle (wing'kėr-mus'l), n. Same as winker, 5.

winker-plate (wing'kėr-plāt), n. In saddlery, a metallic plate which gives shape and strength to a winker or blinder.

winker-strap (wing'kėr-strap), n. In saddlery, a strap which holds the winkers in position. It extends downward from the crown-piece of the bridle, and then branches off on either side, and is fastened to the winkers. See cut under harness.

winking (wing'king), n. [< ME. wynkkynge, wynkynge; verbal n. of wink[1], v.] The act of one who winks: often used in the colloquial phrase like winking—that is, very rapidly; very quickly; with great vigor.

Nod away at him, if you please, like winking!
Dickens, Great Expectations, xxv.

winkingly (wing'king-li), adv. With winking.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are purblind.
Peacham, On Drawing.

winking-owl (wing'king-oul), n. An Australian owl, Ninox connivens.

winkle[1] (wing'kl), n. [< AS. wincle*, in comp. pinc-wincla, periwinkles; allied to wink[1]; see wink[2] and periwinkle[2].] Same as periwinkle[2].

winkle[2] (wing'kl), a. A dialectal variant of winkle. Halliwell.

winkle-hawk (wing'kl-hâk), n. [D. winkelhaak, a rent, tear.] An angular rent made in cloth, etc. Bartlett. Also winkle-hole. [New York.]

winkless (wingk'les), a. [< wink[1] + -less.] Unwinking. [Rare.]

He advanced to that part of the area which was immediately below where I was standing, fixed on me a wide, dilated, winkless sort of stare, and halted.
Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, III. 94.

winly† (win'li), a. [ME., also wynnelich, < AS. wynlic, joyous, < wyn, joy (see winne), + -lic, E. -ly[1]. Cf. winsome.] Joyous; winsome; pleasant; gracious; goodly.

Chefly thay asken
Spyces, that vn sparely nem speded hom to bryng, & the wynnelych wyne ther-with.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 900.

That wynnelych lorde that wonyes in heuen.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1807.

winly (win'li), adv. [< ME. wynly, wynli, < winly, a.] 1†. Delightfully; pleasantly.

That was a parles place for ani prince of erthe, & wynli with hele wal was closed al a-boute.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 769.

Thane I went to that wlonke, and wynly hire gretis.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3239.

2. Quietly. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

winna (win'a). An assimilated form of will, Scotch for will no—that is, will not.

winnable (win'a-bl), a. [< win[1] + -able.] Capable of being won.

All the rest are winnable.
Pall Mall Gazette, Feb. 18, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

winnet, n. and a. I. n. Joy; delight; pleasure.

Hit is min hiзte [joy], hit is mi winne,
That ich me drage to mine cunde [kind].
Owl and Nightingale, l. 272.

When I was borne Noye named he me,
And saide theos wordes with mekill wynne.
York Plays, p. 46.

II. a. Enjoyable; delightful.

He wayned me vpon this wyse to your wynne halle,
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2488.

winnel, winnel-straw (win'el, -strâ), n. Same as jackstraw, 5. [Prov. Eng.]

winner (win'ėr), n. [< ME. wynner; < win[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which wins; a successful contestant or competitor.

The event
Is yet to name the winner.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 5. 15.

winning (win'ing), n. [< ME. wynninge, wynninge; verbal n. of win[1], v.] 1. The act of one who wins, in any sense.

At the Winning of Tonque [Touques], the King made eight and twenty Knights, and from thence marched with his Army to Caen.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 178.

If I am not worth the wooing, I surely am not worth the winning.
Longfellow, Miles Standish, iii.

2. That which is won; that which is gained by effort, conquest, or successful competition; earnings; profit; gain: generally in the plural.

The kynge Arthur made be laide on an hepe all the wynynge and the richesse that ther was geten.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 167.

A . . . gamester, that stakes all his winnings upon every cast.
Addison, Freeholder, No. 40.

3. In coal-mining, a shaft or pit which is being sunk to win or open a bed of coal; an opening of any kind by which coal has been won; a bed of coal ready for mining (see win[1], v. t., 9); sometimes, also, a part of a coal-mine, as distinguished from another portion from which it is separated by a barrier.

The South Hetton and Great Hetton pits were also very costly difficult winnings, on account of the quicksand and irruptions of water.
Jevons, The Coal Question (2d ed.), p. 68.

winning (win'ing), p. a. Successful in contending, competing, attaining, influencing, or gaining over; hence, especially, taking; attractive; charming.

I do find
A winning language in your tongue and looks.
Beau. and Fl., Custom of the Country, ii. 2.

Her smile, her speech, with winning sway,
Wiled the old harper's mood away.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 10.

winning-headway (win'ing-hed'wā), n. In coal-mining, a cross-heading, or one driven at right angles to the main gangways. [North. Eng.]

winningly (win'ing-li), adv. In a winning manner.

Winningly meek or venerably calm.
Wordsworth, Excursion, ii.

winningness (win'ing-nes), n. The property or character of being winning.

Those who insist on charm, on winningness in style, on subtle harmonies and exquisite suggestion, are disappointed in Burke.
J. Morley, Burke, p. 208.

winning-post (win'ing-pōst), n. A post or goal in a race-course, the order of passing which determines the issue of the race.

winninish (win'in-ish), n. [Amer. Ind.] The schoolie trout (which see, under trout[1]).

Found in Eastern waters under the name of "winninish," "grayling," "schoodic trout."
Tribune Book of Sports, p. 160.

winnock, n. See windock.

winnow (win'ō), v. [< ME. winewen, wynewen, winawen, windewen, windwen, wyndwe, < AS. windwian, wyndwian, winnow, fan, ventilate (tr. L. ventilare), with formative -w, < wind, wind, air: see wind[2], n., and cf. wind[2], v. Cf. Icel. vinna, winnow, with formative -a (-a), < vindr, wind (see wince[1]), and L. ventilare, ventilate, < ventus, wind (see ventilate).] I. trans. 1. To fan; set in motion by means of wind; specifically, to expose (grain) to a current of air in order to separate and drive off chaff, refuse particles, etc.

Ane wummon . . . that windwede hwete.
Ancren Riwle, p. 270.

Let wyndwe the Adres in the Wynd.
Maundeville, Travels, p. 207.

Behold, he winnoweth barley to night in the threshing floor.
Bible, Ki. i.

3. To blow upon; toss about by blowing.

Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind.
Keats, To Autumn.

They set the wind to winnow pulse and grain.
Simpson, Musketoquid.

3. To separate, expel, or disperse by or as by fanning or blowing; sift or weed out; separate or distinguish, as one thing from another.

Bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood.
Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 134.

Your office is to winnow false from true.
Cowper, Hope, l. 417.

And lets the kind breeze, with its delicate fan,
Winnow the heat from out his dank gray hair.
Lowell, Under the Willows.

4. To set in motion or vibration; beat as with a fan or wings. [Rare.]

So speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky
Sails between worlds and worlds, with steady wing;
Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan Winnows the buxom air. Milton, P. L., v 270.

5. To wave to and fro; flutter; flap. [Rare.]

The waken'd lav'rock warbling springs,
An' climbs the early sky,
Winnowing blythe her dewy wings
In morning's rosy eye.
Burns, Now Spring has Clad the Grove in Green.

6. To pursue or accomplish with a waving or flapping motion, as of wings. [Rare.]

After wildly circling about, and reaching a height at which it [the snipe] appears a mere speck, where it winnows a random zigzag course, it abruptly shoots downwards and aslant, and then as abruptly stops to regain its former elevation, and this process it repeats many times.
A. Newton, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 800.

7. Figuratively, to subject to a process analogous to the winnowing of grain; separate into parts according to kind; sift; analyze or scrutinize carefully; examine; test.

It being a matter very strange and incredible that one which with so great diligence had winnowed his adversaries' writings should be ignorant of their minds.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vi. 6.

Bisp. All may be foes, or how to be distinguished,
If some be friends?
Bead. They may with ease be winnow'd
Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 1.

II. intrans. 1. To free grain or the like from chaff or refuse matter by means of wind.

Winnow not with every wind. Ecclus v. 9.

Some winnows, some fan,
Some cast that can
In casting provide,
For seed lay aside.
Tusser, Husbandry, November's Abstract.

2. To move about with a flapping motion, as of wings; flutter.

Their [owls'] ghostly shapes winnowing silently around in the twilight.
Mrs. C. Meredith, My Home in Tasmania, p. 356.

winnow (win'ō), n. [< winnow, v.] That which winnows or which is used in winnowing; a contrivance for fanning or winnowing grain.

How solemnly the pendent ivy mass
Swings in its winnow! Coleridge, The Picture.

They (leaves of the Palmyra palm) are largely employed for making pans, bags, winnows, hats, umbrellas, and for thatching, etc. Sci. Amer., N. S., LXII. 374.

winnower (win'ō-ėr), n. [< ME. winewere, windwere, windewere; < winnow + -er[1].] One who winnows; also, an apparatus for winnowing.

As, in smoked floors of barns, upon corn winnower's flies
The chaff, driv'n with an opposite wind.
Chapman, Iliad, v. 497.

Threshing machines are popular here, because the grain does not have to run through a winnower.
The Engineer, LXX. 472.

winnowing-basket (win'ō-ing-bas'ket), n. In her., a bearing representing a large flat basket of peculiar form with two handles.

winnowing-fan (win'ō-ing-fan), n. In her., same as winnowing-basket.

winnowing-machine (win'ō-ing-ma-shēn'), n. A machine for cleaning grain by the action of riddles and sieves and an air-blast; a fanning-machine or fanning-mill. See cut under fanning-mill.

winnow-sheet (win'ō-shēt), n. [Also dial. win-sheet; < ME. wynne-schete; < winnow + sheet.] A sheet used or intended for use in winnowing. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

His wife walked him with a longe gode,
In a cutted cote clothed full hegge,
Wrapped in a wynne schete to weren hire fro wedere.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 435.

winrow, n. See windrow.

winsey, n. Same as wincey.

Winslow's foramen. See foramen of Winslow, under foramen.

Winslow's ligament. See ligament of Winslow, under ligament.

winsome (win'sum), a. [< ME. winsome, winsum, wynsum, wunsum, < AS. wynsum (= OS. wunsam = OHG. wunnisam, wunnisum, MHG. wunneclich), joyful, delightful, < wyn, joy (see wynn), + -sum = E. -some.] 1. That gives or is fitted to give joy, delight, or satisfaction; delightful; pleasing, agreeable, or attractive; charming; winning; sweet.

Busk ye, busk ye, my bonny bonny bride,
Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow.
The Bruse of Fyvrose (Percy's Reliques, II. iii. 24).

We almost see his jasmine face and lifted brow, . . . the clear gray eye, and ineffably sweet and winsome smile.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 58.

2†. Kindly; gracious.

And all forgete alle his foryheldinges,
That wunsum es to alle thine wiekednesse.
Early Eng. Psalter (ed. Stevenson), cii. [A. V. ciii. 3].

3. Joyful; cheerful; merry; lively; gay.

I gat your letter, winsome Willie Burns, To W. Simpson.

winsomely (win'sum-li), adv. [< ME. wynsomly*, < AS. wynsumlice; as winsome + -ly[2].] In a winsome manner.

O Jock, my winsomely 's ye ride,
Wi' baith your feet upo' ae side!
Jock o' the Side (Child's Ballads, VI. 86).

winsomeness (win'sum-nes), n. The property or character of being winsome; attractiveness; loveliness. J. R. Green, (Imp. Dict.) winter[1] (win'tėr), n. and a. [< ME. winter, wynter, < AS. winter (pl. winter or wintru), winter, also a year, = OS. wintar = OFries. D. LG. winter = OHG. wintar, MHG. G. winter = Icel. vetr, vetr (for vintr*), mod. vetr = Sw. Dan. vinter = Goth. wintrus, winter, year; ulterior origin doubtful. The supposed connection with wind (as if winter were the 'windy season') is phonetically improbable. Some suggest a connection with Olr. find, white, Old Gaulish Vindo- in several proper names.] I. n. 1. The cold season of the year. Astronomically winter is reckoned to begin in northern latitudes when the sun enters Capricorn, or at the solstice (about December 21st), and to end at the equinox in March; but in ordinary speech winter comprises the three coldest months December, January, and February being reckoned the winter months in the United States, and November, December, and January in Great Britain. In southern latitudes winter corresponds to the northern summer. See season.

As an husebonde hopeth after an hot wynter,
Yf god sweth hym the lyf, to have a good herueste Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 196.

Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come. Cant. ii. 11.

2. A year: now chiefly poetical, with implication of a hard year or of frosty age.

I trowe of thirtty wynter he was old.
Chaucer, Shipman's Tale, l. 36.

As there I saw mage Merlin whose vast wit
And hundred winters are but as the hands
Of loyal vassals toiling for their liege.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

3. Figuratively, a period analogous to the winter of the year; a season of inertia or suspended activity, or of cheerlessness, dreariness, or adversity.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York.
Shak., Rich. III., I. 1. 1.

The winter of sorrow best shows
The truth of a friend such as you.
Cowper, Winter Nosegay.

4. The last portion of corn brought home at the end of harvest; or, the state of affairs when all the grain on a farm is reaped and brought under cover; also, the rural feast held in celebration of the ingathering of the crops. [Scotch.]

For now the maiden has been win,
And Wynter is at last brought in,
And syne they dance and had the kirn.
The Harst Rig, st. 5 (Jamieson).

II. a Occurring in, characteristic of, or pertaining to winter; wintry.

Youth like summer morn; age like winter weather.
Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, i. 150.

On a sudden, lo! the level lake
And the long glories of the winter moon.
Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

Lime-tree winter moth, an American geometrid moth, Hybernia tiliaria, which greatly resembles in habit the European winter moth, and is an occasional enemy to orchards in the United States, although more commonly found on linden and elm. T. W. Harris. — Winter aconite. See aconite, and cut under Eranthis. — Winter apple, barley. See the nouns. — Winter assizes, in Eng. law, any court of assize, sessions of oyer and terminer, or jail delivery held in November, December, or January. The Winter Assizes Act, 1876 (39 and 40 Vict., c. 57), allows orders in council combining several counties for speedy trial of prisoners at winter assizes. — Winter beer. See beer, under beer[1]. — Winter bud. Same as statoblast. — Winter chip-bird, the tree-sparrow, Spizella monticola, which comes into the United States in the fall, about the time the common chip-bird leaves. See tree-sparrow, 2. — Winter cholera, a form of diarrhea occurring during the winter months as an epidemic, due probably to impurities in the drinking-water: an occasional name. — Winter cough, chronic bronchitis in which the cough appears with the first frosty weather in the autumn and continues as long as the cold weather lasts. — Winter green. See winter-green. — Winter crop. See crop. — Winter daffodil. See Sternbergia. — Winter duck. (a) The pintail or sprigtail duck Dafila acuta. Montagu. [British.] (b) Specifically, Harelda glacialis, in various parts of the United States. See cut under Harelda. — Winter falcon. See falcon. — Winter fallow, ground that is fallowed in winter. — Winter fat. Same as white sage (a) (which see, under sage[1]). — Winter fever, a fever, probably typhoid (though there was dispute as to its nature), which was prevalent in some of the then western States of the Union in the winter of 1842–3. — Winter goose. See goose. — Winter gull, a gull which appears in winter in a given locality, as the common gull, Larus canus, in England, or the herring-gull in the United States. See cuts under gull and herring-gull. Also winter-hornet, winter mew. See hittimake (with cut). — Winter hawk, the red-shouldered buzzard, Buteo lineatus, common all the year in many parts of the United States: a name due to the fact that the young of this bird was formerly taken as a different species, known as the winter falcon, Falco (or Buteo) hiemalis. — Winter heliotrope. See heliotrope. — Winter hellebore. See hellebore, 2. — Winter hematuria, the passage of bloody urine occurring in the winter months, and apparently as the result of cold. — Winter itch, a very annoying pruritus, chiefly of the lower extremities, occurring during the winter months. — Winter mew. Same as winter gull. See cut under gull. [British.] — Winter moth. (a) A European geometrid moth, Cheimatobia brumata, whose larva feeds on the buds and foliage of plum, cherry, apple, and other fruit-trees. The female is wingless, and lays her eggs on the twigs in autumn. The larvæ hatch in early spring, and often do great damage in England and the more northern European countries. The species also occurs in Greenland. (b) See hibernal winter moth, above. — Winter pear. See pear[1]. — Winter pond, a protected pond used to keep fish, as carp, from perishing in severe weather. — Winter quarters, queening, rape. See quarter[1], etc. — Winter redbird, the cardinal grosbeak, which winters in the United States where other redbirds (tanagers) do not. (See cut under Cardinalis.) The epithets is summer redbird (Piranga æstiva). — Winter rocket. See yellow-rocket. — Winter savory. See savory. — Winter shad. Same as mud-shad. — Winter sleep, the hibernation or torpidity of an animal during cold weather. — Winter snipe. See snipe[1]. — Winter solstice. See solstice, 1. — Winter teal, the American teal. See teal. — Winter wagtail, the gray wagtail, Motacilla boarula, Montagu. [British.] — Winter wheat. See wheat. — Winter wren, Troglodytes hiemalis. See wren, and cut under Troglodytes.

winter[1] (win'tėr), v. [< ME. wynteren, wyntren = D. winteren, be or become winter; from the noun.] I. intrans. To spend or pass the winter; take winter quarters; hibernate; hibernate.

And whan the hauene was not able for to dwelle in wynter ful many ordeyneden counsell for to . . . wynteren in the hauene of Crete. Wyclif, Acts xxvii. 12.

After many dreadful combates with the ice, and one of the shippes departing from the other, they were forced to winter in Nova Zembla. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 454.

I went to London with my family to winter at Soho, in the great square. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 27, 1683.

II. trans. 1. To overtake with winter; detain during winter. [Rare.]

They sayled to the 49 degree and a halfe under the pole Antarticke, where beinge wyntered, they were inforced to remayne there for the space of two monethes.
R. Eden, tr. of Antonio Pigafetta (First Books on America (1st ed. Arber), p. 281).

2. To keep, feed, or manage during the winter: as, delicate plants must be wintered under cover.

Is there no keeping
A wife to one man's use? no wintering
Those cattel without straping?
Fletcher, Woman's Prize, iii. 3.

3. To retain during a winter. [Rare.]

To winter an opinion is too tedious.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, III. 5.

winter[2] (win'tėr), n. [Origin obscure; prob. ult. connected with windle and wind[2].] 1†. The part of the old style hand printing-press which sustained the carriage. — 2. An implement made to hang on the front of a grate, for the purpose of keeping warm a tea-kettle or the like. Imp. Dict.

winter-beaten (win'tėr-bē'tn), a. Oppressed or exhausted by the severity of winter.

He compareth his careful case to the middle season of the years, to the frostie ground to the frozen trees, and to his owne winter-beaten flocke.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., January, Arg.

winterberry (win'tėr-ber'i), n.; pl. winterberries (-iz). A name of several shrubs of the genus Ilex, belonging to the section (once genus) Prinos, growing in eastern North America. The winterberry especially so named is I. verticillata, otherwise called black alder, sometimes distinguished as Virginia winterberry. It bears deciduous leaves, and white flowers in sessile clusters, followed by shining scarlet berries of the size of a pea, which after the fall of the leaves, rendering the bush very attractive. The bark is regarded as tonic and astringent, has been recommended for fevers, etc., and is a popular remedy for gangrene and ulcers. I. laevigata, the smooth winterberry, has larger, mostly solitary, earlier ripening berries. I. glabra, the inkberry, belongs to this group.

winter-bloom (win'tėr-blōm), n. The witch-hazel, Hamamelis Virginiana. It blossoms late in the fall and matures its fruit the next season.

winter-bonnet (win'tėr-bon"et), n. Same as winter gull (which see, under winter[1]). [Local, British.]

winter-bound (win'tėr-bound), a. Imprisoned, confined, detained, or hindered by winter.

As the wretch looks o'er Siberia's shore,
When winter-bound the wave is.
Burns, Lovely Davies

winterbourn, winterbourne (win'tėr-bōrn), n. See nailbourne.

The springs and intermittent winter-bourns which rise suddenly at certain seasons in the chalk-districts were thought to be harbingers of pestilence and famine.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., x.

winter-cherry (win'tėr-cher"i), n. 1. See alkekengi and strawberry-tomato. — 2. See Solanum. — 3. Same as heartseed.

winter-clad (win'tėr-klad), a. Clothed for winter; warmly clad.

Tattoo'd or woaded, winter-clad in skins.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

winter-clover (win'tėr-klō"vėr), n. The partridge-berry, Mitchella repens.

winter-crack (win'tėr-krak), n. A small green plum with late-ripening fruit.

winter-cress (win'tėr-kres), n. A cruciferous plant, either Barbarea vulgaris or B. præcox, both formerly (and the latter still sparingly) cultivated for winter salad. Both are Old World plants, and the former is very common in North America, though indigenous only in the north and west. This is a stoutish weed with bright-green lyrate leaves and conspicuous yellow racemes, also called yellow rocket, and sometimes (to distinguish it from the water-cress) land cress. The latter, the early winter cress (which may be a variety of the former), is cultivated and sometimes spontaneous in southern parts of the United States, there called scurvy-grass.

wintered (win'tėrd), a. [< ME. wintered*, wintred, < AS. gewintrad (†); as winter[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Having seen or endured (many) winters.

& ȝho waas tha awa winntredd wif
& off awa milkell elde. Ormulum, l. 453.

The hoary fell
And many-winter'd fleece of throat and chin
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

2. Exposed to winter, especially in a figurative sense; tried by adversity or sorrow.

Their moral nature especially wants the true frigorific tension of a well wintered life and experience.
H. Bushnell, Moral Uses of Dark Things, ix.

3†. Pertaining to or suitable for winter; worn in winter.

Wintred garments must be linde.
Shak., As you Like it (fol. 1623), iii. 2. 111 (song).

winterer (win'tėr-ėr), n. One who or that which passes the winter in a specified place or manner; specifically, an ox or cow kept to feed in a particular place during winter. Jamieson.

Luxuries denied to the winterer on board ship.
Athenæum, No. 3045, p. 319.

winter-flower (win'tėr-flou"ėr), n. See Chimonanthus.

wintergreen (win'tėr-grēn), n. [= D. wintergroen: so called as keeping green through the winter; as winter[1] + green.] 1. A plant of the genus Pyrola, especially P. minor, the common species in England, where the name is chiefly thus applied. P. rotundifolia is sometimes distinguished as false or pear-leaved wintergreen. —

Flowering Plant of Wintergreen (Gaultheria procumbens). a, the fruit.

2. A plant of the genus Gaultheria, chiefly G. procumbens, the aromatic wintergreen of eastern North America. This is a little undershrub with extensively creeping, usually hidden, stems, and ascending branches which bear evergreen leaves, small white nodding flowers, and scarlet berries which consist of an enlarged fleshy calyx surrounding the capsule. The leaves afford wintergreen-oil (which see), and have also been used as a tea, whence the name tea-berry and mountain-tea. The berries are mildly aromatic. New England names are checkerberry and partridge-berry (both especially the latter, shared with Mitchella repens), and boxberry. Other names are deerberry, groundberry, hillberry, spiceberry, creeping wintergreen, and spring wintergreen.

3. A plant of the genus Chimaphila, especially C. maculata. See spotted wintergreen, below. — American aromatic wintergreen. See def. 2. — Chickweed wintergreen. See Trientalis. — Creeping wintergreen. See def. 2. — False wintergreen. See def. 1. — Flowering wintergreen. See Polygala. — Pear-leaved wintergreen. See def. 1. — Spotted wintergreen, a congener of the pipsissewa, Chimaphila maculata, having spotted leaves. — Spring wintergreen. See def. 2.

wintergreen-oil (win'tėr-grēn-oil), n. A heavy volatile oil distilled from the leaves of the aromatic wintergreen (see wintergreen, 2). It is medicinally an aromatic stimulant with an astringent property, its chief use, however, is in flavoring confectionery, medicated syrups, etc. Officinally oil of gaultheria.

winter-ground (win'tėr-ground), v. t. To cover over so as to preserve from the effects of frost during winter: as, to winter-ground the roots of a plant.

The ruddock would
With charitable bill . . . bring thee all this;
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are none,
To winter-ground thy corse Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2. 220.

winter-hall†, n. [< ME. wyntyr-halle, wyntir-haule; < winter[1] + hall.] A hall used especially in winter.

The utmost Chambur nexte Winter Halle.
Paston Letters, I. 480.

A wyntir haule, hibernium, hibernaculum, hiemaculum.
Cath. Ang., p. 420.

winter-house†, n. [< ME. wyntyr-howse; < winter[1] + house[1].] A house used especially in winter.

Wyntyr howse or halle . . . Hibernaculum.
Prompt. Parv., p. 530.

winteridge (win'tėr-ij), n. [For winterage*, < winter[1] + -age.] Winter food for cattle. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wintering (win'tėr-ing), n. [Verbal n. of winter[1], v.] 1. The act of one who or that which winters in a specified place or manner.

If God so prosper your voyage that you may . . . obtaine from him (the Prince of Cathay) his letters of priuiledge against the next yeeres spring, you may then . . . search and discouer somewhat further then you had discouered before your wintering
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 434.

2. Provision of fodder, shelter, etc., for cattle during winter.

Young lean cattle may by their growth pay for their wintering, and so be ready to fat next summer.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

winterish (win'tėr-ish), a. [Early mod. E. also wynteryshe; < winter[1] + -ish[1].] Of or pertaining to winter; wintry.

Wynteryshe, belonging to the wynter
Palsgrave, p. 329.

winter-kill (win'tėr-kil), v. t. [A back-formation, < winter-killed.] To kill by cold in winter: as, to winter-kill wheat or clover. [U. S.]

winter-killed (win'tėr-kild), p. a. Killed by the cold of winter, as wheat; impaired in flavor or condition by cold or ice, as oysters; blasted by cold weather, as a plant. [U. S.]

winterless (win'tėr-les), a. [< winter[1] + -less.] Free from or unaffected by winter; not experiencing winter.

The sunny, delicious, winterless California sky
The Century, XXVI. 200.

winter-lodge (win'tėr-loj), n. In bot., the hibernacle of a plant, which protects the embryo or future shoot from injury during the winter. It is either a bud or a bulb. Also winter-lodgment.

winter-love† (win'ter-luv), n. Cold, insincere, or conventional love or love-making. [Rare.]

What a deal of cold business doth a man misspend the better part of life in! in scattering compliments, tendering visits, . . . making a little winter-love in a dark corner.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

winterly (win'tėr-li), a. [= G. winterlich = Icel. vetrligr = Sw. Dan. vinterlig; < winter[1] + -ly[1].] Resembling winter; characteristic of or appropriate to winter; wintry; cold and bleak; cheerless.

If 't be summer news,
Smile to 't before: if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that countenance still.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 13.

Francis the First of France was one winterly night warming himself over the embers of a wood fire.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 21.

winter-proud (win'tėr-proud), a. Too green and luxuriant or too forward in growth in winter: applied to wheat or the like.

When either corne is winter-ground, or other plants put forth and bud too early, by reason of the milde and warme aire.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xvii. 8.

winter-rig (win'tėr-rig), v. t. [< winter[1] + rig, a ridge.] To plow (land) in ridges and let it lie fallow in winter. [Local, Great Britain.]

Winter's bark. See bark[2].

winter-settle (win'tėr-set"l), n. [A modernized form of AS. wintersetl, winter seat, winter quarters, < winter, winter, + setl, seat: see settle[1].] A winter seat or dwelling; winter quarters: a term belonging to the early history of England.

In 874 the heathen men took their winter-settle in Lindesey at Torksey. The next year we read how they passed from Lindesey to Repton, and took winter-settle there.
E. A. Freeman, Eng. Towns and Districts, p. 204.

winter-tide (win'tėr-tīd), n. [< ME. wintertid, wyntertyde (= D. wintertijd = MHG. wintertit, G. winterzeit = Icel. vetrartīth = Dan. vintertid), winter-tide; < winter[1] + tide[1], n.] The winter season; winter. [Obsolete or poetical.]

In Wales it is fulle strong to werre in wynter tyde,
For wynter is ther long, whan Somer is here in pride.
Rob. of Brunne, p. 260.

Fruits
Which in wintertide shall star
The black earth with brilliance rare.
Tennyson, Ode to Memory.

winterweed (win'tėr-wēd), n. A name of various weeds that survive and flourish through the winter, especially the ivy-leafed speedwell, Veronica hederæfolia.

wintery (win'tėr-i), a. See wintry.

wintle (win'tl), v. i.; pret. and pp. wintled, ppr. wintling. [Var. of wentle.] To twist; writhe; roll; reel; stagger. [Scotch.]

Tho' now ye dow but hoyt an' hobble,
An' wintle like a saumont-coble.
Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

wintle (win'tl), n. [< wintle, v.] A rolling or reeling motion; a stagger. Also, erroneously, whintle. [Scotch.]

He by his shouther gae a keek,
And tumbl'd wi' a whintle
Out-owre that night.
Burns, Halloween.

Wintrich's change of tone. In music, an alteration in pitch of the percussion-note obtained from a cavity upon the opening of the mouth: the note becomes louder, higher, and more tympanitic in character.

wintriness (win'tri-nes), n. The character of being wintry; as, the wintriness of the climate or the season.

wintrous† (win'trus), a. [< winter[1] + -ous.] Wintry; stormy.

The more wintrous the season of the life hath been, look for the fairer summer of pleasures for evermore.
Z. Boyd.

wintry (win'tri), a. [Also wintery; < ME. wintry*, < AS. wintrig, wintreg (cf. G. winterlich); as winter[1] + -y[1].] 1. Of or pertaining to winter; occurring in winter; peculiar or appropriate to the cold season of the year; cold and stormy.

Ere the clouds gather, and the wint'ry sky
Descends in storms to intercept our passage.
Rowe, Jane Shore, ii.

Great ice-crystals . . . gave the vessel a wintery appearance.
C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, 1876, p. 418.

2. Figuratively, cool; chilly; frosty.

She could even smile — a faint, sweet, wintery smile.
Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, ii.

winy (wī'ni), a. [< wine + -y[1].] Characteristic of or peculiar to wine; resembling wine; pertaining to or influenced by wine; vinous. Also winey.

But, being once well chafed with wine, . . . there was no matter their ears had ever heard of that grew not to be a subject of their winie conference.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

They are much like such Grapes as grow on our Vines, both in shape and colour; and they are of a very pleasant Winy taste.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 382.

winze[1] (winz), n. [Prob. < winze*, v., winnow, Icel. vinza, winnow, < vindr, wind: see wind[2], and cf. winnow.] In mining, a vertical or inclined excavation which is like a shaft except that it does not rise to the surface. The winze usually connects one level with another, for the purpose of promoting the ventilation of that part of the workings near to which it is. Winzes also, to a limited extent, serve the purpose of mills or passes, since the stoping is often begun from them, and some time must necessarily elapse before a regular mill can be formed in the ground.

winze[2] (winz), n. [Alt. identical with wink, prob. through D. verwenschen, curse, < ver-

wipe, n. [Perhaps a corruption of wish, n.] A curse or imprecation. [Scotch.]

He . . . hoot a aitnes, an' drew a stroke,
Till skin in blypes cam haurlin'
Aff 's claiver that night. Burns, Halloween.

wipe[2] (wips), n. A corrupt form of winch[1]. E. H. Knight.

wipe[1] (wip), v.; pret. and pp. wiped, ppr. wiping. [< ME. wipen, wypen, < AS. wipian, wipe, rub, < *wip, a wisp of straw (= LG. wisp, a wisp of straw, a rag to wipe anything with); cf. wisp (a prob. extension of *wip).] I. trans. 1. To rub or stroke with or on something, especially a soft cloth, for cleaning; clean or dry by gently rubbing, as with a towel.

Horn gan his sword gripe,
And on his arme wype.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 18.

Sche whippyth his face with her kerchy.
Coventry Mysteries, p. 318.

The large Fra Angelico in the Academy is as clear and keen as if the good old monk were standing there wiping his brushes. H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 274.

2. To remove by or as by gently rubbing with or on something, especially a cloth; hence, with away, off, or out, to remove, efface, or obliterate.

God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.
Rev. xxi. 4.

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, . . .
Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 10. 74.

Why, then, should I now, now when glorious peace
Triumphs in change of pleasures, be wip'd off,
Like a useless moth, from courtly ease?
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, i. 1.

Oh, thou has nam'd a word that wipes away
All thoughts revengeful.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 1.

Yet here hee smoothly seeks to wipe off all the envy of his evill Government upon his Substitutes and under Officers. Milton, Eikonoklastes, i.

3. Figuratively, to cleanse, as from evil practices or abuses; clear, as of disadvantage or superfluity.

I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish.
2 Ki. xxi. 13.

4†. To cheat; defraud; trick.

If they by covin or guile be wiped beside their goods, so that no violence be done to their bodies, they ease their anger by abstaining from occupying with that nation until they have made satisfaction.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 10.

We are but quit; you fool us of our moneys
In every cause, in every quiddit wipe us
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 5

5†. To stroke or strike gently; tap.

Thenne he toke me by the hande frome the grounde and wyped my face with a rose and kyssed me.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 30.

6. To beat; chastise. [Slang.] — 7. In plumbing, to apply (solder) without the use of a soldering-iron, by allowing the solder to cool into a semi-fluid condition, and then applying it by wiping it over the part to be soldered by the use of a pad of leather or cloth. See wiping, 2. — To wipe another's nose†. See nose[1]. — To wipe the (or one's) eye. See eye[1].

II. intrans. To make strokes with a rubbing or sweeping motion.

He comes full upon it, seated upright, with its back against a tree, wiping at the dogs swarming upon it, right and left, with its huge paws.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 205.

wipe[1] (wip), n. [Early mod. E. also wype; < wipe[1], v.] 1. The act or process of wiping clean or dry; a sweeping stroke of one thing over another; a rub; a brush.

He often said of himself, with a melancholy wipe of his sleeve across his brow, that he "didn't know which-a-way to turn." George Eliot, Felix Holt, viii.

2. A quick or hard stroke; a blow, literally or figuratively; a cut: now regarded as slang.

Since you were the first that layde hand to weapon, the fault is not mine if I haue happened to giue you a wype.
Gascoyne, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 235.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italic type. Swift, On Poetry.

3. The mark of a blow or wound; a scar; a brand. [Rare.]

The Moorish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot,
Shak., Lucrece, l. 857.

4. Something used in wiping; specifically, a handkerchief. [Slang.]

I'm Inspector Field!
And this here's warrant 's prigged your wipe.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 256.

"And what have you got, my dear?" said Fagin to Charley Bates. "Wipes," replied Master Bates, at the same time producing four pocket-handkerchiefs.
Dickens, Oliver Twist, ix.

5. pl. A fence of brushwood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] — 6. Same as wiper, 3.

As the cam, which is a revolving wheel with twelve or fourteen projecting teeth or wipes, revolves.
W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 308.

wipe[2] (wip), n. Same as weep[2].

wiper (wi'pėr), n. [< wipe[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wipes.

Another movement [of a soldering-machine] carries the can body across the wiper, which removes the superfluous solder. Sci. Amer., N. S., LXIII. 297.

2. That on which anything is wiped, as a hand-towel or a handkerchief.

The wipers for their noses. B. Jonson, Masque of Owls.

3. In mach., a piece projecting generally from a horizontal axle, for the purpose of raising stampers, pounders, or pistons in a vertical direction and letting them fall by their own weight. Wipers are employed in fulling-mills, stamping-mills, oil-mills, powder-mills, etc. Also wipe. — 4. A steel implement for cleaning the bore of a musket, etc. It has two twisted arms, screws on the end of a ramrod, and carries a piece of cloth or a bunch of tow. The larger wipers for cleaning cannon are attached to a wooden stick, and are termed worms or sponges. See cut under gun.

a, wiper; b, toe.

wiper-wheel (wi'pėr-hwēl), n. A cam-wheel serving to lift a trip-hammer, a stamp, or the like, allowing it to fall again by its own weight. See cam[1].

wiping (wi'ping), n. 1. The act of one who wipes; specifically, a beating; a thrashing; a trimming. [Slang.]

Even in the domestic circle one can have a choice of "a towelling," "a basting," "a clouting," . . . "a trimming," or "a wiping," when occasion requires.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 153.

2. In plumbing: (a) The removal, with a greased cloth, of solder which has been poured upon a joint to heat it before soldering. (b) The operation of shaping with a wooden pad a mass of solder applied to form a wiped joint.

wiping-rod (wi'ping-rod), n. See wiper, 4.

wird, wirdet, n. Obsolete variants of weird.

wire[1] (wir), n. and a. [< ME. wir, wyr, < AS. wir, a wire, a spiral ornament of wire, = MLG. wire, LG. wir, wire; cf. OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, fine-drawn gold, gold ornament, = Icel. virr, wire (cf. Sw. vire, wind, twist); cf. Lith. wela, iron wire, L. viriæ, armlets (see virole, ferrule).] I. n. 1. An extremely elongated body of elastic material; specifically, a slender bar of metal, commonly circular in section, from the size which can be bent by the hand with some difficulty down to a fine thread. Wire was originally made by hammering, a sort of groove in the anvil serving to determine the size. It is now drawn by powerful machinery, and passed through a series of holes constantly diminishing in size. Wire of square section, flat like a tape, etc., is also made.

Fetteth hir fyngres were frotted with golde wyre.
Piers Plowman (B), ii. 11.

Wyre. Filum, vel ferrifilum . . . (filum ereum vel ferreum, P.) Prompt. Parv., p. 530.

At what period and among what people the art of working up pure gold, or gilded silver, into a long, round hair-like thread into what may be correctly called wire began, is quite unknown.
S. K. Handbook Textile Fabrics, p. 22.

2†. A twisted thread; a filament.

Upon a courser, startling as the fyr,
Men mighte turne him with a litel wyr,
Bit Eneas, lyk Phebus to devyse.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1205.

3. A quantity of wire used for various purposes, especially in electric transmission, as in case of the telephone, the telegraph, electric lighting, etc.; specifically, a telegraph-wire, and hence (colloquially) the telegraph system itself: as, to send orders by wire.

It is ridiculous to make love by wire
C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 201.

Faraday's term "electrode," literally a way for electricity to travel along, might be well applied to designate the insulated conductor along which the electric messenger is despatched. It is, however, more commonly and familiarly called "the wire" or "the line."
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 113.

4. A metallic string of a musical instrument; hence, poetically, the instrument itself.

Sound Lydian wires, once make a pleasing note
On nectar streams of your sweet airs to float.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., v. 1.

Listening to what unshorn Apollo sings
To the touch of golden wires.
Milton, Vacation Exercise, l. 38.

With wire and catgut he concludes the day,
Quav'ring and semiquav'ring care away.
Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 126.

5†. The lash; the scourge: alluding to the use of metallic whips.

Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire.
Shak., A. and C., II. 6. 62.

Lol. You may hear what time of day it is, the chimes of Bedlam goes.
Abb. Peace, peace, or the wire comes!
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, i. 2.

6. In ornith., one of the extremely long, slender, wire-like filaments or shafts of the plumage of various birds. See wired, wire-tailed, and cut under Videstrelda. — 7. pl. Figuratively, that by which any organization or body of persons is controlled and directed; now used chiefly in political slang. See wire-pulling.

Now, however, there was a vacancy, and they (the politicians) scented their prey afar off. The usual manipulation of the wires began, and they were managed with the usual skill. The Nation, XVI. 330.

8. A pickpocket with long fingers, expert at picking women's pockets. Hotten. [Thieves' slang.]

He was worth 20*l.* a week, he said, as a wire — that is, a picker of ladies' pockets.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 420.

9. A fiber of cobweb, a fine platinum wire, or a line upon glass, fixed in the focus of a telescope, to aid in comparing the positions of objects. — Barbed, beaded, dead wire. See the adjectives. — Binding-wire. See binding. — Compound telegraph-wire, a wire composed of a steel center surrounded by a copper tube, the object being to obtain the necessary conductivity and strength with less material than is required when iron wire is used. — Dovetail wire, a wire having a wedge-shaped section. — Earth wire. See earth-wire. — Filling the wire, in telegr., putting such a number of stations on one wire that it is occupied during the whole day. — Gold wire, a wire formed of a core of silver covered with gold. It may be drawn out to the fineness of thread. — Ground-wire. Same as earth-wire. — Hollow wire, in goldsmithing, small tubes used for making joints, as in the cases of watches, etc. — Latten, live, phantom wire. See the qualifying words. — Leading-in wire, the wire which makes connection between a telegraph-line and a telegraph-office. Open wires, in telegr., exposed or overhead bare wires. Also sometimes used for open circuit. — Saddle wire, a telegraph-wire carried on insulators fixed directly to the tops of the poles. — Taped wires, wires covered with tape for insulation or weather-protection. Telodynamic wire, a wire used to transmit force or power, as in giving motion to a machine from a countershaft or from the driving-pulley of an engine. — To pull or work (the) wires. See wire-pulling. — Undertakers' wire, a kind of insulated wire the use of which was at one time authorized by the fire-insurance underwriters for electric-lighting purposes. The name was given because of the defective quality or insulation of this wire and the consequent danger in its use. [Colloq.] — Wire-covering machine, a machine for covering wire with a finer wire or with thread. Wire of Lapland, a shining slender material made from the sinews of the reindeer soaked in water, beaten, and spun into a sort of thread of great strength. These threads are dipped in melted tin, and drawn through a horn with a hole in it. The Laplanders use this wire for embroidering their clothes. — Wire-twisting machine, a machine or tool for joining ends of wire, as sections of fencing- or telegraph-wires, etc., by twisting them on each other. — Woven-wire lashing. See lashing[1].

II. a. Made of wire; consisting of or fitted with wires: as, a wire sieve; a wire bird-cage.

He did him to the wire-window,
As fast as he could gang.
Fire of Frendraught (Child's Ballads, VI. 190).

Wire armor. Same as chain-mail. See mail[1], 3. — Wire belting, belts or straps for machinery, made of wire instead of leather. — Wire bent. See bent[3]. — Wire bridge, (a) Same as suspension bridge. See bridge[1] (with cut). (b) In elect., a kind of Wheatstone bridge in which two adjacent resistances are formed by a wire which can be divided in any ratio by means of a sliding contact and a graduated scale. — Wire cables. See cable. — Wire cartridge, a cartridge for a shotgun, having the charge of shot inclosed in a network of wire to concentrate the discharge.

Wire cartridges are woven wire receptacles in which shot are mixed with bone dust. Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 488.

Wire cloth. See cloth. — Wire entanglements, in fort. See entanglement. — Wire fence, gauze, guard, gun. See the nouns. Wire mattress. See mattress. — Wire rope. See rope[1]. — Wire-spring coiling-machine, a machine for making spiral metal springs. — Wire stitch. See stitch, 9. — Wire wheel. See wheel[1].

wire[1] (wir), v.; pret. and pp. wired, ppr. wiring. [< wire[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To bind, fit, or otherwise provide with wire; put wire in, on, around, through, etc.: as, to wire corks in bottling liquors; to wire beads; to wire a fence; to wire a bird-skin, as in taxidermy; to wire a house for electric lighting.

As bats at the wired window of a dairy,
They beat their vans.
Shelley, Witch of Atlas, xvi.

In 1711 the coats used to be wired to make them stand out. J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 156.

Many of the houses built during the past two years were wired when constructed.
Electric Rev. (Amer.), I. 2.

2. To snare by means of a wire: as, to [illegible] bird.

Donald Caird can wire a muskin,
Kens the wiles o' dun-deer stealin'.
Scott, Donald Caird's [illegible]

3. To send through a telegraphic wire; send by telegraph, as a message; telegraph: as, wire a reply. [Colloq.]

The coronation of the Emperor of Austria as King of Hungary, the canonization of saints of Rome, were . . . cabled to New York, just as the Washington news is wired to the same place Athenæum, No. 2154, p. 207.

4. To be wound or bound about like wire; encircle. [Rare.]

But, as the Vine her lovely Elm doth wire, Grasp both our Hearts, and flame with fresh Desire.
Howell, Letters, I. iv. 14.

5. In surg., to maintain the ends of (a fractured bone) in close apposition by means of wire passed through holes drilled in the bone.

II. intrans. 1. To flow in currents as thin as wire. [Rare.]

Then in small streams (through all the Isle wiring)
Sends it to every part, both heat and life inspiring.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, iv.

2. To communicate by means of a telegraphic wire; telegraph.

I told her in what way I had learned of her accident and her whereabouts, and I added that I had wired to her husband. D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxiii.

To wire away. Same as to wire in. [Slang.]

Nevertheless, in one fashion or another he "keeps wiring away," stopping now and then to listen as well as his throbbing pulses will allow Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 93.

To wire in, to apply one's self closely and perseveringly to anything; press forward; go ahead. [Slang.]

wire[2] (wīr), n. A corruption of weir.

wire-bent (wīr'bent), n. Same as mat-grass, 2.

wire-bird (wīr'bėrd), n. A species of plover.

[At St. Helena] are a few Wild Goats a kind of Rock Pigeon, and a species of Plover called the "Wire Bird" W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 657.

wire-cutter (wīr'kut'ėr), n. A form of nippers with sharp edges or blades, for cutting wire.

wired (wīrd), a. [< wire + -ed[2].] 1. In ornith., having wires or wiry feathers: chiefly in composition: as, the twelve-wired bird of paradise. Compare wire-tailed, and see wire[1], n., 6, and cuts under Selenidæ, thread-tailed, Trochilidæ, and Vidæstrelda.—2. In croquet, protected or obstructed by an intervening wire.

wire-dancer (wīr'dān'sėr), n. One who dances or performs other feats upon a wire stretched at some distance above the ground. Compare rope-dancer.

Mr. Maddox, the celebrated wire dancer, . . . had also been engaged as an auxiliary to the same theatre.
Baker, Biographia Dramatica (ed. 1811), I. 127.

wire-dancing (wīr'dān'sing), n. The performance or the profession of a wire-dancer.

Wire-dancing, at least so much of it as I have seen exhibited, appears to me to be misnamed; it consists rather of various feats of balancing, the actor sitting, standing, lying, or walking upon the wire, which at the same time is usually swung backwards and forwards.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 316.

wiredraw (wīr'drâ), v.; pret. wiredrew, pp. wire-drawn, ppr. wiredrawing. I. trans. 1. To draw (metal) out into wire; especially, to form into wire, as a metal, by forcibly pulling through a series of holes gradually decreasing in diameter.—2. To draw out to greater length; extend in quantity or time; stretch, especially to excess; prolong; protract.

A hungry chirurgeon often produces and wire draws his cure Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 276.

He never desisted from pulling his Beard till he had wiredrawn it down to his Feet.
Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 42.

3. To draw out into excessive tenuity or subtlety, as a thought, argument, or discourse; spin out, especially by useless refinements, hair-splitting, or the like; render prolix at the expense of force and clearness.

The devil perhaps may want his due if authority be not reviled against, and a long schismatical oration hyperbolically stretched out to the rabble of their disobedient and unlicked auditors who . . . devoted the vaporous matter with a wire drawn speech and fouting courtesy.
Tom Nash his Ghost, p. 8.

What they call improvement is generally . . . spinning out their Author's sense till 'tis wiredrawn; that is, weak and slender. Felton, On the Classicks (ed. 1713), p. 193.

The development of those principles [special pleading] produced such a . . . crop of . . . wiredrawn distinctions that the most subtle intellect found it difficult to understand them. Forsyth, Hortensius, p. 341.

4. To stretch or strain unwarrantably; wrest; pervert; distort.

You injuriously Wire draw him to Presbyters and Antient Bishops (Sentences and Propositions) which are farre from the Phrase and matter Bp. Hall, Def. of Humb. Remonst., v.

Nor am I for forcing or wire-drawing the sense of the text so as to make it designedly foretell the King's death.
South, Sermons, V. ii.

I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense been wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden.

5. To beguile; cheat.

To Wire draw, . . . to decoy a Man, or get somewhat out of him. Bailey, 1731.

6. In the steam-engine, to draw off (steam) by one or more small apertures, materially reducing its pressure after the passage.

II. intrans. To follow the profession, practice, or methods of a wiredrawer; especially, to use unwarrantable methods; pervert; cheat.

Thou hadst land and thousands which thou spend'st,
And flung'st away, and yet it flows in double.
I purchas'd, wrung and wire drew'd for my wealth.
Lost, and was cozen'd Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, v.

wiredrawer (wīr'drâ'ėr), n. [< wiredraw + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which draws metal into wire.

Yet they will take upon them to displace a bishop and learned divines, and place in their room weavers and wire drawers Tom Nash his Ghost, p. 9.

Then again they [wires] are sealed the third time, . . . and delivered to the small Wire Drawers.
Hay, Eng. Words (ed. 1691), p. 195.

2. Figuratively, one who spins out unduly; one who carries a matter into useless subtleties, with or without perversion of meaning.

Either shut me out for a Wrangler, or cast me off for a Wiredrawer Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 106.

3. A stingy, grasping person. Halliwell.

wiredrawing (wīr'drâ'ing), n. [Verbal n. of wiredraw, v.] 1. The act or art of extending ductile metals into wire. The metal is first hammered into a bar, and then passed successively through a series of holes in a hardened steel plate, gradually diminishing in diameter until the requisite degree of fineness is attained. Extremely fine gold and platinum wires for the spider-lines of telescopic micrometers are formed by coating the metal with silver, and then drawing it down to a great tenuity through a draw plate the holes of which are made in a diamond or ruby. The silver is then removed by nitric acid, leaving an almost invisible interior wire, which has been attenuated to a diameter of only $\frac{1}{14000}$ inch.

2. Figuratively, the act of drawing out an argument or a discussion to prolixity and attenuation by useless refinements, distinctions, disquisitions, etc.

The counsel on the other side declared that such twisting, such wiredrawing, was never seen in a court of justice. Macaulay.

Out of all that rubbish of Arab idolatries, . . . rumours and hypotheses of Greek and Jews, with their idle wire-drawings this wild man of the Desert (Mahomet) . . . had seen into the kernel of the matter.
Carlyle, Hero-Worship, ii.

Wiredrawing-bench, an apparatus for wiredrawing, consisting of a reel on which the wire to be drawn is wound, a draw-plate and stand, and a cone-shaped drum actuated by bevel-gearing.

wire-edge (wīr'ej), n. A thin, wire-like edge formed on a cutting-tool by over-sharpening it on one side, which causes the edge to turn over slightly toward the other side.

wire-edged (wīr'ejd), a. Having a wire-edge.

The tool to be ground . . . will . . . become wire-edged.
Campin, Hand-turning, p. 41.

wire-finder (wīr'fīn'dėr), n. A kind of telephonic detector employed to find the wires belonging to different circuits, etc. It has a magnet between the poles of which the wire is held; near the magnet is a short ear-tube with ferrotype diaphragm; and a pulsating or interrupted current sent through the wire causes the diaphragm to sound.

wire-gage (wīr'gāj), n. See gage[2].

wire-grass (wīr'grâs), n. 1. A species of meadow-grass, Poa compressa, native in the Old World, naturalized in North America. It is sometimes mistaken for the Kentucky blue-grass, Poa pratensis, but is well distinguished by its shorter leaves and smaller dense panicle, and its flattened wiry culms which are decumbent and less tall. Also called English blue-grass.

2. A valued forage-grass, Eleusine Indica, perhaps native in India, now widely distributed in warm and temperate regions: it is common southward in the United States. It has thick succulent stems with radiating spikes at the summit. Also crab-grass, yard-grass, and dock-tail.

3. One of various other grasses, as the Bermuda grass, Cynodon Dactylon (see grass), Sporobolus junceus, and species of Aristida in the southern United States, and Paspalum filiforme in the West Indies.

wiregrub (wīr'grub), n. A wireworm.

wire-heel (wīr'hēl), n. A certain defect and disease in the foot of a horse or other beast.

wireman (wīr'man), n.; pl. wiremen (-men). A man who puts up and looks after wires, as for the telegraph, telephone, or electric lighting.

Linemen and wiremen were in great demand in New York last week. Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XVII. 238.

wire-micrometer (wīr'mī-krom'e-tėr), n. A micrometer with fine wires arranged in parallel and intersecting series across the field of the instrument.

wire-pan (wīr'pan), n. A pan with a bottom made of wire cloth, used for baking cake, etc.

wire-pegger (wīr'peg'ėr), n. In shoe-manuf., a nailing- or pegging-machine for cutting wire pegs from a continuous wire and driving them into shoe-soles; a wire-nailing machine. Compare pegger and nailing-machine.

wire-puller (wīr'pūl'ėr), n. 1. One who pulls the wires, as of a puppet. Hence—2. One who operates by secret means; one who exercises a powerful but secret influence; an intriguer.

It was useless now to bribe the Comitia, to work with clubs and wire-pullers. Froude, Cæsar, p. 309.

One of the great English political parties, and naturally the party supporting the Government in power, holds a Conference of gentlemen to whom I hope I may without offense apply the American name wire-pullers.
Maine, Pop. Government, iv.

wire-pulling (wīr'pūl'ing), n. 1. The act of pulling the wires, as of a puppet or other mechanical contrivance. Hence—2. The rousing, guiding, and controlling of any organization or body of persons, especially a political party, by underhand influence or management; intrigue, especially political intrigue.

wirer (wīr'ėr), n. [< wire + -er[1].] One who wires; specifically, one who uses wires to snare game.

The nightly wirer of their innocent hare.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

wire-road (wīr'rōd), n. Same as wireway. E. H. Knight.

wire-sewed (wīr'sōd), a. Sewed with wire instead of thread: noting books and pamphlets.

wire-shafted (wīr'shaf'ted), a. Devoid of webs for most or all the length of its shaft, as a feather; wired, as a bird. See wire-tailed, and cut under Selenidæ.

wire-silver (wīr'sil'vėr), n. Native silver in slender wire-like forms.

wiresmith (wīr'smith), n. One who makes metal into wire, especially by beating or hammering.

Wire was obtained by hammering up strips of metal, and the artificers thus employed were termed in the trade wire smiths. The Engineer, LXVII. 209.

wire-stitched (wīr'sticht), a. Noting pamphlets, etc., that are fastened with wire.

wire-straightener (wīr'strāt'nėr), n. An apparatus for removing bends from wire, as from that which has been coiled. The wire is pulled forcibly between three or more fixed points not in line.

wire-stretcher (wīr'strech'ėr), n. A hand-tool for clasping the loose ends of wires in fences and telegraph-wires, for the purpose of holding and drawing them together to make a joint.

wire-tailed (wīr'tāld), a. Having wiry or wire-shafted tail feathers, as the thread-tailed swallow, Hirundo fihferus. See cuts under thread-tailed, Trochilidæ, Vidæstrelda, and Vidua.

wire-tramway (wīr'tram'wā), n. Same as wire-way. E. H. Knight.

wire-twist (wīr'twist'), n. A kind of gun-barrel made of a ribbon of iron and steel coiled around a mandrel and welded. The ribbon is made by welding together laminæ of iron and steel, or two qualities of iron, and drawing the resulting bar between rollers. E. H. Knight.

wireway (wīr'wa), n. A system of transportation by the agency of traveling or stationary wires. Wire ways are used for carrying stone, ores, clay, coal, etc., from mines to docks or railroad stations, or from docks to coal yards, or from sewage construction-works to docks or dumping-grounds, etc. The most common form is an endless traveling wire rope, supported on posts placed at intervals along the way, or, in some instances, supported only at each end, as in the crossing of rivers or ravines, or the descent of mountain-sides. Smaller ways employ fixed wires on which travel light baskets for conveying money and packages in shops. In the traveling-wire systems the freight is placed in buckets or skips hung on the wire and traveling along with it. Arrangements are made for automatic loading, starting, stopping, unloading, and switching to branch wires. Some of the traveling-wire lines used in mines are several miles long. In short lines, as in cash-carrier systems, the traveling basket, ball, or car is sometimes moved by raising one end of the wire, when the car rolls down to the cashier's desk. See cash-carrier and telpherage. Also called wire-road, wire-tramway.

wire-weed (wīr-wēd), n. The knot-grass Polygonum aviculare. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wirework (wīr'wėrk), n. [= Icel. vira-virki, wirework, filigree-work; as wire[1] + work, n.] Fabrics made of wire, such as wire-gauze and wire cloth, or objects made of wire, such as bird-cages and sponge-racks.

Fenced off with netted wirework, in the clear, bright Rhone flood, are places for the swans and ducks.
Richardson, A Girdle Round the Earth, xxv.

wire-worker (wīr'wėr'kėr), n. 1. One who manufactures articles from wire.—2. Same as wire-puller.

wire-working (wīr'wėr'king), n. 1. The manufacture of wire, or of articles requiring wire.—2. Same as wire-pulling.

wireworks (wīr'wėrks), n. pl. and sing. An establishment where wire is made or fitted to some specific use.

wireworm (wīr'wėrm), n. 1. The slender hard-bodied larva of any one of the click-beetles or snapping-beetles of the family Elateridæ. Some of these larvæ live under the loose bark of dying trees and in old logs and stumps, while many live underground, and feed on the roots of cereals and on other crops. They remain in the larval state two or more years, and are among the worst enemies of the crops in North America and Europe. Also wireworm

Wheat wireworm
(Larva of Agriotes mancus.)

2. A myriapod of the genus Julus or of an allied genus; a galley-worm. [U. S.]—3. A parasitic worm of sheep, Strongylus contortulus.—Hop-wireworm, Agriotes lineatus. [Eng.]—Wheat-wireworm, Agriotes mancus. See cut above. [U. S.]

wire-wove (wīr'wov), a. Noting a glazed paper of fine quality, used chiefly for letter-paper.

wirily (wīr'i-li), adv. In a wiry manner; like wire.

My grandfather, albeit spare, was wirily elastic.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Queen Elizabeth Cecil, Anjou, and Fénelon.

wiriness (wīr'i-nes), n. The state or character of being wiry.

wiring (wīr'ing), n. [Verbal n. of wire, v.] 1. In surg., the holding in apposition of the ends of a fractured bone by means of wire passed through holes drilled in the bony substance: a method employed most frequently in cases of fractured patella, in which bony union is especially difficult to obtain.—2. In taxidermy, the setting or fixing of the skin on a wire framework or the insertion of a wire in any member: as, the wiring of the legs was faulty.

wiring-machine (wīr'ing-ma-shēn'), n. 1. A hand-tool for fastening the wire staples of a Venetian blind to the slats.—2. A bench and tool for securing wire fastenings to soda-water bottles. It holds the cork in position while the fastening is put in place.—3. A tinmen's tool for bending the edges of tin plate over a wire.

wiring-press (wīr'ing-pres), n. A press for wiring pieced tinware. E. H. Knight.

wiriwa, n. [African.] One of the African colies or mouse-birds, Colius senegalensis.

wirket, wirkst, v. and n. Obsolete spellings of work.

wirryt, v. t. An obsolete spelling of worry.

Wirsung's canal or duct. The pancreatic duct.

wiry (wīr'i), a. [< wire[1] + -y[1].] 1. Made of wire; in the form of wire.

Come down, come down, my bonny bird, . . .
Your cage shall be of wiry gold,
Whar now it's but the wand.
Lord William (Child's Ballads, III. 20).

For caught, and cag'd, and starv'd to death,
In dying sighs my little breath
Soon pass'd the wiry grate.
Cowper, On a Goldfinch Starved to Death in His Cage.

2. Resembling wire; especially, tough and flexible; of persons, lean and sinewy.

Here on its wiry stem, in rigid bloom,
Grows the salt lavender that lacks perfume.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 216.

A little wiry sergeant of mock demeanour and strong sense. Dickens, Detective Police.

She was wiry, and strong, and nimble.
Trollope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxxvii.

She had a light, trim, wiry figure, especially adapted to those feats of skill which depend on balance.
Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. viii.

Wiry pulse. See pulse[1].

wis[1]†, a. [< ME. wis, certain, sure, for certain, to wisse, certainly, mid wisse, with certainty; = Icel. viss, certain, = Sw. viss, certain (visst, certainly), = Dan. vis, certain (vist, certainly); in AS. D. and G. the word appears with a prefix, AS. gewis = D. gewis = G. gewiss, certain, certainly: see wis[2], wis[3], iwis.] Certain; sure; especially in the phrases to wisse, for certain, certainly; mid wisse, with certainty.

That wite thu to wisse.
Legend of St. Catherine (ed. Morton), l. 1543.

wis[2]†, adv. [Early mod. E. (dial.) wusse; < ME. wis, by aphæresis from iwis: see iwis.] Certainly; truly; indeed: same as iwis.

"No, wis," quod he, "myn owen nece dere."
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 474.

Knowell. Why, I hope you will not a-hawking now, will you?
Stephen. No, wusse, but I'll practise against next year, uncle.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

wis[3]†, v. A spurious word, arising from a misunderstanding of the Middle English adverb iwis, often written i-wis, and in Middle English manuscripts i wis, I wis, whence it has been taken as the pronoun I with a verb wis, vaguely regarded as connected with wit (which has a preterit wist). See iwis, and, for the real verb, see wit[1].

Which book, advisedly read, and diligently followed but one year at home in England, would do a young gentleman more good, I wise, than three years' travell abroad.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 65.

Where my morning haunts are he wisses not.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

wisardt, n. and a. An obsolete spelling of wizard.

wisdom (wiz'dum), n. [< ME. wisdom, wysdom, wisedom, < AS. wisdom, wisdom (= OS. wisdom = OFries. wisdom = MD. wijsdom = OHG. MHG. wistuom, wisdom, knowledge, judgment, G. weisthum, knowledge, = Icel. visdomr = Sw. Dan. visdom, wisdom), < wis, wise, + dom, condition: see wise[1] and -dom.] 1. The property of being wise; the power or faculty of forming the fittest and truest judgment in any matter presented for consideration; a combination of discernment, discretion, and sagacity, or similar qualities and faculties, involving also a certain amount of knowledge, especially the knowledge of men and things gained by experience. It is often used in a sense nearly synonymous with discretion, or with prudence, but both of these are strictly only particular phases of wisdom. Frequently wisdom implies little more than sound and sober common sense: hence it is often opposed to folly.

Than seide thei, he comen nesent, thei wolde counseille with Merlyn that hadde grete wisedom.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 95.

The beste wysdom that I can ys to doe well & drede no man.
Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S.), extra ser., i. 68.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power.
Hooker.

If you go on thus, you will kill yourself,
And 'tis not wisdom thus to second grief Against yourself.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 1. 2.

When I arraigned the wisdom of Providence, I only showed my own ignorance.
Goldsmith, Asem.

If old age is even a state of suffering it is a state of superior wisdom, in which man avoids all the rash and foolish things he does in his youth.
Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, vi.

2. Human learning; knowledge of arts and sciences; erudition.

Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians.
Acts vii. 22.

The Doctors laden with so many badges or cognisances of wisdom . . .
Foxe (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 166).

3. With possessive pronouns used as a personification like "your highness," etc.).

Viola. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.
Clown. . . . I think I saw your wisdom there.
Shak., T. N., iii. 1. 47.

Ho, my good fools, my honest pious coxcombs,
My wary fools too! have I caught your wisdoms!
Fletcher, Wife for a Month, iv. 1.

4. A wise saying or act; a wise thing.

They which do eate or drinke, hauyng those wisdomes euer in sighte, . . . may auoyde some disputation or reasonynge wherby some part of tyme shall be saued whiche els . . . wolde be idely consumed.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 3.

One of her many wisdoms.
Mrs. H. Jackson, Ramona, i.

5. Skill; skilfulness.

And I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge and in all manner of workmanship.
Ex. xxxi. 3.

In Scripture the word is sometimes specifically used, especially in Paul's Epistles, in an opprobrious sense to designate the theosophical speculations (1 Cor. i. 19, 20) or the ritual arts (1 Cor. ii. 5) current among the Greeks and Romans in the first century, sometimes in a good sense to designate spiritual perception of, accompanied with obedience to, the divine law (Prov. iii. 13; Acts vi. 3). Sometimes (as in Prov. viii.) it has personal attributes assigned to it.]

Book of Wisdom of Jesus. See Ecclesiasticus. Book of Wisdom of Solomon, one of the deuterocanonical books of the Old Testament. See deuterocanonical and Apocrypha. Tradition ascribes its authorship to Solomon; but by most modern Protestant theologians it is attributed to an Alexandrian Jew of the first or second century B. C. The shorter title Wisdom, or Book of Wisdom, is commonly applied to this book but not to Ecclesiasticus. Abbreviated Wisd. Salt of wisdom. Same as sal nicotiach (with h sec under sal). Syn. 1. Knowledge, Prudence, Wisdom, Discretion, Providence, Foresight, Precaution. Knowledge has several steps, as the perception of facts, the accumulation of facts, and familiarity by experience, but it does not include action, nor the power of judging what is best in ends to be pursued or in means for attaining those ends. Prudence is sometimes the power of judging what are the best means for attaining desired ends: it may be a word or action, or it may be simply the power to avoid danger. It implies deliberation and care, whether in acting or refraining from action. Wisdom chooses not only the best means but also the best ends, it is thus far higher than prudence, which may by choosing wrong ends go altogether astray; hence also it is often used in the Bible for piety. As compared with knowledge, it sees more deeply into the heart of things and more broadly and comprehensively sums up relations, draws conclusions, and acts upon them; hence a man may abound in knowledge and be very deficient in wisdom, or he may have a practical wisdom with a comparatively small stock of knowledge. Discretion is the power to judge critically what is correct and proper, sometimes without suggesting action, but more often in view of action proposed or possible. Like prudence the word implies great caution, and takes for granted that a man will not act contrary to what he knows. Providence looks much further ahead than prudence or discretion, and plans and acts according to what it sees. It may be remarked that providence, which is from the same root as providence and prudence, is primarily a word of action while they are only secondarily so. Forecast is a grave word for looking carefully forward to the consequences of present situations and decisions, it implies, like all these words except knowledge, that one will act according to what he can make out of the future. See cautious, astute, and genius.

I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.
Prov. viii. 12.

Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one,
Have oftimes no connexion. Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men;
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge, a rude, unprofitable mass,
The mere materials with which Wisdom builds,
Till smooth'd, and squar'd, and fitted to its place,
Does but encumber whom it seems t' enrich.
Knowledge is proud that he has learn'd so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.
Cowper, Task, vi. 88.

Men of gud discretyowne
Suld excuse and lous Huchowne,
That cummand wes in litteratur.
Wyntown, quoted in Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xxv.

This was your prowdence.
Your wisdom, to elect this gentleman,
Your excellent forecast in the man, your knowledge!
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

wisdom-tooth (wiz'dum-tōth), n. The last molar tooth on either side of each jaw. It appears ordinarily between the ages of 20 and 25, presumably years of discretion (whence the name). Also technically called dens sapientiæ. Also wit tooth.

It seems to me in these days they're all born with their wisdom-teeth cut and their whiskers growed.
Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. xxvi.

wise[1] (wīz), a. [< ME. wis, wys, < AS. wis = OS. OFries. wis = D. wijs = MLG. wis, LG. wis = OHG. wis, wīs, MHG. wīs, wīse, G. weise = Icel. vīss = Sw. Dan. vis = Goth. weis (in comp. unweis, unwise), wise; prob. orig. witsa*, witta*, with pp. formative, from the root of AS. witan, etc., E. wit[1], know: see wit[1].] 1. Having the power of discerning and judging rightly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false, between that which is right, fit, and proper and that which is unsuitable, injudicious, and wrong; possessed of discernment, discretion, and judgment: as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate.

Five of them were wise, and five were foolish.
Mat. xxv. 2.

We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers Deny us for our good.
Shak., A. and C., iv. 1. 6.

A wise man
Accepts all fair occasions of advancement,
Flies no commodity for fear of danger,
Ventures and gains, lives easily, drinks good wine,
Farms neatly, is richly cloath'd, in worthiest company.
T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, ii. 2.

I am foolish old Mayberry, and yet I can be wise Mayberry, too.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 1.

You read of but one wise Man, and all that he knew was, that he knew nothing.
Congreve, Old Bachelor, i. 1.

2. Proper to a wise man; sage; grave; serious.

One rising eminent,
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong.
Milton, P. L., xi. 666.

3. Having knowledge; knowing; intelligent; enlightened; learned, erudite.

Bede ther were fewe men so wyse that couthe the wel ihider.
Pole bustelyng forth, as he stere oure valeyes and hulles,
For while thei weute here owen wille Owl wente alle amys.
Piers Plowman (A), vi. 4.

Thou shalbe wisest of wit this wete thou for sothe,—
And knowe all the convoy that kyndly is for men.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2411.

Where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.
Gray, On a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

4. Practically or experimentally knowing; experienced; versed or skilled; dexterous; cunning; subtle; specifically, skilled in some hidden art, as magic or divination: as, the soothsayers and the wise men.

I pray you tell where the wise man the conjuror dwells.
Peele, Old Wives' Tale.

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. Jer. iv. 22.

In these nice sharp quillets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 18.

5. Religious; pious; godly.

From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation.
2 Tim. iii. 15.

6. Dictated, directed, or guided by wisdom; containing wisdom; judicious: as, a wise saying; a wise scheme or plan; wise conduct or direction; a wise determination.

The justice . . .
Full of wise saws and modern instances
Shak., As you Like It, ii 7. 156.

May, . . . spite of praise and scorn, . . .
Attain the wise indifference of the wise Tennyson, Dedication.

Never the wiser, without information or advice; still in utter ignorance.

The Pretender, or Duke of Cambridge, may both be landed, and I never the wiser.
Swift, To Miss Vanhomrigh, June 8, 1714.

The seven wise men of Greece, the seven sages. See sage[1], n. - To make it wise†, to make it a matter of deliberation.

Us thoughte it was noght worth to make it wys.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 785.

Wise woman. (a) A woman skilled in hidden arts, a witch, a fortune-teller.

They call her a wise-woman, but I think her
An arrant witch. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2.

Supposing, according to popular fame,
Wise woman and Witch to be the same
Hood, Tale of a Trumpet

(b) A midwife. Scott. = Syn. 1. Sagacious, discerning, oracular, long-headed. See wisdom. - 6. Sound, solid, philosophical.

wise[2] (wīz), n. [< ME. wise, wyse, < AS. wise = OS. wisa = OFries. wis = D. wijs = LG. wise = OHG. wisa, MHG. wise, G. weise = Icel. vis* (in comp. óhverrs, otherwise) = Sw. Dan. vis, way, manner, wise; from the same source as wise[1]; see wise[1], and cf. -wise. Doublet of guise.] Way; manner; mode; guise; style: now seldom used as an independent word, except in such phrases as in any wise, in no wise, on this wise.

This Troilus, in wyse of curteysie,
With hauk on hond and with an huge route
Of knyghtes, rood and dide hire compaynye
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 64.

Ther-vpon a while I stood musyng, and in my self gretly ymagynyng
What wise I sholde parfourme this said processe.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 52.

Whan Dodynell herde these tithinges, he solde to hymself that he wolde do the same wise, and tolde to his prevy counselle that he wolde go to court.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 251.

So turde they still about, and change in restlesse wise.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 18.

I considered myself as in some wise of ecclesiastical dignity Swift, Mem. of P. P.

In any wise, in any way, by any means.

"Now, for my loue, helpe that I may hir see In eny wise," quod Auferius the kyng.
"For I canne think right wele that it is she."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1241.

In no wise, in no way, on no account, by no means.

Merlin hem comaunded that, as soone as thei were arived at the porte, in no wise that thei tarye not but two dayes Merlin (E. E. T. S.) iii. 420.

Ower patrone of the shippe had sent to hym letters at Candy that he should toche at the rodes in no wyse.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 22.

He is promised to be wived
To fair Marina, but in no wise
Till he had done his sacrifice
Shak., Pericles, v. 2. 11.

A simple, ill-bred zealot, exceedingly vain, but in no wise coveting riches or gain of any sort Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 205.

On this wise, in this way or manner.

Than was it schorter than the asnise,
Thrise wroght that with it on this wise;
Accorde to that werk wald it noght.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 80.

On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel.
Num. vi. 23.

To make wise†, to make pretense; pretend; feign; sham.

Or as others do to make wise they be poore when they be riche, to shunne thereby the publicke charges.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 252.

wise[3] (wīz), v. t. [< ME. wisen, wysen, < AS. wīsian = OS. wīsean = D. wijzen = OHG. wīsan MHG. wīsen, G. weisen = Icel. vísa = Sw. visa = Dan. vise, show, point out, exhibit; orig. 'make wise or knowing,' 'inform,' from the adj., AS. wīs, etc., wise: see wise[1]. Cf. wiss.] 1. To guide; direct; lead or send in a particular direction.

Ye ken weel enough there's mony o' them wadna mind a baubee the wising a ball through the Prince himself.
Scott, Waverley, lviii.

2. To turn; incline; twist.

Weize yourself a wee easel-ward — a wee mair yet to that ither stane. Scott, Antiquary, vii.

[Now Scotch in both uses.]

-wise. An apparent suffix, really the noun wise[2] used in adverbial phrases originally with a preposition, as in anywise, nowise, likewise, otherwise, etc., originally in any wise, in no wise, in like wise, in other wise, etc.; so sidewise, lengthwise, etc., in which, in colloquial use, -ways also appears, by confusion with way[1].

wiseacre (wī'zā-kėr), n. [= MD. wijssegger, < (i. wenssagor, soothsayer, < wenssagen, MHG. wissagen, OHG. wīzagon, wizzagōn, foretell, predict, < wizago, wizzago, a prophet, diviner (AS. witega, witga, prophet): see witch. The MHG. verb and noun became confused with wīs, wise, and sagen, say, and the E. noun is likewise vaguely associated with wise[1].] 1†. A sayer of wise things; a learned or wise man.

Pythagoras learned much, . . . becoming a mighty wiseacre. Leland.

2. One who makes pretensions to great wisdom; hence, in contempt or irony, a would-be wise person; a serious simpleton or dunce.

There were at that time on the bench of justices many Sir Paul Eitherside, hard, unfeeling, superstitious wiseacres. Gifford, note to B. Jonson's Devil is an Ass, v. 5.

wise-hearted (wīz'här"ted), a. Wise; knowing; skilful. Ex. xxviii. 3.

wise-like (wīz'lik), a. Resembling that which is wise or sensible; judicious; sensible. [Scotch.]

The only wise-like thing I heard anybody say. Scott.

wiseling† (wīz'ling), n. [< wise[1] + -ling[1].] One who pretends to be wise; a wiseacre.

This may well put to the blush those wiselings that show themselves fools in so speaking Donne, Hist. Septuagint, p. 214.

wisely (wīz'li), adv. [< ME. wislīche, wislike, wisely, < AS. wislīce, wisely; as wise[1] + -ly[2].] In a wise manner; with wisdom, cunning, or skill; judiciously; prudently; discreetly. Prov. xvi. 20.

The heorte is wel loked 3if muth and eien and earen wislīche beoth ilokene. Ancren Riwle, p. 104.

Let us deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, . . . and fight against us Ex. i. 10.

Then must you speak
Of one that loved not wisely but too well.
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 344.

wisen†, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of wizen[1].

wiseness (wīz'nes), n. [< ME. wisnesse, < AS. wīsnes; as wise[1] + -ness.] Wisdom.

Yet have I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wiseness fear.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 286.

wiserine (wīz'ėr-in), n. [Named after D. F. Wiser (born 1802), a Swiss mineralogist.] A rare mineral found in Switzerland in minute yellow octahedral crystals. It was long referred to xenotime, but has since been shown to be a variety of octahedrite (anatase).

wish (wish), n. [< ME. wisch, wysshe, a var., after the verb, of wusch, < AS. wūse = MD. wunsch, wensch, D. wensch = OHG. wunsc, MHG. G. wunsch = Icel. ósk (cf. Sw. önskan = Dan. ønske), wish, desire; see the verb, and cf. Skt. √ vāñchh, wish; perhaps a desiderative form (with formative -sk, as in E. ask), from the root of E. win, etc., strive after: see win[1].] 1. Desire; sometimes, eager desire or longing.

Behold, I am according to thy wish in God's stead.
Job xxxiii. 6.

Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 98.

The whole essence of true gentle-breeding (one does not like to say gentility) lies in the wish and the art to be agreeable. O. W. Holmes, Professor, vi.

2. An expression of desire; a request; a petition; sometimes, an expression of either a benevolent or a malevolent disposition toward others.

I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased
To wish it back on you. Shak., M. of V., iii. 4. 43.

Delay no longer, speak your wish,
Seeing I must go to-day.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. The thing desired; the object of desire.

That faire Lady schal zeven him, whan he hathe don, the first Wysesche that he wil wysesche of erthely thinges.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 145.

You have your wish; my will is even this.
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 93.

* And yet this Libertine is crown'd for the Man of Merit, has his Wishes thrown into his Lap, and makes the Happy Exit. Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 161.

wish (wish), v. [< ME. wisshen, wysshen, wischen, wuschen, < AS. wȳscan, less correctly wīscan = MD. wunschen, wenschen, D. wenschen = MLG. wunschen = OHG. wunsken, MHG. G. wünschen, wish, desire, = Icel. æskja (for æskja) = Sw. önska = Dan. ønske, wish; all orig. from the noun, though the mod. E. word has the vowel of the verb: see wish, n.] I. intrans. To have a wish or desire; cherish some desire, either for what is or for what is not supposed to be obtainable; long: often with for before an object.

They cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day. Acts xxvii. 29.

But if yourself . . .
Did ever . . .
Wish chastely and love dearly.
Shak., All's Well, i. 3. 218.

This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbuthnot, Ancient Coins, p. 2.

Those potentates who do not wish well to his affairs have shewn respect to his personal character. Addison.

II. trans. 1. To desire; crave; covet; want; long for: as, what do you wish? my master wishes to speak with you.

I goe with gladnesse to my wished rest.
Spenser, Daphnaida, l. 282.

The dredfull beast, ycleped crocodile, . . .
Before he doth devoure his wished prey,
Pitty in outward semblance doth display.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 22.

I would not wish them to a fairer death.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 8. 49.

They may be Patrons, but there are but few Examples of Erudition among them. 'Tis to be wisht that they exceeded others in Merit, as they do in Birth.
Luter, Journey to Paris, p. 15.

The Spartan wish'd the second place to gain,
And great Ulysses wish'd, nor wish'd in vain.
Pope, Iliad, x. 274.

Mortals whose pleasures are their only care
First wish to be impos'd on, and then are.
Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 290.

Here's news from Paternoster Row:
How mad I was when first I learnt it!
They would not take my Book, and now
I wish to goodness I had burnt it.
F. Locker, Old Letters.

2. To desire (something) to be: with objective predicate.

For the wynde was thanne better in our waye thanne it was at any tyme syns we come fromе Jaffe, and was so good that we coude not wysshe it better
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 76.

I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck. Shak., Hen. V., iv. 1. 120.

Is it well to wish thee happy? Tennyson, Lockaley Hall.

3. To desire in behalf of some one or something (expressed by dative); invoke, or call down (upon): as, to wish one joy or luck.

Let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil. Ps. xl. 14.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3. 218.

All joys and hopes forsake me! all men's malice,
And all the plagues they can inflict, I wish it,
Fall thick upon me!
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iii. 2.

4†. To recommend; commend to another's confidence, approval, kindness, or care.

If I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 113.

Sir, I have a kinsman I could willingly wish to your service, if you will deign to accept of him.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

To wish one further. See further.

wishable (wish'a-bl), a. [< wish + -able.] Worthy or capable of being wished for; desirable. [Rare.]

The glad wishable tidinges of salvacion.
J. Udall, On Luke iv.

wishbone (wish'bōn), n. The furcula, or merrythought of a fowl. Also wishing-bone.

wishedly† (wish'ed-li), adv. [< wished, pp. of wish, + -ly[2].] According to one's wish. Knolles.

wisher (wish'ėr), n. [< wish + -er[1].] One who wishes.

Wishers were ever fools. Shak., A. and C., iv. 15. 37.

wishful (wish'fūl), a. [< wish + -ful. Cf. wistful.] 1. Having or expressing a wish; desirous; longing; covetous; wistful.

From Scotland am I stol'n even of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 14.

On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land,
Where my possessions lie.
S. Stennett, The Promised Land (Lyra Britannica) (ed. 1867), p. 287.

2. Desirable; inviting. [Poetical.]

Many a shady hill,
And many an echoing valley, many a field
Pleasant and wishful, did his passage yield
Their safe transcension.
Chapman, tr. of Homer's Hymn to Hermes, l. 185.

Having so wishful an Opportunity, . . . I could not but send you this Friendly Salute. Howell, Letters, I. vi. 4.

wishfully (wish'fûl-i), adv. 1. With desire; longingly; wistfully.

And all did wishfully expect the silver-throned morn.
Chapman, Iliad, viii. 497.

He looked up wishfully in my uncle Toby's face, then cast a look upon his boy — and that ligament, fine as it was, was never broken. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vi. 10.

2. Desirably; according to one's wishes.

Phar. I doubt now
We shall not gain access unto your love,
Or she to us.
Fid. Most wishfully here she comes.
Middleton, Phœnix, iii. 1.

wishfulness (wish'fûl-nes), n. The state of being wishful; longing.

The natural infirmities of youth,
Sadness and softness, hopefulness, wishfulness.
Sir H. Taylor, Isaac Comnenus, iii. 1.

wishing-bone (wish'ing-bōn), n. Same as wish-bone.

wishing-cap (wish'ing-kap), n. A cap by wearing which one obtains whatever one wishes.

wishing-rod (wish'ing-rod), n. A rod the wielding of which obtains one's wishes, or confers unlimited power.

wishlyt (wish'li), adv. [< wish + -ly[2]. Cf. wistly.] Wistly. [Rare.]

Æacides . . . wishly did intend (Standing asterne his tall neckt ship) how deepe the skirmish drew. Chapman, Iliad, xi.

Devereux, that undaunted knight,
Who stood astern his ship, and wishly eyed
How deep the skirmish drew on either side.
Mir. for Mags., p. 863.

wishness (wish'nes), n. Melancholy yearning. [Rare.]

Sighing (I heard the love-lorn swain)
Wishness! oh, wishness walketh here.
Polychele, Wishful Swain of Devon.

wishtonwish (wish'ton-wish), n. [Said to be Amer. Ind., and imitative.] The prairie-dog of North America, Cynomys ludovicianus. See cut under prairie-dog, and compare second cut under owl.

The Wishtonwish of the Indians, prairie dogs of some travellers, . . . reside on the prairies of Louisiana in towns or villages, having an evident police established in their communities. . . . As you approach their towns, you are saluted on all sides by the cry of Wishtonwish, from which they derive their name with the Indians, uttered in a shrill and piercing manner.
Z. M. Pike, Voyage to Sources of the Arkansaw, etc. (1810), p. 156.

(Misunderstood by Cooper as a name for the whippoorwill, it was so used by him in his novel "The Wept of Wish-ton-Wish," and elsewhere.

"He speaks of the wish-ton-wish," said the scout. "Well, since you like his whistle, it shall be your signal. Remember, then, when you hear the whip-poor will's call three times repeated, you are to come into the bushes."
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxii.]

wish-wash (wish'wosh), n. [A varied redupl. of wash.] Anything wishy-washy; especially, a thin, sloppy drink. [Colloq.]

wishy-washy (wish'i-wosh'i), a. and n. [A varied redupl. of washy. Cf. wish-wash.] I. a. Very thin and weak; diluted; sloppy: originally used to note liquid substances; hence, feeble; lacking in substantial or desirable qualities; insignificant: as, a wishy-washy speech. [Colloq.]

A good seaman, . . . none of your Guinea-pigs, nor your fresh-water, wishy-washy, fair-weather fowls.
Smollett. (Imp. Dict.)

The wishy-washy, bread-and-butter period of life.
Trollope, Barchester Towers, xii.

II. n. Any sort of thin, weak liquor. [Colloq.]

wisket (wis'ket), n. Same as whisket.

wislichet, wislokert, adv. Middle English forms of wisely, wiselier (more wisely).

wislyt, adv. [ME., also wysly, wislike; < AS. gewislice, gewislice, < gewis, certain: see wis[2], wise.] Certainly; surely.

I not myself noght wysly what it is.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1653.

wisp (wisp), n. [< ME. wisp, wysp, wesp, wispe, also wips, an older form (the s being prob. formative); not found in AS.; cf. LG. wisp, a wisp; cf. Norw. vipla, something that skips about, a wisp to sprinkle or daub with, a swape, or machine for raising water, etc., = Sw. dial. vipp, an ear of rye, a little sheaf or bundle; cf. Goth. waips, also wipja, a crown. Wisp has nothing to do with whisk[1]: see whisk[1].] 1. A handful or small bundle, as of straw or hay; a twisted handful.

A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns
To make this shameless callet know herself.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 2. 144.

When indeed his admired mouth better deserved the help of Doctor Executioner, that he might wipe it with a hempen wisp. Tom Nash his Ghost, p. 8

Of this commission the bage-armed Bob, leading the way with a flaming wisp of paper, . . . speedily acquitted himself. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, i. 13.

2. A whisk, or small broom. — 3. An ignis fatuus, or will-o'-the-wisp.

Or like a wisp along the marsh so damp,
Which leads beholders on a boggy walk,
He flitted to and fro a dancing light,
Which all who saw it follow'd wrong or right.
Byron, Don Juan, viii. 46.

We did not know the real light, but chased
The wisp that flickers where no foot can tread.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

4. A disease in cattle, consisting in inflammation and suppuration of the interdigital tissues, most commonly of the hind feet. It may be due to the irritation of dirt, to overgrowth of the hoof, or other causes. Also called foul in the foot. Also whisp.

To cure a Bullock that hath the Wisp (that is lame between the Clees). Aubrey, Misc., p. 139.

5. In falconry, a flight or walk of snipe. — Syn. 5. Covey, etc. See flock[1].

wisp (wisp), v. t. [< wisp, n.] 1. To brush, dress, or rub down with or as with a wisp. — 2. To rumple. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wispen† (wis'pn), a. [< wisp + -en[2].] Formed of a wisp or wisps.

She hath already put on her wispen garland.
G. Harvey, Pierce's Supererogation (Brydge's Archaica, [II. 149).

wispy (wis'pi), a. [< wisp + -y[1].] Like a wisp.

A pinched, wispy little man.
D. C. Murray, Weaker Vessel, xi.

wisst, v. t. [ME. wissen, < AS. wissian, a var. of wisian, show: see wise[3].] Same as wise[3].

Gyffe I wirke wronge, whom should me wyss be any wayes?
York Plays, p. 32

Thow condest nevere in love thiselven wysse,
How devel maystow bi*n*gge me to blysse?
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 632.

Knowest thou ouht a corseynt men calleth seynt Treuthe?
Const thou wissen vs the wey wher that he dwelleth?
Piers Plowman (A), vi. 24.

wissent, v. t. See wiss.

Wissondayt, n. A Middle English variant of Whitsunday.

wist[1]. Preterit of wit[1].

wist[2] (wist), v. A spurious word, improperly used as present indicative (wists) of wit[1]. [Rare.]

But though he wists not of this, he is moved like the great German poet. Buckle, Essays (Progress of Knowledge), p. 196.

Wistaria (wis-tā'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Nuttall, 1818), named in honor of Caspar Wistar, an American anatomist (1761–1818).] 1. A genus of leguminous plants, of the tribe Galegeæ and subtribe Tephrosieæ. It is characterized by having papilionaceous flowers in terminal racemes, with a smooth style and stamens usually completely diadelphous, and by a coriaceous readily dehiscent legume, the last character separating it from the large tropical Old World genus Millettia. There are 2 or 3 species, natives of North America, China, and Japan. They are lofty climbing shrubs with odd pinnate leaves, entire feather-veined and reticulated leaflets, and small stipules. The handsome purplish flowers form terminal pendent racemes. They are much cultivated in America, commonly under the generic name (sometimes erroneously Wisteria); in England they are often known as kidney-bean tree, in Austria as grape-flower vine. W. Chinensis, the Chinese, and W. frutescens, the American wistaria, are much used in the United States to cover verandas and walls. The latter is a native of swamp margins from Virginia to Illinois and southward, and develops its flowers at the same time with the leaves, instead of before them, as in W. Chinensis. W. Japonica, by some thought not a distinct species, is commonly trained in Japan horizontally on trellises over pleasure-seats as an ornamental shade, it sometimes lives more than a century.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

wistful (wist'fûl), a. [Prob. for whistful*, based on the older adverb wistly, which is prob. for whistly. The assumption that wistful stands for wishful is untenable; for the required change wishful > wistful* > wistful could not occur in the mod. E. period, particularly with wishful itself remaining in use; but the sense 'longing' appears to have arisen in part from association with wishful. It is to be noted that wistful in the earliest instance quoted (Browne) does not mean, as some dictionaries give it, merely 'observant' or 'attentive,' and that its later uses are more or less indefinite, indicating that it was orig. a poetical word, based on some other, which other is prob. wistly for whistly as here assumed.] 1. Silent; hushed; standing in mute attention.

In sullen mutt'rings child
The artlesse songsters, that their musicke still Should charme the sweet dale and the wistfull hill.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 2.

This commanding creature . . . put on such a resignation in her countenance, and bore the whispers of all around the court with such a pretty uneasiness, . . . until she was perfectly confused by meeting something so wistful in all she encountered. Steele, Spectator, No. 113.

2. Full of thoughts; contemplative; musing; pensive.

Why, drubbing, dost thou so wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday.

3. Wishful; longing.

Lifting up one of my sashes, I [I cast many a wistful, melancholy look towards the sea.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 8.

No poet has expressed more vividly than Shelley the wistful eagerness of the human spirit to interpret the riddle of the universe. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 75.

wistfully (wist'fûl-i), adv. In a wistful manner; pensively; earnestly; longingly; wishfully.

With that, he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 456.

The captive's miserable solace of gazing wistfully upon the world from which he is excluded.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 112.

Doubtless there is nothing sinful in gazing wistfully at the marvellous providences of God's moral governance, and wishing to understand them
J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 206.

wistfulness (wist'fûl-nes), n. The state or property of being wistful.

wistless (wist'les), a. [Irreg. < wist, known: see wit[1]. Cf. wistful and -less.] Not knowing; ignorant (of); unwitting (of). [Rare.]

Wistless what I did, half from the sheath Drew its glittering blade Southey, Joan of Arc, i.

wistly† (wist'li), adv. [Prob. for whistly, i. e. 'silently,' which sense suits the earliest quotations (cf. "And her eyes on all my motions with a mute observance hung," Tennyson, Locksley Hall); the change of hw to w is very common in England, and may well have been assisted in this instance by association with wist, pret. of wit, and with wish; but to derive wistly from either wist or wish (as if for wishedly) is contrary to sound theory and to the actual use of the word. Wishly in the "Mir. for Mags.," given as the "same as wistly," may be truly wishly, < wish + -ly[2]. The same considerations apply to wistful, which appears to stand for whistful*.] 1. Silently; with mute attention; earnestly.

Robyn beholde our comly kynge
Wystly in the face
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 115).

Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
As who should say, "I would thou were the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart."
Shak., Rich. II., v. 4. 7.

For I'll go turn my tub against the sun,
And wistly mark how higher planets run,
Contemplating their hidden motion.
Marston, Satires, v. 171.

wistonwish (wis'ton-wish), n. Same as wishtonwish. Godman; Coues and Allen.

wit[1] (wit), v. Pres. ind. 1st pers. wot, 2d pers. wost (erroneously wottest, wotst), 3d pers. wot (erroneously wotteth), pl. wit, pret. wist, pp. wist (or witen). [A preterit-present verb whose forms have been much confused and misused in mod. E., in which, except in the set phrase to wit, it is now used only archaically; early mod. E. also weet, wete, < ME. weten, witen (pres. 1st pers. wot, wat, 2d pers. wost, wast, 3d pers. wot, woot, wat (also 1st pers. wite, 2d pers. witest, 3d pers. witeth, writes, write, contr. wet), pl. witeth, weteth (subj. wite, witen), pret. wist, wiste, wuste, sometimes by assimilation wisse, ppr. witand, wittand), < AS. witan (pres. ind. 1st pers. wāt, 2d pers. wāst, 3d pers. wāt, pl. witon — an old pret. used as present; pret. wiste, pl. wiston), = OS. witan (pres. ind. wet) = OFries. wita, weta (pres. wet) = D. weten (pres. weet, pret. wist, pp. geweten) = LG. weten = OHG. wizzan, MHG. wizzen, G. wissen, know (pres. 1 weiss, 2 weisst, 3 weiss, pl. wissen, pret. wusste, pp. gewusst), = Icel. vita (pres. veit, pret. vissa, pp. vitaðr) = Sw. veta (pres. vet, pret. visste, pp. vetat) = Dan. vide (pres. veed, pret. vidste, pp. vidst) = Goth. witan (pres. wait, pret. wissa, pp. not found), know: the inf. witan, with short vowel, and sense 'know,' being a later form and sense, developed from the pret. and subj. of witan, pret. wāt*, see, the present wāt, know, being orig. this pret. wāt*, saw, 'I have seen'

(see wite[1]); Teut. √ wit, see, = OBulg. viděti = Serv. vidjeti = Bohem. widěti = Russ. videtĭ, see, = L. vidēre, see, = Gr. ἰδεῖν, see (perf. οἶδα, I know, = E. wot), = Skt. √ vid, see, perceive. From the verb wit[1] are ult. E. wit[1], n., wit[2], wise[1], wise[2] (guise, disguise), wise[3], wiss, wisdom, etc., witch, wick[2], wicked, wiseacre, iwis, wis[1], wis[2], witness, witter, witterly, wizard, etc. (see also wite[1], wite[2]); from the L. vidēre are ult. E. visage, vision, visit, visual, etc. (see under vision); from the Gr., idea, idol, idolon, eidolon, etc., and the element -oid- in kaleidoscope, -oid in the termination -oid, etc.] To know; be or become aware: used with or without an object, the object when present often being a clause or statement. (a) Present tense: I wot (wote), thou wost (erroneously wotest, wotst) he wot (erroneously watteth); plural we, ye (you), they wot. [Archaic.]

> But natheles, yit wot I wel also
> That ther nis noon dwelling in this contree,
> That either hath in heven or helle ybe,
> Ne may of it non other weyes witen,
> But as he hath herd seyd or founde it written.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 7.

> Thei seyn to hir Womman, what wepist thou? She seith to hem, For thei han takun away my lord, and I woot not where thei have putt him. Wyclif, John xx. 13.

> Dead long ygoe, I wote, thou haddest bin.
> Spenser, F. Q., I. ii. 18.

> Wottest thou what I say, man?
> The World and the Child (O. E. Plays, I. 261).

> But he refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house.
> Gen. xxxix. 8.

> I wot well where he is. Shak., R. and J., iii. 2. 139.

> Nay, nay, God wot, so thou wert nobly born,
> Thou hast a pleasant presence.
> Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

(b) Preterit tense: I, etc., wist (erroneously wotted). [Archaic.]

> Whanne she hadde seid thes thingis, she was turnyd a bak, and sy3 Jhesu stondinge, and wiste not for it was Jhesu. Wyclif, John xx. 14.

> I whych wisted best
> His wretched dryftes.
> Sackville, Complaint of Henry, Duke of Buckingham.

> He stood still, and wotted not what to do.
> Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

(c) Infinitive: wit (to wit), hence, to do to wit, to cause (one) to know.

> For thoughe thou see me hiddouse and horrible to loken onne, I do the to wyte me that it is made be Enchauntement. Mandeville, Travels, p. 27.

> And first it is to wyt that the Holy Londe, which was delyuered to the .xii. tribes of Israell, in parte it was called ye kyngdome of Jude.
> Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 47.

> What wit haue we (poore fooles) to wit what wil serue vs?
> Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 14.

> And his sister stood afar off to wit what would be done to him. Ex. ii. 4.

> Moreouer, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia.
> 2 Cor. viii. 1.

> Now please you wit
> The epitaph is for Marina writ.
> Shak., Pericles, iv. 4. 31.

(The phrase to wit is now used chiefly to call attention to some particular, or as introductory to a detailed statement of what has been just before mentioned generally, and is equivalent to 'namely,' 'that is to say' as there were three present to wit, Mr. Brown, Mr. Green, and Mr. Black.

> Ius Ciuile was the order and manner in old daves to forme their plees in lawe, that is to witt to cite, answwere, accuse, proue, denie, alledge, relate, to giue sentence, and to execute. Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 16.

> That which Moses saith, God built a woman, The Talmud interpreteth, He made curles, and he brought her to Adam, to wit with leaping and dancing.
> Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 213.)

(d) Present participle: witting, sometimes weeting (erroneously wotting). Compare unwitting.

> Yet are these feet . . .
> Swift winged with desire to get a grave,
> As witting I no other comfort have.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 16.

(e) Past participle: wist. [Obsolete or archaic.]

> For harmes myghten folwen no than two
> If it were wist. Chaucer, Troilus, i. 615.

> The grey border-stone that is wist
> To dilate and assume a wild shape in the mist.
> Mrs. Browning, Lay of the Brown Rosary.

wit[1] (wit), n. [< ME. wit, wyt (pl. wittes), < AS. wit, knowledge, = OS. wit* in comp. for-wit, curiosity, = OFries. wit = MLG. wit, wet = OHG. wizzi, MHG. witze, G. witz, knowledge, understanding, wisdom, = Icel. vit = Sw. vett = Dan. vid, wit, knowledge; cf. Goth. un-weits, without understanding, foolish, un-weis, ignorance, foolishness; from the verb.] 1. Knowledge; wisdom; intelligence; sagacity; judgment; sense.

> "It is but a Dido," quod this doctour, "a dysoures tale. Al the witt of this worlde and wigte mennes strengthe Can nought confourmen a poes bytwene the pope and his enemys." Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 172.

> Many things here among us have been found by chance, which no wit could ever have devised.
> Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

> Had I but had the wit yestreen
> That I hae coft the day
> I'd paid my kane seven times to hell
> Ere you'd been won away!
> The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, I. 128).

> I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave.
> Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 1. 262.

> If a man is honest, it detracts nothing from his merits to say he had the wit to see that honesty is the best policy.
> E. Dicey, Victor Emmanuel, p. 112.

2. Mind; understanding; intellect; reason; in the plural, the faculties or powers of the mind or intellect; senses: as, to be out of one's wits; he has all his wits about him.

> So my witte wex and wanyed til I a fole were,
> And sonme lakked my lyf allowed it fewe,
> And leten me for a lorel. Piers Plowman (B), xv. 2.

> Who knew the wit of the Lord, or who was his counsellour? Wyclif, Rom. xi. 34.

> Many yong wittes be driuen to hate learninge before they know what learninge is.
> Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 19.

> His wits are not so blunt. Shak., Much Ado, iii. 5. 11.

> I am in my wits; I am a labouring man,
> And we have seldom leisure to run mad.
> Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iii. 2.

> Sir John Russel also was taken there, but he, feigning himself to be out of his Wits, escaped for that Time.
> Baker, Chronicles, p. 150.

3†. Knowledge; information.

> The Child of Wynd got wit of it,
> Which filled his heart with woe.
> The Laidley Worm of Spindleston-heugh (Child's Ballads, I. 283).

> Let neither my father nor mother get wit,
> But that I'm coming hame.
> The Queen's Marie (Child's Ballads, III. 119).

4. Ingenuity; skill.

> Your knyf withe allo your wytte
> Vnto youre self bothe clene and sharpe conserve,
> That honestly yee mowe your own mete keive.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

> What strength cannot do, man's wit . . being the most forcible engine . . hath often effected.
> Raleigh (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 16).

5. Imagination; the imaginative faculty. [Rare.]

> Wit in the poet . . . is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which . . . searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent.
> Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, To Sir R. Howard.

6. The keen perception and apt expression of those connections between ideas which awaken pleasure and especially amusement. See the quotations and the synonyms.

> True wit consists in the resemblance of ideas. . . . But every resemblance of ideas is not what we call wit, and it must be such an one that gives delight and surprise to the reader. Where the likeness is obvious, it creates no surprise, and is not wit. Thus, when a poet tells us that the bosom of his mistress is as white as snow, there is no wit in the comparison; but when he adds, with a sigh, it is as cold too, it then grows into wit. Addison.

> Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures and agreeable visions in the fancy.
> Locke, Human Understanding, II. xi. 2.

> In wit, if by wit be meant the power of perceiving analogies between things which appear to have nothing in common, he never had an equal. Macaulay, Bacon.

7†. Conceit; idea; thought; design; scheme; plan.

> To senden him into som contree
> Ther as this Jasoun may destroyed be:
> This was his wit. Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1420.

> Was't not a pretty wit of mine, master poet, to have had him rode into Puckeridge with a horn before him?
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

At one's wit's end. See end. — Kind wit†. See kind[1]. — The five wits, the five senses; in general, the faculties of the mind. The five wits have been fancifully enumerated as common wit, imagination, fantasy, estimation, memory.

> The deedly synnes that been entred into thyn herte by thy fyve wittes. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

> If thy wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done, for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits than . . . I have in my whole five. Shak., R. and J., ii. 4. 77, 78.

> Alone and warming his five wits,
> The white owl in the belfry sits.
> Tennyson, The Owl.

To drive to one's wit's end. See drive. — To have one's wits in a creel. See creel. — To live by one's wits, to live by temporary shifts or expedients, as one without regular means of living.

> Addison sent to beg Gay, who was then living by his wits in a set town, to come to Holland House.
> Macaulay, Addison.

Syn. 6. Wit, Humor. In writers down to the time of Pope wit generally meant the serious kind of wit.

> Serious wit is . . . neither more nor less than quick wisdom. Burnet.

> Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike. Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 23.

In more recent use wit in the singular generally implies comic wit, in that sense it is different from humor. One principal difference is that wit always lies in some form of words, while humor may be expressed by manner, as a smile, a grimace, an attitude. Underlying this is the fact, consistent with the original meaning of the words, that humor goes more deeply into the nature of the thought, while wit catches pleasing but occult or far-fetched resemblances between things really unlike: a good pun shows wit; Irving's "History of New York" is a piece of sustained humor, the humor lying in the portrayal of character, the nature of the incidents, etc. Again: "Wit may, I think, be regarded as a purely intellectual process, while humor is a sense of the ridiculous controlled by feeling and coexistent often with the gentlest and deepest pathos" (H. Reed, Lects. on Eng. Lit., xi. 357). Hence humor is always kind, while wit may be unkind in the extreme. Swift's "Travels of Gulliver" is much too severe a satire to be called a work of humor. It is essential to the effect of wit that the form in which it is expressed should be brief; humor may be heightened in its effect by expansion into full forms of statement, description, etc. Wit more often than humor depends upon passing circumstances for its effect.

> The best and most agreeable specimen of English humor (it is humor in contrast to wit) which belongs to that period is Steele's invention, and Addison's use, of the character of Sir Roger de Coverley . . . The same species of pure genial, wise, and healthful humor has been sustained in the incomparable "Vicar of Wakefield," and in the writings of our countryman Washington Irving.
> H. Reed, Lects. on Eng. Lit., xi. 369.

> While wit is a purely intellectual thing, into every act of the humorous mind there is an influx of the moral nature, rays, direct or retracted, from the will and the affections, from the disposition and the temperament, enter into all humor; and thence it is that humor is of a diffusive quality, pervading an entire course of thought; while wit . . . because it has no existence apart from certain logical relations of thought which are definitely assignable, and can be enumerated even in always punctually concentrated within the circle of a few words. De Quincey.

> Dr. Trusler says that wit relates to the matter, humour to the manner, . . . that our old comedies abounded with wit, and our old actors with humour; that humour always excites laughter but wit does not, that a fellow of humour will set a whole company in a roar, but that there is a smartness in wit which cuts while it pleases. Wit, he adds always implies sense and abilities, while humour does not; humour is chiefly relished by the vulgar, but education is requisite to comprehend wit.
> Fleming, Vocab. Philos.

> It is no uncommon thing to hear "He has humour rather than wit." Here the expression commonly means pleasantry, for whoever has humour has wit although it does not follow that whoever has wit has humour. Humour is wit appertaining to character, and indulges in breadth of drollery rather than in play and brilliancy of point. Wit vibrates and sparkles, humour springs up exuberantly as from a fountain and runs on. In Congreve you wonder what he will say next; in Addison you repose on what is said, listening with assured expectation of something congenial and pertinent. Landor.

> Small room for Fancy's many chorded lyre,
> For Wit's bright rockets with their trains of fire.
> O. W. Holmes, An After-Dinner Poem.

> I am not speaking of the fun of the book [Don Quixote], of which there is plenty, and sometimes boisterous enough, but of that deeper and more delicate quality, suggestive of remote analogies and essential incongruities, which alone deserves the name of humor. Lowell, Don Quixote.

wit[2] (wit), n. [Prob. another use, and certainly now regarded as another use, of wit[1], n.; cf. spirit, a person of lively mind or energy, from spirit, liveliness, energy; witness, a person who has knowledge, from witness, knowledge. But wit as applied to a person may in part represent, as it may phonetically descend from, the ME. wit*, wet, wite, weote, < AS. wita, weota, also gewita, a man of knowledge, an adviser, counselor, = OF. wita, a witness, = OHG. wizo, a witness; lit. 'one who knows,' with formative a- (-an) of agent, < witan, know: see wit[1], v. This AS. wita appears in the historical term witenagemot, AS. witena gemōt, 'wits' moot, moot of counselors,' a council, parliament.] One who has discernment, reason, or judgment; a person of acute perception; especially, one who detects between associated ideas the finer resemblances or contrasts which give pleasure or enjoyment to the mind, and who gives expression to these for the entertainment of others; often, a person who has a keen perception of the incongruous or ludicrous, and uses it for the amusement and frequently at the expense of others.

> By providing that choice wits after reasonable time spent in contemplation may at the length either enter into that holy vocation . . . or else give place and suffer . . . others to succeed in their rooms.
> Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 80.

> O, sure I am, the wits of former days
> To subjects worse have given admiring praise.
> Shak., Sonnets, lix.

> When I die,
> I'll build an almshouse for decayed wits.
> Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, v. 2.

If you examine the sayings of Charles Lamb, Sydney Smith, and other great wits, you will perceive that what amuses you is the sudden perception of some fine resemblance. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 145.

wit[2] (wit), v. i. [< wit[2], n.] To play the wit; be witty: with an indefinite it.

Burton doth pretend to wit it in his pulpit-libell. Hyphis, Life of Laud, p. 360. (Davies.) wit[2], †. See wite[2].

witan (wit'an), n. pl. [AS., pl. of wita (ME. wite, woote, wete), a man of knowledge, member of a council or parliament: see wit[2].] In Anglo-Saxon hist., members of the witenagemot.

As tribes from every quarter of the land stood about his throne, men realised how the King of Wessex had risen into the King of England. J. R. Green, Conq of Eng., p. 215.

Thou art the mightiest voice in England, man;
Thy voice will lead the Witan.
Tennyson, Harold, ii. 2.

witch[1] (wich), n. [< ME. witche, wicche, wichche, wiche, a witch (man or woman), < AS. wicca, m., wicce, f. (pl. wiccan in both genders), a sorcerer or sorceress, a wizard or witch. = Fries. wikke = LG. wikke, a witch; cf. Icel. vitki, m., a witch, wizard, prob. after AS.; prob. a reduction, with shortened vowel and assimilation of consonants (tg > tk > kk, in AS. written cc), of AS. witga, a syncopated form of witiga, witega, a seer, prophet, soothsayer, magician (cf. deófol-witga, 'devil prophet,' wizard) (= OHG. wizago, wizago, a prophet, soothsayer), < witig*, seeing, a form parallel to witig (with short vowel), knowing, witan, know, witan*, see: see wit[1], and cf. witty. The notion that witch is a fem. form is usually accompanied by the notion that the corresponding masc. is wizard (the two words forming one of the pairs of masc. and fem. correlatives given in the grammars); but witch is historically masc. as well as fem. (being indeed orig., in the AS. form witga, only masc.), and wizard has no immediate relation to witch. Cf. wiseacre, ult. < OHG. wizago, and so a doublet of witch. Hence ult. (< AS. wicca) ME. wikke, wicke, evil, wicked, and wikked, wicked, wicked: see wick[2] and wicked[1]. The change of form (AS. wicca < witga) is paralleled by a similar change in orchard (AS. orceard < orcgeard (< ort geard), and the development of sense ('wicked,' 'witched') is in keeping with the history of other words which have become ultimately associated with popular superstitions — superstition, whether religious or etymological, tending to pervert or distort the forms and meanings of words.] 1. A person (of either sex) given to the black art; a sorcerer; a conjurer; a wizard; later and more particularly, a woman supposed to have formed a compact with the devil or with evil spirits, and to be able by their aid to operate supernaturally; one who practises sorcery or enchantment; a sorceress.

"Crucifige," quod a cacchepolle. "I warante hym a witche!" Piers Ploweman (B), xviii. 46

There was a man in that citee, whos name was Symount, a wicche Wyclif, Acts viii. 9

Devil or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee; thou art a witch.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 5. 6.

When a Country-wench cannot get her Butter to come, she says, The Witch is in her Churn. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 82.

2. An old, ugly, and crabbed or malignant woman; a hag; a crone: a term of abuse.

Foul wrinkled witch, what makest thou in my sight?
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3. 168.

3. A fascinating woman; a woman, especially a young woman or a girl, possessed of peculiar attractions, whether of beauty or of manners; a bewitching or charming young woman or girl. [Colloq.] — 4. A charm or spell. [Rare.]

If a man but dally by her feet,
He thinks it straight a witch to charm his daughter Greene, George-a-Greene, p. 292. (Davies.)

5. A petrel: doubtless so called from its incessant flight, often kept up in the dark. — 6. A water-witch. — 7. The pole, pole-dab, or craig-fluke, a kind of flatfish. — Black witch. Same as ani (which see, with cut). P. H. Gosse. [Jamaica.] — The riding of the witch. See riding[1]. — White witch or wizard, a witch or wizard of a beneficent or good-natured disposition.

Sorcerers are too common; cunning men, wizards, and white-witches, as they call them, in every village. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 271.

And, like white witches, mischievously good.
Dryden, The Medal, l. 62.

Witches' Sabbath. See Sabbath, 5. — Witch of Agnesi, in math., a plane curve discussed by Donna Maria Gaetana Agnesi, professor of mathematics in the University of Bologna, who died a nun in 1799. It consists of a straight line together with a cubic to which that line is the inflectional asymptote, this cubic having an ecnode at infinity in a direction perpendicular to the line. If $x = 0$ is the equation of the line, $(y.c)^2 + 1 = (c/x)$ is that of the cubic. The area of the curve is four times that of the circle having four-pointic contact with the cubic and two-pointic contact with the line. Also called versiera.

witch[1] (wich), v. t. [< ME. witchen, wecchen, wichen, < AS. wiccian, bewitch; cf. D. LG. wikken = Icel. vitka, soothsay, divine; from the noun. Cf. bewitch.] 1. To bewitch; fascinate; enchant.

Ne schuld he with wicchecraft be wicched neuer-more. William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4427.

For she has given me poison in a kiss —
She had it 'twixt her lips — and with her eyes
She witches people.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iii. 1.

Thou hast witched me, rogue. B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

2. To work by charms or witchcraft; effect, cause, or bring by or as by witchcraft.

Did not she witch the devil into my son-in-law, when he killed my poor daughter? Ford and Dekker, Witch of Edmonton, v. 2

And so in one evening Ellery witched himself into the good graces of every one in the simple parsonage, and when Tina at last appeared she found him reigning king of the circle. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 402

All round, upon the river's slippery edge,
Witching to deeper calm the drowsy tide,
Whispers and leans the breeze entangling sedge.
Lowell, Indian Summer Reverie.

witch[2] (wich), n. [Also, in comp., wech, wych, weech; < ME. wiche, < AS. wice, the sorb or service-tree; appar. applied to several trees with pendulous branches, < wican (pp. wicen), bend, yield: see weak. Hence witchen, and in comp. witch-elm, witch-hazel, q. v.] The witch-elm, Ulmus montana.

witch-alder (wich'al'dėr), n. A low shrub with alder-like leaves, Fothergilla Gardeni (F. alnifolia), of the witch-hazel family, found in Virginia and North Carolina.

witch-ball (wich'bâl), n. A name given to interwoven masses of the stems of herbaceous plants, often met with in the steppes of Tatary.

witch-bells, witches'-bells (wich'belz, wich'ez-belz), n. pl. The harebell, Campanula rotundifolia; also, the bluebottle, Centaurea Cyanus. Britten and Holland. [Provincial, chiefly Scotch.]

witch-chick (wich'chik), n. A swallow: from an old superstition. See swallow-struck. Also witchuck and witch-hag.

witchcraft (wich'kraft), n. [< ME. wecchecraft, wiccecraft, wicchecraft, < AS. wiccecræft, wiccecraft, witchcraft, < wicca, m., wicce, f., witch, + cræft, craft: see witch[1] and craft[1].] 1. The practices of witches; sorcery; a supernatural power which persons were formerly supposed to obtain by entering into compact with the devil. The belief in witchcraft was common in Europe till the sixteenth century, and maintained its ground with tolerable firmness till the middle of the seventeenth century; indeed it is not altogether extinct even at the present day. Numbers of reputed witches were formerly condemned to be burned. One conspicuous outbreak of popular excitement over supposed demoniacal manifestations took place about 1662 in New England, especially in and near Salem.

There was thane an Enchantour in the Contree, that 'deled with Wycche craft, that men clepden Taknis. Mandeville, Travels, p. 137

Now the arrival of Sir William Phips to the government of New England was at a time when . . scores of poor people had lately fallen under a prodigious possession of devils, which it was then generally thought had been by witchcrafts introduced. C. Mather, Mag. Christ., ii. 15.

2. Extraordinary power; irresistible influence; fascination; witchery.

You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate. Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 301.

There's witchcraft in thy language, in thy face,
In thy demeanours. Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 3.

The subtle witchcraft of his tongue Unlocked the hearts of those who keep Gold, the world's bond of slavery Shelley, Rosalind and Helen.

witch-doctor (wich'dok'tor), n. Same as medicine man. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 820.

witch-elm (wich'elm), n. [Also witch-elm, and archaically wych-elm, also weech-elm; < witch[2] + elm. In this word and witch-hazel, the archaic spelling is much affected in modern use.] An elm, Ulmus montana, of hilly districts in western and northern Europe and northern Asia, the common wild elm of Scotland, Ireland, and the northern and western parts of England. It is less tall than the common English elm (U. campestris), but is a considerable tree, of picturesque habit, the trunk branching naturally near the base, the leaves broadly ovate. The wood has the fine-grained, tough, and elastic quality of U. campestris, and is preferred for boat work, as in boat-building. In southeastern England a variety of the common elm is also called by this name.

The witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's Spring.
Scott, L. of the L., I., Int.

Witch-elms that counterchange the floor
Of this flat lawn with dusk and bright.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxix.

witchen (wich'n), n. [Also witchin; a var. of witch[2] (with suffix conformed to -en[2]), < ME. wiche, < AS. wice, the service-tree: see witch[2].] The mountain-ash or rowan, Pyrus aucuparia. [Prov. Eng.]

witchery (wich'er-i), n.; pl. witcheries (-iz). [< witch[1] + -ery.] 1. Sorcery; enchantment; witchcraft. — 2. Fascination; charm.

He never felt
The witchery of the soft blue sky Wordsworth, Peter Bell.

witches'-besom (wich'ez be'zum), n. Same as witches'-broom.

witches'-broom (wich'ez-brōm), n. A popular name for the broom-like tufts of branches developed on the silver fir, birch, cherry, and other trees in consequence of the attack of a uredineous fungus, Peridermium elatinum.

witches'-butter (wich'ez-but"ėr), n. An alga. See Nostoc, 2.

witches'-thimble (wich'ez-thim'bl), n. See thimble and Silene.

witchet (wich'et), n. [Origin obscure.] A rounding-plane.

witch-finder (wich'fin"dėr), n. A professional discoverer of witches, whose services were sometimes employed when the persecution of so-called witches was in vogue.

He [Matthew Hopkins] then set up as "Witch Finder General," and, on the invitation of several towns, made journeys for the discovery of witches through Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk and Huntingdonshire. . . Supposed witches were urged to confess, and on the strength of their own confession were hanged. Encyc. Nat. Biog., XXVII. 836.

witch-grass (wich'gras), n. 1. Same as old-witch grass. — 2. The quitch-grass or couch-grass, Agropyrum repens.

witch-hag (wich'hag), n. Same as witch-chick.

witch-hazel (wich'hā'zl), n. [Also wich-hazel, wych-hazel; < witch[2] + hazel. Cf. witch-elm.] 1. The witch- or wych elm, Ulmus montana, its broad leaves resembling those of hazel. [Prov. Eng.] — 2. A shrub or small tree, Hamamelis Virginiana, of eastern North America. It is noticeable for its flowers with four yellow strap-shaped petals, appearing when the leaves are falling, the fruit, which is a woody capsule, ripening the next season. The leaves a, male flowers; b, fruit.

Branch with fruits of Witch-hazel (Hamamelis Virginiana).

are broad and straight veined, wavy margined. The leaves and bark of witch-hazel abound in tannin, and the bark affords also a reputed sedative application for various cases of external inflammation. The leaves are said to possess similar properties, and an infusion of them is given internally for bowel complaints and hemorrhages. While witch-hazel is now much in vogue as a cure for bruises and sprains, as also for various internal difficulties, and is even officially recognized, its real virtue, if any, is still quite in doubt.

witching (wich'ing), n. [< ME. wiching, wicchinge; verbal n. of witch[1], v.] The practices of witches; enchantment.

witching (wich'ing), p. a. 1. Bewitching; suited to enchantment or witchcraft; weird.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 406.

2. Fascinating; enchanting.

Let neither flattery, nor the witching sound
Of high and soft preferment, touch your goodness.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

witchingly (wich'ing-li), adv. In a bewitching, fascinating, or enchanting manner. Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 6.

witch-knot (wich'not), n. A knot or snarl, especially in the hair, supposed to be caused by witchcraft. Compare elf, v., and elf-lock.

O, that I were a witch but for her sake!
Yfaith her Queenship little rest should take;
I'd scratch that face, that may not feele the aire,
And knit whole ropes of witch-knots in her haire
Drayton, Poems (ed. 1637), p. 253. (Halliwell.)

O who has loosed the nine witch-knots
That were amang that ladye's locks?
Willie's Ladye (Child's Ballads, I. 166).

witch-meal (wich'mēl), n. The powdery pollen of the club-moss, Lycopodium clavatum; lycopode. It is so rapidly inflammable as to have been used in theaters to represent lightning.

witch-ridden (wich'rid″n), a. Ridden by witches; having a nightmare.

witch-seeker (wich'sē″kėr), n. Same as witch-finder.

witch-stitch (wich'stich), n. In embroidery, same as herring-bone stitch (which see, under herring-bone).

witchuck (wich'uk), n. Same as witch-chick.

witch-wife (wich'wif), n. A woman who practises witchcraft.

In the tenth century we hear of the first instance of a death in England for heresy, in the actual drowning of a witch-wife at London Bridge.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 11.

witch-wolf† (wich'wulf), n. A werwolf. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 119.

witch-wood (wich'wůd), n. 1. Same as witchen. —2. Same as witch-elm.—3. The spindle tree, Euonymus Europæus.

wit-cracker† (wit'krak″ėr), n. One who makes jests; a joker.

A college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour: Dost thou think I care for a satire, or an epigram?
Shak., Much Ado, v 4. 102.

wit-craft† (wit'kráft), n. 1. Mental skill; contrivance; invention. Camden, Remains, p. 144. (Nares.)—2. The art of reasoning; logic.

Master Secretary Wilson, geuing an English name to his arte of Logicke, called it Witcraft.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 191.

wite[1]†, v. t. [ME. witen, < AS. witan, see: see wit[1]. Cf. wite[2].] To observe; keep; guard; preserve; protect.

"Pieres," quod I, "I preye the whi stonde thise piles here?"
"For wyndes, wiltow wyte," quod he, "to witen it fram fallynge."
Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 25.

wite[2] (wit), v. t. [< ME. witen, wyten, < AS. wītan, witan, impute, blame, censure, punish, flue (cf. witnian, punish, edwitan, reproach, scēawian, reproach: see twit), = Icel. víta, fine, = Goth. weitjan (in idweitjan, reproach (= AS. edwitan), and in fair-weitjan, observe intently); ult. connected with witan, see, witan, know: see wite[1], wit[1], and cf. twit.] 1†. To impute (to one) as a fault; blame for; blame (that): governing directly a noun or clause, and taking an indirect object in the dative.

And therfore, if that I myspeke or seye,
Wyte it the ale of Southwerk, I yow preye.
Chaucer, Prol. to Miller's Tale, l. 33.

Y pray yow . . . not to wyte me that y am the causer of it that my seyd maister noyeth yow with so manye materes.
Paston Letters, I. 374.

2. To impute wrong to; find fault with; blame; censure. [Now Scotch.]

He gan fowly wyte
His wicked fortune.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 52.

O wyte na me, now, my master dear,
I garr'd a' my young hawks sing.
Lord John (Child's Ballads, I. 136).

wite[3] (wit), n. [Formerly also wight; < ME. wite, wyte, < AS. wīte, punishment, fine, torment, torture, = OS. wīti = OHG. wīzi, MHG. wīze, punishment, = Icel. víta, fine: see wite[2], v.] 1. Blame; censure; reproach; fault. [Now Scotch.]

For wor he wel other wrong, the wit is his owne.
Piers Plowman (A), x. 75.

And but I do, sirs, let me han the wyte
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 400.

"Put na the wite on me," she said,
"It was my may Catherine."
Earl Richard (Child's Ballads, III. 8).

They hae kill'd Sir Charlie Hay,
And they laid the wyte on Geordie.
Geordie (Child's Ballads, VIII. 93).

2. Punishment; penalty; mulct: fine; in old Eng. criminal law, a fine paid to the king or other lord in respect of an offense. J. F. Stephen.

wite[3]†, n. i. [ME. witen; < AS. witan (pret. wāt), gewitan (pret. gewāt), go.] To go.

Ne wite thow noght fra me.
Early Eng. Psalter (ed. Stevenson), xxi. 12.

wite[4]†, v. and n. An obsolete form of wit[1].

witeless† (wit'les), a. [< wite[2] + -less.] Blameless.

Ne can Willye wite the witeless herdgroome.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., August.

witenagemot (wit'e-na-ge-mōt'), n. [AS. witena gemot, 'counselors' moot': witena, gen. pl. of wita, wīota, gewita, a man of knowledge, a counselor; gemōt, moot or meet, assembly, council, parliament: see wit[2] and moot[1].] In Anglo-Saxon hist., the great national council or parliament, consisting of the king with his dependents and friends and sometimes the members of his family, the ealdormen, the bishops, and other ecclesiastics. This council, which met frequently, constituted the highest court of judicature in the kingdom. It was summoned by the king in any political emergency, and its concurrence was necessary in many important measures, such as the deciding of war, the levying of extraordinary taxes, grants of land in certain cases, election and (in many instances) deposition of kings.

The old Germanic tradition, which associated "the wise men" in all royal action, gave a constitutional ground to the powers which the Witenagemot exercised more and more as English society took a more and more aristocratic form, and it thus came to share with the crown in the higher justice, in the imposition of taxes, the making of laws, the conclusion of treaties, the control of war, the disposal of public lands, the appointment of bishops and great officers of state. There were times when it claimed even to elect or depose a king.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 216.

witerliche†, witerlit, adv. See witterly.

witfish (wit'fish), n. Same as whitefish.

witful† (wit'ful), a. [< ME. witful, witfol, witvol; < wit[1] + -ful.] Full of wit, knowledge, or wisdom; wise; knowing; sensible.

'Tis passing miraculous that your dul and blind worship should so sodainly turne both sightfull and witfull.
Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn.

with[1] (with), prep. [< ME. with, rarely wit, wid, with, near, among, in company with, also against, along, on, to, from, by, < AS. with, against, opposite, = OS. with = OFries. with = Icel. við, against, by, at, with, = Sw. vid, near, at, by, = Dan. ved, by, at; otherwise in the compar. form wither-, AS. wither- = OHG. widar, MHG. G. wider, against, wieder, again, = Goth. withra, against, toward, in front of; cf. Skt. vitaram, further, vi-, asunder, L. ve-, apart. Cf. with-, with[2], wither-, withers. With has largely taken the place of AS. and ME. mid, with.] 1. Against: noting competition, opposition, or antagonism: as, to fight with the Romans (that is, against them); to vie with each other.

For the most part wise and graue men doe naturally mislike with all sodaine innouations, specially of lawes.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 88.

The Sasquesahanocks, a mightie people, and mortall enemies with the Massawomeks.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 182.

The rival Moorish kings were waging civil war with each other in the vicinity of Granada.
Irving, Granada, p. 83.

2. Noting association or connection. Particularly, expressing: (a) Proximity, accompaniment, companionship, or fellowship.

They met at Ispahan (a Citie of Persia), and there Mahomet, falling with his horse, brake his neck.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 279.

The Earl of Northumberland, being advertised thereof, came with a Power, assaulted the Castle, and after two Days Defence recovered it.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 137.

The greatest News from Abroad is that the French King with his Cardinal are come again on this Side the Hills.
Howell, Letters, I. v. 29.

The globe goes round from west to east, and he must go round with it.
Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

Come and spend an evening with us.
Dickens, Cricket on the Hearth, i.

There with her knights and dames was Guinevere.
Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

(b) Harmony, agreement, or alliance: as, one color may or may not go with another; to fight with the national troops; to side or vote with the reformers.

He that is not with me is against me. Mat. xii. 30.

(c) Combination or composition: as, wine mixed with water. (d) Addition or conjunction: as, England (with Wales), Scotland and Ireland make the United Kingdom.

Very wise, and with his wisdom very valiant.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 664, quoted in Abbot's Shakespearian Grammar.

Here were seen in profusion the orange, the citron, the fig, and pomegranate, with great plantations of mulberry trees, from which was produced the finest silk.
Irving, Granada, p. 4.

(e) Communication, intercourse, or interaction.

With thee she talks, with thee she mourns,
With thee she sighs, with thee she groans,
With thee she says, "Farewell, mine own."
Surrey, State of a Lover.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shak., M. of V., I. 3. 36.

You have to do with other guess people now.
Smollett, Roderick Random, xlviii.

(f) Simultaneousness.

With every minute you do change a mind.
Shak., Cor., I. 1. 183.

3. As a property, attribute, or belonging of; in the possession, care, keeping, service, or employment of: as, to leave a package with one; to be with the A. B. Manufacturing Co.

We may find Truth with one man as soon as in a Counsell.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

4. Having, possessing, bearing, or characterized by: as, the boy has come with the letter; Thebes, with its grand old walls; Rome, with her seven hills.

A stately ship, . . .
With all her bravery on.
Milton, S. A., l. 717.

His ministry was with much conviction and demonstration.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 302.

There came into the shop a very learned man with an erect solemn air.
Steele, Spectator, No. 436.

5. In the region, sphere, or experience of; followed by a plural, among; also, in the sight, estimation, or opinion of: as, a holy prophet with God.

The first of the fre faithly was cald
Enyment the mighty, with men that hym knew.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12442.

With men it is impossible, but not with God; for with God all things are possible.
Mat. x. 27.

I had thought my life had borne more value with you.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 2.

Those Antichthones, which are on the other side of the globe of the earth, are now out of the comfortable reach of the sunbeams, while it is day with us.
Bp. Hall, Sermons, xxxv.

Such arguments had invincible force with those Pagan philosophers.
Addison.

His integrity was perfect, it was a law of nature with him, rather than a choice or a principle.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 27.

6. In respect of; in relation to; as regards; as to: as, have patience with me; what is your will with me?

How far am I grown Behind hand with fortune!
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, iv. 2.

If we truely consider our Proceedings with the Spanyards and the rest, we haue no reason to despayre.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 242.

Thus will it ever be with him who trusts too much to woman.
Steele, Tatler, No. 217.

7. Like; analogously to; hence, specifically, at the same time or rate as; according to; in proportion to.

As if with Circe she would change my shape.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3. 35.

Their insolence and power increased with their number, and the seditions were also doubled with it.
Swift, Nobles and Commons, iii.

8. By. Indicating (a†) An agent: as, slain with robbers.

Al thus with lewys I [Christ] am dyth.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 247.

Yaiphile, betrayed with Jasoun.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2560.

And so it was comaunded to be kept with x noble men; and thei were charged to take goode hede who com to assaten, and yef eny ther were that myght drawen out of the ston.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 100.

He was torn to pieces with a bear. Shak., W. T., v. 2. 68.

At Flowers we were againe chased with foure French men of warre.
Capt John Smith, Works, II. 209.

He was sick and lame of the scurvy, so as he could but lie in the cabin-door, and give direction, and, it should seem, was badly assisted either with mate or mariners.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 181.

(b) An instrument or means: as, to write with a pen; to cut with a knife, to heal with herbs.

Thirle my soule with thi spere anoon.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 28.

You have paid me, equal her vena,
And sent my own rod to correct me with.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iv. 2.

They had cut of his head upon ye cudy of his boat, had not ye man reskued him with a sword.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 98.

And with faint Praises one another damn.
Wycherley, Plain Dealer, Prol.

(c) An accessory, as of material, contents, etc.: as, a ring set with diamonds; a ship laden with cotton; a bottle filled with water.

Threescore carts laden with baggage.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 22.

The chiefe Citie, called St. Savadore, seated upon an exceeding high mountaine, 150. miles from the Sea; very fertile, and inhabited with more than 100000. persons.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 40.

Valentia . . . is the greatest part of Spaine; which, if the Histories be true, in the Romans time abounded no lesse with gold and silver Mines then now the West-Indies.
Capt. John Smith, Works, II. 168.

Their armor was inlaid and chased with gold and silver.
Irving, Granada, p. 5.

With was formerly used in this sense before materials of nourishment, and so was equivalent to the modern on.

To dine and sup with water and bran.
Shak., M. for M., iv. 3. 159.

9. Through; on account or in consequence of; by reason of: expressing cause: as, he trembled with fear; to perish with hunger.

Therefore let Benedick . . .
Consume away in sighs . . .
It were a better death than die with mocks
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 1. 79.

A cow died at Plimouth, and a goat at Boston, with eating Indian corn. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 44.

They are scarce able to budge, being stiff with cold.
Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 42.

10. Using; showing: in phrases of manner: as, to win with ease; to pull with a will.

Marie ansuerde with Milde steuene:
"A sonde Me cam while er fram heuene."
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 50.

He will not creepe, nor crouche with fained face.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 727.

They were directed onely by Powhatan to obtaine him our weapons, to cut our owne throats, with the manner where, how, and when, which we plainly found most true and apparant. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 171.

They contended with all the animosity of personal feeling. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 1.

11. From: noting separation, difference, disagreement, etc.: as, he will not part with it on any account; to differ with a person; to break with old ties.

Madam,
The Queene must heare you sing another song
Before you part with vs.
Heywood, If you Know not me (Works, ed. 1874, I. 207).

With was formerly used in many idioms to denote relations now expressed rather by of, to, etc.

Nobill talker with tales, tretable, alse,
Curtas & kynde, curious of honde.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3835.

He still retains some resemblance with the ancient Cupid. Bacon, Physical Fables, viii., Expl.

This pains I took with willingness, though it were much offensive to me, not being accustomed with such poisonous savours
Good News from New England, quoted in S. Morton's [New England's Memorial, App., p. 370

Collections were early and liberally made for . . . services in the church, and intrusted with faithful men fearing God. Penn, Rise and Progress of Quakers, iv.

What frippery a woman is made up with!
Cumberland, Natural Son, I. 1.

Away with. See away. — Have with you. See have. — One with. See one. — To bear, begin, break, dispense, do, go, etc., with. See the verbs. — Together with. See together. — To put up with. See put. — Warm with. See warm. — With child (OE. mid childe). See child. — With God, in heaven

I have been a-fishing with old Oliver Henly, now with God, a noted fisher both for Trout and Salmon
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 127.

With that. (a†) Provided that.

To wirche youre wil the while my lyf dureth,
With that ge kenne me kyndeliche to knowe what is Dowel. Piers Plowman (C), xii. 92.

(b†) Moreover.

Betun . . . bad him good morwe,
And axed of hym with that whiderward he wolde
Piers Plowman (B), v. 307.

(c) Thereupon.

With that Merlin departed, and the kynge he lefte in grete mynsese, and sore a-baisshed of this thinge.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 631

With the sun. See sun. — With young. See young. — Syn. With and by are so closely allied in many of their uses that it is impossible to lay down a rule by which these uses may at all times be distinguished. The same may be said, but to a less extent, of with and through.

with[2], n. See withe.

with-. [ME. with-, < AS. with-, prefix, with, prep., against: see with[1].] A prefix of Anglo-Saxon origin, meaning 'against.' It was formerly common, but of the Middle English words containing it only two remain in common use — withdraw and withhold.

withal (wi-*th*ȧl'), adv. and prep. [Early mod. E. also withall, withalle; < ME. withal, withalle, prop. two words, with alle; used in place of AS. mid calle, with all, altogether, entirely: see with[1] and all. Cf. at all, under all.] I. adv. With all; moreover; likewise; in addition; at the same time; besides; also; as well.

Fy on possessioun,
But-if a man be vertuous withal.
Chaucer, Prol. to Franklin's Tale, l. 15.

It seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.
Acts xxv. 27.

II. prep. An emphatic form of with, used after the object (usually a relative) at the end of a sentence or clause.

When poor suitors come to your houses, ye cannot be spoken withal. Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

These banish'd men that I have kept withal.
Shak., T. G. of V., v. 4. 152.

Stve. My fine fool!
Pic. Fellow crack! why, what a consort
Are we now blest'd withal!
Fletcher, Mad Lover, ii. 2.

We made a shift, however, to save 23 barrels of Rainwater, besides what we drest our Victuals withal.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 83.

withamite (with'am-it), n. [Named by Sir David Brewster, after Dr. Henry Witham, of Glencoe.] A variety of epidote found at Glencoe in Scotland. It occurs crystallized, and in masses of vitreous luster and red or yellow color.

Withania (wi-tha'ni-ȧ), n. [NL. (Pauquy, 1824).] A genus of gamopetalous shrubs, of the order Solanaceæ and tribe Solaneæ. They are characterized by having a narrowly bell-shaped corolla with five valvate lobes, and an inflated fruiting calyx more or less closed above the included berry. The 4 species are natives of southern Europe, western and southern Asia, North Africa, and the Canary Islands. They are hoary or woolly shrubs, bearing entire leaves and clustered, almost sessile flowers. For W. coagulans, used for rennet, see cheese-maker.

withdraught† (with-drȧft'), n. [< withdraw, after draught.] Withdrawal.

May not a withdraught of all God's favours . . . be as certainly foreseen and foretold?
Rev. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 145. (Davies.)

withdraw (with-drȧ'), v.; pret. withdrew, pp. withdrawn, ppr. withdrawing. [< ME. with drawen, withdrazen, wythdrazen (pret. withdrow, withdrog), draw, recall, take away; < with-, against, opposite, + draw.] I. trans. 1. To draw back, aside, or away; take back; remove.

He doth best that with-draweth hym by day and bi nyate
To spille any speche or any space of tyme Piers Plowman (B), ix. 86.

From her husband's hand her hand
Soft she withdrew. Milton, P. L., ix. 898.

I grieve for life's bright promise, just shown and then withdrawn. Bryant, Waiting by the Gate.

I say that this Else I withdraw favour and countenance
From you and yours for ever — shall you do.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

2. To recall; retract: as, to withdraw a charge, a threat, or a vow.

Ben. Wouldst thou withdraw it [thy vow]? for what purpose, love?
Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again
Shak., R. and J., ii. 2. 130.

3. To divert, as from use or from some accustomed channel.

His mynd was alienate and withdrawn from him who moste loved him, but also from all former delightes and studies. Spenser, Shep. Cal., April, Arg.

Roads occupy lands more or less capable of production, and also . . . they absorb (or withdraw from other uses) in their construction a large amount of labour.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXIV. 27.

4†. To take out; subtract.

That . . . withdrawe the yeris oute of the yeris that ben passed the . . . rote Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. § 40.

The word is often used reflexively

Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds . . . from such withdraw thyself. 1 Tim. vi. 5.

To withdraw a juror, to discharge one from a jury, which is thus left one short of the legal number: a formality resorted to, by consent of the parties or permission of the court in order to terminate a trial by preventing a verdict and thus leave the action to proceed to a new trial.

II. intrans. To retire; go away; step backward or aside; retreat.

The day for drede ther-of with-drow and derk by cam the sonne:
The wal of the temple to-cleef ensene a two peces,
The hard rus be al to rof and ryght derk nyght hit semede.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 62.

We will withdraw
Into the gallery. Shak., Pericles, ii. 2. 58.

There have been little disputes between the two houses about coming into each other's house: when a lord comes into the Commons they call out withdraw, that day the moment my uncle came in they all roared out, Withdraw! withdraw! H. Walpole, To Mann, May 20, 1742.

And what if thou withdraw
In silence from the living, and no friend Take note of thy departure? Bryant, Thanatopsis withdrawal (with-drȧ'ȧl), n. [< withdraw + -al.] The act of withdrawing or taking back; a recalling.

The withdrawal of the allowance . . . interfered with my plans Fielding, Tom Jones (Latham.)

Sin comes by withdrawal of the heart from God.
Bibliotheca Sacra, XLIII. 492.

withdrawer (with-drȧ'ėr), n. [< withdraw + -er[1].] One who withdraws.

He was not a withdrawer of the corn but a seller.
Ostred, tr. of Cope on Proverbs (1583), fol. 102 b. (Latham.) withdrawing (with-drȧ'ing), p. a. Retreating; receding.

Your hills, and long withdrawing vales, Thomson, Spring, l. 68.

withdrawing-room (with-drȧ'ing-rōm), n. [< withdrawing, verbal n. of withdraw, v., + room[1].] A room used to withdraw or retire into, formerly generally behind the room in which the family took their meals; later, a parlor or reception-room: now abbreviated to drawing-room.

Being in ye withdrawing roome adjoining the bedchamber, his Maty espying me came to me from a greate crowde of noblemen Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 3, 1661.

My withdrawing room, always ready for company, . . . was the pine wood behind my house.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 154.

withdrawment (with-drȧ'ment), n. [< withdraw + -ment.] The act of withdrawing or taking back; recall.

The withdrawment of those [papers] deemed most obnoxious. W. Belsham, Hist. Eng., I. ii.

withe (with or with), n. [Also wythe, and prop. with. < ME. withe, wythe, wythth, writhe, withthe, < AS. withthe, a var. of withig, a twig, withy: see withy[1].] 1. A tough flexible twig, especially of willow, used for binding things together; a willow- or osier-twig. Judges xvi. 7.

I remember in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's time of England, an Irish rebel, condemned, put up a petition to the deputy that he might be hanged in a withe, and not in a halter. Bacon, Custom and Education.

I tied several logs together with a birch withe.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 208.

2. An elastic handle for a cooper's chisel, fuller, or the like, which deadens the shock to the workman's hand. — 3. An iron fitted to the end of a boom or mast, and having a ring through which another boom or mast is rigged or secured; a boom-iron.

Lastly comes the wythe, a species of iron cap to support the flying jib-boom Luce, Seamanship, p. 81.

4. A wall dividing two flues in a stack of chimneys. Basket-withe. See Tournefortia. Hoop-withe. See Rivina. — Serpent withe. See serpent-withe. White hoop-withe. See Tournefortia.

withe (with or with), v. t.; pret. and pp. withed, ppr. withing. [< withe, n.] To bind with withes or twigs.

Two bowes, one blank and one white, that take
And bynde and withe hem so that gornynyng
Comyst upp goo
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 128.

Stay but a while and ye shall see him withed, and haltered and staked, and halted to death.
Bp. Hall, Sermon on Ps. lxviii. 30.

wither†[1] (with'ėr), adv. [< ME. wither, < AS. wither (in comp.), again, against, = OS. withar, wether, withere = OFries. wither, withir, wether, weder, weer = LG. wedder = D. weder, weer = OHG. widar, MHG. wider, G. wider, against, wieder, again, = Icel. vithr = Sw. Dan. veder = Goth. withra, against, toward; compar. of with: see with[1]. This adverb was once of considerable importance in ME. as a prefix, but it is obsolete in mod. E., witherward being merely archaic, and withershins dialectal. The instances of wither as prep., adj., and noun, given as occurring in ME., are rare, and in all of them wither is rather to be taken as a prefix. Cf. withers.] Against; in opposition (to): chiefly in composition, as a prefix wither, against. Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 3386.

wither[1], v. [ME. witheren, < AS. witherian (= MD. wederen = OHG. widarôn), go against, resist, < wither, against: see wither[1], adv.] To go against; resist; oppose. Ormulum, l. 1181.

wither[2] (with'ėr), v. [With change of d to th, as in the orig. noun weather; < ME. widder, wydderen, widren, wedderen, < AS. wedrian, expose to the weather, = MHG. wittern, be such and such weather; cf. G. verwittern, be spoiled by the weather, decay, etc., wittern, be such and such weather, breathe, blow, storm; cf. weather, v., a doublet of wither.] I. trans. 1. To cause to become dry and fade; make sapless and shrunken.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat but it withereth the grass Jas. i. 11.

Like a blasted sapling, wither'd up.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 4. 71.

2. To cause to shrink, wrinkle, and decay for want of animal moisture; cause to lose bloom; shrivel; cause to have a wrinkled skin or shrunken muscles: as, time will wither the fairest face.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 240.

3. To blight, injure, or destroy, as by some malign or baleful influence; affect fatally by malevolence; cause to perish or languish generally: as, to wither a person by a look or glance; reputations withered by scandal.

> The treacherous air
> Of absence withers what was once so fair.
> Wordsworth, Sonnets, iii. 25.

He withers marrow and mind. Tennyson, Ancient Sage.

II. intrans. 1. To lose the sap or juice; dry and shrivel up; lose freshness and bloom; fade.

> Shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring. Ezek. xvii. 9.

> Leaves have their time to fall,
> And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath
> Mrs. Hemans, The Hour of Death.

2. To become dry and wrinkled, as from the loss or lack of animal moisture; lose pristine freshness, bloom, softness, smoothness, vigor, or the like, as from age or disease; decay.

> A fair face will wither. Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 170.

> There, left a subject to the wind and rain,
> And scorch'd by suns, it withers on the plain.
> Pope, Iliad, iv. 559.

3. To decay generally; decline; languish; pass away.

> When few dayes faren were, the fre kyng Teutras
> Wex welke of his wound, & wydrit to dethe.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5301.

> And now I wax old,
> Seke, sory, and cold,
> As mok upon mold
> I widder away.
> Towneley Mysteries, p. 21.

> That which is of God we defend; . . that which is otherwise, lo! it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, ii. 1.

> The individual withers, and the world is more and more.
> Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

wither-. See wither[1], adv.

wither-band (with'ėr band), n. A piece of iron fixed under a saddle nearly over the withers of the horse, to strengthen the bow.

withered[1] (with'ėrd), p. a. Shriveled; faded.

withered[2] (with'ėrd), a. [< wither-s + -ed[2].] Having withers (of this or that specified kind).

> Some with their Manes Frizzled up, to make 'em appear high Wither'd, that they look'd as Fierce as one of Hungess's Wild Boars.
> Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 16.

witheredness (with'ėrd-nes), n. A withered state or condition. [Rare.]

> Do ye complain of the dead witheredness of good affections? Sir Hall, Contemplations, v. 11.

> Water them as soon as set, till they have recovered their witheredness Mortimer, Husbandry.

withering (with'ėr-ing), p. a. Blasting; blighting; scorching: as, a withering glance; a withering wind.

> How many a spirit born to bless
> Has sunk beneath that withering name!
> Moore, Lalla Rookh, The Fire-Worshippers.

> The attacking column was under a withering fire.
> The Century, XXXVI. 930.

Withering cancer, schirrhous cancer in which there is a tendency to shrinkage and atrophy.

withering-floor (with'ėr ing-flōr), n. The drying-floor of a malt-house: according to the established arrangement, the second floor.

> All such [imperfect] grains are apt to become very damaging upon the withering floor. Ure, Dict., III. 187.

witheringly (with'ėr-ing-li), adv. In a manner tending to wither or cause to shrink.

> But we must wander witheringly,
> In other lands to die.
> Byron, Hebrew Melodies, The Wild Gazelle.

witherite (with'ėr-īt), n. [Named by Werner after W. Withering, an English medical practitioner and scientist (1741–99), who, in 1784, published an analysis and description of a specimen of this mineral obtained from a lead-mine at Alston Moor in Cumberland, England.] Native barium carbonate. It occurs crystallized, also columnar or granular massive, and has a white, gray, or yellow color. Also called barolite.

witherling[1]† (with'ėr-ling), n. [< ME. witherling, < wither[1] + -ling[1].] An opponent, enemy, or adversary.

> Gr te wel the gode
> Quen dodild my moder,
> And sey that hethene king,
> Ihu cristes witherling, > that fche lef and dere
> On londe am rued here. King Horn, l. 156.

witherling[2]† (with'ėr-ling), n. [< wither[2] + -ling[1].] One who or that which is withered or decrepit.

> All these braunches of heretikes fallen from the church, the vine of Christes mistical body, seme thei neuer so freshe & grene, bee yet in dede but witherlingas.
> Sir T. More, Works, p. 180.

withernam (with'ėr-nam), n. [< ME. withernam*, < AS. withernam (= G. wiedernahme), retaking, reception; < wither, again, + nām*, a taking, seizure: see wither[1] and nam[2], name[2].] In law: (a) An unlawful distress, or forbidden taking, as of a thing distrained, out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot upon the replevin make deliverance thereof to the party distrained. (b) The reprisal of other cattle or goods, in lieu of those unjustly taken, eloigned, or otherwise withholden. The cattle or goods thus taken are said to be taken in withernam. [Now obsolete.]

withe-rod (with'rod), n. A North American shrub, Viburnum cassinoides, a species formerly included in V. nudum.

withers (with'ėrz), n. pl. [Also withers; lit. the parts that are 'against,' the resisting part; < wither[1], adv. Cf. G. widerrist, a horse's withers, < wider, against, + rist, wrist, instep, also elevated part, withers.] 1. The highest part of the back of a horse, between the shoulder-blades and behind the root of the neck, where the mane ceases to grow: as, a horse 15 hands high at the withers. The name is extended to the same part of some other animals, as, an antelope with high withers; the sacred ox, with a hump on the withers. See cut under horse.

> Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung
> Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 254.

> Contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers. Swift, Advice to Servants (Groom).

2. The barbs or flukes of a harpoon; the witters: so called by British whalemen.

withershins (with'ėr-shinz), adv. [Also widdershins, widdersinnus, widdishins, widdersins, widershins, etc.; according to a common view, lit. 'against the sun,' < wither[1], against, contrary to, + -shins, -sins, etc., a form of sun, with adverbial gen. -s. More prob. withershins is a corruption of withering*, witherling*, < wither[1] + -ling[2].] In the opposite direction; hence, in the wrong way. [Scotch.]

> Go round it three times widershins, and every time say, "Open, door!" Child Rowland (Child's Ballads, I. 248).

> And my love and his bonnie ship
> Turn'd widdershins about.
> The Lowlands of Holland (Child's Ballads, II. 215).

wither-wrung (with'ėr-rung), a. [< wither(s) + wrung.] Injured in the withers, as a horse.

> The hurt expressed by witherwrung sometimes is caused by the bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit.
> Farrier's Dict. (Johnson.)

with-go† (with-gō'), v. t. [< with- + go.] To forgo; give up.

> Esau, . . who . . . did withgo his birthright.
> Barrow, Sermons, III. xv.

withhault† (with-hâlt'). A spurious preterit of withhold. Spenser, F. Q., II. xi. 9.

withhold (with-hōld'), v. t.; pret. and pp. withheld, ppr. withholding. [< ME. withholden, withhalde, keep back, hold back; < with-, against, + hold[1], v. Cf. withdraw.] I. trans. 1. To hold back, keep from action; restrain; check.

> Enforcest thow the to aresten or withholden the swyftnesse and the sweygh of hir turnynge wheel?
> Chaucer, Boethius, ii. prose 2.

> You all did love him once, not without cause;
> What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?
> Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 108.

> Life, anguish, death, immortal love,
> Ceasing not, mingled, unrepress'd,
> Apart from place, withholding time.
> Tennyson, Arabian Nights.

2. To keep back; refrain from doing, giving, permitting, etc.: as, to withhold payment; to withhold assent to something.

> Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 2. 7.

> Was it ever denied that the favours of the Crown were constantly bestowed and withheld purely on account of . . religious opinions? Macaulay, Sir J. Mackintosh.

3†. To keep; retain; hold; detain.

> If [the Lord's Prayer] is short, for it sholde be kouthe the more lightly, and for to withholden it the more esily in herte. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

> We haue herde sey that ye with holde alle the sowdiours that to yow will come. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 208.

4†. To keep; maintain.

> He . . ran to London unto seynt Poules,
> To seken him a chaunterie for soules,
> Or with a bretherhed to been withholde.
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 511.

5†. To engage; retain.

> To us surgiens aperteneth that we do to every wight the best that we kan whereas we been withholde.
> Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

II. intrans. To refrain; stay back; hold one's self in check.

> They withheld and did no more harte, & ye people came trembling, & brought them the best provisions they had.
> Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 108.

> He was fled, and so they missed of him; but understood that Squanto was alive; so they withheld, and did no hurt.
> N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 71.

withholder (with-hōl'dėr), n. [< withhold + -er[1].] One who withholds.

> The words are spoken against them that invadé tithes and church rights; and that which is there threatened happened to this withholder.
> Stephens, Addition to Speiman on Sacrilege, p. 138.

withholdment (with-hōld'ment), n. [< withhold + -ment.] The act of withholding. Imp. Dict.

within (wi-thin'), adv. and prep. [< ME. within, withinne, withynne, withinnen, < AS. withinnan, on the inside, < with, against, with, + innan, adv., in: see in[1].] I. adv. 1. In or into the interior; inside; as regards the inside; on the inside; internally.

> That thurle a nutte, and stuffe it so withinne
> With brymstoon, chaf, and cedria, thees three.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

> Damascus does not answer within to its outward appearance Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 118.

> It is designed, within and without, of two stories.
> E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 50.

2. In the mind, heart, or soul; inwardly.

> You frame my thoughts, and fashion me within.
> Spenser, Sonnets, viii.

> I am, within, thy love without, thy master.
> T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, iv. 11.

> Think not the worse, my friends, I shed not tears;
> Great griefs lament within.
> Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.

3. In the house or dwelling: indoors; at home: as, the master is within.

> But at this hour the house doth keep itself;
> There's none within. Shak., As you Like it, iv. 3. 88.

> Serv. Your brother, sir, is speaking to a gentleman in the street, and says he knows you are within.
> Joseph S. 'Sdeath, blockhead, I'm not within — I'm out for the day. Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

From within, from the inside; from the inner place or point of view.

> We look from within, and see nothing but the mould formed by the elements in which we are incased; other observers look from without, and see us as living statues.
> O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

II. prep. 1. In or into the inner or interior part or parts of; inside of; in the space inclosed or bounded by: as, within the city: opposed to without.

> Mount Syon is with inne the Cytee.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 92.

> Come not within these doors; within this roof
> The enemy of all your graces lives.
> Shak., As you Like it, ii. 3. 17.

> Accominticus and Passataquack are two convenient Harbours for small Barkes: and a good Country within their craggy clifts. Capt. John Smith, Works, II. 198.

> And now the Kingdom is come to Unity within it self, one King and one People. Baker, Chronicles, p. 78.

> Without and eke within
> The Walls of London there is Sin.
> Howell, Letters, I. vi. 51.

> The perilous situation of the Christian cavaliers pent up and beleaguered within the walls of Alhama spread terror among their friends. Irving, Granada, p. 47.

2. Included or comprehended in.

> Extension apprehended is said to be within consciousness. Veitch, Introd. to Descartes's Method, p. lxx.

3. Among.

> To save our selves therefore, and resist the common enemy, it concerns us mainly to agree within ourselves. Milton, True Religion.

> When we were come within the sandy hills, we were surprised at the sight of a magnificent tent, where a handsome collation was prepared.
> Pococke, Description of the East, I. 13.

4. In the course, range, reach, compass, or limits of; not beyond or more than: of distance, time, length, quantity. (a) Of distance: At or to a point distant less than; nearer than: as, within a mile of Edinburgh.

> As sone as Ermonye the kyng
> Sawe that he was withynne his weyones lengthe,
> Anon he smote Att hym with all his strength.
> Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 3044.

> The place shewn us for this City consisted of only a few Houses, on the tops of the Mountains, within about half a Mile of the Sea. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 48.

> Not the sage Alquife, the magician in Don Bellianis of Greece, nor the no less famous Urganda the sorceress, his wife . . could pretend to come within a league of the truth. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 19.

(b) Of time: In the limits or course of; before the expiration of; in: as, he will be here within two hours.

> Thow getis tydandis I drowe, within tone dayes,
> That some trofere es tyde sone thow fro Sothe turnande.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2481.

The grete and olde cytie of Anthyochie, where seynt Peter preached and dyd many myracles, and there he baptyzed above .x.M. men within .vii. dayes.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 48.

We arrived within this hour. Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 2.

(c) Not exceeding the space of; during; throughout.

He should maintaine possession by some of those vast Countries within the tearme of sixe yeares.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 80

(d) So as not to exceed or overpass; under; below: as, to live within one's income.

Alle the children that weren in Bethlem, and in alle the coostis of it, fro two yeer age and with ynne Wyclif, Mat. ii. 16.

'Tis a good rule, eat within your Stomack, act within your Commission. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 88

I therefore bid them look upon themselves as no better than a kind of assassins and murderers within the law.
Addison, Tatler, No. 181.

5. In; in the purview, scope, or sphere of action of.

Againe I see, within my glass of Steele,
But foure estates, to serue echo country Soyle.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed Arber), p. 57

Both he and she are still within my pow'r.
Dryden, Aureugzebe, i. 1.

After living for three years within the subtile influence of an intellect like Emerson's.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 27.

6†. In advance of; before.

The fifth [time of prayer] two houres within night, before they goe to sleepe. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 282.

It was seen, several nights together, in the west, about an hour within the night.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 325.

7†. All but; lacking.

I served three years, within a bit, under his honour, in the Royal Inniskillions. Sheridan, St Patrick's Day, i. 1

To get within one†, See get!. Wheels within wheels. See wheel!.—Within call, compass, hail, etc. See the nouns. Within land†, inland.

The Ports dwell an hundred miles within Land, are low like the Wayanasses, live on Pinenuts, and small Cocos as bigge as Apples. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 840.

Within one's hand. See hand.

withinforth† (wi-thin'forth), adv. [< ME. with inne-forth; < within + forth!.] Within.

The formes that resten withinne forth.
Chaucer, Boethius, v. prose 3.

Beware of the false prophetes that come to you in the clothinge of shepe, and yet withinforth been rauenous wolues. Sir T. More, Works, p. 281

Withinforth, farther into the firme land, inhabite the Caudei. Holland, tr. of Pliny, vi 29.

withinside (wi-thin'sid), adv. [< within + side!.] In the inner part; on the inside.

A small oval picture of a young lady . . . that was fixed in a pannel within-side of the door
Graves, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 1

withnay† (with-nā'), v. t. [< ME. withnayen, < with- + nay.] To refuse; deny.

Yit if that withnay
Her fruyt, the fattest roote away that tere.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 102.

without (wi-thout'), adv., prep., and conj. [< ME. withoute, withouten, withute, withuten, wit ute, wituten, < AS. withútan (= Icel. rithutan), on the outside of, < with, against, + útan, outside, from without: see out.] I. adv. 1. On or as to the outside; outwardly; externally.

Pitch it [the ark] within and without. Gen. vi. 14

The Dukes Palace seemeth to be faire, but I was not in it, onely I saw it without. Coryat, Crudities, I 100.

2. Out of doors; outside, as of a room or a house.

Sir, there 's a gentlewoman without would speak with your worship.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, iv 3.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please, but you shall snarl without.
Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires 1. 217

3. As regards external acts or the outer life; externally.

Without unspotted, innocent within,
She feared no danger, for she knew no sin
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 3

From without, from the outside; opposed to from within: as, sounds from without reached their ears.

These were from without
The growing miseries. Milton, P. L., x. 714

The object of the historian's imitation is not within him, it is furnished from without.
Macaulay, Sir James Mackintosh

II. prep. 1. Outside of; at or on the exterior or outside of; external to; out of: opposed to within: as, without the walls.

With in the Cytie and with oute ben many fayre Gardynes, and of dyuerse frutes Mandeville, Travels, p. 125.

Then without the doors, thrice to the South, every one bowing his knee in honour of the fire.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 34.

I do not feel it, I do not think of it; it is a thing without me. B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iv. 4.

Their boat was cast away upon a strand without Long Island. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 39.

At such a time the mind of the prosperous man goes, as it were, abroad, among things without him.
Steele, Spectator, No. 19.

I was received . . . with great civility by the superior, who met us without the gate.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 225.

2. Out of the limits, compass, range, reach, or powers of; beyond.

The ages that succeed, and stand far off
To gaze at your high prudence, shall admire,
And reckon it an act without your sex
B. Jonson, Sejanus, ii 1.

As to the Palace of Versailles (which is yet some Miles further, within the Mountainous Country, not unlike Black Heath or Tunbridge), 'tis without dispute the most magnificent of any in Europe.
Lister, Journey to Paris, p. 201.

Eternity, before the world and after, is without our reach T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

3. Lacking; destitute of; exempt or free from; unconnected with; independent of: noting loss, absence, negation, privation, etc.: as, to be without money; to do without sleep; without possibility of error; without harm.

Thei seyn that, whan he schalle come in to another World, he schalle not ben with outen an Hows, ne with outen Hors, ne with outen Gold and Sylver.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 253.

Now times have bene without badd men
Spenser, State of Ireland.

Now, ladies, to glad your aspects once again with the sight of Love, and make a spring smile in your faces, which must have looked like winter without me.
B. Jonson, Challenge at Tilt.

King John lived to have three Wives. His first was Alice, Daughter of Hubert Earl of Morton, who left him a Widower without Issue. Baker, Chronicles, p. 74.

Hee gave him wisdome at his request, and riches without asking Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus

Having marked the hour of relieving guard, and made all necessary observations, he retired without being discovered Irving, Granada, p. 29

The darkness was intense, we were ignorant of the ford and without guides, and were encumbered with nearly two hundred wounded, whom we were unwilling to abandon
The Century, XLI. 411.

In colloquial language the object is frequently omitted after this preposition, especially in such phrases as to do without, to go without, as, they can give me no assistance, so I must do without

And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best were as it is, or best without Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 98.

Cold without See cold.—Indorsement without recourse. See indorsement.—To go without saying. See go. Without book, day, dispute, distinction, dread†, See the nouns. Without fail. See fail!. Without more bones See bone!. Without prejudice, price, reserve. See the nouns.

III. conj. Without is sometimes used to govern a substantive clause introduced by that, without that thus signifying unless, except; and then, the that being omitted, it obtains the value of a conjunction (like because, while, since, etc.) in the same sense; but it is now rarely, if ever, used thus by careful and correct speakers and writers.

Without that she myght have his loue ageyn,
She were on don for euere in certayne.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 476

And it is so sumptuous and so straunge a werke that it passeth for my reason and vnderstandynge to make any reporte of it, without I shulde apayre the fame thereof
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 70

He may stay him, marry, not without the prince be willing Shak., Much Ado, iii. 3. 86.

We should make no mention of what concerns ourselves, without it be of matters wherein our friends ought to rejoice Steele, Spectator, No. 100.

I needs must break
These bonds that so defame me, not without
She wills it: would I if she will'd it?
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

without-door (wi-thout'dor), a. Outdoor; exterior; outward; external.

Praise her but for this her without door form
Shak., W. T., ii. 1. 69

withoute†, withouten†, adv., prep., and conj. Obsolete forms of without.

without-forth† (wi-thout'forth), adv. [< ME. withoutforth, with-oute forth, withouten forth; < without + forth!.] Without.

Ymagenacions of sensible things weren engrevnted into soules fro bodies withoute forth
Chaucer, Boethius, iv. mezer 4

Also rarely used adjectively

The withoutforth [var. forein, p. 23] landys and tenementis of citezens which shalbe mynesters of the cite shalbe bounde to conserue theym agreynst the Kynge endamaged for there offyces as there tenementis within the citee Arnold's Chron. (1502), p. 9 withoutside† (wi-thout'sid), adv. [< without + side!.] Outside; externally; on the outside.

Not meeting with him, I fancy'd he had some private Way up the Chimney. . . . So, Sir, I turn'd my Coat here, to save it clean, and up I scrambled: but when I came withoutside, I saw nobody there Mrs. Centlivre, Marplot, ii. 1.

Why does that lawyer wear black? does he carry his conscience withoutside? Congreve, Love for Love, iv. 6.

withsafe† (with-sāf'), v. [Early mod. E. withsafe, withsafe, withsave; appar. an artificial formation, < with- + safe, in imitation of vouchsafe. There may have been some confusion with withsay, withsay implying 'oppose' and withsafe 'consent.'] I. trans. To make safe; assure.

Now must I seek some other ways Myself for to withsave
Wyatt, He Repenteth that He had Ever Loved.

II. intrans. To vouchsafe; deign.

I withsafe, I am content to do a thyng Je daigne. . . . I was wonte to crouche and knele to hym, and I do nat withsafe to looke upon hym Palsgrave, p. 788.

withsaint. Infinitive of withsay. Chaucer.

withsay† (with-sā'), v. t. [ME. withsayen, withseggen, withsiggen; < with! + say!.] To speak against; contradict; deny; refuse.

That I with-segge,
No schal the bit bighinne,
Till I suddeine winne
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 1276.

Finally, what wight that it withseyde,
It was for nought. Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 316.

Of soch thynge herde I neuer speke, but by youre semblaunte ye seme alle worthi men, and therfore I will in no wise with-seye that ye requere, and be ye right welcome.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 204.

withsayer† (with-sā'ėr), n. [ME. withseiere; < withsay + -er!.] One who withsays; an opponent.

That he be myght to much styre in holsum doctryne, and the withseieris to with stonde Wyclif, Pref. Ep., p. 63.

withset† (with set'), v. t. [< ME. withsetten (= G. widersetzen); < with! + set!, v.] To set against; resist; oppose; withstand.

More-ouer thou hast holi writt that eiherll schewith thee goostli liht
How thou schuldist dredli synne with-sett,
Political Poems, etc. (ed Furnivall), p. 185.

Of God the more grace thou hast serteyn,
If thou with sett the devyl in his dede
Coventry Mysteries, p. 212.

with-sitt†, v. t. [ME. withsitten; < with + sitt!.] To oppose; contradict; withstand.

Was no beggere so bolde bote-yf he blynde were,
That derst with sitte that Peeres seyde for fere of eyre thinger. Piers Plowman (C), ix. 202.

withstand (with stand'), v.; pret. and pp. withstood, ppr. withstanding. [< ME. withstandan, withstonden (pret. withstod, pp. withstonde), < AS. withstandan (pret. withstód, pp. withstanden) (= Icel. rithstanda; cf. G. widerstehen), resist, withstand, < with, against, + standan, stand: see with! and stand, v.] I. trans. To stand against; oppose; resist, either with physical or with moral force: frequently with an implication of effectual resistance; resist or oppose successfully: as, to withstand the storm.

My goynge graunted is by parlament
So forforth that it may not be withstonde
Chaucer, Troilus, iv 1298.

Withstande the seruaunte, that prayseth the, for ellys he thynkyth the for to deceyve
Political Poems, etc. (ed Furnivall), p. 31.

When Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face. Gal. ii. 11.

Youth and health have withstood well the involuntary and voluntary hardships of her lot
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 1.

Poor beauty! Time and fortune's wrong
No shape nor feature may withstand;
The wrecks are scattered all along,
Like emptied sea-shells on the sand
O. W. Holmes, Mare Rubrum.

Syn. Resist, etc. (see oppose), confront, face.

II. intrans. To make a stand; resist; show resistance.

All afferuyt hit fast with a fyn wyll,
Sane Ector the honorable that egerly with-stod, Dismont to the dede A dernely he gayde
"Hit is falshed in faythe A of fer cast"
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7844.

But Fate withstands and to oppose the attempt Medius with Gorgonian terrour guards
The ford Milton, P. L., ii. 610.

withstander (with-stan'dėr), n. [< withstand + -er!.] One who withstands; an opponent; a resisting power withwind (with'wind), n. [Also withywind; < ME. withwinde, withewynde, < AS. withwinde, withwinde (= MD. wedewinde; cf. Icel. vithvidill = Dan. vedbendel), < withthe, withy, a flexible twig, + winde*, < windan, wind: see withe, withy, and wind!.] The bindweed, Convolvulus arvensis or C. sepium; occasionally, one of a few other plants.

He bare a burdoun ybounde with a brode liste,
In a withewyndes wise ywounden aboute.
Piers Plowman (B), v. 525.

Sea withwind. See sea-withwind.

withwine (with'wīn), n. A corruption of withwind.

withy[1] (with'i), n. [< ME. withy, wythy, withi, < AS. withig, also withthe (> ult. E. with[2], withe), a willow, = OFries. withthe = MD. weede, D. wede, weede, hop-plant, = MLG. wide, LG. wiede, wied, wede, wide = OHG. wida, MHG. wide, G. weide, a willow, = Icel. viðja, a withy, við, a withe, viðir, a willow, = Sw. vide, willow, vidja, willow-twig, = Dan. vidje, a willow, osier (the forms showing two orig. types, represented by withy[1] and with[2], withe, and a variation also in the length of the vowel); cf. Lith. zil-witis, zil-wytis, gray willow, Russ. vitu, withe, OBulg. viti, string for a heron, viti, twist, braid; L. vitis, vine, Gr. ἰτέα, a willow, a wicker shield; orig. 'that which twines or bends,' < √ wi, twine, plait, as in L. viere, twine, > vimen, twig, etc.] 1. A willow of any species. [Prov. Eng.]

See where another hides himself as sly
As did Actæon or the fearful deer,
Behind a withy
J. Dennys (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 170).

The Withy is a reasonable large tree (for some have been found ten feet about). Evelyn, Sylva, i. 20.

2. A withe; a twig; an osier.

With grene wythyes y bounden wonderlye.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 58.

A kind of oblong vessel made of bark, by the simple contrivance of tying up the two ends with a withy
Cook, First Voyage, III. 8.

3. A halter made of withes.—4. In ceram., same as twig[1], 3. Gray withy, the sallow or goat willow, Salix caprea. Hoop withy. Same as hoop-withe. See Rivina.

withy[2] (with'i or wi'thi), a. [< withe, with[2], + -y[1].] Made of withes; like a withe; flexible and tough.

I learnt to fold my net, . . .
And withy labyrinths in straits to set.
P. Fletcher, Piscatory Eclogues, i. 5.

Thirsil from withy prison, as he uses,
Lets out his flock.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, iii.

withy-pot† (with'i-pot), n. A vessel or nest of osiers or twigs

There were withy-potts or nests for the wild fowle to lay their eggs in, a little above ye surface of ye water Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 9, 1665.

withywind† (with'i-wind), n. Same as withwind. Minsheu.

Whiter Galot then the white withie-winde.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 521.

witjar† (wit'jär), n. [< wit[1] + jar[3], n.] The head; the brainpan; the skull. [Old slang.]

Dr. Hale, who was my good Antolfo (you read Ariosto, Jack), and has brought me back my wit-jar, had much ado . . . to effect my recovery.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, V. cxxxiii.

witless (wit'les), a. [Also formerly or dial. weetless; < ME. witles, < AS. witleas* (in deriv. witlēst), (= Icel. vitlauss), witless; as wit[1] + -less.] 1. Destitute of wit or understanding; thoughtless; unreflecting; stupid.

But, man, as thou wittles were,
thou lokist euere doumwarde as a beast.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 185.

Raymounde semede all witless to deuise,
All meruelsd that gan it aduertise.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2846.

And weetless wandered
From shore to shore emongst the Lyblck sandes, Ere rest he fownd. Spenser, F. Q., III. 9. 41.

A wifty mother! witless else her son
Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 266.

2. Not knowing; unconscious. [Rare.]

Smiling, all weetless of th' uplifted stroke, Hung o'er his harmless head. J. Baillie.

3. Proceeding from thoughtlessness or folly; not under the guidance of judgment; foolish; indiscreet; senseless; silly.

Fond termes, and witlesse words.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., July.

Youth, and cost, and witless bravery.
Shak., M. for M., I. 3. 10.

witlessly (wit'les-li), adv. In a witless manner; without the exercise of judgment; without understanding. Beau. and Fl.

witlessness (wit'les-nes), n. The state or character of being witless; want of judgment, understanding, or consideration.

Wilful witlessness. Sir F. Sandys, State of Religion.

witling (wit'ling), n. [< wit[2] + -ling[1].] A pretender to wit; a would-be wit.

A bean and witling perish'd in the throng.
Pope, E. of the L., v. 89.

Newspaper witlings. Goldsmith, Retaliation, Postscript.

The witlings of Bath, constantly buzzing about him [Mr. Quin] to catch each accent falling from his tongue in order to pass it current for their own, were not content with robbing him of his wit, but more than once attacked his reputation. Life of Quin (reprint 1887), p. 52.

witloof (wit'lōf), n. [D., lit. 'white-leaf.'] A variety of chicory with large roots, and forming a close head of leaves like that of a Cos lettuce. In Brussels these heads are cooked as a dinner-vegetable. Witloof is less bitter than the common chicory, and forms an equally good winter salad; its thick stubby root also is as good as the ordinary for mixing with coffee. Also called large-rooted Brussels chicory.

witmonger (wit'mung'gėr), n. One who deals or indulges in wit of a poor or low kind; a witling. Wood, Athenæ Oxon.

witness (wit'nes), n. [< ME. witnesse, witnisse, < AS. witnes, also ge-witnes (= MD. wetenisse = OHG. gawizzanassi), testimony, < witen,* orig. pp. of witan, know, or rather of witan, see, + -nes, E. -ness: see wit[1] and -ness. Cf. forgiveness for forgivenness.*] 1. Testimony; attestation of a fact or event; evidence: often with bear: as, to bear witness.

If he aske as for more witnesse,
Who sent to hym and how that I hym knewe,
Telle hym it is his sone Generydes.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2382.

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true.
John v. 31.

Heaven and thy thoughts are witness.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 6. 32.

The witness of the Wapentake is distinctly against the claimant. E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, V. 518.

2. One who or that which bears testimony or furnishes evidence or proof.

Laban said, This heap is a witness between me and thee this day Gen. xxxi. 48.

Your mother lives a witness to that vow.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 180.

These, opening the prisons and dungeons, call'd out of darknesse and bonds the elect Martyrs and witnesses of their Redeemer. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

3. One who is personally present and sees some act or occurrence, or hears something spoken, and can therefore bear witness to it; a spectator.

Neither can I rest
A silent witness of the headlong rage,
Or heedless folly, by which thousands die.
Cowper, Task, iii. 218.

4†. A sponsor, as at a baptism or christening.

He was witness for Win here— they will not be called godfathers and named her Win-the-fight.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, i. 1.

5. In law: (a) One who gives testimony on the trial of a cause; one who appears before a court, judge, or other officer, and is examined under oath or affirmation. (b) One whose testimony is offered, or desired and expected. (c) One in whose presence or under whose observation a fact occurred. (d) One who upon request by or on behalf of a party subscribes his name to an instrument to attest the genuineness of its execution: more exactly, an attesting witness or a subscribing witness.

He had hym goo and in no wise to fayle
To the Sowdon, and telle hym the processe,
And he wold be on of his cheff witnesse.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1509.

Is it not
A perfect act, and absolute in law,
Sealed and delivered before witnesses,
The day and date emergent?
B. Jonson, Staple of News, v. 1.

6. In bookbinding, an occasional rough edge on the leaf of a bound book, which is a testimony that the leaves have not been unduly trimmed. [Eng.]—Auricular, credible, intermediate witness. See the adjectives.—Hostile witness, a witness who manifests a disposition to injure the case of the party by whom he is called. The party is allowed in such a case to put leading and searching questions such as he could not otherwise put to his own witness, and to contradict his testimony more freely.—Second-hand witness. See second hand[1].—To impeach a witness. See impeach.—Ultroneous witness. See ultroneous.—With a witness†, with great force, so as to leave some mark as a testimony behind; to a great degree, with a vengeance

This I confess, is haste, with a witness. Latimer.

Here's packing, with a witness!
Shak., T. of the S., v. 1. 121.

witness (wit'nes), v. [< ME. witnessen, witnissen, witnessen; < witness, n.] I. intrans. 1. To bear witness or testimony; give evidence; testify.

And the storye of Noe witnessethe, whan that the Culver brought te the Braunche of Olyve that betokend Pes betwene God and Man. Mandeville, Travels, p. 11.

The men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, . . . saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. 1 Ki. xxi. 13.

The prisoner brought several persons of good credit to witness to her reputation. Addison, Tatler, No. 236.

2†. To take witness or notice.

Witnesse on him, that any peril clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercacioun
In this matere and greet dispatisoun.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 424.

Witnessing clause. Same as testatum.

II. trans. 1. To give testimony to; testify; bear witness of, or serve as evidence of; attest; prove; show.

We purchace, thurgh oure flatervng,
Of riche men of gret pouste,
Lettres to witnesse oure bounte.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 6965.

For I witnesse you, and say in thys place
That he was a trew catholike persou.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1529.

Behold how many things they witness against thee.
Mark xv. 4.

Methought you said
You saw one here in court could witness it.
Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 200.

For what they did they had custom for; and could produce, if need were, testimony that would witness it for more than a thousand years.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

[Witness in this sense is often used in the subjunctive imperatively or optatively, in many cases with inversion.

Heaven witness,
I have been to you a true and humble wife.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 23.

Pilgrims should watch, . . . but, for want of doing so, oftttimes their rejoicing ends in tears, and their sunshine in a cloud; witness the story of Christian at this place.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.]

2. To show by one's behavior; betray as a sentiment.

Capt. Dekings, an anabaptist and one that had witnessed a great deal of discontent with the present proceedings.
Pepys, Diary, Apr. 15, 1660.

Long mute he stood, and, leaning on his staff,
His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh.
Dryden, Cym. and Iph., l. 112.

3. To see or know by personal presence; be a witness of; observe.

This is but a faint sketch of the incalculable calamities and horrors we must expect, should we ever witness the triumphs of modern infidelity. R. Hall.

What various scenes, and O! what scenes of woe,
Are witnessed by that red and struggling beam!
Scott, L. of the L., vi. 1.

My share of the gayety consisted in witnessing the daily apparelling of Eliza and Georgiana, and seeing them descend to the drawing-room dressed out in thin muslin frocks and scarlet sashes, with hair elaborately ringleted.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, iv.

4. To see the execution of and affix one's name to (a contract, will, or other document) for the purpose of establishing its identity: as, to witness a bond or a deed.—5. To foretell; presage; foretoken. [Rare.]

Ah, Richard, . . .
I see thy glory like a shooting star
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest.
Shak., Rich. II., ii. 4. 22.

=Syn. 3. Perceive, Observe, etc. See see[1].

witness-box (wit'nes-boks), n. The inclosure in which a witness stands while giving evidence in a court of law.

witnesser (wit'nes-ėr), n. [< witness + -er[1].] One who gives or bears testimony.

A constant witnesser of the passion of Christ.
T. Martin, Marriage of Priests.

witnessfully† (wit'nes-fūl-i), adv. [ME. wytnessefully; < witness + -ful + -ly[2].] By witnesses; with proof; manifestly; publicly.

In this wyse more clerly and more wytnessefully is the office of wise men i-treted. Chaucer, Boethius, iv. prose 5.

witness-stand (wit'nes-stand), n. The place where a witness, while giving evidence in court, is stationed.

witsafe†, v. t. See withsafe.

wit-snapper† (wit'snap'ėr), n. One who affects repartee.

Goodly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you!
Shak., M. of V., iii. 5. 55.

witstand† (wit'stand), n. [< wit[2] + stand, n.] The state of being at one's wits' end; hence, a standstill. [Rare.]

They were at a witstand, and could reach no further.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 128. (Davies.)

wit-starved (wit'stärvd), a. Barren of wit; destitute of genius. [Rare.] (Imp. Dict.) wittal[1]†, n. An obsolete form of witwall.

wittal[2]†, n. See wittol[1].

wittet, n. An obsolete spelling of wit[1].

witted (wit'ed), a. [< wit[1] + -ed[2].] Having wit or understanding: commonly used in compounds, as quick-witted, slow-witted, etc.

[illegible] quick and fine witted, de[illegible] in business, and whose need requireth able to [illegible] much bodily labour.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Renowned, called Dainimel, appears.
Marston, The Fawne, v.

witter, a. [ME. witter, witer, < Icel. vitr, knowing, < vita, know: see wit[1].] Knowing; certain; sure.

The wretch the child [Isaac] witter and war
That thor sal offrande hen don Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 1308.

witter, v. t. [ME. witteren, witeren, < Icel. vitra, make wise, make certain, < vitr, knowing: see witter.] To make sure; inform; declare (that).

I witter thē the empereur es entirde into Fraunce.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1239.

witteringt, n. [ME., verbal n. of witter, v.] Information; knowledge.

Lous Joseph, who tolde yow this?
How hadde ge witteringe of this dede?
York Plays, p. 142.

witterlyt (wit'ėr-li), adv. [ME., also witterliche, witerliche, etc.; < witter + -ly[2].] Certainly; surely; truly.

I blusshet hom on.
I walled hem witterly, as me wele thoght,
All feture in fere of the fre ladys.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3428.

Ful acorded was hit witterly.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2608.

witters, n. pl. See withers.

witticaster (wit'i-kas-tėr), n. [< witty + -caster as in criticaster.] An inferior or pretended wit.

The mention of a nobleman seems quite sufficient to arouse the spleen of our witticaster. Milton wittichenite (wit'i-ken-it), n. A sulphid of bismuth and copper, related in form and composition to bournonite. It was first found at Wittichen, Baden.

witticism (wit'i-sizm), n. [< witty + -ism as in Atticism, Gallicism, etc.] A witty sentence, phrase, or remark; an observation characterized by wit.

You have quite undone the young King with your Witticisms, and ruin'd his Fortunes utterly Milton, Ans. to Salmasius, iii.

The witty poets . . . have taken an advantage from the doubtful meaning of the word fire to make an infinite number of witticisms. Addison, Spectator, No. 62.

Every witticism is an inexact thought; what is perfectly true is imperfectly witty.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Diogenes and Plato

wittifiedt (wit'i-fid), a. [< wittify* (< witty + -fy) + -ed[2].] Having wit; clever; witty.

Diverse of these were . . . dispersed to those wittified ladies who were willing to come into the order.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, I. 50. (Davies.)

wittily (wit'i-li), adv. [< ME. wittily; < witty + -ly[2].] In a witty manner. (a) Knowingly; intelligently; ingeniously, cunningly, artfully

Time only & custom haue authoritie to do, specially in all cases of language, as the Poet hath wittily remembred.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 104.

The wittily and strangely cruel Macro
B. Jonson, Sejanus, v. 10

(b) With a witty turn or phrase, or with an ingenious and amusing association of ideas; clearly, brilliantly

In conversation wittily pleasant. Sir P. Sidney.

It would a little cool the preternatural heat of the flingbrand fraternity, as one wittily calleth them.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 125.

wittiness (wit'i-nes), n. 1. The character of being witty; the quality of being ingenious or clever.

Wittinesse in devising, . . . pithinesse in uttering.
E. K., To G. Harvey (Prefixed to Spenser's Shep. Cal.).

2†. Something that is witty; an ingenious invention.

The third, in the discoloured mantle spangled all over, is Euphantaste, a well-conceited wittiness, and employed in honouring the court with the riches of her pure invention. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

witting† (wit'ing), n. [Also weeting (and erroneously wotting); < ME. witinge, wetynge; verbal n. of wit[1], v.] Knowledge; perception.

That were an abusyoun
That God ahoolde han no parfit clere weetynge
More than we men, that han doutetous wenynge.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 991.

wittingly (wit'ing-li), adv. [Formerly also wetingly; < ME. witingly, wetyngly, witindeliche (= MHG. wizzentliche = Icel. vitanliga); < witting, ppr. of wit[1], v., + -ly[2].] In a witting manner; knowingly; consciously; by design.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world.
Sir T. More.

To which sith for his sake had wettingly now brought her selfe, and blam'd her noble blood.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. x. 11.

I would not wittingly dishonor my work by a single falsehood, misrepresentation, or prejudice, though it should gain our forefathers the whole country of New England Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 201.

wittol1† (wit'ol), n. [Formerly also wittal, wittall (also wittold, with excrescent d as in cuckold), orig. witwal, a particular use of witwal, the popinjay: see witwal. This bird was the subject of frequent ribald allusions, similar to the allusions to the cuckoo which are prominent in the English drama of Shakspere and his contemporaries and which produced the word cuckold. The addition of the notion of 'knowing' and submitting may be due to the popular association with wit, which produced the etymology < wit[1] + all.] A man who knows his wife's infidelity and submits to it; a submissive cuckold.

Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer well; . . . yet they are . . . the names of fiends; but, Cuckold, Wittol. Cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name!
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 313.

Fond wittoll, that wouldst load thy witless head
With timely horns, before thy bridal bed!
Bp. Hall, Satires, I. vii. 17

To see . . . a wittol wink at his wife's honesty, and too perspicuous in all other affairs
Burton Anat. of Mel., p. 44.

There was no peeping hole to clear
The wittal's eye from his incarnate fear Quarles, Emblems, i. 5.

wittol1† (wit'ol), v. t. [Also wittal; < *wittol*1, n.] To make a wittol, or contented cuckold, of.

He would wittal me
With a consent to my own horns.
Davenport, City Night Cap, i. 1.

wittol2 (wit'ol), n. A dialectal reduction of whitleal. [Cornwall, Eng.]

wittolly†, a. [< *wittol*1 + *-ly*1.] Like or characteristic of a wittol, or submissive cuckold. Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 283.

Her husband was hanged for his wittoldly permission, and shee herselfe drowned. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 293.

wit-tooth (wit'tōth), n. A wisdom-tooth.

witts (wits), n. pl. Same as tin-nuts.

When much pyrites [in the bearing rock] is present, it is necessary to make a preliminary concentration, and roast the enriched product (witts) in a furnace witty (wit'i), a. [< ME. witty, wity, witig, < AS. witig, wittig = OS witig = OHG. wizzig, MHG. witzec(g), G. witzig = Icel. vitugr = Sw. vittig = Dan. vittig), knowing, wise, < wit, knowledge, wit: see wit[1], and cf. witch[1].] 1†. Possessed of wisdom or learning; wise; discreet; knowing; artful.
Encyc. Brit., XVI. 400

The wittiest that ony wight is bote yf he worche therafter.
The bitterest he shal a-bygge bote yf he wel worche.
Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 219.

A witty man taketh preved thinge, and chaunge
He maketh, that lande from lande is not to strange.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

Tamb. Are you the witty king of Persia?
Myc. 'Tis more than I have you any wit to me?
Tamb. I would entreat you speak but three wise words.
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., II. 4.

The deep, revolving, witty Buckingham.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 2. 42.

Upon each shoulder sits a milk-white dove,
And at her feet do witty serpents move.
B. Jonson, The Barriers.

2†. Exhibiting intelligence or ingenuity; clever; skilfully devised.

Silence in love betrays more wo
Than words, though ne'er so witty;
A beggar that is dumb, you know,
May challenge double pity.
Raleigh, Silent Lover (Ellis's Specimens, II. 224).

Ingrateful payer of my industries,
That with a soft painted hypocrisy
Cozen'st and jeer'st my perturbation,
Expect a witty and a fell revenge!
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, v. 1.

Amongst the elder Christians, some . . . in witty torments excelled the cruelty of many of their persecutors, whose rage determined quickly in death
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 91.

3. Possessed of wit; smartly or cleverly facetious; ready with strikingly novel, clever, shrewd, and amusing sayings, or with sharp repartee; brilliant, sparkling, and original in expressing amusing notions or ideas; hence, sometimes, sarcastic; satirical: of persons.

Who so in earnest wreenes, he doth, in mine advise,
Shewe himselfe witless, or more witte than wise.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 170

Sir Ellis Layton whom I find a wonderful witty, ready man for sudden answers and little tales, and sayings very extraordinary witty. Pepys, Diary, III. 92.

In gentle Verse the Witty told their Flame,
And grac'd their choicest Song with Emma's Name
Prior, Henry and Emma.

Honeycomb, who was so unmercifully witty upon the women, . . . has given the ladies ample satisfaction by marrying a farmer's daughter.
Addison, Spectator, No. 283.

4. Characterized by or pregnant with wit; as, a witty remark or repartee.

Or rhymes or sangs he'd mak himsel',
Or witty catches
Burns, To J. Lapraik, i.

witwal1 (wit'wal), n. [Also wetwall, and formerly assimilated wittal; also erroneously whitwall; a var. of woodwal, woodwale: see woodwale, and cf. *wittol*1.] 1. The popinjay, or green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. See woodwale, and cut under popinjay.

No sound was heard, except, from far away,
The ringing of the Whitwall's shrilly laughter,
Or, now and then, the chatter of the jay.
That Echo murmur'd after.
Read, Haunted Houses, i.

2. The greater spotted woodpecker, Picus major. See cut under Picus.

witwal2†, n. See *wittol*1.

witwanton† (wit'won'ton), n. [< wit[1] + wanton.] One who indulges in idle, foolish, and irreverent fancies or speculations. Also used adjectively.

All Epicures, Wit-wantons, Atheists.
Sylvester, Lacrymæ Lacrymarum.

How dangerous it is for wit-wanton men to dance with their nice distinctions on such mystical precipices.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., X. iv. 4.

witwanton† (wit'won'ton), v. i. [< witwanton, n.] To indulge in vain, sportive, or over-subtle fancies; speculate idly or irreverently: with an indefinite it.

Dangerous it is to witwanton it with the majesty of God.
Fuller, Holy State.

wit-worm† (wit'wėrm), n. [< wit[1] + worm.] One who has developed into a wit. [Rare.]

Fal What hast thou done
With thy poor innocent self?
Gal Wherefore, sweet madam?
Fal Thus to come forth, so suddenly, a witworm?
B. Jonson, Catiline, ii. 1.

wive (wiv), v.; pret. and pp. wived, ppr. wiving. [< ME. wiven, < AS. wifian (= MD. wijven = MLG. wiven), take a wife, < wif, wife. Cf. wife, v.] I. intrans. To take a wife; marry.

Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 9. 83.

A shrewd wife brings thee luck, wive not and never thrive Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 171.

II. trans. 1. To match to a wife; provide with a wife

An I could get me but a wife . . . I were manned, horsed, and wived Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 2. 61.

Gregory VII. . . . determined . . . that no wived priest should celebrate or even assist at the Mass.
Encyc. Brit., V. 293.

2. To take for a wife; marry. [Rare.]

Should I wive an Empresse,
And take her dowerlesse, should we love, or hate,
In that my bounty equalls her estate.
Heywood, Royal King (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 79).

I have wived his sister. Scott.

wivehood† (wiv'hud), n. Same as wifehood.

That girdle gave the vertue of chast love,
And wivehood true, to all that did it beare.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. v. 8.

wivelesst (wiv'les), a. Same as wifeless.

They, in their wiveless state, run into open abominations Homilies, xviii. Of Matrimony.

wively† (wiv'li), a. Same as wifely.

Wively love. J. Udall, On 1 Cor. vii.

wivert (wi'vėr), n. [< ME. wivere, wyvere, < OF. wivre, guivre, a viper, < L. vipera, a viper: see viper. Hence wivern.] 1. A serpent.

Jalousye, allas! that wikked wyvere,
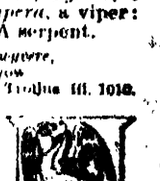
Thus causeles in croppen into yow
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1016.

2. A wivern.

wivern (wi'vėrn), n. [Also wyvern; a later form, with unorig. -n as in bittern, of wivert: see wivert.] In her., a monster whose fore part is that of a dragon with its fore legs and wings, while the hinder part has the form of a serpent with a barbed tail



Wivern.

Lakes which, when morn breaks on their quivering bed,
Blaze like a wyvern flying round the sun.
Browning, Paracelsus.

wives, n. Plural of wife.

wizard (wiz'ard), n. and a. [Formerly also wisard, wissard; < ME. wisard, wysard, wysar; prob. an altered form, assimilated initially to the related wise, for wishard* (preserved in the surnames Wishart, Wishcart, Wyvat), < OF. guischard*, prob. orig. form of OF. guischard, guiscard, guiscart, F. dial. (Norm.) guichard, cious, prudent, cunning (whence the F. surname Guiscard), with suffix -ard, < Icel. vizkr, clever, knowing, sagacious, for vitskr*, < vita, know: see wit[1]. Cf. witch[1], ult. from the same root, but having no immediate connection with wizard.] I. n. 1†. A wise man; a sage.

Hee that cannot personate the wise-man well among wizards, let him learne to play the foole well amongst dizzards.
Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn.

See how from far, upon the eastern road,
The star-led wizards haste with odours sweet.
Milton, Nativity, l. 23.

2. A proficient in the occult sciences; an adept in the black art; one supposed to possess supernatural powers, generally from having leagued himself with the Evil One; a sorcerer; an enchanter; a magician; hence, a title occasionally applied to, or assumed by, modern performers of legerdemain; a conjurer; a juggler. See witch[1].

And the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, . . . I will even set my face against that soul. Lev. xx. 6.

If by any Accident they do hear of the Thief, all is ascrib'd to the wonderful Cunning of their Wizzard.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [II. 171.

No wizards now ply their trade of selling favorable winds to the Norwegian coasters.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 136.

II. a. Magic; having magical powers; enchanting: as, a wizard spell.

Where Deva spreads her wizard stream.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 55.

wizardly (wiz'ạrd-li), adv. [< wizard + -ly[2].] Resembling a wizard; characteristic of a wizard. [Rare.]

wizardry (wiz'ạrd-ri), n. [< wizard + -ry.] The art or practices of wizards; sorcery.

Wizardry and dealing with evil spirits.
Milman, Latin Christianity, xi. 9.

wize†. An old spelling of wise[1], wise[2].

wizen[1] (wiz'n), a. [Also weazen, and formerly wizzen, wisen; < ME. wisen*, < AS. wisen* = Icel. visinn = Sw. Dan. vissen, withered, dried up; pp. of a lost verb, AS. as if wisan*, dry up. Hence wizen[1], v.] Hard, dry, and shriveled; withered.

A gay little wizen old man, in appearance, from the Eastern climate's dilapidations upon his youth and health.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, Dec., 1791.

His shadowy figure and dark weazen face.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 284.

I remember the older Mathews, a wizen dark man, with one high shoulder, a distorted mouth, a lame leg, and an irritable manner.
E. H. Yates, Fifty Years of London Life, I. i.

wizen[1] (wiz'n), v. t. and i. [Also weazen, and formerly wizzen, wisen; < ME. wisenen, < AS. wisnian, also forwisnian (= Icel. visna = Sw. vissna = Dan. visne), become dry, wither, < wisen*, dried up, wizen.] To become dry or withered; shrivel; cause to fade; make dry. [Scotch.]

O ill befa' your wizzen'd snout!
Gight's Lady (Child's Ballads, VIII. 290).

A shoemaker's lad
With wizened face in want of soap.
Browning, Christmas Eve.

wizen[2] (wiz'n), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of weasand.

wizen-faced (wiz'n-fāst), a. Having a thin, shriveled face.

The story is connected with a dingy wizen-faced portrait in an oval frame. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 40.

The door . . . was slowly opened, and a little blear-eyed, weazen-faced ancient man came creeping out.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xi.

wizier, n. Same as vizir.

wizzen†, a. and n. Same as wizen.

wk. A contraction of week.

wlappe†, v. t. [ME. wlappen, var. of wrappen: see wrap and lap[2].] To wrap; roll up.

3e schulen fynde a 3ong child wlappid in clothis and put in a cracche. Wyclif, Luke ii. 12.

wlate†, v. t. and i. [ME. wlaten, < AS. wlætian, loathe.] To feel disgust; loathe; abominate.

So the worcher of this worlde wlates ther-wyth
That in the poynt of her play he poruayes a mynde.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1501.

wlatsome†, wlatsom†, a. [< ME. wlatsom, wlatsum, loathsome, abominable, < wlate* (< AS. wlætta), nausea, disgust, + -som, E. -some.] Loathsome; detestable; hateful.

For thoug the soule haue thi lijknes,
Man is but wlatsum erthe and clay.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 173.

Mordre is so wlatsom and abhominable
To God, that is so just and resonable.
That he ne wol nat suffre it heled be.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 233.

wlonc†, wlonk†, a. and n. [ME., < AS. wlanc, wlonk (= OS. wlanc), proud, splendid.] I. a. Fine; grand; fair; beautiful.

Whyle the wlonkest wedes he warp on hym-seluen.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2025.

II. n. A fair woman; a fine lady.

Thane I went to that wlonke, and wynly hire gretis,
And cho said, "Welcome i-wis! wele arte thow fowndene."
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3339.

W. N. W. An abbreviation of west-northwest.

wo, interj. and n. See woe.

woad (wōd), n. [Also dial. wad (and ode); < ME. wod, wode, wood, wad, < AS. wād, waad = OFries. wed = D. weede, weed = MLG. wēt, weit, wēde = OHG. MHG. weit, G. waid, wait = Sw. vejde = Dan. vaid, veid = Goth. waida* (cf. ML. waida, woad; ML. guaisdium, > OF. waisde, waide, guede, F. guède = It. guado, woad), akin to L. vitrum, woad; root unknown; no connection with weld[1], which has a var. wold.] A cruciferous plant, Isatis tinctoria, formerly much cultivated in Great Britain on account of the blue dye extracted from its pulped and fermented leaves. It is now, however, nearly superseded by indigo, which gives a stronger and finer blue. It is still cultivated in some parts of Europe, and the dye which it furnishes is said to improve the quality and color of indigo when mixed with it in a certain proportion. The ancient Britons are said to have stained their bodies with the dye procured from the woad-plant.

Woad (Isatis tinctoria).

No mader, welde, or wood [var. wod] no litestere Ne knew.
Chaucer, Former Age, l. 17.

But now our sollo either will not or . . . may not beare either wad or madder.
Harrison, Descrip. of Britain, [xvii.

Admit no difference between wads and frankincense.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, ii. 1.

Wild woad. Same as weld[1].

woaded (wō'ded), a. [< woad + -ed[2].] 1. Dyed or colored blue with woad.

Then the monster, then the man;
Tattoo'd or woaded, winter-clad in skins.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

2. Produced by means of woad, or by a mixture of woad with other dyes.

Thus I have heard our merchants complain that the set up blues have made strangers loathe the rich woaded blues. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 77.

woad-mill (wōd'mil), n. A mill for bruising and preparing woad.

woadwaxen (wōd'wak'sn), n. The dyers' greenweed, Genista tinctoria. See Genista (with cut).

A cart y-lade wt wodewexen to sale
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 358.

wobble, v. and n. See wabble[1].

wobbler, n. See wabbler.

wobbly, a. See wabbly.

wobegone, a. See woebegone.

woc[1]†, a. A Middle English form of weak.

woc[2]†, v. An old spelling of woke, preterit of wake[1].

wod, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of woad.

wode[1]†, n. A Middle English form of wood[1].

wode[2]†, n. An obsolete spelling of woad. Prompt. Parv.

wodegeldt, n. [ME., < wode, wood, + geld, payment: see wood[1] and geld[2], n.] A payment for wood.

wodely†, adv. A variant of woodly.

Woden (wō'den), n. [ME. Woden, < AS. Wōden = OHG. Wodan, Wuotan = Icel. Othinn, a Teut. deity, lit. the 'furious,' the 'mighty warrior'; from a root appearing in AS. wōd, mad, furious (see wood[2]). The AS. Wōden, which would reg. give a mod. E. Wooden*, is present in Wednesday, and in many compound local names, such as Woodnesborough, Wedneslough, Wednesbury, Winsborough, Wisborow, Wednesfield, Wansford, Wanstead, Wansley, etc.] The Anglo-Saxon form of the name of the deity called by the Norse Odin.

Wodenism (wō'den-izm), n. [< Woden + -ism.] The worship of Woden.

Wodenism was so completely vanquished that even the coming of the Danes failed to revive it.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 9.

wodewale†, n. A Middle English form of woodwale.

wodnesse†, n. An obsolete form of woodness.

woe (wō), interj. [Also wo; Sc. wae; < ME. wo, woo, wa, wo, waei, wei, wai, wa, < AS. wā, interj., sometimes used with dat. case, also in combination wā lā, wā lā wā, also wālā wā, alas! lit. woe! lo! woe! (> ult. E. wellaway, welladay) = D. wee = LG. wee = G. weh = Icel. vei = Sw. ve = Dan. vee = Goth. wai, interj., woe! (cf. OF. ouais = It. Sp. guai, woe! < Teut.) = L. væ, woe! (væ victis, woe to the vanquished!) = Gr. οὐαί, woe! ah! oh! an exclamation of pain, etc., one of which the other uses grew. Hence ult. woe, n., wail[1], and wellaway, welladay; cf. also wayment.] Alas! an exclamation of pain or grief. See woe, n.

Alas and woe! Shak., A. and C., iv. 14. 104.

woe (wō), n. and a. [Also wo; Sc. wae; < ME. wo, woo, wa, also wee, the last from AS. wēa, pl. wēan, a form not immediately derivable from the interj. wā, but standing for wǣ* (wǣwe-*) = OS. wē (wew-) = D. wee = LG. wee = OHG. MHG. wē (wēw-), OHG. also wēwo, m., wēwa, f., G. wehe = Dan. vee, woe, = Goth. wai* (> It. guajo, pain); prob. from the interj.: see woe, interj.] I. n. 1. Grief; sorrow; misery; heavy calamity.

They, outcast from God, are here condemn'd
To waste eternal days in woe and pain.
Milton, P. L., ii. 695.

2. A heavy calamity; an affliction.

One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter. Rev. ix. 12.

Woe is frequently used in denunciations, either with the optative mood of the verb or alone, and thus in an interjectional manner (see woe, interj.).

Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep! Jer. xxiii. 1.

Woe to the vanquished, woe!
Dryden, Albion and Albanius, i. 1.

Woe to the dupe, and woe to the deceiver!
Woe to the oppressed, and woe to the oppressor!
Shelley, Hellas.

It is also used in exclamations of sorrow, in such cases the noun or pronoun following being really in the dative.

Woe is me! for I am undone. Isa. vi. 5.

Woe was the knight at this severe command.
Dryden, Wife of Bath, l. 108.

An' aye the o'ercome o' his sang
Was "Wae 's me for Prince Charlie!"
W. Glen, A Wee Bird cam' to our Ha' Door.

In weal and woe, in prosperity and adversity. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 987.—Woe worth the day. See worth[1], 3.=Syn. Distress, tribulation, affliction, bitterness, unhappiness, wretchedness. Woe is an intense unhappiness, the word is strong and elevated, almost poetical.

II.† a. Sad; sorrowful; miserable; woeful; wretched.

Ofte hadde Horn beo wo
Ac neure wurs than him was tho.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 4.

In this debat I was so wo,
Me thoghte myn herte braste atweyn.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1192.

He was full wo, and gan his former griefe renew.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. i. 38.

Childe Waters was a woe man, good Lord,
To see faire Ellen swimme!
Child Waters (Child's Ballads, III. 208).

woebegone, wobegone (wō'bē-gon*), a. [Early mod. E. woe-begon; < ME. wo-begon, wo-bygon; < woe, wo, n., woe, sorrow, + begone[1].] Overwhelmed with woe; immersed in grief or sorrow; also, sorrowful; rueful; indicating woe or distress: as, a woebegone look.

Thow farest ek by me, thow Pandarus!
As he that, whan a wight is wo-bygon,
He cometh to him apaas, and seith right thus:
"Thynke nat on smerte and thow shalt fele none!"
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 464.

Coumfort hem that careful been,
And helpe hem that ben wo bigoon.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 14.

Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 71.

Each man looked ruefully in his neighbor's face in search of encouragement, but only found in its woe-begone lineaments a confirmation of his own dismay.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 438.

In early use the two words are sometimes separated.

Wo was this wrecched woman tho bigon.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 820.

woeful, woful (wō'fụl), a. [Sc. waeful; < ME. woful, wofull; < woe + -ful.] 1. Full of woe; distressed with grief or calamity; afflicted; sorrowful.

O verrey goost, that errest to and fro!
Whi niltow flen out of the wofulleste
Body that evere myght on grounde go?
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 305.

What now wilt thou don, woful Palamides?
To gret hevynesse oft-sors nedis thou inclinde.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2188.

Weep no more, woful shepherds.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 165.

2. Involving or threatening woe; expressing woe; sorrowful; lamentable; deplorable.

Sing a . . . elegy extemporally a woful ditty.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 830.

A Trumpet shall sound from Heaven in woful and terrible Manner.
Burnet, Letters, iv. 43.

He [Lord Rochester] died hard, as their term of art is here, to express the woful state of most who discover no antipathy to their death.
Swift.

O, woful day! O, day of woe to me!
A. Phillips, Pastorals, iv.

3. Wretched; paltry; mean; pitiful.

What woful staff this madrigal would be!
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 418.

=Syn. 2. Mournful, calamitous, disastrous, afflictive, miserable, grievous. See woe.

woefully, wofully (wō'fụl-i), adv. In a woeful manner.

Which now among you, who lament so wofully, . . . has suffered as he suffered? V. Knox, Works, VI., serm. v.

It is a fact of which many seem woefully ignorant.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 484.

woefulness, wofulness (wō'fụl-nes), n. [< ME. wofulnesse; < woeful + -ness.] The state or quality of being woeful; misery; calamity.

Thys day can noght be saad the houlinesse mad,
Noght halfe the wofulnesse the cite haaid
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 648.

The lamenting Elegiack . . . surely is to be prayed, either for companionate accompanying that causes of lamentation, or for rightly paynting out how weake be the passions of wofulnesse.
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie, p. 44.

woesome (wō'sum), a. [Sc. wawsome; < woe + -some.] Woeful; sad; mournful.

woe-wearied (wō'wēr'id), a. Wearied out with woe or grief. [Rare.]

My woe-wearied tongue is mute and dumb
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 18.

woe-wearyt, a. [ME. wo-werie; < woe + weary.] Sad at heart.

Wo-werie and wetschod wente ich forth after,
As a recheles renke that reccheth nat of sorwe.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 1.

woe-worn (wō'wōrn), a. Worn or marked by woe or grief.

In lively mood he spoke, to wile
From Wilfrid's woe worn cheek a smile
Scott, Rokeby, v. 14

woful, wofully, etc. See woeful, etc.

woiwode, wojwoda (woi'wōd, woi-wō'da), n. Same as voivode.

woke[1]†, n. A Middle English form of week[1].

woke[2] (wōk). Preterit and past participle of wake[1].

wokent, v. A Middle English form of weaken.

wokus (wō'kus), n. [N. Amer. Ind.] A coarse meal made by the Indians of the northwest from the seeds of Nymphæa (Nuphar) polysepalum, the yellow pond-lily of that region. See pond-lily, 1.

Old Chaloquin carried his bag of wokus for food. This is the roasted and ground seeds of the yellow water-lily, and looks something like cracked wheat Amer. Nat., Nov., 1889, p. 971.

woll, v. An obsolete or dialectal form of will.

wol[2], adv. An obsolete or dialectal form of well[2].

wold[1] (wōld), n. [Formerly also would; also dial. old; < ME. wold, wald, wæld. < AS. weald, wald, a wood, forest, = OS. OFries. wald = D. woud = OHG. wald, MHG. walt, G. wald, a wood, forest (> OF. gaut, brushwood †), = Icel. vollr (gen. vallar for valdar*), a field, plain; perhaps orig. a hunting-ground, considered as 'a possession,' and so connected with AS. gewealden (= G. gewalt = Icel. vald), power, dominion, < wealdan, etc., rule, possess: see wield. Cf. Gr. ἄλσος (for Fαλτ-σος* †), a grove. Cf. weald.] An open tract of country; a down. The wolds of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire are high, rolling districts more of woods and exactly similar, both topographically and geologically, to the downs of the more southern parts of England. The Cotswold Hills, in Gloucestershire, closely resemble the downs of Kent and Sussex and the wolds of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire in every respect except the geological age of the formations by which they are underlain, which, in the case of the Cotswolds, is a calcareous rock of Jurassic, and not of Cretaceous age, as is the case with the other-mentioned wolds and downs.

Who sees not a great difference betwixt . . . the Wolds in Lincolnshire and the Fens? Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 220.

Such Mill and dale, such deepening glen and wold.
Byron, Childe Harold, ii. 38.

The notes of the robin and bluebird Sounded sweet upon wold and in wood.
Longfellow, Evangeline, ii. 4.

The wolds [of Yorkshire] constitute properly but one region, sloping from a curved summit, whose extremities touch the sea at Flamborough Head, and the Humber at Barton; but this crescent of hills is cut through by one continuous hollow,—the great Wold Valley from Scttering-ton to Bridlington. Phillips, Yorkshire, p. 41.

wold[2], n. See weld[1].

wold[3]†, woldet. Obsolete forms of would. See will.

Weldestowe. A Middle English form of wouldest thou.

wolf (wụlf), n.; pl. wolves (wụlvz). [< ME. wolf, wulf, wilf, wlfe (pl. wolves, wulves, wolues, wulfes), < AS. wulf (pl. wulfas) = OS. wulf = OFries. wolf = D. wolf = MLG. LG. wulf = OHG. MHG. G. wolf = Icel. ulfr (for vulfr*) = Sw. ulf = Dan. ulv = Goth. wulfs = OBulg. vlŭkŭ = Russ. volkŭ = Lith. wilkas = L. lupus (> It. lupo = Sp. Pg. lobo = F. loup) = Gr. λύκος = Skt. vṛika, a wolf; orig. type prob. walka*, warka*, altered variously into wlaka* (Gr. λύκος), wlupa* (L. lupus), walpa* (AS. wulf, etc.), orig. 'tearer, render,' < √ wark, Skt. √ vṛaṣch, tear, Gr. ἕλκειν, pull. L. vulpes, fox, is prob. not connected. Wolf, as a complimentary term for a warrior, is a constituent of many E. and G. names, as in Adolph, 'noble-wolf,' Rudolph, 'glory-wolf,' etc. Cf. werwolf, lupine[1], lycanthropy, etc.] 1. A digitigrade carnivorous canine quadruped, Canis lupus, of the lupine or thoöid series of Canidæ; hence, some similar animal. The common wolf of Europe, etc., is yellowish or fulvous gray, with harsh strong hair, erect pointed ears, and the tail straight or nearly so. The height at the shoulder is from 27 to 29 inches. Wolves are swift of foot, crafty, and rapacious, and destructive enemies to the sheep-cote and farm yard; they associate in packs to hunt the larger quadrupeds, as the deer the elk, etc. When hard pressed with hunger these packs not infrequently attack isolated travelers, and have been known even to enter villages and carry off children. In general, however, wolves are cowardly and stealthy, approaching sheepfolds and farm buildings only at dead of night, making a rapid retreat if in the least disturbed by a dog or a man, and exhibiting great cunning in the avoidance of traps. Wolves are still numerous in some parts of Europe, as France, Hungary, Spain, Turkey, and Russia; they probably ceased to exist in England about the end of the fifteenth century, and in Scotland in the first part of the eighteenth century, the latter date probably marks also the disappearance of wolves in Ireland. The wolves of North America are of two very distinct species. One of these is scarcely different from the European, but is generally regarded as a variety, under the name of C. occidentalis. The usual color is a grizzled gray, but it sports in many colors as reddish and blackish. Most strains of the American wolf are larger and stouter than those of Europe. The gray wolf is also called the buffalo-wolf, from its former abundance in the buffalo-range, and timber-wolf, as distinguished from the prairie wolf or coyote, C. latrans, a much smaller and very different animal, which lives chiefly in open country, in burrows in the ground, and in some respects resembles the jackal. (See coyote, with cut.) Yet other wolves, of rather numerous species, inhabit most parts of the world, some grade into jackals (see Thous), others toward foxes (see fox-wolf), and most of them interbreed easily with some varieties of the dog of the countries they respectively inhabit, the dog itself being a composite of a mixed wolf ancestry (see wolf-dog, 1).

Common Wolf (Canis lupus).

2. A person noted for ravenousness, cruelty, cunning, or the like; used in opprobrium.

Rescued is Orlando from the English wolves.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI. (ed. Knight), i. 6. 2.

3. In entom.: (a) A small naked caterpillar, the larva of Tinea granella, the wolf-moth, which infests granaries. (b) The larva of a bot-fly; a warble. — 4. A tuberculous excrescence which rapidly eats away the flesh. See lupus, 3.

A tree that eateth the wolfe with the shauings of the wood growth in these parts. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 201.

If God should send a cancer upon thy face or a wolf into thy side, if he should spread a crust of leprosy upon thy skin, what wouldst thou give to be but as now thou art? Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, ii. 6.

5. In music: (a) The harsh discord heard in certain chords of keyboard instruments, especially the organ, when tuned on some system of unequal temperament. In the mean-tone system, as usually applied, five intervals in each octave were discordant — namely, G♯–E♭, B♭–F, F♯–B♭, C♯–F, and G♯–C. Under the modern system of equal temperament, the wolf is evenly distributed, and so practically unnoticed. (b) A chord or interval in which such a discord appears. (c) In instruments of the viol class, a discordant or false vibration in a string when stopped at a certain point, usually due to a defect in the structure or adjustment of the instrument. Sometimes called wolf-note. — 6. A wooden fence placed across a ditch in the corner of a field, to prevent cattle from straying into another field by means of the ditch. Halliwell. [Local, Eng.] — 7. Same as wolf's-bane, 2. E. H. Knight. — Barking wolf, the coyote or prairie wolf of North America (Canis latrans. See cut under coyote. Black wolf, a melanistic variety of the common wolf, found in southerly parts of the United States. — Dark as a wolf's mouth or throat, pitch dark. Scott. — Golden wolf, the Tibetan wolf, Canis laniger. Also called chanco. Gray wolf. See def. 1. — Indian wolf, a certain Asiatic wolf, Canis pallipes, somewhat like a jackal. — Marine wolf, in her. see marine. — Pied wolf. See pied. Red wolf, a reddish or erythritic variety of the common wolf found in the United States. — Strand wolf. See strand-wolf. Tasmanian wolf, a marsupial of Tasmania, the thylacine dasyure, Thylacinus cynocephalus; same as zebra wolf. See cut under thylacine. — To cry wolf, to raise a false alarm, in allusion to the shepherd boy in a well known fable. To have a wolf by the ears, to have a difficult task.

He found himself so intrigued that it was like a wolf by the ears: he could neither hold it nor let it go; and, for certain, it bit him at last.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 2. (Davies.)

To have a wolf in the stomach, to eat ravenously. Halliwell. — To keep the wolf from the door, to keep out hunger or want. To see a wolf, to lose one's voice: in allusion to the belief of the ancients (see Virgil, Ecl. ix.) that if a man saw a wolf before the wolf saw him he lost his voice, at least for a time.

"What! are you mute?" I said — a waggish guest,
"Perhaps she's seen a wolf," rejoin'd in jest.
Fawkes, tr. of Idylliums of Theocritus, xiv.

"Our young companion has seen a wolf," said Lady Hameline, alluding to an ancient superstition, "and has lost his tongue in consequence."
Scott, Quentin Durward, xviii.

White wolf, a whitish variety of the common wolf of North America. Zebra wolf. See zebra wolf. (See also prairie wolf, timber-wolf.)

wolf (wụlf), v. [< wolf, n.] I. intrans. To hunt for wolves.

The stock in trade of a party engaged in wolfing consists in flour, bacon, and strychnine, the first two articles named for their own consumption, the last for the wolves.
Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 18.

II. trans. To devour ravenously; as, to wolf down food. [Slang.]

wolfberry (wụlf'ber'i), n.; pl. wolfberries (-iz). A shrub, Symphoricarpos occidentalis, of northern North America, in the United States ranging from Michigan and Illinois to the Rocky Mountains. It is sometimes cultivated for ornament, mainly on account of its white berries, which are borne in axillary and terminal spikes.

wolf-dog (wụlf'dog), n. 1. A large stout dog of no particular variety, kept to guard sheep, cattle, etc., and destroy wolves. — 2. A dog bred, or supposed to be bred, between a dog and a wolf. Such hybrids are of constant occurrence among the dogs kept by North American Indians, and instances of the reversion of the dog to the feral state in western North America are recorded.

wolf-eel (wụlf'el), n. The wolf-fish.

Wolfenbüttel fragments. See fragment.

wolfer (wụl'fer), n. [< wolf + -er[1].] One who hunts wolves; a professional wolf-killer.

The wild throng of buffalo hunters, wolfers, teamsters, . . . filled the streets. The Century, XXXV. 415.

Wolfe's operation for ectropium. See operation.

Wolffia (wọlf'i-ạ), n. [NL. (Horkel, 1839), named after N. M. von Wolff (1724–84), a German physician.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Lemnaceæ, distinguished from Lemna, the other genus, by one-celled anthers and by the absence of roots. The 12 species are chiefly tropical, occurring in Europe, India, Africa, and America, and extending north into the United States; they are commonly globose, sometimes conical or flattish, with a proliferous base, and produce minute flowers from chinks in the surface, each flower consisting of a single stamen or ovary without any spathe or other envelop. They are known, like Lemna, as duckmeat, and are remarkable for their almost microscopic size, being esteemed the smallest of flowering plants.

Wolffian[1] (wụl'fi-ạn), a. Same as Wolfian[1].

Wolffian[2] (wọl'fi-ạn), a. [< K. F. Wolff (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to K. F. Wolff (1733–94), a German anatomist and physiologist; in anat., physiol., and zoöl., noting certain structures of vertebrated animals. Wolffian bodies, the primordial kidneys or renal organs in all vertebrates, excepting probably the lancelets; the so-called false kidneys, in all the higher vertebrates (Mammalia and Sauropsida) preceding and performing the functions of the kidneys until replaced by the latter, but among Ichthyopsida, as fishes persisting and constituting the permanent renal organs. — Wolffian ducts. See duct, Wolffian, under duct, n.

wolf-fish (wụlf'fish), n. A teleostean acanthopterygious fish, Anarrhichas lupus; so called from its ferocious aspect and habits. It is found around the coasts of Great Britain, where it attains a length of 6 or 7 feet, but in southern seas it is said to reach a much greater size. The mouth is armed with strong sharp teeth, the inner series forming blunt grinders.

era adapted for crushing the mollusks and crustaceans on which it feeds. The ventral fins are absent; the color is brownish-gray, spotted and striped with brown over the upper parts, while the belly is white. The flesh is palatable, and is largely eaten in Iceland, while the skin is durable, and is manufactured into a kind of shagreen. When taken in a net it attacks its captors ferociously, and unless stunned by a blow on the head is capable of doing great damage with its powerful teeth. Also called sea-cat, catfish, wolf-eel, and sea-wolf. See cut under Anarrhichas.

Wolfian[1] (wůl'fi-an), a. [< C. Wolff (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to the philosophy of Christian Wolff (1679–1754), which is Leibnitzianism diluted with common sense and dressed as a modified scholasticism, more systematic and more Euclidean than that of the middle ages. Though not profound, Wolff's philosophy met the wants of Germany, which it dominated for about fifty years, beginning with 1724. Also Wolffian.

Wolfian[2] (wůl'fi-an), a. [< F. A. Wolf (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or promulgated by F. A. Wolf, a German philologist (1759–1824).

Wolfian theory, a theory put forward by Wolf in his "Prolegomena" in 1795, to the effect that the Iliad and Odyssey cannot be the works of one man, Homer, because writing was unknown at the time that these poems are said to have been composed. He supposes, therefore, that the Iliad and Odyssey consist of ballads or episodes the work of different men, collected and arranged in a more or less consistent and homogeneous whole in the sixth century B. C. The ballads could have been preserved by the recitation of strolling minstrels.

Wolfianism (wůl'fi-an izm), n. [< Wolfian[1] + -ism.] The system of Wolfian philosophy. See Wolfian[1].

wolfing (wůl'fing), n. [Verbal n. of wolf, v.] The occupation or industry of taking wolves for their pelts. Wolfing is extensively practised in winter in some parts of the United States, as Montana and the Dakotas. The wolves are destroyed chiefly by poisoning with strychnine.

wolfish (wůl'fish), a. [Formerly also wolvish; < wolf + -ish[1].] 1. Like a wolf; having the qualities or traits of a wolf; savage; ravening: as, a wolfish visage; wolfish designs.

> Thy desires
> Are wolvish, bloody, starved, and ravenous.
> Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 138.

> Bane to thy wolfish nature! B. Jonson, Volpone, v. 8.

> Good master, let it warn you, though we have hitherto passed by these man Tygers, these wolvish Outlawes safely, early and late, as not worth their malice.
> Brome, Queen's Exchange, ii.

2. Hungry as a wolf is supposed to be; ravenous. [Colloq.]

wolfishly (wůl'fish li), adv. In a wolfish manner.

wolfkin (wůlf'kin), n. [< wolf + -kin.] A young or small wolf.

> "Was this your instructions, wolfkin?" (for she called me lambkin). Richardson, Pamela, I. 141.

> Kite and kestrel, wolf and wolfkin.
> Tennyson, Boadicea.

wolfling (wůlf'ling), n. [< wolf + -ling[1].] A young wolf; a wolfkin.

> Young children were thrown in, their mothers vainly pleading: "Wolfings" answered the Company of Marat, "who would grow to be wolves."
> Carlyle, French Rev., III. v. 3.

wolf-moth (wůlf'môth), n. A cosmopolitan grain-pest, Tinea granella, a small creamy-white moth with brown spots on the wings, whose small white larvæ infest stored grain. See wolf, n., 3 (a), and cut under corn-moth.

wolf-net (wůlf'net), n. A kind of net used in fishing, by means of which great numbers of fish are taken.

wolf-note (wůlf'nōt), n. Same as wolf, 5 (c).

wolfram (wůlf'ram), n. [G. wolfram, given as < "wolf, wolf, + ram, rahm, froth, cream, soot."] 1. A native tungstate of iron and manganese. Its color is generally a brownish or grayish black, and it has a reddish-brown streak. The specific gravity (7.1 to 7.5) is nearly equal to that of metallic iron. It occurs crystallized, also massive with lamellar structure; it is the ore from which the metal tungsten is usually obtained, and is often found associated with tinstone. Also called wolf ramite.

2. The metal tungsten or wolframium: an improper and now uncommon use. Wolframocher. Same as tungstite.

wolframate (wulf'ra-māt), n. Same as tungstate.

wolframic (wulf ram'ik), a. Of or pertaining to tungsten.

wolframium (wůlf ra'mi-um), n. Same as tungsten, the chemical symbol of which is W, from this word.

wolfrobe (wůlf'rōb), n. The skin or pelt of a wolf made into a robe for use in carriages, etc.

wolf's-bane (wůlfs'bān), n. [< wolf's, poss. of wolf, + bane[1].] A plant of the genus Aconitum, aconite or monk's-hood; specifically, t. ly. actonum, the yellow or yellow-flowered wolf's bane, also called badger's-, bear's-, or bane's-bane. It is found widely in Europe, especially in mountains, its greenish-yellow flowers have the hood developed like an extinguisher; its poison is less virulent than that of other species. - Mountain wolf's-bane. See Ranunculus.

wolfsbergite (wůlfs'berg-it), n. [Named from Wolfsberg, in the Harz.] Same as chalcostibite.

wolf-scalp (wůlf'skalp), n. The skin of a wolf's head, or a piece of it sufficient for identification, exhibited to claim the bounty paid for the killing of a wolf in some parts of the United States.

wolf's-claws (wůlfs'klâz), n. The common club-moss, Lycopodium clavatum: so called from the claw-like ends of the prostrate branches.

wolf's-fist (wůlfs'fist), n. [< ME. wulves fist, < AS. wulfes fyst, a puffball: wulfes, gen. of wulf, wolf; fist, ME. fyst, a breaking of wind: see wolf and fist[2]. Cf. Lycoperdon.] A puffball. See Lycoperdon. Gerard. Also woolfist.

wolf's-foot (wůlfs'fut), n. The club-moss, Lycopodium: so named by translation of the generic name.

wolf's-head (wůlfs'hed), n. [< ME. wolvesheed; < wolf's, poss. of wulf, + head.] 1. The head of a wolf. – 2†. An outlaw.

> They were his houshemen sory and nothing glad,
> When Gamelyn her had wolves-heed was cryed and maad.
> Tale of Gamelyn, l. 700.

wolfskin (wůlf'skin), n. [< ME. wolveskynne; < wolf's, poss. of wulf, + skin.] The skin or pelt of a wolf; also, a rug or other article made of this pelt; a wolfrobe.

wolf's-milk (wůlfs'milk), n. A plant of the genus Euphorbia, particularly E. Helioscopia, the sun-spurge. The name is supposed to refer to the acrid milky juice of these plants.

wolf-spider (wůlf'spī'dėr), n. Any spider of the family Lycosidæ, the species of which do not lie in wait, but prowl about after their prey and spring upon it; a tarantula. See Lycosidæ, and cuts under tarantula, 1.

Wolf-spider (Lycosa punctulata), natural size.

wolf's-thistle† (wůlfs'this'l), n. See thistle.

wolf-tooth (wůlf'tōth), n.; pl. wolf-teeth (-tēth). A small supernumerary premolar of the horse, situated in advance of the grinders. There are sometimes four of these teeth, one on each side of each jaw.

> Many readers may not be aware that blind horses, even in one eye only, will not get a proper summer coat; and the connexion between wolf-teeth and shying is another of many interesting facts. Athenæum, No. 3300, p. 129.

wolf-trap (wůlf'trap), n. In her., a bearing representing a curved bar having a ring fixed to the center of it. Berry.

woll, v. An obsolete or dialectal form of will[1].

Wollaston doublet. See doublet, 2 (b).

wollastonite (wol'as-tōn-it), n. [Named after W. H. Wollaston (1766–1828), an English scientist, the discoverer of the method of working native platinum.] A mineral occurring in tabular crystals (hence called tabular spar), also massive, cleavable, with fibrous structure. It has a white to yellow or gray color and a vitreous to pearly cleavage. It is a silicate of calcium ($CaSiO_3$), and belongs to the pyroxene group.

Wollaston prism. The four-sided glass prism of the camera lucida devised by Wollaston in 1809. See figure under camera lucida.

wollie†, v. See will[1].

wolle-t, wollent. Obsolete forms of wool, woolen.

wollongongite (wol'on-gong-it), n. A kind of kerosene-shale, very rich in oil, found near Wollongong in New South Wales: it was originally described as a kind of hydrocarbon.

wolloper, n. See walloper[2].

woltowt. A Middle English form of wolf (wild animal).

wolvebon (wůlv'bōn), n. See Taxicodendron.

wolverene, wolverine (wůl-vė-rēn'), n. [Formerly also wolveren, wolvereune, wolverin, wolvering; appar. a French-Canadian name based on E. wolf.] The American glutton, or carcajou, Gulo luscus (specifically identical with the glutton of the Old World), a subplantigrade carnivorous mammal of the family Mustelidæ, inhabiting British America and northerly or mountainous regions of the United States. It is 2 or 3 feet long of thick set form, with short, stout legs, low ears, subplantigrade feet, bushy tail and shaggy pelage of Wolverene or Carcajou (Gulo luscus).

blackish color, with a lighter band of color on each side meeting its fellow upon the rump. The animal is noted for its voracity, ferocity, and sagacity. In the fur countries, where the wolverene is numerous, it is one of the most serious obstacles with which the trapper has to contend, as it soon learns to spring the traps set for ermine and sable, and devour the bait without getting caught, being itself too wary to be trapped without great difficulty. In these regions, also, caches of provisions must be constructed with special precautions against their discovery and spoliation by wolverenes. The pelt is valuable, and is much used for robes and mats, in which the whitish or light-brown areas of the fur present a set of oval or horse-shoe-shaped figures when several skins are sewed together. From its comparatively large and very stout form, together with its special coloration, the wolverene is sometimes called skunk bear. - The Wolverene State, Michigan.

wolves, n. Plural of wolf.

wolves'-thistle† (wůlvz'this'l), n. See thistle.

wolvish† (wůl'vish), a. An obsolete form of wolfish.

wolward†, adv. See woodward.

woman (wům'an), n.; pl. women (wim'en). [< ME. woman, wuman, womman, wumman, wummon, altered (with the common change of wi- to wu-, often spelled wo-) from wimman, wimmon, which stand (with assimilation of fm to mm) for the earlier wifman, wifmon, wyfman (pl. wimen, wimmen*, womme n, wummen, wimmen, earlier wifmen, wyfmen), < AS. wīfman, wīfmon, later wimman (pl. wīfmen, later wimmen), a woman, lit. 'wife man,' i. e. female person, < wīf, a woman, female, + man, man, person (masc., but used, like L. homo and Gr. ἄνθρωπος, in the general sense 'person, human being'). The compound wīfman is peculiar to AS., but a similar formation appears in the G. weib = person. It is notable that it was thought necessary to join wīf, a neuter noun, representing a female person, to man, a masc. noun representing either a male or female person, to form a word denoting a female person exclusively. The assimilation of fm to mm occurs likewise in leman, formerly and more prop. spelled lemman, and in Lammas. The change of initial wi- to wu- occurs also in AS. wudu > wuduˇ > E. wood[1], and the spelling of wu- as wo- or woo- to avoid the cumulation of u's or v's (wu-, wuu-, vv-) occurs in wood[1], wool, etc. - The difference of pronunciation between the singular woman and the plural women, though it has come to distinguish the singular from the plural, is entirely accidental; formerly both pronunciations of the first syllable were in use in both numbers. The proper modern spelling of the plural, as now pronounced, would be wimmen; the spelling women is due to irreg. conformity to the singular woman, which is properly so spelled according to the analogy of wolf, though woolman*, like wulf*, would be better, as being then in keeping with wool, wood[1].] 1. An adult female of the human race; figuratively, the female sex; human females collectively. See lady, 5.

> Laede [men] nere thar nane,
> ne wapnen ne wifmen,
> bute westize [waste] paeden.
> Layamon, I. 1119.

> That is the Lond of Femynye, where that no man is, but only alle Wommen. Mandeville, Travels, p. 142.

> When the queene vndirstode the gyyow that Gawein hadde made, she was the gladdest wommen in the worlde.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 462.

> And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman. Gen. ii. 22.

> See the hell of having a false woman!
> Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 276.

Pray, Mr. Barnwell, hold your tongue for once, if it be possible; one would think you were a woman in man's clothes, by your prating. Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

Woman seems to differ from man in mental disposition, chiefly in her greater tenderness and less selfishness; and this holds good even with savages.

Darwin, Descent of Man, II. 311.

2. The qualities which characterize womanhood; tenderness; gentleness: also, when used of a man, effeminacy; weakness.

But that my eyes
Have more of woman in 'em than my heart,
I would not weep.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iv. 4.

3. A female attendant on a person of rank (used in such a connection as to show the special sense intended).

Take it to oon of youre moste secrete women, and bid hir deliver it to the firste man that she fyndeth at the issue of the halle.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 90.

Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter —
The Viscount Rochford — one of her highness' women.
Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 4. 93.

Churching of women. See churching, 1. Lawful woman. See lawful. — Married Woman's Act, the name under which are known a number of statutes, both in Great Britain and in the United States (dating about 1850 and thereafter), by which the common law disabilities of married women as to contracts, property, and rights of action have by successive steps been nearly all removed. — Old woman's tooth. Same as router plane (which see, under router). — Old-woman's tree. See Quina. — Single woman. See single. — The scarlet woman. See scarlet. — To be tied to a woman's apron-strings. See apron-string. — To make an honest woman of. See honest. To play the woman, to give way to tenderness or pity, weep. — Wise woman. See wise. — Woman of the town, a prostitute. Woman of the world. (a†) A married woman. See to go to the world, under world. (b) A woman experienced in the ways of the world, a woman engrossed in society or fashionable life.

woman† (wům'an), v. t. [< woman, n.] 1. To act the part of a woman: with an indefinite it.

This day I should Have seene my daughter Silvia how she would Have womaned it.
Daniel, Hymen's Triumph, iii. 2.

2. To cause to act like a woman; subdue to weakness like a woman.

I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman me unto 't.
Shak., All's Well, iii. 2. 67.

3. To unite to, or accompany by, a woman.

I do attend here on the general,
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me womaned.
Shak., Othello, iii. 4. 19.

4. To call (a person) "woman" in an abusive way.

She called her another time fat-face and womaned her most vilely.
Richardson, Pamela, II. 208. (Davies.)

woman-body (wům'an-bod'i), n. A woman, used disparagingly or in self-depreciation. [Scotch.]

It was an awkward thing for a woman-body to be standing among bundles o' barkened leather her lane.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, x.

woman-born (wům'an-bôrn), a. Born of woman. Cowper, Charity, l. 181.

woman-built (wům'an-bilt), a. Built by women.

A new-world Babel woman built,
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

womanfully (wům'an-fůl-i), adv. [< woman + -ful + *-ly*².] Like a woman: a word humorously employed to correspond with manfully.

For near fourscore years she fought her fight womanfully.
Thackeray, Newcomes, lii.

Anne alone . . . stood up by her father womanfully, and put her arm through his.
Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xlvi.

woman-grown (wům'an-grōn), a. Grown to womanhood. Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

woman-guard (wům'an-gärd), n. A guard of women.

The Princess with her monstrous woman guard
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

woman-hater (wům'an-hā'tėr), n. One who has an aversion to women in general; a misogynist.

This Coarseness [toward women] does not always come from Clowns and Women haters, but from Persons of Figure, neither singular nor ill Bred.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 171.

womanhead† (wům'an-hed), n. [< ME. womanhede; < woman + -head.] The state or condition of a woman; womanhood.

"The queene anon, for verray womanhede, Gan for to wepe."
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 890.

I shall as now do more for you
Than longeth to Womanhede.
The Nut-Brown Maid.

womanhood (wům'an-hůd), n. [< ME. "womanhod; < woman + -hood. Cf. womanhead.] 1. Womanly state, character, or qualities; the Setting thy womanhood aside.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 3. 130.

Her womanhood
In its meridian.
Byron, Don Juan, ix. 71.

2. Women collectively; womankind.

womanish (wům'an-ish), a. [< woman + *-ish*¹.] Pertaining to, characteristic of, or suitable for women; feminine; effeminate: often used in a disparaging or reproachful sense when said of men: as, womanish ways; a womanish voice; womanish fears.

The wordes and the womannishe thynges,
She herde hem right as though she thennes
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 694.

In what a shadow, or deep pit of darkness,
Doth womanish and fearful mankind live!
Webster, Duchess of Malfi, v. 5.

He conceals, under a rough air and distant behaviour, a bleeding compassion and womanish tenderness.
Steele, Spectator, No. 346.

=Syn. Female, Effeminate, etc. See feminine.

womanishly (wům'an-ish-li), adv. In a womanish manner; effeminately.

The people weare long haire, in combing whereof they are womannishly curious, those hoping by their lockes to be carried into heaven.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 445.

womanishness (wům'an-ish-nes), n. The state or character of being womanish.

Effeminacy and womanishness of heart.
Hammond, Works, IV. 567.

womanize† (wům'an-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. womanized, ppr. womanizing. [< woman + -ize.] To make effeminate; make womanish; soften. [Rare.]

This effeminate love of a woman doth so womanize a man.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

womankind (wům'an-kīnd'), n. [Also woman-kind, < woman + -kind; contrasted with mankind.] 1. Women in general; the female sex; the females collectively of the human kind.

O despiteful love! unconstant womankind!
Shak., 1 of the 8, iv. 2. 14.

Teach Woman-kind Inconstancy and Pride.
Congreve, The Mistress, Prophet.

"Sall thookit was she, puir thing, sae I e'en put a glass of sherry to her water-gruel." "Right Grizel, right! let womankind alone for coddling each other."
Scott, Antiquary, iv.

2. A body of women, especially in a household, the female members of a family. [Humorous.]

At last the Squire gracefully allowed the departure of his womankind who floated away like a flock of released birds.
Mrs. Chas. Agatha's Husband, xv.

womanless (wům'an-les), a. [< woman + -less.] Destitute of women.

womanlike (wům'an-lik), a. [< woman + like.] Like a woman; womanly.

Womanlike, taking revenge too deep for a transient wrong.
Tennyson, Maud, iii.

womanliness (wům'an-li-nes), n. The character of being womanly.

It is nothing wherein the eye womanliness is more highly garnished than with sylenes.
J. Udall, On 1 Tim. ii.

womanly (wům'an-li), a. [< ME. womanlich, womanliche; < woman + *-ly*¹.] Characteristic of, like, or befitting a woman; suiting a woman; feminine; not masculine; not girlish; as, womanly behavior.

Thus may he ask now, O womanliche wyf,
Lawe out of thonge.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 106.

See where she comes, and brazes your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.
Shak., 1 of the 8, v. 2. 120.

[Incited by their husbands and burning with a womanly fervour, one night they [the women] massacred them all, together with their children.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 79.

A blushing womanly discovering grace.
Tennyson, Elegy on Ode Maid of Neuse.

Will he grow gentler ever, more womanly?
W. Black.

=Syn. Womanish, Ladylike, etc. See feminine.

womanly (wům'an-li), adv. [< womanly, a.] In the manner of a woman.

Lullaby can I sing too,
As womanly as ever the best.
Fletcher, Inchastable of a Lover.

woman-post† (wům'an-pōst), n. A female post or messenger. [Rare.]

Let us . . . come in such haste in riding robes? . . . What, woman-post is this?
Shak., K. John, i. 1. 51.

woman-queller (wům'an-kwel'ėr), n. One who kills women. See manqueller.

Thou art a hateful seed, a man-queller, and a woman-queller.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 38.

woman-suffrage (wům'an-suf'rāj), n. The exercise of the electoral franchise by women. [Colloq.]

woman-suffragist (wům'an-suf'rā-jist), n. An advocate of woman suffrage. [Colloq.]

woman-tired† (wům'an-tīrd), a. [< woman + tired, pp. of *tire*².] Henpecked. [Rare.]

Dotard! thou art woman-tired, unroosted
By thy dame Partlet here.
Shak., W. T., ii. 3. 74.

woman-vested (wům'an-ves'ted), a. Clothed like a woman; wearing women's apparel. [Rare.]

Woman-vested as I was.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

womb (wōm), n. [E. dial. and Sc. wame; < ME. wombe, wambe, < AS. womb, womb, the belly, = OS. wamba = OHG. wamma = D. weam, belly of a fish, = OHG. wamba, wampa (womba, wamba), MHG. wambe, wampe, later wamme, G. wamme, wampe, belly, lap, = Icel. vömb, belly, esp. of a beast, = Sw. vam = Dan. vom = Goth. wamba, belly.] 1. The belly; the stomach.

Mete unto wombe and wombe eek unto mete,
Shal God destroyen bothe, as Paulus seith.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 60.

"Man, love thi womb," quod Gloteny,
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

An I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe. My womb, my womb, my womb undoes me.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 25.

"Why, Andrew, you know all the secrets of the family." "If I ken them, I can keep them," said Andrew. "They winna work in my wame like barm in a barrel, I'se warrant ye."
Scott, Rob Roy, vi.

2. The uterus; the hollow dilated musculo-membranous part of the female passages, between the vagina and the Fallopian tubes, in which the ovum is received, detained, and nourished during gestation, or the period intervening between fecundation and parturition: applied chiefly to this organ of the human female and some of the higher or better-known mammalian quadrupeds, the corresponding part of the passages of other animals being commonly called by the technical name uterus. See uterus (with cut), and cut under peritoneum.

That was Sein Johan, in his moder womb.
Ancren Riwle, l. 78.

Twin'd brothers of one womb.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 2.

Ere the sad fruit of thy unhappy womb
Had caused such sorrows past, and woes to come.
Pope, Iliad, xviii. 115.

Hence — 3. The place where anything is produced.

That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhearse,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew.
Shak., Sonnets, lxxvi.

The womb of earth the genial seed receives.
Dryden, Georgics, ii. 439.

4. Any large or deep cavity that receives or contains anything.

The fatal cannon's womb.
Shak., R. and J., v. 1. 66.

As when black tempests mix the seas and skies,
The roaring deeps in watery mountains rise,
Above the shores or some tall ship ascend,
Its womb they deluge, and its ribs they rend.
Pope, Iliad, xv. 448.

Body of the womb. Same as corpus uteri (which see, under corpus). Falling of the womb. Same as prolapse of the uterus (which see, under uterus). Fundus of the womb, the upper part of the uterus. Male womb. Same as prostatic vesicle (which see, under prostatic). Neck of the womb. Same as cervix uteri (which see, under cervix). Prolapse of the womb. Same as prolapse of the uterus (which see under uterus).

womb† (wōm), v. t. [< womb, n.] To inclose; contain; breed in secret.

Not . . . for all the sun sees or
The close earth wombs or the profound seas hide
In unknown fathoms, will I break my oath.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 561.

wombat (wom'bat), n. [A corruption of the native Australian name wombach or wombach.] An Australian marsupial mammal of the genus Phascolomys, as P. wombat or P. ursinus. See cut under Phascolomys.

womb brother (wōm'bruтн'ėr), n. A brother uterine. [Rare.]

Edmund of Haddam . . . was wed to Queen Katherine by Owen Theodor, her second husband, Womb brother to King Henry the sixth, and Father to King Henry the Seventh.
Fuller, Worthies. (Davies.)

wombed (wōmd), a. [< womb + *-ed*².] Having a womb, in any sense.

I'll master horses, as vanquish'd power,
Comets of hair shall possess ungrateful earth,
The hollow wombed canes shall holy groan,
And murmur to sustain the weight of arms.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., iii. 1.

womb-grain (wōm'grān), n. Ergot, or spurred rye: technically called secale cornutum: so called from the effect of the drug upon the uterus.

womb-passage (wōm'pas'āj), n. The vagina. See cut under peritoneum.

womb-pipet, n. Same as womb-passage. [Obs.]

womb-side† (wōm'sīd), n. [ME. womb-side; < womb + *side*1.] The front or protuberant side, as of the astrolabe.

As wel on the bak as on the womb-side.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. § 6.

womb-stone (wōm'stōn), n. 1. A concretion formed within the uterine cavity.—2. A calcified fibroid tumor of the uterus.

womby† (wō'mi), a. [< womb + *-y*1.] Hollow; capacious. [Rare.]

Caves and womby vaultages of France.
Shak., Hen. V, II. 4. 124.

women, n. Plural of woman.

women's-tree (wim'enz trē), n. See Sophora.

wommant, n. An old spelling of woman.

won1†, wone† (wun), v. i. [< ME. wonen, wonien, wunien, < AS. wunian, dwell, remain, gewunian, dwell, be accustomed, = OS. wunon, wonon = MD. wonen, D. wonen = OHG. wonēn, MHG. wonen, G. wohnen, dwell, = Icel. una, dwell, also enjoy, find pleasure in; from the root of AS. wynn, etc., strive after; see wend. Cf. *wont*1, n., *wont*1.] 1. To dwell; abide.

To gete her love no ner ne fer hi
That wonied at hom than he in Inde
The formest was alway behinde.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 880.

Here mowlr, wonne with vs, thot shal no thyng you greve.
York Plays, p. 18.

Thanne wonede an hermite forth by-syde
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 9.

He wonneth in the Ind of Layeres.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 36.

The wild beast where he wons
In forest wild, in thicket, brake, or den.
Milton, P. L., vii. 467.

2. To be accustomed. See *wont*1.

Tho clarisse com in to the fur
Tho amiral askede blancheflur, & askede whi hee ne come,
Also hee was wond to nome.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 111.

A yearly solemn feast she wont to make. Spenser.

Her well plighted frock, which she did won
To tucke about her short when she did ryde Shee low let fall. Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 21.

They leave their crystal springs, where they wont frame
Sweet bowers of myrtle twigs and laurel fair.
L. Bryskett, Arbasto's Fug. Gamut, l. 270.

won1†, wone† (wun), n. [ME., also wonne, woon, < AS. gewenna = OS. gewono = MLG. wone = OHG. gewona = Icel. vani, custom, usage; see *won*1, wone, v.] 1. A dwelling; habitation.

Tho gan I up the hille to goon,
And fond upon the coppe a woon
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1166.

Late my lady here
With all her light lemys, Wightely go wende till her wone.
York Plays, p. 273.

Huf ge no wonez in castel walle
No maner ther ge may mote A won?
Allit. Morte Arthure (ed. Morris), l. 916.

There the wise Merlin whylome wont (they say)
To make his woone low underneath the ground,
In a deepe delve farre from the view of day.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 7.

2. A place of resort.

He so long had riden and goon
That he fond in a prive woon
The contree of Fairye.
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 90.

3. Custom; habit.

Er it were day, as was hir woone to do,
She was arisen, and al redy dight.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 182.

His woone was to wirke mekill woo,
And make many maystries emelle us.
York Plays, p. 264.

4. Manner; way.

And when he sey ther was non other woone
He gan hire limmes dresse.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1181.

No fayre wordes brake myne bone,
Ne neuer so hall in no woone.
Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), I. 65.

Here come neman in there wones,
And that euere witnesse will we,
Same an Angell like a day mones
With bodily foode hir fedde has he.
York Plays, p. 198.

won2 (wun). Preterit and past participle of *win*1.

won3, a. An old spelling of *wan*1.

wond†. An obsolete preterit of *wind*1.

wonder, v. i. [ME. wonden, wunden, AS. wandian, fear, reverence, neglect, < wandor, wind turn; see *wand*1, and cf. *wend*1.] To refrain, desist.

I wille noghte wende for no ware, to wende whare me likes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3993.

Love wol love; for no wight wol it wonde.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1157.

See now of sorowe, sobur thi chere,
Wond of thi weping, whipe vp thi teris;
Mene the to myrthe, & mournyng for-sake.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3389.

wonder (wun'der), n. [< ME. wonder, wondir, wounder, wunder, wundur, < AS. wundor = OS. wundar = D. wonder = MLG. wunder = OHG. wuntar, MHG. G. wunder = Icel. undr (for wundr*) = Sw. Dan. under, wonder; perhaps akin to Gr. ὀθέω (ὀθϝέω*), gaze at.] 1. A strange thing; a cause of surprise, astonishment, or admiration; in a restricted sense, a miracle; a marvel, prodigy, or portent.

Wil thow wratthest the now wonder me thynketh.
Piers Plowman (B), iii. 182.

The prophetis seiden with mylde steuene
"A song of wondris now synge we."
Hymnis to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 52.

The love of boys unto their lords is strange.
I have read wonders of it.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, ii. 1.

It is no wonder that art gets not the victory over nature.
Bacon, Physical Fables, iv., Expl.

Bless me! Charles, you consume more tea than all my family, though we are seven in the parlour and as much sugar and butter — well, it's no wonder you are billious!
Thackeray, Lovel the Widower, ii.

2. That emotion which is excited by novelty, or the presentation to the sight or mind of something new, unusual, strange, great, extraordinary, not well understood, or that arrests the attention by its novelty, grandeur, or inexplicableness. Wonder expresses less than astonishment, and much less than amazement. It differs from admiration in not being necessarily accompanied with love, esteem, or approbation. But wonder sometimes is nearly allied to astonishment, and the exact extent of the meaning of such words can hardly be graduated.

They were filled with wonder and amazement.
Acts iii. 10.

O, how her eyes doit wonder on my heart!
Mount bloode, soule to my lips, taste Hebe's cup;
Stande firme on decke, when beauties close fight's up.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., i. 1.

Wonder is the effect of novelty upon ignorance.
Johnson.

The faculty of wonder is not defunct, but is only getting more and more emancipated from the unnatural service of terror, and restored to its proper function as a minister of delight. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 149.

3. A cruller. [New Eng.]

A plate of crullers or wonders, as a sort of sweet fried cake was commonly called.
H. B. Stowe, The Minister's Wooing, iv.

Bird of wonder, the phœnix. Nine days' wonder, a subject of astonishment and gossip for a short time, generally a petty scandal.

For whom men han wel eyed, than wol they roune,
Ek wonder last but nine nyght (var. dayes) nevere in toune.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 388.

So ran the tale like fire about the court,
Fire in dry stubble a nine days' wonder flared.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

Seven wonders of the world, the seven most remarkable structures of ancient times. These were the Egyptian pyramids, the mausoleum erected by Artemisia at Halicarnassus, the temple of Artemis at Ephesus, the walls and hanging gardens of Babylon, the colossus at Rhodes, the statue of Zeus by Phidias in the great temple at Olympia, and the Pharos or lighthouse at Alexandria. —Wonder-making Parliament. Same as Merciless Parliament (which see, under parliament). —Syn. 1. Sign, marvel, phenomenon, spectacle, rarity. —2. Surprise, bewilderment. See def. 2.

wonder (wun'der), v. [< ME. wondren, wondren, wundren, < AS. wundrian = D. wonderen = MLG. wunderen = OHG. wuntarōn, MHG. G. wundern = Icel. Sw. undra = Dan. undre, wonder; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To be affected with wonder or surprise; marvel; be amazed, formerly with a reflexive dative.

Ac me wondreth in my witt whi that thei ne preche
As Paul the apostel prechede to the peuple ofte.
Piers Plowman (C), xvi. 74.

I wonder to see the contrarieties among the Papists.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 41.

Who can but wonder at the fautors of these wonders?
Sandys, Travailes, p. 160.

Here more then two hundred of those grim Courtiers stood *wonder*ing at him, as he had beene a monster, till Powhatan and his traine had put themselues in their greatest orateries.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 162.

We cease to wonder at what we understand. Johnson.

2. To look with or feel admiration.

So did I wonder at the lily's white.
Shak., Sonnets, xcviii.

3. To entertain some doubt or curiosity in reference to some matter; speculate expectantly; be in a state of expectation mingled with doubt and slight anxiety or wistfulness: as, I wonder whether we shall reach the place in time; hence, I wonder is often equivalent to 'I should like to know.'

A boy or a child, I wonder! Shak., W. T., iii. 3, l. 71.

To be to be wondered†, to be a cause for astonishment.

It is not to be wondered if Ben Jonson has many such lines as these. Dryden.

It is not to be wondered that we are shocked. Defoe.

II. trans. 1. To be curious about; wish to know; speculate in regard to: as, I wonder where John has gone.

Like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1506.

I have wondred these thirty yeares what Kings affe.
N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 30.

Wondring why that grief and rage and sin
Was ever wrought.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II., 294.

2. To surprise; amaze. [Rare.]

She has a sedateness that wonders me still more.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, Oct. 28, 1788.

wonder† (wun'dėr), a. [ME., an elliptical use of wonder, n., as in comp.; cf. wonders.] Wonderful.

Then sayde the pope, "Alas! Alas!
Modur, this ys to me a wondur case."
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 98.

Allas! what is this wonder maladye?
I for hete of cold, for cold of hete, I dye.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 419.

wonder† (wun'dėr), adv. [ME., < wonder, a.] Wonderfully; exceedingly; very.

Ye knowe eke that in form of speche is chaunge
Withinne a thousand yere, and wordes tho
That hadden pris, now wonder nyce and straunge
Us thynketh hem. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 24.

Wonder pale he waxe, wanting his colour,
For ende hadde he none of this grett dolours.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2870.

wondered† (wun'dėrd), a. [< wonder + *-ed*2.] Having performed wonders; able to produce wonders; wonderworking. [Rare.]

Let me live here ever;
So rare a wondered father, and a wife,
Makes this place Paradise.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 123.

wonderer (wun'dėr-ėr), n. [< wonder + *-er*1.] One who wonders.

wonderful (wun'dėr-fûl), a. [< ME. wonderful, wonderfol, wunderful (= G. wundervoll); < wonder + -ful.] Of a nature or kind to excite wonder or admiration; strange; astonishing; surprising; marvelous.

Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. Job xlii. 3.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 1. 89.

They also shewed him some of the engines with which some of his servants had done wonderful things.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

Wonderful Parliament. Same as Merciless Parliament (which see, under parliament). —Syn. Wonderful, Strange, Surprising, Curious, Unique, extraordinary, marvelous, amazing, startling, wondrous (poetic). Wonderful generally refers to something above the common, and so marvelous, perhaps almost incredible. Strange refers rather to something beside the common — that is, simply very unusual or odd, and so exciting surprise or wonder. Anything that excites awe or high admiration, or strikes one as sublime is wonderful; an unpleasant object may be strange, but would not be called wonderful. That which is unexpected is surprising, but it is not necessarily strange: as, a surprising fact, a surprising discovery in science. Curious is wonderful on a small scale; by its derivation it often refers to an object extremely nice and intricate or elaborate in its details, but also it often conveys the notion of pleasing strangeness and even of rarity: as, a curious bit of mosaic; a curious piece of mechanism; a curiously colored stone. Unique expresses that which is sole of its kind or quality: as a unique book; a unique sort of person. See eccentric and surprise.

wonderful (wun'dėr-fûl), adv. [< ME. wonderfully; < wonderful, a.] Wonderfully; exceedingly; very. [Obsolete or vulgar.]

Alas! she comyth wonderfull lyghtly;
Man seith not the hour ne houre shall ely.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6188.

Chymistry, I know by a little Experience, is wonderful pleasing. Howell, Letters, I. viii. 41.

wonderfully (wun'dėr-fûl-i), adv. [< ME. wonderfully; < wonderful + *-ly*2.] 1. In a wonderful manner; in a manner to excite wonder or surprise; surprisingly; strangely; remarkably: in colloquial language often nearly or quite equivalent to 'very': as, wonderfully little difference.

Se schal se him rise vp and speke, and wonderfully be comfortid and strenkthid therby.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 15.

I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. Ps. cxxxix. 14.

2. With wonder or admiration.

Ther dide Gawain sothe marvelles in armes that wolde verayly seme to be-holden of hem of logres, for he smote down man and horse. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 200.

wonderfulness (wun'dèr-fūl-nes), n. The state or quality of being wonderful.

wondering (wun'dèr-ing), n. [< ME. wondring, wundrange, < AS. wundrung, verbal n. of wundrian, wonder: see wonder, v.] Expressing admiration or amazement; marveling.

Swiche wondring was ther on this hors of bras
That, sin the grete sege of Troye was,
Ther as men wondreden on an hors also,
Ne was ther swich a wondring as was tho.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 207

wonderingly (wun'dèr-ing-li), adv. In a wondering manner; with wonder: as, to gaze wonderingly.

wonderland (wun'dèr-land), n. [< wonder + land.] A land of wonders or marvels.

Lo! Bruce in wonder-land is quite at home.
Wolcot (P. Pindar), Complim. Epistle to James Bruce.

wonderly† (wun'dèr-li), a. [< ME. wonderly, < AS. wundorlic (= OS. wundarlic = OHG. wunderlich, MHG. G. wunderlich); as wonder + -ly[1].] Wonderful.

In his hed had on ey and no mo,
Moste hleste set wonderly to se.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1241.

wonderly† (wun'dèr-li), adv. [< ME. wonderly, wondyrly, wonderliche, wunderlich, wunderlyche: < wonderly, a.] Wonderfully.

Wonderly delivere, and grete of strengthe
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 84.

This towne of Medona is fayre and wonderly strong, as ferre as we myghte perceyve
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 70

wonder-mazet (wun'dèr-māz), v. t. To strike with wonder; astonish; amaze.

Hee taught and sought Right's rules to reparre,
Sometimes with words that wonder-mazed men,
Sometimes with deedes that Angels did admire Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, p. 61. (Davies.)

wonderment (wun'dèr-ment), n. [< wonder + -ment.] 1. Surprise; astonishment.

All this wonderment doth grow from a little oversight, in deeming that the subject wherein headship is to reside should be evermore some one person.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, viii. 4

"I know nothing o' church. I've never been to church." "No," said Dolly, in a low tone of wonderment
George Eliot, Silas Marner, v

2. Something wonderful; a wonderful appearance.

Those things which I here set down are such as do naturally take the sense, and not respect pretty wonderments Bacon, Masques and Triumphs (ed. 1887).

wonder-net (wun'dèr-net), n. In anat., a term translating the Latin rete mirabile, or wonderful net, a network of minute vessels. See rete.

wonder-of-the-world (wun'dèr-ov-the-wėrld'), n. The Chinese ginseng: an alleged translation. See ginseng.

wonderous† (wun'dèr-us), a. An obsolete form of wondrous.

wonderst, adv. [< ME. wonders, < wonder + adv. gen. -s as in needs, etc.] Wonderfully; wondrous.

Me mette suche a sweveninge
That liked me wonders wele.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 27.

[This is the reading of the original edition and of the manuscripts. It has been changed into wondrous in some modern editions, and perhaps correctly.]

wonderyly†, adv. [< wonders + -ly[2].] Wonderfully.

Where suche a solempne yerely myracle is wrought so wonderly in the face of the world.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 134

wonder-stone (wun'dèr-stōn), n. The name given to a bed occurring in the Red Marl (Triassic) near Wells, England, which is described by Buckland and Conybeare as being "a beautiful breccia, consisting of yellow transparent crystals of carbonate of lime disseminated through a dark red earthy dolomite."

wonderstricken, wonderstruck (wun'dèr-strik'n, wun'dèr-struk), a. Struck with wonder, admiration, or surprise.

Ascanius, wonder-struck to see
That image of his filial piety.
Dryden, Æneid, ix. 504

Cast his strong arms about his drooping wife,
And kiss'd his wonder-stricken little ones
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

wonder-wondet (wun'dèr-wun'dèr), n. See Rafflesia.

wonderwork (wun'dèr-wėrk), n. [< ME. wonderwerc, < AS. wundorweorc (Stratmann) (= G. wunderwerk); as wonder + work, n.] A wonderful work or act; a prodigy; a miracle; thaumaturgy.

Such as in strange land
Be found in wonder-works of God and Nature's hand.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 10.

wonderworker (wun'dèr-wėr'kėr), n. One who performs wonders or surprising things; a thaumaturgist. I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., II. 162.

wonderworking (wun'dèr wėr'king), a. Doing wonders or surprising things. G. Herbert, Country Parson, xxxii.

wonder-wounded (wun'dèr-wön'ded), a. Struck with wonder or surprise; wonder-stricken.

What is he whose grief
Conjures the wandering stars and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 280.

wondrous (wun'drus), a. [Formerly wonderous, wonderouse, < wonder + -ous; prob. suggested by marvellous, etc., but in part a substitute for early mod. E. wondrous, see wondrous.] I. a. Of a kind or degree to excite wonder; wonderful; marvelous; strange.

That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works
Ps. xxvi. 7

Wherefore gaze this goodly company
As if they saw some wondrous monument
Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 97.

And yet no Angel envy'd Him his place
Who ever look'd upon his wondrous face
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 214.

Wondrous truths, and manifold as wondrous
God hath written in those stars above Longfellow, Flowers

wondrous (wun'drus), adv. [< wondrous, a.] In a wonderful or surprising degree; remarkably; exceedingly.

I found you wondrous kind. Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 311

I shall grow wondrous melancholy if I stay long here without company Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, v. 1

wondrously (wun'drus-li), adv. [< wondrous + -ly[2].] In a strange or wonderful manner or degree.

My lord leans wondrously to discontent
Shak., T. of A., iii. 4. 71

Thus complains, and wondrously aggrieved, Glanville, Obs.

wondrousness (wun'drus-nes), n. The quality of being wondrous.

wonet, v. and n. See won[1].

wong[1] (wong), n. [< ME. wong, wang, < AS. wang, wong, a plain: see wang[1].] A plain; a field; a meadow. [Old and prov. Eng.]

wong†, n. An obsolete spelling of wang[1].

wonga-wonga (wong'gä wong'gä), n. [Australian.] A large Australian pigeon, Leucosarcia picata, having white flesh, and much esteemed for the table. Wonga-wonga vine. See bocconia.

wongert, n. Same as wanger.

woningt, n. [< ME. wunninge, wunnung, wonung, wonyng, < AS. wunung, dwelling, inner room of a dwelling (= OHG. wonunga, G. wohnung, dwelling), verbal n. of wunian, dwell: see won[1].] Dwelling; abode.

His woninge was ful fair upon an heeth
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 606

He signes unto them made
With him to wend unto his woninge neare.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. iv. 13.

woning-place†, n. [ME.; < woning + place.] Dwelling-place; habitation.

I wol and charge thee
To telle anon thy woninge place
Rom. of the Rose, l. 6113.

woning-stead†, n. [ME. woninyng-sted, < woning + stead.] Dwelling-place.

God will make in yowe hay than his woninyng sted
York Plays, p. 143.

wonne[1]†, v. and n. See won[1].

wonne[2]†, wonnen†. Obsolete forms of won[2], preterit and past participle of win[1].

wonne[3]†, adv. and conj. An obsolete form of when.

wont[1] (wunt), a. (orig. pp.). [< ME. wont, contracted form of womed (= G. gewohnt), pp. of women, be accustomed: see wont[1].] Accustomed; in the habit, habituated; using or doing customarily.

The king of Cantree was wont to ben a strong and so myghty that he helde Were ayen Alexandre.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 194

wont[1]†. Obsolete preterit of won[1].

wont[1] (wunt), v.; pret. wont (occasionally wonted), pp. wont, wonted. [< wont[1], a., orig. pp. of won[1]; see won[1].] I. intrans. 1. To be accustomed or habituated; use; be used.

When soon the goodly Wyre, that wonted was so high
Her stately top to rear,
Of Ertiselton's end begins her to bethink.
Drayton, Polyolbion, viii. 288.

The jessamine that round the straw roof'd cot
Its fragrant branches wreathed, beneath whose shade
I wont to sit and watch the setting sun
And hear the thrush's song.
Southey.

2. To dwell; make one's home.

The king's fisher wonts commonly by the waterside and nestles in hollow banks
Sir R. L'Estrange.

II. trans. To accustom; habituate.

These that us youth have wonted themselves to the land of less ships, want not to cease of strength according to the increase of their burdens wont[1] (wunt), n. [< wont[1], a. and v. Cf. won[1], wone, n.] Custom; habit; practice; way.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 286.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 2.

Rather than I would break my old Wont
Ethereon, She Would if She Could, v. 1.

The heart grows hardened with perpetual wont.
Lowell, Parting of the Ways.

Use and wont See use.

wont[2]†, v. An obsolete form of want[1].

Make
For hem, yf other water wonte, a lake.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 26.

wont[3], n. A variant of want[2].

won't (wunt or wont). A contraction of will not = that is, will not.

wonted (wun'ted), p. a. [< wont[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Accustomed; made or having become familiar by using, frequenting, etc.

The stately food, which wonted was to kepe
A court at home is now come up to courte
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 62.

Hepzibah had fully satisfied herself of the impossibility of ever becoming wonted to this peevishly obstreperous little shop-bell
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

2. Customary or familiar by being used, done, frequented, enjoined, experienced, or the like; usual.

She did her wonted course forslowe.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vi. 16.

To pay our wonted tribute
Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 462.

To this the courteous Prince Accorded with his wonted courtesy
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

wontedness (wun'ted-nes), n. The state of being wonted or accustomed; customariness.

Mere laws of opinion.
Eikon Basilike, p. 168.

wontless (wunt'les), a. [< wont[1] + less.] Unaccustomed; unused. [Rare.]

What wontless fury dost thou now inspire
Into my feeble breast, too full of thee?
Spenser, In Honour of Beautie, l. 2.

He (remembering the past day
When from his hand the affrighted sons of France
Fled trembling, all astonished at their foren
And wontless valour, rages round the field Dreadful in anger
Southey.

woo[1] (wö), v. [Early mod. E. also wo, woue, woe, < ME. wowen, wowyen, < AS. wogian, in comp. awogian, woo; prob. lit. 'bend, incline,' hence incline another toward oneself, < wōh (wog-), bent, curved, crooked; cf. Goth. waha, bent, in comp. un-wahs not crooked, blameless; cf. Skt. vaṅk, go tortuously, be crooked; cf. L. curvāre, vncillate, curvus, crooked: see vacillate, varicose, etc.] I. trans. 1. To court; seek the favor, affection, or love of, especially with a view to marriage; solicit or seek in marriage.

He wooeth him by mecches and bromage.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 182.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
she is a woman, therefore to be won
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3. 78.

2. To solicit; sue; ask with importunity; seek to influence or persuade; invite; endeavor to prevail upon to do or to grant something.

Having woo'd
A villain to attempt it
Shak., Pericles, v. 1. 174.

I wooed her for to dine,
but could not get her Philliada floots me (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 210).

Thee I shunn'd not, the woods among,
I woo, to hear thy even song
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 44.

3. To seek; seek to obtain or bring about; act as if seeking to obtain or bring about.

Some in their actions do woo and affect honour and reputation
Bacon, Honour and Reputation (ed. 1887).

Whose gently looking beauties only do Inamour Ruin and Destruction woo.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 6.

II. intrans. 1. To court; make love; use the love.

Go nu Berlid swithe,
And make him ful blithe,
And whan thu farst to woge,
Tak hiin thine gloue.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 793.

When a woman woos, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed?
Shak., Sonnets, xli.

2. To ask; seek; solicit.

I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.
Shak., Much Ado, II. 3.

woo[2] (wö), n. A Scotch form of wood.

woo[3]†, n. and a. An old spelling of woe.

wood[1] (wud), n. [< ME. wode, wude, wud (pl. wodes, wudes), < AS. wudu, orig. widu, a wood, a tree, wood, timber, = MD. MLG. wede, a wood, wood, = OHG. witu, MHG. wite, wood, = Icel. viðr = Sw. Dan. ved, a tree, wood; akin to (according to some, derived from) the Celtic words OIr. fid, Ir. fiodh, a wood, tree (fiodhas, shrubbery, underwood), = Gael. fadh, a wilderness, wood, timber (fiodhach, shrubs), = W. gwydd, trees (gwyddeh, bushes, brakes).] 1. A large and thick collection of growing trees, a forest: often in the plural, with the same force as the singular.

From Ebron Men gon to Bethelem in half a day, for it is but 5 Myle, and it is full fayre Weye, be Pleynes and Wodes fulle delectable. Mandeville, Travels, p. 69.

Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood.
Shak., Macbeth, III. 2. 51.

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 178.

2. The substance of trees; the hard fibrous substance which composes the body of a tree and its branches, and which lies between the pith and the bark. In dicotyledonous plants the wood is composed externally of the alburnum or sap-wood, and internally of the duramen or hard wood. In monocotyledonous plants, or endogens, the hardest part of the wood is nearest the circumference, while the interior is composed of cellular tissue.

3. Timber; the trunks or main stems of trees which attain such dimensions as to be fit for architectural and other purposes. In this sense the word implies not only standing trees suitable for buildings, etc., but also such trees cut into beams, rafters, boards, planks, etc. See timber[1].

4. Firewood; cordwood.

To morrow morning bedding and a gown shall be sent in, and wood and coal.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iv. 1.

5. The cask, keg, or barrel, as distinguished from the bottle: as, wine drawn from the wood.

Ordinary clarets from the wood 4*s.* to 6*s.* per gallon, good bottled clarets from 4*s.* or 4*s.* 6*d.* to 10*s.* a bottle.
Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 199.

6. The grain of wood.

Rightlie smeiothed and wrought as it should, not ouer (t)whartille, and against the wood.
Ascham, The Schoolmaster, p. 35.

7. In arch., three or four trees grouped together, usually represented as rooted in a mound, which is vert, unless otherwise blazoned. Also called hurst. — 8. In printing, a wood block, or woodblocks collectively, as distinguished from a metallic type or plate of any kind: as, cuts printed from the wood. — 9. In music, the wooden wind-instruments of an orchestra taken collectively. See wind[2], n., 5, wind instrument, and instrument, 3 (b). Also called wood wind. — 10. Figuratively, a crowd, mass, or collection.

And though my buckler bare a wood of darts,
Yet left not I, but with audacious face
I brauely fought.
P. Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, v.

Names of Tribulation, Persecution Restraint, Long-patience, and such like, attested
By the whole family or wood of you.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iii. 2.

Wood is used to signify any miscellaneous collection, or stock of materials, hence some poets intitle their miscellaneous works sylvarum libri, and our poet [Ben Jonson], conforming to this practice, calls his the Forest.
Upton, quoted in note to "The Alchemist."

Agal or agila wood. See agallochum. Agatized wood. See agatize and silicify. Aloes wood. See aloëswood. Amboyna wood. See bastard wood, 1. Artificial wood, a composition made of paper, paper pulp, glue, sawdust, hemp, albumen, metallic oxids, drying oils, sulphur, soft rubber, gutta-percha, mineral salts, etc. When warm or wet, according to the nature of the particular composition, it is plastic, but in cooling or drying it hardens and acquires properties similar to those of wood. Brauna wood. See brauna. Brazil wood, brazilletto wood. See brazil, brasiletto. Castor wood, a name of Meyna laxiflora. Caviuna wood, a palisander wood obtained in Brazil from Dalbergia nigra and perhaps some other trees. Champ wood, the wood of the champ and the champak. Cock of the woods, the capercaillie (which see, with cut). Commissioners of Woods and Forests, a department of the British Government, called more fully the Board of Commissioners of Woods, Forests, Land-revenues, Works, and Buildings, established by 2 and 3 Wm. IV., c. 1. By 14 and 15 Vict., c. 42 it is divided into a Board of Commissioners of Woods, Forests, and Land-revenues, and a Board of Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings. The former have the management of the crown woods and forests and land-revenues; the latter have the management of the public works and buildings, to which has been added, by later acts, the care of the royal parks, etc. Encyc. Dict. — Coromandel wood. Same as calamander-wood. — Cuba wood. Same as fustic. Curana wood, the wood of Icica altissima. See Icica. Feast of wood-carrying, one of the annual festivals of the ancient Jews, instituted after the Babylonish captivity. It obtained its name from the practice of the people's bringing wood to the temple on the day of its dedication for the burning of the sacrifices. — Fossil wood (a) Wood in a fossil state — that is, wood in a state of nature that has undergone various preservative processes and has become fossil. Popularly the term is usually applied to silicified wood — that is, wood in which the substance has been replaced, atom by atom, by silica in such a manner as to retain the exact form and appearance of the original wood. Wood preserved in this manner is exceedingly abundant in various parts of the western United States, especially in the Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming, where it is not rare to find trunks 80 feet in height, and 5 or 10 feet in diameter, standing upright exactly in the positions in which they grew, and so perfectly preserved that every cell, with all its delicate markings, can be as satisfactorily examined as from a living tree. In central Arizona perfectly silicified trunks of trees, 6 feet in diameter and 140 feet long, have been observed. These latter belong to the genus Araucarioxylon, the representative in a fossil state of the genus Araucaria. Fossil wood may also be due to the molecules being displaced by lime or iron, or by various combinations of minerals. Lignite, which represents one of the stages in the formation of coal, is very frequently fossil wood which has lost more or less of its volatile constituents, but still retains its wood-like structure and appearance. The term fossil wood is therefore properly applied to any wood that is so situated in the earth, or has been so acted upon by various minerals, as to be permanently preserved. (b) See fossil cork, under fossil. Hard wood, the wood of various trees, such as oak, cherry, maple, ebony, lignumvitæ, etc., so called from them woods being relatively very hard, firm, and compact. The quality results from the cells having exceedingly thick walls and being very compactly arranged, with very few or no intercellular spaces or ducts. Trees furnishing wood of this character are usually of slow growth, with narrow annual rings and dense, solid heart-wood. Mahogany, rosewood, and most woods susceptible of a fine polish belong to this class. Hypernic wood. See hypernic. Incense wood. See incense-tree. Jacaranda wood. See palisander. Jarool, jarrah, kamassi wood. See jarool, etc. — Jasperized wood. Same as silicified wood. Kanyin wood. Same as guryun wood. See guryun. Karri wood, the timber of Eucalyptus diversicolor of southwestern Australia. The tree is said to attain exceptionally the height of 400 feet. The timber is useful for ship-planking, masts, wheel-work, railway-ties, etc. Khow wood. See Olea. Lemon wood. (a) The wood of the lemon-tree, which is hard, elastic, and fragrant. (b) In South Africa an evergreen shrub, or a tree 20 or 30 feet high, Euphorbia Capensis (Grandidea cymosa), having a hard, tough wood, variously useful. — Lingoa wood. Same as lingoe[2]. Loblolly wood. See loblolly tree. — Metallization of wood. See metallization. Molded wood. See molded[1]. Molompi, mora, myall wood. See molompi, etc. — Myrtle wood, the wood of the Tasmanian beech. See Fagus. — Nephritic wood. See nephritic. Nicaragua wood, a dye-wood exported from Nicaragua, similar to brazil wood and derived from the same or another species of Cæsalpinia; peach wood. — Padouk wood, the Andaman redwood. See redwood, 2. Pernambuco wood, true brazil wood. Perpignan wood, the wood of the Ethiopean nettle tree, Celtis australis. See nettle tree, 1. — Petrified wood. Same as silicified wood. — Picrana wood, the wood of Picræna excelsa. See quassia, 2. Quassia, quebracho, saj wood. See quassia, etc. Samaria wood. Same as curana wood. Sand wood, a leguminous shrub of the Isle of Reunion, doubtfully classed as Br. monticola Ammoxylon. — Santa Martha wood. Same as peach wood. — Secondary, speckled, sterile wood. See the adjectives. — Silicified wood. See fossil wood, above, and silicify. — Soft wood, a wood, such as basswood, poplar, tulip, cedar and white pine, which is relatively soft and easily worked. This character is due to the large and thin walled cells, including usually numerous ducts. Soft-wood trees are generally of rapid growth, making thick annual layers. Tonka-bean wood. Same as scent wood. Trincomali wood. See halmalille. — Turanira wood, the wood of the bastard bully tree, Bumelia retusa, of the West Indies. Wood-bending machine, a machine or any apparatus for bending wood into shape. Different machines are used, according to the purpose for which the wood is to be used, as for ship-timbers, furniture, sleigh-runners, hoops and staves. Wood moot or mote, see moot[2]. Wood reed-grass. See reed-grass. — Wood stop, in organ-building, a stop the pipes of which are made of wood as the flute, the stopped diapason, etc. — Wood tea. See tea[1]. Wood wind. See def. 9, above. (For a multitude of other woods, see specific epithets.)

Syn 1 Wood, Forest, etc. See forest.

wood[1] (wud), v. [< wood[1], n.] I. trans. To supply or replenish with wood; get supplies of wood for: as, to wood a steamboat or a locomotive. [Colloq.]

Many passengers would save a little by helping to "wood the boat"; i. e., by carrying wood down the bank and throwing it on the boat, a special ticket being issued on that condition.
Pk. Century, XLI. 146.

II. intrans. To take in or get supplies of wood.

In this little (island) of Mevis, more than twenty yeares agoe, I have remained a good time together, to wood and water and refresh my men.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 277.

Therefore, as soon as we came to an Anchor at the East end of the Island, we sent our Boat ashore to the Governour, to desire leave to wood, water, and set up a tent on shore.
Dampier, Voyages, II. 1. 124.

wood[2]† (wŏd), a. [So. wod, wud; ME. wood, woode, wod, wode, < AS. wōd, mad, raging, furious, = Icel. ōðr, raging, frantic, = Goth. wōds, mad; cf. MD. woed, woede, D. woede, OHG. wuot, MHG. G. wut, wuth, madness; AS. wōð, voice, song, = Icel. ōðr, song, poetry, mind, wit; prob. allied to L. vātes, a prophet, bard (one filled with "a fine frenzy"): see vatic. See Wodan, Wednesday.] Mad; frantic; furious; angry; enraged; raging. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. exc. Scotch.]

Ffuerse Ector was fayn of his fyn helpe,
And as wode as a wild bore wan on his horse.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6238.

Now a Monday next, at quarter vyght,
Shal falle a reyn, and that so wilde and wood
That half so greet was nevere Noees flood.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 331.

Howard was as wode as a wilde bullok; God sende hym sede wurshipp as he deservith.
Paston Letters, I. 241.

Quyrne he [Iscariot] sayd, Thou wood hounde [mad dog, margin] thou hast doon to me grete prouffyte [profit].
Ashton's Legendary Hist. of the Cross (reprinted from orig. ed. of Nov. 29, 1483), London, 1887, p. xxxvi.

Franticke companion, lunaticke and wood.
Greene, Orlando Furioso, l. 984.

For wood†, like anything mad; "like mad."

Yit lat us to the peple seme . . .
That wimmen loves us for wood.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1747.

wood[2]† (wŏd), v. i. [< ME. wooden, wodien; from the adj. Cf. weed[3].] 1. To act like a madman; rave.

He stareth and woodeth in his advertence.
Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, l. 467.

2. To be fierce or furious; rage.

Though they ne anoye nat the body, yit vices wooden to destroyen men in hy wounde of thowht.
Chaucer, Boethius, iv. meter 3.

wood[3]†, n. An old spelling of wond. Prompt. Parv.

wood-acid (wud'as-id), n. Same as wood-vinegar. See vinegar.

Take 20 pounds terra japonica, 5 pounds of wood-acid, . . . to about 10 barrels of water, or enough of the latter to cover the hides.
C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 607.

wood-agate (wud'ag-at), n. An agate which shows more or less perfectly the structure of the wood from which it has been derived by a process of silicification.

wood-alcohol (wud'al'ko-hol), n. See alcohol.

wood-almond (wud'ä'mond), n. A shrub, Hippocratea comosa. See Hippocratea.

wood-anemone (wud'a-nem'ō-nē), n. The wind-flower, Anemone nemorosa.

wood-ant (wud'ant), n. 1. A large ant, as Formica rufa, which lives in the woods. — 2. A white ant, or termite, as Termes flavipes, which lives in the wood of old buildings. See cut under Termes. [U. S.]

wood-apple (wud'ap-l), n. See Feronia, 1.

wood-ashes (wud'ash'ez), n. pl. The remains of burned wood or plants.

wood-awl (wud'âl), n. The green woodpecker, or awl-bird, Gecinus viridis: same as woodwale. See cut under popinjay. [Cornwall, Eng.]

wood-baboon (wud'ba-bön'), n. The drill; the cinereous or yellow baboon of Guinea, Cynocephalus leucophæus. See drill[4].

wood-barley (wud'bär'li), n. See Hordeum.

wood-beetle (wud'bē'tl), n. See Passalidæ.

wood-betony (wud'bet'ō-ni), n. See betony. Also called head-betony and lousewort.

wood-bill (wud'bil), n. In her., a bearing representing a woodsmen's bill for lopping fagots, etc.

woodbine, woodbind (wud'bin, -bind), n. [Early mod. E. wodbynde; < ME. woodbynde, woode-bynde, wodebinde, wodebynde, wuldebinde, < AS. wudubind, wudebinde, earlier wuidubinda, wuidubindae, wuidubindlae; so called because it binds or winds round trees, < wudu, widu, tree, wood, + bindan, bind: see wood[1] and bind.] The common European honeysuckle, Lonicera Periclymenum, whence the name is more or less extended to other honeysuckles. L. grata, a species very similar to L. Periclymenum, is designated American woodbine. The name is also given to the Virginia creeper, Ampelopsis quinquefolia.

Aboute a tre with many a twiste
Bytgent and writhen is the soote woodbynde.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1231.

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle Gently entwist.
Shak., M. N. D., IV. 1. 47.

Spanish woodbine, the seven-year vine, or Spanish arbor-vine, Ipomœa tuberosa. See vine. — Wild woodbine. See wild.

wood-bird (wu̇d'bėrd), n. A bird that lives in the woods.

Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
Shak., M. N. D., iv., 1. 145.

wood-block (wu̇d'blok), n. 1. In engraving, a die cut in relief on wood, and in condition for furnishing impressions in ink in a printing-press; a woodcut. See wood-engraving. The wood commonly used for wood-blocks is box, the blocks being cut directly across the grain. Inferior kinds of wood, such as American rock-maple, pear, plane, etc., are used for coarser work.

2. A print or impression from such an engraved block; a woodcut. Also used attributively in both senses: as, wood-block illustrations.

wood-boiler (wu̇d'boi'lėr), n. A vessel adapted for boiling wood in order to soften it and thus facilitate working.

wood-borer (wu̇d'bōr'ėr), n. That which bores wood, as an insect, a crustacean, or a mollusk. Compare Cis, ship-worm, Saperda, and teredo, and other citations under wood-boring.

wood-boring (wu̇d'bōr'ing), a. Capable of or characterized by boring wood; having the habits of a wood-borer: as, the wood boring shrimps; wood-boring beetles. See gribble[2], Limnoria, Cheluridæ, Lymexylon, ship-worm, and teredo.

wood-born (wu̇d'bōrn), a. Born in the woods. Spenser, F. Q., I. vi. 16. [Rare.]

wood-bound (wu̇d'bound), a. Encumbered with tall woody hedgerows. Imp. Dict.

wood-brick (wu̇d'brik), n. A block of wood, of the shape and size of a brick, inserted in the interior walls of a building to afford a hold for the joinery, etc.

Woodbridge gun. See gun[1].

wood-broney (wu̇d'brō'ni), n. The common ash, Fraxinus excelsior. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-broom (wu̇d'brōm), n. The wild teazel, Dipsacus sylvestris.

wood-bug (wu̇d'bug), n. A forest bug.

woodburytype (wu̇d'bėr-i-tīp), n. [Named after Walter Bentley Woodbury, the inventor.] 1. A photomechanical process in which a relief is produced from a negative on a film of bichromated gelatin, hardened in alum. This is pressed into a plate of soft metal, the result being an intaglio mold. A warm solution of gelatin containing any desired pigment is poured on the mold, a sheet of paper is laid over it, and pressure applied, the superfluous portion of the gelatin being squeezed out, and only that remaining in the intaglio mold and forming the image being left. When this sets it adheres to the paper, and is then fixed by hardening in a solution of alum. Compare heliotypy.

2. A picture produced by this process.

wood-calamint (wu̇d'kal'a-mint), n. See Calamintha.

wood-carpet (wu̇d'kär pet), n. 1. A floor-covering made of slats or more ornamental shapes of wood of different colors, fastened to a cloth backing. The different pieces of wood are arranged so as to produce the effects of tessellated floors, mosaic work, etc. Also called in the United States wood-carpeting.

2. A British geometrid moth, Melanippe rivata, common in the south of England.

wood-carver (wu̇d'kär'vėr), n. One who carves wood.

The peasants are turners, lapidaries, electro-platers, wood-carvers, and spectacle-makers.
Edinburgh Rev. CLXVI. 310.

wood-carving (wu̇d'kär'ving), n. 1. The art or process of carving wood.—2. A piece of sculpture in wood.

wood-cell (wu̇d'sel), n. A cell normally entering into the composition of the wood of plants. Wood-cells are one of the regular modifications of prosenchyma, consisting of cell-structures greatly elongated in proportion to their breadth, with very thick walls and usually pointed extremities. When thoroughly lignified, wood-cells take little active part in the metabolism of the plant, their function being mainly to give strength and power of resistance to it. Also called woody fiber. See prosenchyma, tissue, 4, and cut under disk, 4 (c).

wood-charcoal (wu̇d'chär'kōl), n. See charcoal, 1.

woodchat (wu̇d'chat), n. The red-backed shrike or butcher-bird of Africa and Europe, Lanius rufus. Also called L. auricularius and by other names. It is occasionally seen in Great Britain in summer. The name is misleading, as the bird is not a chat in any proper sense.

woodchat-shrike (wu̇d'chat-shrīk), n. The woodchat.

wood-chopper (wu̇d'chop'ėr), n. One who chops wood; specifically, one who cuts down trees, as a lumberman.

woodchuck[1] (wu̇d'chuk), n. [Also woodshack, applied to a different quadruped; a corruption, simulating E. wood[1], of wejack, wejack, repr. an Amer. Ind. name, of which the Cree form is rendered otchock by Sir John Richardson.] The commonest North American species of marmot, Arctomys monax, a large rodent quadruped of the family Sciuridæ. It is from 15 to 18 inches long, of very stout, heavy form, with brownish and grayish tints above, and reddish-brown below. It feeds on vegetables of many kinds, burrows in the ground, and hibernates in winter. Also called ground hog and chuck. See cut under Arctomys.—Woodchuck day, in popular myth and rural tradition, the day on which the woodchuck first comes out of its hole after its hibernation, this action being regarded as affording a weather-prophecy. The saying goes that if the woodchuck sees its shadow on that day, it retires to its burrow for six weeks longer, which implies that warm, sunshiny weather very early in the spring, or in February, arousing the woodchuck from its torpidity, is likely to be followed by a cold or late season. Also ground-hog day.

woodchuck[2] (wu̇d'chuk), n. [Prob. < wood[1] + chuck[5], var. of chack[3].] The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-chuck (wu̇d'chuk), n. In a lathe, a chuck adapted for holding a piece of wood to be operated on.

The stoppers are fixed in a hollow wood-chuck by slight blows of a mallet. O'Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 196.

woodcoal (wu̇d'kōl), n. Charcoal.

woodcock (wu̇d'kok), n. [< ME. wodekoc, wodekok, woddecok, < AS. wuducoc, a woodcock; as wood[1] + cock[1].] 1. One of two distinct birds of the family Scolopacidæ, closely related to the true snipe (Gallinago). (a) In Europe, Scolopax rusticola (wrongly spelled rusticula), a very common bird of the northerly parts of the Old World, one of the largest and best known representatives of its family, highly es-

European Woodcock (Scolopax rusticola).

teemed as a game bird, its flesh being delicious while the thick cover it inhabits and the rapidity of its flight test the nerve and skill of the sportsman. It is migratory, breeding chiefly in the higher latitudes, nesting upon the ground in a dry spot under cover, and laying four eggs. This woodcock is over 12 inches in length and weighs from 10 to 14 ounces; the plumage is intricate, variegated with brown, black, russet, and tawny. It is seldom seen in America, and only as a straggler from Europe. (b) In the United States and Canada, Philohela minor, a bird of the same general characteristics as the former, but smaller, usually under 12 inches in length, and weighing 8 ounces or less; the under parts are whole-colored, and there is a generic difference from Scolopax rusticola in the structure of the outer primaries, three of which are attenuated and subcarinated in Philohela. The sexes are alike in color, but the female is considerably larger than the male, and absorbs also the maximum size and weight above given; the male is usually 10 to 11 inches long and 6 to 7½ in spread, weighing 4 or 5 ounces according to condition. The bill is perfectly straight, 2½ to 3 inches long, and deeply furrowed; it is very sensitive pecking with it in the soft ground or among the mold to thrust out its food, of which it takes a great deal for its size. The woodcock is to some extent a nocturnal bird. It abounds in most of its range, and is one of the leading game birds of America. It is found in bogs and swamps, wet woodlands, alder brakes (sometimes called woodcock brakes in consequence), and not seldom in quite dry fields, as corn-fields. It is migratory but erratic and capricious in its movements, and nests throughout its range. The eggs are laid on the ground, generally in April (earlier or later according to latitude); they are less pointed than usual among waders, 1¾ by 1¼ inches in size, of a brownish-gray color, with very numerous and small chocolate-brown surface-spots and neutral-tint shell-spots; the full number is four. The woodcock has a peculiar breathing-cry, and sometimes exhibits the curious habit of removing the young from danger by flying off with the chick, which is held in the parent's feet. Also called snipe, with or without qualifying words (see snipe, 1 (c)), American woodcock, little woodcock, lesser woodcock, red woodcock, pessil hen, bog sucker, bogbird, timberdoodle, hookwingdale, night peck, night-partridge, shrape, cock (short for woodcock), and Labrador twister.

American Woodcock (Philohela minor).

2. The large black pileated woodpecker, or log-cock, Hylotomus (or Ceophlœus) pileatus. See cut under pileated. [Local, U. S.]

Woodcock . . . is applied by backwoodsmen and other country folk to the pileated woodpecker, . . . wherever that big red-crested bird of the tall timber is found.
G. Trumbull, Bird Names (1888), p. 151.

3. In conch., a woodcock shell: more fully called thorny woodcock. Also called Venus's-comb.—4. A simpleton: in allusion to the facility with which the European woodcock allows itself to be taken in springes or in nets set for it in the glades.

Go, like a woodcock,
And thrust your neck i' the noose.
Beau. and Fl., Loyal Subject, iv. 5.

Among us in England this bird is infamous for its simplicity or folly, so that a woodcock is proverbially used for a foolish, simple person. Willoughby.

Little woodcock. (a) The great or double snipe, or woodcock-snipe, Gallinago major. [British.] (b) The American woodcock, Philohela minor: a book-name. [U. S.]—Springes to catch woodcocks, arts to entrap simplicity. Shak., Hamlet, i. 3, 115.—Woodcock's cross, penitence for folly.

Not controversies now are in disputes
At Westminster, where such a cuyle they keepe:
Where man doth man within the law betosse,
Till some go crosse-ace home by Woodcocks crosse.
John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

Woodcock's head. (a) A tobacco-pipe, so called from the shape.

Sir. O peace, I pray you! I love not the breath of a woodcock's head.

Fastol. Meaning my head, lady?

Sir. Not altogether so, sir, but as if were fatal to their fellows that think to grace themselves with taking tobacco, when they want better entertainment, you see your pipe bears the true form of a wood cock's head.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 3.

(b) A woodcock shell, as Murex haustellum.

woodcock-eye (wu̇d'kok-ī), n. A snap-hook. E. H. Knight. [Eng.]

woodcock-fish (wu̇d'kok fish), n. The sea-woodcock or trumpet-fish, Centriscus (or Macrorhamphosus) scolopax: so called from the long beak like that of the snipe or woodcock. [See cut under snipe-fish.]

woodcock-owl (wu̇d'kok-oul), n. The short-eared owl, Asio accipitrinus, Otus brachyotus, or Brachyotus palustris: so called from its association with the European woodcock. [Local, Eng. and Ireland.]

woodcock-pilot (wu̇d'kok pī'lot), n. The European gold-crested kinglet, Regulus cristatus: so called as preceding the woodcock in migration. See cut under goldcrest. [Local, Eng.]

woodcock-shell (wu̇d'kok-shel), n. One of several neritoid shells which have a long spout or beak, as Murex tribulus or M. tranispina; a woodcock, woodcock's head, or Venus's-comb. See cut under Murex.

woodcock-snipe (wu̇d'kok snīp), n. Same as little woodcock (a) (which see, under woodcock).

wood-copper (wu̇d'kop'ėr), n. See alburnic.

wood-corn (wu̇d'kōrn), n. A certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors in Great Britain to the lord of the manor for the liberty to pick up dead or broken wood.

woodcracker (wu̇d'krak'ėr), n. The common European nuthatch or nuthatch, Sitta cæsia or S. europæa. See cut under Sitta. Plot, Nat. Hist. Oxford, p. 175. (Darrell.) [Local, Eng.]

woodcraft (wu̇d'kraft), n. [< ME. wodecraft; < wood[1] + craft[1].] Skill in anything which pertains to the woods or forest; skill in the chase, especially in hunting deer, etc.

What were woodcraft wight to fight without danger?
Scott, Quentin Durward, x.

wood-crash (wu̇d'krash), n. A machine, made on the principle of a spring rattle, used in the plays to imitate the sound of breaking timbers.

wood-cricket (wu̇d'krik'et), n. A kind of cricket that lives in the woods: specifically, Nemobius sylvestris of Europe.

wood-culver (wu̇d'kul'vėr), n. The wood-pigeon or ring-dove, Columba palumbus. Also wood-quest. [Prov. Eng.]

woodcut (wu̇d'kut), n. An engraving on wood, or a print from such an engraving. See wood-engraving.—Woodcut-paper, a soft paper of one kind fiber and smooth face, half-sized or wholly unsized, readily receptive of ink or impression. Sometimes called plate-paper.

wood-cutter (wůd'kut'ėr), n. 1. A person who cuts wood.—2. A maker of woodcuts; an engraver on wood. See wood-engraving.

wood-cutting (wůd'kut'ing), n. 1. The act or employment of cutting wood by means of saws or by the application of knife-edge machinery.—2. Wood-engraving.

wood-dove (wud'duv), n. [< ME. wodedove, wodedowve, wode doure; < wood[1] + dove[1].] The stock-dove, Columba œnas; also, the common wood-pigeon, C. palumbus.

The wode-douve upon the spray
She sang ful loude and clere
Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 9

wood-drink (wůd'dringk), n. A decoction or infusion of medicinal woods, as of sassafras.

wood-duck (wůd'duk), n. 1. The summer duck, Aix sponsa: more fully called crested wood duck,

Wood duck (Aix sponsa). (Drawn from nature.)

and also bridal duck, acorn-duck, tree-duck, wood widgeon, and widgeon. 2. The hooded merganser, Lophodytes cucullatus. Also tree duck. See cut under merganser. [Western U. S.]

wood-eater (wůd'ē'ter), n. That which eats wood; a wood-borer; a wood fretter; specifically, the gribble, Limnoria lignorum. It is very injurious to submerged timber, and occasionally useful in hastening the decay and consequent removal of snags and wrecks.

wooded (wud'ed), a. [< wood[1] + ed[2].] 1. Supplied or covered with wood; abounding in wood: as, land well wooded and watered.

The brook escaped from the eye into a deep and wooded dell. Scott.

2†. Hence, figuratively, thickly or densely covered; crowded.

The hills are wooded with their partisans
Beau. and Fl., Bonduca, I. 2.

wood-embossing (wůd'em-bos'ing), n. A method of ornamenting flat surfaces of wood in imitation of wood carving. The wood, softened by steam, is passed between engraved rolls in a wood carving machine and impressed with patterns in low relief. Another process burns the design into the wood, by means of heated dies.

wooden (wud'n), a. [Early mod. E. also wodden; < wood[1] + -en[2].] 1. Made of wood; consisting of wood.

Bartolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil i' the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger. Shak., Hen. V., iv., 4.

I saw the images of many of the French kings, set in certaine wooden cupboards. Coryat, Crudities, I. 61

2. Stiff; ungainly; clumsy; awkward; spiritless; expressionless: as, a wooden stare.

It is a sport to see when a bold fellow is out of countenance, for that puts his face into almost shrunken and wooden posture. Bacon, Boldness (ed. 1887).

3. Dull; stupid, as if with no more sensation than wood.

Who have so leaden eyes as not to see sweet Beauty's show,
Or, seeing, have so wooden wits as not that worth to know.
Sir P. Sydney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 570)

4†. Of the woods; sylvan.

And how the worthy mystery befell
Sylvanus here, this wooden god, can tell Chapman, Gentleman Usher, I. 1.

Wooden brick. Same as wood brick. Wooden fuse. See fuse[2]. Wooden horse. (a†) A ship

Milford Haven, the chief stable for his wooden horses
Fuller, General Worthies, vi.

Upon a wooden horse he rides through the world, and in a merry gale makes a path through the seas.
Burton, Good and Bad, p. 9. (Davies.)

(b) An instrument of military punishment consisting of a beam or timber, sometimes set with sharp points, upon which the culprit was compelled to sit astride, having in some instances weights tied to his feet. Wooden leg, an artificial leg made of wood. Wooden mill, in wood-cutting, a circular disk of wood, usually poplar, about 4 inches thick, and cut across the grain, which, when charged with pumice and water, is used for cutting gems en cabochon. Wooden pavement, a pavement or causeway consisting of blocks of wood instead of stone or the like. Wooden pear. See pear[1]. Wooden screw, a screw of wood such as is used in the clamping-jaw of a carpenters' bench. Wooden shoe. See sabot. Wooden spoon. (a) A large spoon made of wood, for mixing salad, and for use in cookery. (b) See spoon[1]. Wooden tongue. See tongue. Wooden type, large type cut in wood, used for printing posters, etc. Wooden wedding. See wedding. Wooden wedge. See wedge[1]. = Syn. 1. See leaden.

wood-end (wůd'end), n. Same as hood-end.

wood-engraver (wud'en-grā'vėr), n. 1. An artist who engraves on wood.—2. In entom., any one of several bark-beetles of the genus Xylehorus and allied genera; specifically, X. cædalus. This works in the cambium layer of pine trees in the United States in such a way that, on removing the loosened bark, the surface of the wood is seen furrowed in a regular and artistic manner, numerous galleries passing off at right angles from a straight median tunnel.

Wood-engraver (Xyleborus cælatus).—a, eight times natural size.

wood-engraving (wud'en-grā'ving), n. 1. The art or process of cutting designs in relief upon blocks of wood, usually box, so that impressions can be made from them with a pigment in a printing press, upon paper or other material. For cuts of more than 5 or 6 inches square, two or more blocks are firmly secured together. The surface of the smoothed block, which is cut directly across the grain, is prepared for the engraver by rubbing it with pounded bath brick mixed with a little water, in order to give a hold to the lead-pencil and the subject is drawn in with pencil or India ink, or is transferred upon the block by photography. The engraver then, by means of gravers, tint-tools, gouges, or scrapers, and flat tools or chisels of different sizes, cuts out the design, leaving it in raised lines or dots upon the surface of the block so that these may receive the ink and yield the desired impression under the action of the press. In such parts of the design as are to be solid black, the engraver leaves the surface of the wood untouched; in such parts as are to be wholly white, he cuts the surface entirely away; the large number of tones, technically called tints, between these extremes are rendered by cutting out wider or narrower spaces corresponding to white paper in the print between the lines or dots left in relief. An engraving is seldom a mere reproduction of the copy; it is a translation, into which the personal element of the engraver enters: thus the engraving may be either superior or inferior artistically to the original. Wood engraving is technically the opposite of steel or copperplate-engraving, in the latter the lines cut by the engraver form the picture, in the former the parts of the surface left uncut form the picture.

2. A block of wood engraved by the above method, or an impression from such a block.

woodenhead (wud'n-hed), n. A blockhead; a thick-headed, dull, or stupid person; a numskull. [Colloq.]

wooden-headed (wůd'n-hed'ed), a. Thick-headed; stupid; lacking penetration or discernment.

wooden-headedness (wůd'n-hed'ed-nes), n. The state or character of being wooden-headed; stupidity. [Colloq.]

I overheard some rather strong language going on within, words such as "wooden-headedness" and "ibis" being used. Light, Feb. 23, 1889.

woodenly (wud'n-li), adv. In a wooden manner; stiffly; clumsily; awkwardly; without feeling or sympathy.

Diverse thought I have some sport in seeing how woodenly he would excuse himself.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 22.

woodenness (wud'n-nes), n. Wooden character or quality; stiffness; lack of spirit or expression; clumsiness; stupidity.

woodenware (wud'n-wār), n. A general name for bowls, dishes, etc., turned from solid blocks of wood: often used also of coopers' work, such as pails and tubs.

wood-evil (wud'ē'vl), n. Same as red water (which see, under water).

woodfall† (wůd'fâl), n. A fall or cutting of timber.

The woodfalls this year do not amount to half that sum of twenty-five thousand pounds. Bacon.

wood-fern (wůd'fėrn), n. See Aspidium and polypody.

wood-fiber (wůd'fī'bėr), n. Fiber derived from wood, specifically, the fiber obtained from various species of Abies, Betula, Populus, Tilia, etc., employed as a material for the manufacture of paper-pulp. See wood-paper and wood-pulp.

wood-flour (wůd'flour), n. Very fine sawdust, especially that made from pine wood for use as a surgical dressing.

Woodfordia (wud-fôr'di-ą), n. [NL. (Salisbury, 1806), named after J. Woodford, author (1824) of a catalogue of the plants of Hampstead.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Lythrariæ and tribe Lythreæ. It is characterized by black-dotted leaves, a curved tubular calyx, declined stamens, and pilose seeds. The only species, W. floribunda, is a native of India, China, eastern tropical Africa, and Madagascar. It is a much-branched shrub, downy with grayish hairs, producing round branches and square branchlets, with opposite ovate-lanceolate entire whitish leaves. The flowers are scarlet, and crowded into cymose panicles. See dhawai.

wood-francolin (wůd'fraug'kō-lin), n. One of the francolins, Francolinus gularis.

wood-fretter (wůd'fret'ėr), n. Something which frets wood, as an insect; a wood-borer, or wood-eater.

wood-frog (wůd'frog), n. A frog, Rana sylvatica, of the United States.

wood-gas (wůd'gas), n. Carbureted hydrogen obtained from wood.

wood-geld† (wůd'geld), n. In old Eng. law, money paid for the privilege of cutting wood within the limits of a forest.

wood-germander (wůd'jėr-man'dėr), n. Same as wood-sage. See sage[2].

wood-gnat (wůd'nat), n. A British gnat, Culex nemorosus.

wood-god (wůd'god), n. A sylvan deity.

The mild wood-gods arrived in the place. Spenser.

wood-grass (wud'gras), n. The great wood-rush, Luzula sylvatica. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-grinder (wud'grīn'dėr), n. In paper-manuf., a machine for grating and grinding wood to make paper-stock.

wood-grouse (wud'grous), n. A grouse that lives in the woods. Specifically[1]. (a) The cock-of-the-woods or capercaillie (which see, with cut). (b) In the United States a species of Canace (or Dendragapus), as the Canada grouse, or spruce partridge, and the dusky pine grouse. See cut under Canace and second cut under grouse.

wood-hack (wud'hak), n. [< ME. wodehake; < wood + hack[1].] A woodpecker, as the green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. See cut under popingay. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-hagger (wůd'hag'ėr), n. A wood-cutter.

Let no man think that the President and these Gentlemen spent their times as common Wood haggers at felling of trees.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 197.

wood-hawk (wůd'hak), n. An African hawk of the genus Dryotriorchis: a book-name.

wood-hen (wud'hen), n. A ralline bird of the genus Ocydromus, of which there are several species, of New Zealand, New Caledonia, and other Pacific islands, as O. australis, the weka rail. See Ocydromus.

Wood hen (Ocydromus australis).

wood-hewer (wůd'hū'ėr), n. 1. One who hews wood.—2. Any bird of the subfamily Dendrocolaptinæ, as Xiphocolaptes emigrans: a book-name. See cuts under saberbill and Upucerthia.

wood-hole (wůd'hōl), n. A place where wood is stored for fuel.

Leave trembling, and creep into the Wood-hool here.
Etherege, She Would if She Could, I. 1.

wood-honey (wůd'hun'i), n. [< ME. wudehunig, < AS. wuduhunig: as wood[1] + honey.] Wild honey. Mat. iii. 4 (ed. Hardwick).

wood-hoopoe (wůd'hō'pō), n. A hoopoe of the family Irrisoridæ: a tree-hoopoe. See cut under Irrisor.

wood-horse (wůd'hôrs), n. 1. A sawhorse or sawbuck.

Old Uncle Venner was just coming out of his door, with a wood-horse and saw on his shoulder; and, trudging along the street, he scrupled not to keep company with Peathe, so far as their paths lay together.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xiv.

2. Same as stick-bug, 1.

woodhouse† (wud'hous), n. A house or shed in which wood is piled and sheltered from the weather.

woodhousen†, n. An erroneous form of woodhouse.

Forma woodhousen drew the mount till it came before the queene, and there the kyng and his compaignie discended and dauncyd.
Sir Hall, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 239.

wood-ibis (wud'ī'bis), n. A large grallatorial bird of the stork kind, Tantalus (or Tantalopes) loculator, which abounds in the wooded swamps and bayous of southerly regions of the United States; hence, any stork of the subfamily Tantalinæ; a wood-stork. These birds are ibises in no proper sense. The species named is nearly 4 feet long, and 5½ feet in extent of wings. The adult of both sexes is snow-white with black primaries, alula, and tail, with the bald head livid-bluish and yellowish, the very heavy bill dingy-yellowish, the bare legs blue. The weight is 10 or 12 pounds. The young are dark-gray, with black-tipt wings and tail. These birds are gregarious, nest in large heronries, and lay two or three white eggs of elliptical shape, incrusted with a flaky substance, and measuring 2¾ by 1¾ inches. This wood-ibis is known on the Colorado river as the Colorado water-turkey; it occasionally strays to the Middle States, and spreads south in the West Indies, Central America, and parts of South America. Similar birds inhabit tropical and subtropical regions of the Old World. See cut under Tantalus.

woodie (wud'i), n. A dialectal form of widdy, itself a dialectal variant of withy[1], 3: applied humorously to the gallows. [Scotch.]

Half the country will see how ye'll grace the woodie.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxviii. (Encyc. Dict.) woodiness (wud'i-nes), n. The state or character of being woody. Evelyn.

wood-inlay (wud'in'lā), n. Decoration by means of the incrustation of one wood in another. Compare tarsia.

woodisht (wud'ish), a. [< wood[1] + -ish[1].] Sylvan.

The many mirthful jests, and wanton woodish sports.
Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 11. (Encyc. Dict.)

wood-jobber (wud'job'ėr), n. A woodpecker.

woodkernt (wud'kėrn), n. 1. A robber who infests woods; a forest-haunting bandit. Holland.—2. A boor; a churl.

The rich central pasture lands were occupied by the clans; the surrounding moors soils were almost desolate or roamed by a few scattered wood-kerne.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., 200.

wood-kingfisher (wud'king'fish-ėr), n. A kingfisher of the genus Dacelo in a broad sense; a kinghunter or halcyon, as the laughing-jackass. See Daceloninæ, and cut under Dacelo.

wood-knacker (wud'nak'ėr), n. The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridus. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-knifet (wud'nif), n. A short sword or dagger, used in hunting and for various purposes for which the long sword was too cumbrous.

He pulld forth a wood knife,
Fast thither that he ran;
He brought in the borse head,
And quitted him like a man.
The Boy and the Mantle (Child's Ballads, I. 14).

woodland (wud'land), n. and a. [< ME. wodelond, wodelond, < AS. wuduland; as wood[1] + land[1].] I. n. Land covered with wood, or land on which trees are suffered to grow, either for fuel or for timber.

Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain,
Here earth and water seem to strive again. Pope.

And Agamenticus lifts its blue Disk of a stand the woodlands o'er.
Whittier, The Wreck of Rivermouth.

=Syn. Wood, Park, etc. See forest.

II. a. Of, peculiar to, or inhabiting the woods; sylvan: as, woodland echoes; woodland songsters.

The woodland choir. Fenton.

I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire. Shak., All's Well, iv. 5. 40.

Woodland caribou, woodland reindeer, the common caribou of North America, as found in wooded regions, and as distinguished from the barren-ground reindeer, which occurs beyond the limit of trees. See cut under caribou.

woodlander (wud'lan-dėr), n. An inhabitant of the woods.

Every friend and fellow-woodlander.
Keats, Endymion, II.

woodlark (wud'lärk), n. A European lark, Alauda arborea, of more decidedly arboreal habits than the skylark, to which it is closely related. It differs from the latter chiefly in being somewhat smaller, with a shorter tail and more marked variegation of the colors, but its song is quite different. The nest is placed on the ground, and the eggs are four or five in number, of a white color spotted with reddish-brown. The woodlark is migratory, and widely distributed at different seasons. It is common in some parts of Great Britain, but rare in Scotland. See cut under Alauda.

wood-layer (wud'lā'ėr), n. A young oak or other timber-plant laid down among the thorn or other plants used in hedges.

wood-leopard (wud'lep'ärd), n. A beautiful white black-spotted moth, Zeuzera pyrina, the larva of which lives in wood; the wood leopard-moth. This insect has been discovered in the United States since the definition of leopard-moth was published in this dictionary.

woodless (wud'les), a. [< wood[1] + -less.] Without timber; untimbered.

wood-lily (wud'lil'i), n. 1. The lily of the valley, Convallaria majalis; locally (from a resemblance in the racemes), the wintergreen, Pyrola minor. [Eng.]—2. A plant of the genus Trillium.

wood-liverwort (wud'liv'ėr-wėrt), n. A lichen, Sticta pulmonacea, which frequently grows on trees. See cut under apothecium.

wood-lock (wud'lok), n. In ship-building, a piece of hard wood, close fitted and sheathed with copper, in the throating or score of the pintle, to keep the rudder from rising. Thearle, Naval Arch., ¶ 233.

wood-louse (wud'lous), n. 1. Any terrestrial isopod of the family Oniscidæ. The common wood-louse of England is a species of Oniscus. Also called hog-louse, sow-bug, slater, etc. See cuts under Isopoda and Oniscus.—2. A termite, or white ant, as Termes flavipes; any member of the Termitidæ. See cut under Termes. [Local, U. S.]—3. Any one of the small whitish species of the pseudoneuropterous family Psocidæ, found in the woodwork of houses; the death watch; a book-louse. See book-louse, Psocidæ, and cut under death-watch.—4. Same as wood-louse milleped.

woodlouse-milleped (wud'lous mil'e-ped), n. A milleped of the family Glomeridæ.

woodly† (wud'li), adv. [< ME. woodly, wodly, wodlich, < wood[2] + -ly[2].] Madly; furiously; wildly.

Whan he wiste a wok wodli he ferde,
Al to tare his ax that he to tere might.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3884.

Ther-with the fyr of ielousye upsterte
Within his breest, and hente him by the herte
So woodly that he lyk was to biholde
The box tree or the asshen dede and colde.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 445.

woodman (wud'man), n.; pl. woodmen (-men). [Early mod. E. wodman; < wood[1] + man.] 1. An officer appointed to take care of the king's woods; a forester. Cowell.—2. A woodsman; a hunter.

Am I a woodman ha? Speak I like Robin the hunter?
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 30.

'Tis dangerous keeping the Fool too long at Bay, lest some old Wood man drop in
By chance, and discover thee an Ass but a Rascal Deer.
Etherege, Love in a Tub, v. 4.

3. One who feils timber.

Forth goes the woodman, leaving unconcerned
The cheerful haunts of man, to wield the axe
And drive the wedge in yonder forest deep.
Cowper, The Task, v. 41.

War woodman of old Woden, how he fells
The mortal copse of faces! Tennyson, Harold, v. 1.

wood-march (wud'march), n. An umbelliferous plant, a species of samelo, Sanicula Europæa. Gerard, Herball.

wood-measurer (wud'mezh'ūr-ėr), n. In Scotland, a timber-merchant.

wood-meeting (wud'mē'ting), n. A Mormon name for a camp-meeting.

wood-mill (wud'mil), n. A polishing wheel made of a disk of mahogany, used, after the roughing mill, to smooth surfaces of alabaster and the like.

wood-mite (wud'mīt), n. Any mite or acarine of the family Oribatidæ: a beetle-mite.

woodmonger† (wud'mung'gėr), n. A woodseller; a lumber- or timber-merchant.

The House is just now upon taking away the charter from the Company of Wood mongers, whose frauds, it seems, have been mightily laid before them.
Pepys, Diary, III. 238.

wood-mouse (wud'mous), n. A mouse that habitually lives in the woods. Specifically—(a) In Europe, the long-tailed field mouse, Mus sylvaticus. (b) In the United States, any one of several species of white-footed mice of the genus Peromyscus, of which P. americanus is the principal one. See Peromyscus, and deer mouse, and cut under deer mouse.

wood-naphtha (wud'naf'thą), n. The commercial name of the mixture of light hydrocarbons distilled from wood.

woodnesst (wud'nes), n. [< ME. woodnesse, wodnesse, < AS. wōdnes, madness, fury, insanity (Bosworth). = MD. woedenisse = OHG. wotnissa (Stratmann); as wood[2] + -ness.] Insanity; madness.

Yet sawgh I woodnesse laughing in his rage.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1153.

Festus scide with greet voice: Paul, thou woddist, many lettris turnen thee to woodnesse. Wyclif, Acts xxvi. 24.

wood-nightshade (wud'nīt'shād), n. Bittersweet, or woody nightshade. See nightshade, 1 (a).

wood-note (wud'nōt), n. A wild or natural musical tone, like that of a forest-bird, as the woodlark, wood-thrush, or nightingale.

Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 134.

wood-nut (wud'nut), n. The European hazelnut, Corylus Avellana.

wood-nymph (wud'nimf), n. 1. A goddess of the woods; a dryad.

By dimpled brook and fountain brim
The wood-nymphs, deck'd with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep.
Milton, Comus, l. 120.

2. The humming-bird Thalurania glaucopis.—3. One of several zygænid moths, of the genus

Beautiful Wood-nymph (Eudryas grata), natural size.

Eudryas, as E. grata, the beautiful wood-nymph, and E. unio, the pearl wood-nymph. The larvæ of both of these species feed on the vine in the United States.

Pearl Wood-nymph (Eudryas unio), natural size.

wood-offering† (wud'of'ėr-ing), n. Wood burnt on the altar.

We cast the lots among the priests, the Levites, and the people for the wood offering. Neh. x. 34.

wood-of-the-holy-cross†, n. [Trans. of L. lignum sanctæ crucis.] A name once given to the mistletoe, Viscum album, from its reputed virtue in helping the infirmities of old age. Treas. of Bot.

wood oil (wud'oil), n. 1. See gurjun.—2. Same as tung oil.—3. A product of the satinwood, Chloroxylon Swietenia.

wood-opal (wud'ō'pal), n. Silicified wood; opalized wood. It is found in great abundance in many parts of the world, but especially in the auriferous gravels of the Sierra Nevada of California, where extensive forests have been exposed by hydraulic mining, in which the trunks of the trees have been converted into amorphous silica or opal, which usually contains a small percentage of water, although this is not considered as being essential to its composition. Also called xylopal. See fossil wood (under wood[1]), and silicify.

wood-owl (wud'oul), n. The European tawny or brown owl, Syrnium aluco, or a similar species, as the barred owl of the United States. They are earless owls, of medium to large size, the species of which have numerous and live in the woods of most parts of the world. See cut under Strix.

wood-paper (wud'pā'pėr), n. A trade-name for paper made in part or in whole of pulp prepared by chemical and mechanical means from wood. The wood employed is usually poplar, though pine, fir, basswood, and beech are largely used. By the mechanical process the wood is ground to fine powder suitable for pulp, and by the chemical process the wood, cut up into small pieces, is digested with various chemicals to free it from the sap and other noxious matter, to bleach it, and to reduce it to fine, loose pulp. See pulp digester, wood grinder, and paper.

wood parenchyma (wud'pa-reng'ki-mą), n. A combination of wood or fiber usually classed as parenchyma, but intermediate between this and prosenchyma. Each fiber consists of three cells, one of which has flattened ends, while the other two, attached to these ends, are pointed.

wood-partridge (wud'pär'trij), n. The Canada grouse. See grouse, wood-grouse, and cut under Canace. [Local, U. S.]

wood-pavement (wud'pāv'ment), n. Pavement composed of blocks of wood: first used in London in 1839.

wood-pea (wud'pē), n. See pea[1].

wood-peat (wud'pēt), n. Peat formed in forests from decayed wood, leaves, etc. Also called forest-peat.

woodpeckt (wud'pek), n. The woodpecker.

Nor wood-peckt, nor the swallow, harbinger of May.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

woodpecker (wŭd'pek"ėr), n. Any bird of the large family Picidæ, of which there are numerous genera and some 250 species, inhabiting nearly all parts of the world. They are picarian and scansorial birds, having the toes arranged in pairs, two before and two behind (except, of course, in the three-toed genera, see Picoides), and (not under Tiga); the tail-feathers rigid and acuminate, to assist in climbing; the bill hard and chisel-like, adapted for boring wood (whence the name), and a remarkable structure of the palatal and hyoidean bones and salivary glands. (See cuts under salivary and sauromathous.) The tongue is capable, in most species, of being thrust far out of the mouth, and is vermiciform. (See cut under myothlagual.) The plumage as a rule is variegated in intricate patterns of coloration and usually includes a bright, rich, or striking tint. Insects constitute most of their food, their eggs are white, and are laid in holes they dig in trees, their voice is harsh and abrupt. They are of great service to man by destroying insects which infest trees. See Picidæ, and numerous cuts there cited. Arizona woodpecker, Picoides (Dryobates) arizonæ, a bird lately discovered in Arizona and for some time called Picus stricklandi but distinct from Strickland's woodpecker in having the upper parts of a uniform light brown color and the spots of the under parts guttiform. Hargitt, this Index, p. 11. Audubon's woodpecker, the small southern form of the hairy woodpecker (which see), named Picus audubon by W. Swainson in 1831, and renamed Picus audubonii by Dr. James Trudeau in 1847, without reference to the prior homonym. —Ayres's woodpecker, Colaptes auratus var. of Audubon (1839), C. hybridus of Baird (1858), Picus hybridus auratus mexicanus of Sundevall (1866), name covering the remarkable flickers of western North America, especially of the upper Missouri and adjacent regions, which present every step of the intergradation between the yellow shafted and the red shafted flickers (C. auratus and C. mexicanus), the so-called hybrid woodpecker. The coloration is so constable that it often varies on right and left sides of the same specimen. The case is unique and its interpretation continues in question by ornithologists. Baird's woodpecker. (a) The Cuban ivory-bill, Campephilus bairdi, named by J. Cassin, in 1867, in compliment to Spencer Fullerton Baird (1823–1887). (b) The Californian woodpecker, Melanerpes formicivorus bairdi. Bengal woodpecker, var. A, Brachypternus erythronotus, of Ceylon, Latham, 1782. Bengal woodpecker, var. B, Chrysocolaptes lucidus, of the Philippines, Latham, 1787. Black-and-white-spotted woodpeckers, the numerous members of the restricted genus Picus (Dendrocopus, see under great black woodpecker, below), usually 6 to 10 inches long, with four toes, the plumage variegated intricately with black and white, with a scarlet occipital band or pair of spots in the adult male. The greater and lesser spotted woodpeckers of England, and the hairy and downy woodpeckers of the United States, are characteristic examples. —Black-backed three-toed woodpecker, Picoides arcticus, marked by the characters indicated in the name, 9 to 10 inches long, common in northerly parts of North America. Black breasted woodpecker, the adult female of the thyroid woodpecker. Black woodpecker, the great black woodpecker. Bristle-bellied woodpeckers, the genus Gecinulus, Cones. Brown headed woodpecker, the adult female of Sphyrapicus thyroideus; the thyroid woodpecker (see below). Buff-crested woodpecker (of Latham, 1790) the female of Campephilus melanoleucus (the Picus albogristes of Vieillot), a white-billed crested woodpecker of tropical America, 13½ inches long, congeneric with the ivory-bill. Cactus woodpecker, Picus or Melanerpes cactorum, of Peru, Bolivia, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic. Californian woodpecker, that race of Melanerpes formicivorus (a Mexican species) which abounds in the United States from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific. It is 8½ to 9½ inches long of a glossy blue-black color, with the rump, bases of all the quills, edge of the wing, and under parts from the breast white, the sides with sparse black streaks, the forehead white continuously with a stripe down in front of the eye and thence encircling the throat, the crown in the male crimson and white, in the female crimson, black and white, the eyes white, often with a creamy or pinkish, sometimes bluish, tint. This is the woodpecker noted for drilling holes in dead boughs in which to insert acorns, some branches being found thus drilled and studded with hundreds of acorns. Canadian woodpecker, the large northern form of the hairy woodpecker (which see), formerly Picus canadensis (Gmelin, 1788), and before that Picus leuconeus (Boddaert, 1783). Cape woodpecker, the South African Mesopicus cinereus sephalus, 7½ inches long, having the crown, crest, rump, upper tail-coverts, and middle of the belly crimson. This bird was originally described in 1776 by Sonnini as pic rouge de l'Isle de Luçon, whence Picus manillensis of Gmelin (1788), and Picus manilla green woodpecker of Latham; next by Buffon in 1781 as pic à tête grise du Cap de Bonne Espérance, whence Picus griseocephalus of Boddaert (1783) and Cape woodpecker, next by Scopoli in 1786 as Picus in capite cinereo—this most frequent specific name indicating the bloody red color of certain parts, next as picoides by Cuvillier (1800), next as Picus Kaneyes, P. obscurus, P. sayeus. It has been placed in 6 different genera, its proper one was first given by Cassin in 1865. Carolina woodpecker, var A, Melanerpes or Centurus carolinus, peculiar to America, Latham, 1782. Carolina woodpecker, var. B, the red-bellied woodpecker, Latham, 1790. Collared woodpecker, Ammobiosus temporalis, Lewis's woodpecker. Crawfurd's woodpecker, a bird so named by Gray in Griffith's Cuvier (1849), now called Thriponax concretus and supposed to be found near Ava in Burma, but known only from a drawing executed by a native artist for Mr. Crawfurd, Jr. Crimson breasted woodpecker, the more typic Geocolaptes (also Picus auratus) of South Africa, 9½ to 10 inches long, much varied with olivaceous and reddish tints. Latham, 1790. Crimson-rumped woodpecker, Mesopicus notatus, the pic-vert de la Nouvelle Hollande of early French writers, a West African species, 8 inches long, of a golden olive color above, with scarlet rump and upper tail-coverts, and otherwise much variegated. Cuban woodpecker, Xiphoidus formandus, usually called Colaptes formandus and Cuba flicker, 11 to 12 inches long, above olive-black barred with yellow, and confined to Cuba. Downy woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) pubescens, a small black and white species, 6 or 7 inches long, one of the commonest woodpeckers of eastern parts of North America, and among those popularly called sapsucker (which see). It is exactly like the hairy woodpecker, except in size, and in having the lateral tail-feathers barred with black and white, instead of being entirely white. There is no such difference between the two as the terms downy and hairy would seem to imply. The species corresponds in the United States to the lesser spotted woodpecker of England. —Gairdnar's woodpecker, Picus pubescens gairdneri, the western subspecies of the downy woodpecker, having few if any white spots on the black wing-coverts, and in some localities the belly smoky gray, dedicated by Audubon in 1839 to Dr. Meredith Gairdner, a Scotch naturalist. —Gila woodpecker, the agu-ce or pitahaya woodpecker. See cut under pitahaya.

Gilded woodpecker. (a) An American flicker of the genus Colaptes, as the golden winged woodpecker, C. auratus. See cut under flicker. (b) specifically, one of these, C. chrysoides, of Arizona, Lower California, and southward, which resembles the common flicker in the body tail and wings, but has the head as in the Mexican flicker. Golden-shafted, golden-winged, gold-winged woodpecker, the common flicker, Colaptes auratus. —Gray-headed woodpecker, Gecinus canus, a popinjay of nearly all Europe and much of Asia. Pennant, 1785; and more fully gray-headed green woodpecker (Edwards 1747). Grayson's woodpecker, the ladder backed woodpecker of the Tres Marias Islands off the Pacific coast of Mexico, named after Col. A. J. Grayson by Lawrence in 1874. Picus scalaris var. graysoni. Great black woodpecker, Picus or Dryocopus martius the largest European woodpecker, ranging in northerly latitudes through the Palæarctic region to Kamchatka and Japan. It is 17 inches long, black, with pointed scarlet crest in the male (the scarlet restricted in the female), and peculiar in having the tarsi extensively feathered. It corresponds to the pileated woodpecker of North America. Many authors assume this isolated woodpecker to be monotypic of the restricted genus Picus, in which case the numerous smaller black and white species like the greater and lesser spotted of Europe, and the hairy and downy of North America, are generically called Dendrocopus, but when these are left in Picus, the great black woodpecker is generically called Dryocopus, and upon it have also been based two other genera, Carbonarius of Kaup (1829) and Dryopicus (sic) of Malherbe (1845–9). See cut under Dryocopus. Greater spotted woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) major, ranging through nearly all of Europe and much of Asia. This is one of the woodpeckers common in Great Britain, there corresponding to the hairy woodpecker of the United States. It is 10 inches long, of black and white color in intricate pattern, the male with a red hindhead. See cut under Picus. Green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis, the commonest woodpecker in Great Britain, with a host of provincial English names, dialectal variants of these, and various poetical epithets, but only about twenty New Latin names. (See cut under popinjay.) The genus Gecinus ranges through almost all the Palæarctic and Indian regions, where it is represented by 15 species. That mentioned inhabits the greater part of Europe, north to 60° N. lat., also Asia Minor and eastward to Persia. It is about 12 inches long, of a greenish color, variegated with crimson, yellow, white, black, etc. Green woodpecker of Mexico, a bird described in 1734 by Seba as Avis mexicana, and later in 1760 by Brisson as pic vert du Mexique, being a popinjay artificially fitted with the legs of some other bird and falsified as to habitat. Hairy woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) villosus, a common woodpecker of eastern North America, entirely black and white, the male with a scarlet occipital band, the size usually 9 or 10 inches, but varying from 8 to 11. This very exceptional gradation in size has caused the recognition of three varieties, major, medius, and minor, graded mainly according to latitude, the northernmost birds being the largest. These varieties have several synonyms and in western North America the hairy woodpecker runs into yet other geographical or climatic races. Half-billed woodpecker (Latham, 1790), a nominal species, but cited on Picus semirostris of Linnæus (1766), which was a popinjay with a broken bill. Harris's woodpecker, Picus villosus harrisi, the hairy woodpecker of the regions from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, in which the white spots on the wing coverts are few, if any, and the belly is smoky gray in some localities. This subspecies is thus parallel with that of the downy woodpecker called gairdneri, and was dedicated by Audubon in 1839 to Edward Harris. Hybrid woodpecker, Ayres's woodpecker. Imperial woodpecker, Campephilus imperialis, an ivory-billed and the largest known woodpecker, nearly 2 feet long, with black nasal plumules, no white stripe on the head or neck, a long occipital crest of scarlet, the secondaries tipped with white, the plumage otherwise black, and the bill white. This magnificent bird inhabits Mexico, and will probably be found in the United States near the Mexican border. Ivory-billed woodpecker, the ivory-bill, any member of the genus Campephilus having a white bill. See cut under Campephilus. Javan three-toed woodpecker, the bird figured under Tiga (which see). Ladder backed three-toed woodpecker, Picoides americanus marked by the characters indicated in the name, 9 inches long, common in northerly parts of North America. Ladder-backed woodpeckers, those small black and white-spotted woodpeckers whose upper parts are regularly barred crosswise with black and white, as the Texan woodpecker and related forms. Coues. Larger red-crested woodpecker, the pileated woodpecker. Catesby, 1731. Largest white-billed woodpecker, the ivory-bill. Catesby, 1731. Lesser black woodpecker (Latham, 1782), the homonym of two different species of South American woodpeckers, Melanerpes cactorum and M. cruentatus. Lesser spotted woodpecker Picus (Dendrocopus) minor, ranging through nearly all Europe much of Asia and parts of Africa. It is one of the woodpeckers common in Great Britain, where it corresponds to the downy woodpecker of the United States. It is 6 inches long, of black and white colors in intricate pattern, the male with a red hindhead. —Lewis's woodpecker, Asyndesmus torquatus of Cones, originally Picus torquatus of Wilson (1811), named by the latter after its discoverer, Captain Meriwether Lewis, United States army. It inhabits western North America, chiefly in mountainous parts of the United States, and is generically distinct from all other woodpeckers in having the plumage of the under parts lustreless by reason of disconnection of the barbs of the feathers. It is 10 to 11 inches long, metallic-black with bronze luster, a patch of velvety crimson feathering on the face, the under parts and a collar round the neck hoary-gray, heightened to rose- or lake-red on the belly. Also called collared and bristle-bellied woodpecker. —Lineated woodpecker, Ceophlœus or Dryocopus (formerly Picus) lineatus, of Central and South America, of rather large size (14 inches long), crested with crimson, and otherwise resembling the pileated woodpecker, to which it is closely related. Little brown woodpecker, Iyngipicus nanus naphthalmus, of Ceylon and the point of the Indian peninsula 4¾ inches long. Latham, 1787. —Magellanic woodpecker, Iperantor magellanicus, a monotypic species of Chili and Patagonia, 15 inches long, mostly blue-black with scarlet crested head. —Malaccan woodpecker, Chrysophlegma malaccensis, of the Malay peninsula, Sumatra, and Borneo. It is one of a group of about 8 Oriental species of this genus. Latham, 1787. —Mantilla green woodpecker, the Cape woodpecker (by a geographical blunder). Latham, 1782. —Maria's woodpecker, a young hairy woodpecker, named Picus mariæ by Audubon in 1839 after a Miss Maria Martin. —Masked woodpeckers, the genus Xenopicus. Coues, 1864. —Narrow-fronted woodpecker, Melanerpes formicivorus angustifrons, a variety found in Lower California, having not the forehead but the white frontal stripe narrower than usual. —Nubian woodpecker, the leading species of a group of about 12 species composing the Ethiopian genus Campothera, C. nubica, of Abyssinia and south to equatorial Africa. Latham, 1782. —Nuchal woodpecker, a western variety of the sapsucker, Sphyrapicus varius nuchalis, showing more red on the head, and thus an approach to S. ruber. —Nuttall's woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) nuttalli, the ladder-backed woodpecker of the Pacific slope of the United States, very near the Texan, named in 1843 by Dr. W. Gambel in compliment to the botanist Thomas Nuttall. —Orange woodpecker, Brachypternus aurantius, of northern India, in part of the color named and 11 inches long the male of which was originally described in 1760 by Brisson as pic du Cap de Bonne Espérance and the female the same year by the same as pic verd de Bengal, whence the Linnean (1766) Picus aurantius and Picus bengalensis. The same bird served also as the type of Malherbe's genus Brahmapicus, dedicated to the leading personage of the Hindu Trimurti. Phillips's woodpecker, a young hairy woodpecker: so named as a distinct species in 1839, by Audubon, after Benjamin Phillips, U. S. —Pileated woodpecker, the black log cock of North America, Hylotomus or Dryotomus or Phlœotomus or Ceophlœus pileatus, originally Picus pileatus. See cut under pileated. Pole-backed three-toed woodpecker, Picoides americanus dorsalis, having a long white stripe lengthwise down the middle of the black back, of the Rocky Mountain region of the United States. Raffles's woodpecker, Gauropicoides raffesi, a monotype inhabiting Tenasserim, the Malay peninsula, Sumatra, and Borneo, originally named Picus raffesii by Vigors, in 1831, after Sir Stamford Raffles. The upper parts are mostly uniform golden-olive. —Rayed woodpecker, one of the zebra woodpeckers, Picus or Centurus radiatus or Zebrapicus striatus of Hayti and San Domingo. Latham, 1787. Red bellied woodpecker, Centurus carolinus, one of the zebra woodpeckers, common in the United States. See cut under Centurus. —Red-breasted woodpecker, Sphyrapicus ruber, the sapsucker of the Pacific coast of the United States, like S. varius, but having the whole head, neck, and breast carmine-red in both sexes. Red-cheeked woodpecker (of Edwards, 1764), Celeus undatus, a crested Amazonian species of a genus of 14 species peculiar to the Neotropical region. —Red-cockaded woodpecker. See red-cockaded. —Red-headed woodpecker, Melanerpes erythrocephalus: so named by Catesby in 1731. See cut under Melanerpes. —Red-shafted woodpecker, the Mexican flicker, Colaptes mexicanus. Red-throated woodpecker, the adult male of the thyroid woodpecker, formerly described as Melanerpes rubricollis (Sclater). St. Lucas woodpecker, the ladder-backed woodpecker of Lower California: a local race called Picus scalaris lucasanus. —Sap-sucking woodpeckers, the true sapsuckers of the genus Sphyrapicus (which see, with cut). Smallest spotted woodpecker, the downy woodpecker. Catesby, 1731. —Strickland's woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) stricklandi, of southeastern Mexico dedicated in 1848 by Malherbe to Hugh E. Strickland, principal author of the Stricklandian code of nomenclature in ornithology. It is 7½ inches long, has the back and rump barred with blackish-brown and whitish, the under parts white, fully streaked with black. —Superciliary woodpecker. See superciliary. —Texan woodpecker, the ladder backed woodpecker of Texas to Arizona and southward to Yucatan, Picus (Dendrocopus) scalaris, 6½ to 7½ inches long, having the upper parts regularly barred crosswise with white and black. Also called Texas woodpecker. —Three-toed woodpecker, any species of several different genera of Picinæ, in which the first (their dimor hind toe) is lacking. This peculiarity recurs in genera otherwise very close to those in which the feet are normally yoke-toed, so that the species which exhibit it do not form a group by themselves. The three-toed genera are Picoides, Gauropicoides, Gecinulus, and Tiga (see cut under Tiga). The same peculiarity marks the genus Sasia among the Picumninæ. —Thyroid woodpecker, Sphyrapicus thyroideus, a remarkable sapsucker of western North America, the opposite sexes of which differ so much that they have been placed in separate genera, and repeatedly described as different species, called brown-headed, red-throated, Williamson's, etc., woodpecker, Picus thyroideus (Cassin, 1851), Colaptes thyroideus, Picus ruficeps (Malherbe, 1854), Centurus nataliæ, Picus williamsoni (Newberry, 1857), Melanerpes thyroideus, M. rubricollis, etc. The length is 9 to 9½ inches, the extent 16 to 17; the adult male is glossy blue-black, with scarlet throat, an oblique wing-bar, two stripes on each side of the head, and some other markings white; the female is only continuously black in a shield-shaped space on the breast, otherwise barred closely and regularly with black and white or whitish-brown, the head uniform hair-brown, the quills marked with white spots in rows of pairs. The sexual differences begin with nestlings as soon as they are fledged, contrary to one of the broadest rules in ornithology—namely, that, when the adults of opposite sexes differ decidedly in

...ance, the prong being truncate and square [illegible] markings of nutmeg only.—Tricolor woodpecker, the members of the restricted genus Melanerpes, as the red-headed. See cut under Melanerpes.—White-backed woodpecker, Picus (Dendrocopus) leucotos (originally misprinted leuconotus — Bechstein, 1803), 10 inches long, having the lower back white, extending from northwestern Europe to Manchuria, Corea, and Mongolia.—White-headed woodpecker, Xenopicus albolarvatus. See Xenopicus (with cut).—White-rumped woodpecker, the red-headed woodpecker. See cut under Melanerpes. Latham, 1782.—Williamson's woodpecker, the adult male of the thyroid woodpecker, formerly described by Dr. J. S. Newberry in 1857 as Picus williamsoni, after Lieutenant R. S. Williamson, United States army.—Woodpecker hornbill, an Asiatic species of Buceridæ, Buceros pica (of Scopoli, 1786, now Anthracoceros coronatus), of a black and white color, inhabiting India and Ceylon.—Yellow-bellied woodpecker, the common sapsucker: so named originally by Catesby, 1731. See sapsucker (with cut), and Sphyrapicus.—Yellow blue-footed Persian woodpecker (Picus tuleus cyanopus persicus of Aldrovandi), the popinjay. Latham, 1782.—Yellow-fronted woodpecker, Centurus aurifrons, one of the zebra-woodpeckers, of Texas and southward, having the forehead and nasal plumules golden-yellow, the head and under parts clear ashy-gray, becoming yellowish on the belly, and the upper tail-coverts continuously white.—Yellow-necked woodpecker, Geocinus chlorolophus, a popinjay of Nepál, parts of the Himalayas, Bengal, Manipur, Assam, Burma, and the Malay peninsula. Latham, 1801.—Yellow-winged woodpecker. Same as *flicker*2.—Zebra woodpecker. See zebra-woodpecker, and cut under Centurus.

wood-pewee (wụ̈d'pē'wē), n. A tyrannuline, or little olivaceous flycatcher, of the genus Contopus, the species of which are numerous in the warmer parts of both Americas. The common wood-pewee, C. virens, is the most abundant of its tribe in the woodlands of many parts of North America. It resembles the water-pewee, or pewit flycatcher (compare cuts under Contopus and pewit), but is smaller (only 6 or 6½ inches long, and 10 or 11 in extent), with extremely small feet, and broad flat beak; the feet and upper mandible are black; the lower mandible is usually yellow; the eyes are brown; the plumage is olive-brown above, below dingy-whitish tinged with yellow and shaded with the color of the back, especially across the breast and along the sides. The nest is flatly saddled on a horizontal bough, stuccoed with lichens; the eggs are four or five in number, creamy-white, marked with reddish brown and lilac spots usually wreathed about the larger end. The note is a long-drawn querulous whistle of two or three syllables, imitated in the word pewee. The western wood-pewee is C. v. richardsoni.

wood-pie (wụ̈d'pī), n. The woodpecker: so called with reference to the spotted plumage; locally applied to the greater and lesser spotted woodpeckers, Picus major and P. minor, and the green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. See cuts under Picus and popinjay. [Local, British.]

wood-pigeon (wụ̈d'pij'on), n. 1. The wood-culver, wood-quest, cushat, or ring-dove, Columba palumbus; also, sometimes, the stock-dove, C. œnas. [Eng.]—2. In the western United States, the band-tailed pigeon, Columba fasciata. This is one of the few American pigeons congeneric with an Old World type (that figured under white-crowned being another). It is a large stout species (16 inches long and about 27 in extent), the adult male having the head, neck, and under parts vinaceous, fading to white on the crissum, the sides of the neck irridescent, a sharp white half-collar on the back of the neck (whence also called white-collared pigeon), the tail marked with a light terminal and dark subterminal bar (whence band-tailed pigeon), the bill yellow tipped with black, the feet yellow with black claws, and a red ring round the eye. It is of common but irregular distribution chiefly in woodland, from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, feeds mainly on mast, nests in trees and bushes, and lays (as usual in this family) two white eggs.

woodpile (wụ̈d'pīl), n. A stack or pile of wood, especially of wood for fuel.

> And, take it in the autumn, what can be pleasanter than to spend a whole day on the sunny side of a barn or a wood-pile, chatting with somebody as old as one's self?
> Hawthorne, Seven Gables, iv.

wood-pimpernel (wụ̈d'pim'pėr-nel), n. A European species of loosestrife, Lysimachia nemorum, somewhat resembling the common pimpernel.

wood-pucoeront (wụ̈d'pū'se-ron), n. [< *wood*1 + F. pucceron, < puce, OF. pulce = It. pulce, < L. pulex, flea.] A kind of aphis or plant-louse.

wood-pulp (wụ̈d'pulp), n. Wood-fiber reduced to a pulp, either mechanically or chemically, for use in the manufacture of paper. Almost any wood may be used; the amount of cellulose varies from 39.41 per cent. in oak to 56.92 per cent. in fir. The easily worked woods are preferred, cottonwood and other poplars being largely used in North America. The amount thus consumed in America and continental Europe is very large. Compare wood-paper.

wood-quail (wụ̈d'kwāl), n. Any bird of the genus Rollulus; a roulroul. See cut under Rollulus.

wood-quest (wụ̈d'kwest), n. The ring-dove, Columba palumbus: same as quest.

> Me thought I saw a stock-dove, or wood-quist, I know not how to terme it, that brought short strawes to build his nest on a tall cedar.
> Lyly, Sapho and Phaon iv. 3. (Nares.)

wood-rabbit (wụ̈d'rab'it), n. The common gray rabbit of the United States, Lepus sylvaticus. See cut under cottontail.

wood-rat (wụ̈d'rat), n. Any species of Neotoma, including large woodland rats of the United States, etc., of the family Muridæ, subfamily Murinæ, and section Sigmodontes, such as the Florida wood-rat, N. floridana; the Rocky Mountain wood-rat, N. cinerea; the California wood-rat, N. fuscipes; the Texas wood-rat, N. micropus; the ferrugineous wood-rat of Mexico and Central America, N. ferruginea. See pack-rat (under *rat*1), and cut under Neotoma.

wood-reed (wụ̈d'rēd), n. See *reed*1.

woodreeve (wụ̈d'rēv), n. In England, the steward or overseer of a wood or forest.

wood-robin (wụ̈d'rob'in), n. The American wood-thrush, Turdus mustelinus. [Local, U. S.]

wood-rock (wụ̈d'rok), n. Lignform asbestos.

woodruff, woodroof (wụ̈d'ruf, -rōf), n. [Early mod. E. woodrofe, < ME. wodrofle, wodrove, woderoue, < AS. wudurofe, wuderofe, < wudu, wood, + rofe, of uncertain meaning.] A rubiaceous herb, Asperula odorata, of Europe and Asiatic Russia, more fully named sweet woodruff. It has a creeping rootstock sending up erect stems, the leaves whorled, chiefly in eights, the flowers small, white, in loose cymes. The plant, from the presence of coumarin, is scented like the sweet vernal grass and sweet clover, and in parts of Europe it is used to flavor the spring beverage called May drink (which see). Woodruff is sometimes found growing near German settlements in the United States. The name is extended to the other species of Asperula.—Dyers' woodruff, Asperula tinctoria, of Europe, whose roots sometimes serve in place of madder.—Quinsy-woodruff. Same as quinsywort.—Sweet woodruff. See def.

wood-rush (wụ̈d'rush), n. [< *wood*1 + *rush*1, n.] A plant of the genus Luzula: also called glow-worm-grass. The field wood-rush, Luzula campestris, is an extremely common low plant of Europe and North America having clusters of brown chaffy flowers appearing early in spring. In Great Britain it is locally called blackhead or cuckoo-grass and chimney-sweeps. A larger species, L. sylvatica, has the names wood-blades and wood-grass.

wood-sage (wụ̈d'sāj), n. See *sage*2.

wood-sandpiper (wụ̈d'sand'pī'pėr), n. A common tattler of Europe and much of the Old World, Totanus glareola, of the family Scolopacidæ.

Wood-sandpiper (Totanus glareola)

cidæ, nearly related to the redshank and green shank, and also to the American solitary sandpiper.

wood-sanicle (wụ̈d'san'i-kl), n. See sanicle.

wood-saret, n. A kind of froth seen on herbs; cuckoo-spit.

> The froth which they call woodcare, being like a kind of spittle, is found but upon certain herbs, . . . as lavender, sage, etc.
> Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 497.

wood-saw (wụ̈d'sâ), n. Same as buck-saw. See cuts under saw.

wood-sawyer (wụ̈d'sâ'yėr) n. In entom., same as sawyer, 4.

wood-screw (wụ̈d'skrō), n. A screw specially made for use in fastening together parts of wood in structures or structures of wood and metal. The modern wood-screw has generally a conical point, like that of a gimlet. See cuts under countersunk, screw, and screw-thread.

wood-sere1 (wụ̈d'sēr), n. and a. [Also wood-seer, < *wood*1 + sere, seer.] I. n. The time when there is no sap in a tree. Tusser, May's Husbandie, st. 6.

II. a. Dry; barren.

> The wild . . . is a poor wood-sere land, very natural for the production of oaks especially.
> Aubrey, Misc., p. 21. (Davies.)

Wood's fusible alloy. See alloy.

woodshed (wụ̈d'shed), n. A shed for keeping wood for fuel.

> She looked so much like one of Effie's own little dolls which she had thrown into the woodshed, out of the way, that she felt ashamed.
> St. Nicholas, XVIII. 288.

woodshock (wụ̈d'shok), n. [See *woodchuck*1, applied to a different quadruped.] The pekan, fisher, or Pennant's marten, Mustela pennanti or M. canadensis, also called black-cat and black-fox. It is the largest and darkest-colored species of the genus, inhabiting North America approximately between 35° and 65° N. lat. in wooded regions of the country; it is from 2 to 3 feet long, the tail over a foot in length; the general color is black or blackish. See pekan, and cut under sable.

wood-shrike (wụ̈d'shrīk), n. 1. The wood-chat.—2. An African shrike of the genus Prionops.

wood-shrimp (wụ̈d'shrimp), n. A boring or terebrant amphipod, of the family Cheluridæ. See cut under chelura.

Woodsia (wụ̈d'zi-ą), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1813), named after Joseph Woods, a British botanist.] A genus of delicate polypodiaceous ferns, natives of high temperate or boreal latitudes. They are tufted ferns with the stipes often jointed and separating at the joint, and round sori borne on the back of simply forked free veins. The indusium is inferior, thin, either small and open or early bursting into irregular lobes at the top. There are 15 species, of which number 7 are found in North America. See cut under indusium.

wood-skin (wụ̈d'skin), n. A large canoe, used by the Indians of Guiana, made from the bark of the purple heart tree and the simari or locust-tree. Some of these canoes are large enough to carry from twenty to twenty-five persons. Simmonds.

wood-slave (wụ̈d'slāv), n. A Jamaican lizard, Mabouya agilis.

woodsman (wụ̈dz'man), n.; pl. woodsmen (-men). One who dwells in or frequents the woods, as a wood-cutter, sportsman, hunter, or the like.

> The sturdy woodsman.
> J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxv.

> Things that are common to all woodsmen.
> Lowell, Study Windows, p. 232.

> An Owl and a Duck will resort to the same nest-box, set up by a scheming woodsman for his own advantage.
> Encyc. Brit., III. 772.

> The log was white birch. . . . Woodsmen are at a loss to account for its intense and yet chaste flame, since the bark has no oily appearance.
> C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 33.

Wood's metal. See metal.

wood-snail (wụ̈d'snāl), n. A common snail of Great Britain, Helix nemoralis.

wood-snake (wụ̈d'snāk), n. Any serpent of the family Dryophidæ.

wood-snipe (wụ̈d'snīp), n. 1. The European woodcock, Scolopax rusticula; so called as distinguished from the common snipe of England (Gallinago media). See first cut under woodcock. [Local, Eng.]

> The wood snipe was considered a stupid bird.
> St. James Gazette, March 14, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

2. The American woodcock, Philohela minor. See second cut under woodcock. [Virginia.]

wood-soot (wụ̈d'sut), n. Soot from burnt wood. It has been found useful as a manure.

Wood's operation for inguinal hernia. See operation.

wood-sorrel (wụ̈d'sor'el), n. A plant of the genus Oxalis. The common wood-sorrel is O. Acetosella. This is a low stemless species, found in damp deep shade through the north temperate zone. Its peduncles bear single delicate flowers, the petals white with light-red-dish veins. It has the old or local names alleluia, cuckow-bread, stubwort, etc., and it is regarded by some as the original Irish shamrock. The violet wood-sorrel, O. violacea, is a similar somewhat smaller American plant with violet petals, growing in less shaded ground. (See cut under Oxalis.) O. corniculata, the yellow wood-sorrel, having slender leafy branching stems which are erect or procumbent, with small yellow flowers, grows nearly everywhere. The leaves in this as in certain other species contain oxalic acid, and have a sourish taste. Several Mexican and South American species yield edible tuberous roots. (See oca and arracacha.) Several exotic species are cultivated in greenhouses, as O. purpurata, var. lineata, with alternate flowers of a deep rose color; O. lasiandra with yellow flowers, and O. crassicaulis with flowers exhibiting a pink exterior when closed, white within opening only in sunshine; these are all from the Cape of Good Hope.

wood-sour (wụ̈d'sour), n. [Also wood-sore, wood-sower.] The wood-sorrel, Oxalis Acetosella; sometimes, the common barberry, Berberis vulgaris. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spack (wụ̈d'spak), n. Same as wood-spite. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spirit (wụ̈d'spir'it), n. Same as pyroxylic spirit. See pyroxylic.

wood-spite (wụ̈d'spīt), n. [< *wood*1 + spite, var. of spight.] The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. Also wood-spack. Willughby, Ray. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-spurge (wụ̈d'spėrj), n. See spurge.

wood-stamp (wụ̈d'stamp), n. A stamp, engraved or carved in wood, for impressing figures or colors on fabrics.

wood-star (wůd'stär), n. 1. A humming-bird of the genus Calothorax, as C. calliope.—2. The Bahaman sheartail, a humming-bird, Doricha evelynæ, common in New Providence and Andros islands. See sheartail.

wood-still (wůd'stil), n. A turpentine-still.

wood-stone (wůd'stōn), n. Petrified wood; especially, silicified wood, such as that from Antigua, the desert of Cairo, etc.

wood-stork (wůd'stork), n. A stork of the subfamily Tantalinæ, more commonly and less correctly called wood ibis. See cut under Tantalus.

wood-stove (wůd'stōv), n. A stove especially adapted for burning wood, as distinguished from a coal-stove, gas-stove, etc.

wood-strawberry (wůd'strâ"ber-i), n. See strawberry.

woodsucker (wůd'suk'ėr), n. The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis. Compare sapsucker. See cut under popinjay. [New Forest, Eng.]

wood-swallow (wůd'swol'ō), n. The Anglo-Australian name of any bird of the family Artamidæ; a swallow-shrike (which see, with cut).

wood-swift (wůd'swift), n. The moth Epialus sylvanus. See swift[1], 7.

woodsy (wůd'zi), a. [< wood[3], pl. of wood[1], + -y[1].] Belonging to or associated with woods; peculiar to or characteristic of woods, as, a woodsy stream; a woodsy flavor. [U. S.]

Harry, Tim, Esther, and I ran up and down and in and about the piles of wood that evening with a joyous satisfaction. How fresh and spicy and woodsy it smelt! I can smell now the fragrance of the hickory, whose clear, oily bark in burning cast forth perfume quite equal to cinnamon. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 156.

Woodsy and wild and lone some,
The swift stream wound away
Whittier, Cobbler Keezer's Vision.

woodtapper (wůd'tap ėr), n. A woodpecker. Also woodhopper. [Prov. Eng.]

wood-tar (wůd'tär), n. Tar obtained from wood. See tar[1].

wood-thrush (wůd'thrush), n. 1. The mistle-thrush. [Local, Scotland.]—2. In the United States, Turdus (Hylocichla) mustelinus, a beautiful thrush of a russet hue above, passing into olivaceous on the rump and tail, the under parts pure white or faintly tinged with buff on the breast, with a profusion of arrow-headed blackish spots. It is 7¼ to 8 inches long, and about 11 in extent. It abounds in copses and woods of eastern parts of the United States, is an exquisite songster, and nests in bushes or low trees, laying four or five cobalt-blue eggs without spots, 1¼ inches long by ¾ inch broad. It is migratory, breeds throughout its range, and is rather southerly, not going north of New England. It is the most strongly marked species of its subgenus. The name is sometimes extended to the several species of the same subgenus (Hylocichla), as the hermit-thrush (the olive-back, the veery, and others. Also locally called wood robin.

To her grave sylvan nooks
Thy steps allure us, which the wood thrush hears
As maids their lovers, and no treason fears.
Lowell, To Whittier

wood-tick (wůd'tik), n. 1. Any tick of the family Ixodidæ. See Ixodidæ, tick[2], and cut under Acarida.—2. A small insect which ticks in the woodwork of houses; the death-watch. See cut under death-watch.

wood-tin (wůd'tin), n. A nodular variety of cassiterite, or tin-stone, of a brownish color and fibrous structure, and somewhat resembling dry wood in appearance.

woodtopper (wůd'top ėr), n. Same as wood-tapper.

wood-tortoise (wůd'tor'tis), n. See tortoise.

wood-vetch (wůd'vech), n. See vetch.

wood-vine (wůd'vīn), n. The bryony.

wood-vinegar (wůd'vin'ė-gär), n. See vinegar.

wood-violet (wůd'vī'ō-let), n. 1. Same as hedge-violet.—2. The bird's-foot violet.

wood-wagtail (wůd'wag-tāl), n. See wagtail.

woodwale (wůd'wāl), n. [Also woodwall, and formerly woodwele, woodwele, also weltwall, q. v.; < ME. wudewale, wodewale (= MD. wedewael, weedewael = MLG. wedewale = MHG. witewal, G. wittewal); < wood[1] + -wale (uncertain).] The woodhack; a woodpecker, as the yaffle.

Wodewale, bryd, idem quod reynefowle or wodehake supra et facu. Prompt. Parv., p. 531.

In many places were nyghtingales,
Alpes, lynches, and wodewales
Rom. of the Rose, l. 655.

The wodewale berde als a belle,
That all the wode aboute me range.
Thomas of Erseldoune (Child's Ballads, I. 98).

The woodwale sang, and wold not cease,
Sitting upon the sprayse.
Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne (Child's Ballads, V. 160).

wood-walker (wůd'wâ'kėr), n. A book-name of any of the gibbons, as members of the genus Hylobates.

woodwall (wůd'wâl), n. Same as woodwale.

wood-warbler (wůd'wâr'blėr), n. A bird which warbler in the woods. Specifically—(a) In Great Britain the yellow willow-warbler, or wood-wren, Sylvia or Phylloscopus sibilatrix (the Sylvia sylvicola of some authors), a small migratory species of the subfamily Sylvicolinæ, or true warblers, common to much of Europe and northern Africa. See cut under wood-wren. (b) In the United States, a bird of the beautiful and extensive family Mniotiltidæ or Dendroicidæ, the American warblers, as distinguished from the Old World Sylvadæ, especially, a bird of the genus Dendroica, of which more than 20 species inhabit the United States. The beauty and variety of this genus are displayed to best advantage in the woodland of the eastern United States, where the numerous species are conspicuous ornaments of the forest scene. In most parts of the United States the wood warblers are migratory birds, coming with great regularity in the spring, each in its own time abounding for a season, and then passing on to reappear in even greater profusion during the autumn. See warbler, where all the species that have English names are defined.

woodward (wůd'wārd), n. [< ME. wodeward, < wood[1] + ward], n. Hence the surname Woodward.] A forester; a landreeve.

She [a forest] hath also her peculiar Officers, as Forresters Verderers, Regarderers, Agisters, &c. Wherras a Chase or Park hath only Keepers and Woodwards.
Howell, Letters, iv. 10.

The wood ward, who watched the forest, could claim every tree that the wind blew down.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 30.

Woodwardia (wůd-wär'di-ą), n. [NL. (Smith, 1790), named after Thomas J. Woodward, an English botanist.] A small genus of polypodiaceous ferns, the chain-ferns, mostly natives of north temperate regions. They are large ferns with pinnatifid or pinnate fronds, and linear-oblong sori which are sunk in cavities of the frond, arranged in a chain-like row parallel to the midribs of the pinnæ. The indusium is fixed by its outer margin to the fruiting veinlet, and covers the cavity like a lid. Of the 6 species 3 are found in North America. See also cut under sorus.

Chain fern (Woodwardia Virginica).
a pinnule, showing the fruit-dots (sori).

woodwardite (wůd'wär-dīt), n. [Named after Dr. S. P. Woodward (1821–65).] A hydrous sulphate of copper, occurring in concretionary forms of a blue color, found in Cornwall, England.

woodwardship (wůd'wärd-ship), n. [< woodward + -ship.] The office of woodward.

Also Mr. Hungerford has engrossed the above spoils and demesne trees at 4*l.* by connivance of Mr Iukpen, who sold him the woodwardship of that manor for 33*l.*
Durrell Papers (H. Hall's Society in Elizabethan Age, [App., ii.)

wood-wasp (wůd'wosp), n. 1. A European sociał wasp, or paper-wasp, Vespa sylvestris, which hangs its nest in a tree.—2. A wasp which burrows in wood, as certain species of Crabronidæ. The female, by means of her strong broad mandibles, excavates cells in the sand or in rotten timber, in which she deposits her eggs with larvæ or insects as food for her progeny when hatched. These insects are extremely active in their habits, and fond of the nectar of flowers. The larger species are marked with yellow rings, while those of the smaller are generally black. See cut under Crabro.

3. A horntail: any member of the Uroceridæ (or Siricidæ), the larvæ of all of which are wood-borers; a tailed wasp, as Urocerus or Sirex gigas.

wood-wax (wůd waks), n. [Also wood-waxen, and woodwaxen (simulating woad); < ME. wodewexe, < AS. wudewexe, < wudu, wood, + weaxe, wax (?).] Same as woodwaxen.

wood-waxen (wůd'wak'sn), n. Same as wood-wax.

woodweelet, woodwelet, n. Obsolete forms of woodwale.

wood-widgeon (wůd'wij"ọn), n. See widgeon, 2 (c).

wood-wool (wůd'wůl), n. Fine shavings made from pine wood, specially prepared and used as a surgical dressing.

woodwork (wůd'wėrk), n. Objects, or parts of objects, made of wood; that which is produced by the carpenters' or joiners' art: generally applied to details rather than to complete structures: as, the woodwork of a house (that is, the inner fittings, etc.).

A young man has some reason to be displeased when he finds the girl of his heart hand in hand, with another young gentleman in an occult and shady recess of the wood-work of Brighton Pier. Thackeray, Philip, xiv.

The rich painting of the wood-work was beginning to fade. B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, v. 139.

woodworker (wůd'wėr'kėr), n. 1. A worker in wood, as a carpenter, joiner, or cabinet-maker.—2. A power-machine for jointing, molding, squaring, and facing wood. It is made adjustable, and has various attachments for work of different kinds. Universal woodworker, a combination machine for working in wood, so made that the two sides can work independently or in concert, as may be desired. Such machines are adapted for a great variety of work, as chambering, graining, tenoning, cross-cutting, and mitering. E. H. Knight.

wood-worm (wůd'wėrm), n. A worm, grub, or larva that is bred in wood.

woodwose, n. [Also, corruptly, woodhouse; < ME. wudewose, wodewose, wodwose, wodwyse, wowse; < AS. wudewāsa, a man of the woods, a faun or satyr, < wudu, wood, + wāsa*, prob. 'a being,' < wesan, dial. wosan, be: see was.] A wild man of the woods; a satyr or faun. Representations of woodwoses often appear in heraldry as supporters.

Wodwos, that woned in the knarrez [rocks].
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 721.

In he schokkes his schelde, as lyountes he no lengare;
Bot alle3 unwyse wodwose he wente at the gayneste.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3518.

Some like brute beasts grazed upon the ground, some went naked, some roamed like woodwoses.
Sir T. Wilson (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 464).

wood-wren (wůd'ren), n. 1. Either one of two small woodland birds of Europe, belonging to the subfamily Sylvinæ. (a) The willow-warbler or willow-wren, Phyllopneuste trochilus. (b) The true wood-warbler, or yellow willow-wren, Phylloscopus sibilatrix:

Yellow Wood-wren (Phyllopneuste sibilatrix).

the preferable use of the name. The two species, though quite distinct, are much alike and often confounded. Neither is a wren in a proper sense.

2†. A supposed species of true wren, described by Audubon in 1834 as Troglodytes americanus, but not different from the common house-wren of the United States.

wood-wroth (wůd'rōth), a. Angry to the extent of madness. [Scotch.]

When he saw her dear heart's blood,
A wood wroth waxed he.
Lord Thomas and Fair Annet (Allingham's Ballad-Book).

woodwyset, n. See woodwose.

woody (wůd'i), a. [Early mod. E. also woodie, woodey, < ME. woody, wood, woody; < wood[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding with wood; wooded: as, woody land; a woody region.

It is all woody, but by the Sea side Southward there are sands like downes.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 377.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woody Ida's inmost grove.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 58.

A starting ray lingered on the woody crests of the precipices that overhung some parts of the river, giving greater depth to the dark-gray and purple of their rocky sides.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 428.

2. Pertaining or belonging to the woods; dwelling or situated in the woods; peculiar to a wood or forest; sylvan; woodland; woodsy.

All the Satyres scorne their woody kind.
Spenser, F. Q., I. vi. 13.

The Brachmanes, which he in his Indian travels had found in a woodie solitarinesse.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 307.

3. Consisting of or containing wood; ligneous: as, the woody parts of plants.

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them, as grass, nowthistle, and henbane.
Locke, Hum. Und. (Web. Dict., 1).

4. Peculiar to or characteristic of wood: as, a woody scent or flavor.—Glandular woody fiber.

See shoemaker. — Woody fiber, the fiber of wood. See woodfiber, fibrous (under fiber), wood-cell, and woody tissue, below. — Woody layer, bot. See layer. — Woody nightshade, the Jerusalem sage, Phlomis fruticosa.

Verbesina, swollen-blade, torche-herbe, long-wort, hare-beard, frouth-age, lightaper, or woodde-endleia. Florio.

Woody nightshade. See nightshade, 1 (a). — Woody stem, in bot., a stem of a hard or woody nature, which lasts for many years, as the trunks of trees. — Woody tissue, in bot., vegetable tissue composed chiefly of wood-cells. See wood-cell and tissue, 4.

woner (wō'ėr), n. [Early mod. E. also woner, < ME. wonere, wonar, woware, wonwere, < AS. wōpere, a woorr, < wōgian, woo: see woo[1].] One who woos. (a) One who courts or solicits in love, a suitor.

"By my faith, frere," quod I, "ye faren lyke thise wonerres That wedde none wydwes but forto welde here godis."
Piers Plowman (B), xi. 71.

I'll mark no words that smooth-faced woners say.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 838.

(b) One who promotes the marriage of another; a match-maker.

Woner, or he that wowythe for another: Pronuba, paranymphus. Prompt. Parv., p. 533.

woof (wōf), n. [Altered, by initial conformity with weave, weft, web, from oof, < ME. oof, < AS. ōwef, ōweb, āweb, contr. to āb, woof, < awefan in pp. āwefen, weave, < a- + wefan, weave: see a-[1] and weave[1].] 1. The thread that is carried by the shuttle and is woven into the warp by being passed back and forth through successive sheds, or partings made in the warp or lengthwise threads by the action of heddles: the threads that run from side to side of a web: the weft.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse as in the warp and the woof of textile, is more inward or more outward. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Texture; cloth: as, a pall of softest woof.

There was an awful rainbow once in heaven
We know her woof, her texture; she is given
In the dull catalogue of common things.
Keats, Lamia, ii.

His movements were watched by hundreds of natives . . . an exceedingly tall race, almost naked, . . . the women clothed with a woof of painted feathers or a deerskin apron. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 54.

woofy (wō'fi), a. [< woof + -y[1].] Having a close texture; dense: as, a woofy cloud. J. Baillie.

woohoo (wō-hō'), n. The sail-fish: same as hoohoo[2] (where see cut).

wooingly (wō'ing-li), adv. In a wooing manner; enticingly; with persuasiveness.

Heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. Shak., Macbeth, I. 6. 6.

wookt, n. A Middle English form of work[1].

wool (wůl), n. [Formerly also woull. See woo[1]; < ME. woll, wolle, wulle, < AS. wull, wul = OFries. wolle, ulle = D. wol = LG. wulle = OHG. wolla, MHG. G. wolle = Icel. ull = Sw. ull = Dan. uld = Goth. wulla, wool (Teut. wolla*, assimilated from wolna*), = OBulg. vlina = Lith. vilna = Russ. volna = L. villus, shaggy hair, vellus, a fleece, wool, = Skt. ūrṇā, wool; lit. a 'covering,' formed, with suffix -na, from a root seen in Skt. √ vṛ, cover. Connection with Gr. ἰμάς, wool, εἶρος, wool, οἴσος, woolly, shaggy, thick, etc., is doubtful.] 1. The fine, soft, curly hair which forms the fleece or fleecy coat of the sheep and some other animals, as the goat and alpaca, in fineness approaching fur. The wool or fleece of the sheep furnishes the most important material for clothing in all cold and temperate climates. The felting property from which wool derives its chief value, and which is its special distinction from hair, depends in part upon the kinks in the shaft or fiber, but mainly upon the scales with which the surface is imbricated. These scales are minute, from about 2,000 to nearly 4,000 to the inch, and whorled about the stem in verticils; the stem itself is extremely slender, being less than one thousandth of an inch in diameter. Wool is kept soft and pliable by the wool oil, commonly called yolk. In different animals wool shades by imperceptible degrees into hair; and that of the sheep simply represents an extreme case of the most desirable qualities — namely, fineness, kinkiness, and weakness of the fiber — together with its length, strength, and luster, and the coplosmatos of the fleece, which consists entirely of wool, without hair; in all of which particulars the wool of the different breeds of sheep varies to a degree. (Compare def. 2.) Wool when shorn is divided into two classes, short wool or carding-wool, seldom exceeding a length of 2 or 4 inches, and long wool, or combing-wool, varying in length from 4 to 8 inches, each class being subdivided into a variety of sorts, according to the fineness and soundness of the staple. The finest woods are of short staple, and the coarser wools usually of long staple. Wools which unite a high degree of fineness and softness with considerable length of staple bear a high price. English-bred sheep produce a good, strong combing-wool, that of the Scotch breeds being somewhat harsher and coarser. The finest carding-wools were formerly exclusively obtained from Spain, the native country of the merino sheep, and at a later period extensively from Germany, where that breed had been successfully introduced and cultivated. Immense flocks of merinos are now reared in Australia, North and South America, and South Africa.*

A Scythe Lamb with outen Wulle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 204.

And softe wolle wan hem with that she wroghte,
To kepen her fro slouthe and ydelnesse.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1781.

Wool is a modified form of hair, distinguished by its slender, soft, and wavy or curly structure, and by the highly imbricated or serrated surface of its filaments.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 653.

2. The fine, short, thick underfur or down of any animal, as distinguished from the longer and stiffer hairs which come to the surface of the pelage. Most hairy animals have at least two coats, one of long and comparatively straight, stout, stiff hairs, the other of wool. See underfur.

In that contree ben white Hennes withouten Fetheres; but thei haven white Wolle, as Scheep don here.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 208.

Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 15.

3. The short, crisp, curly or kinky hair of the head of some persons, as negroes; humorously, the hair of any person's head. [Colloq.]

From a strange freak of nature, not unusual in these Virginia mountains, his knotty wool was of a pale tan color.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 846.

4. Any light, downy, fleecy, or flocculent substance resembling wool. (a) The dense furry or woolly coat of many insects, as the pubescence covering the moths known as woolers, that on various caterpillars, that put on various larvæ for a case or cocoon, etc. The secretions of various insects are very nicely graded from a solid waxy consistency through various frothy states to a light airy fleecy condition resembling wool: see insect-wax and woolly aphis (under woolly). In another large class of cases the spun-out secretion is gossamer, as in the silkworm moth, etc. See these words, and silkworm. (b) In bot.: (1) A sort of down or pubescence, or a clothing of coherent long hairs on the surface of certain plants. (2) The fiber of the cotton plant, commonly called cotton-wool.

Angora wool, the wool of the Angora goat, from which angora is made. Berlin wool, a kind of fine dyed wool used for worsted work, knitting, etc. It is harder and clearer than zephyr wool. Camel's wool, mohair. Cape wool, a name that includes variety of wool brought from the Cape of Good Hope. Carding-wool, wool of short fiber worked upon a carding machine. Distinguished from combing-wool, which has a long fiber and is prepared for spinning by combing. Dyed in the wool, tinged in the fiber before permanent, lasting, not liable to fade or change, thorough, out and out; as, a dyed-in-the-wool democrat. [U. S.] Fleece-wool. See fleece, 1. German wool. Same as Berlin wool. Glass wool, a mass of fine filaments of glass forming together a cotton-like substance similar to mineral wool. Great cry and little wool, much cry and little wool. See cry.

And so his byckinge shal have the coff but as bald the man that shereid is hogge, muche crye and litill woll.
Sir John Portescue (c. 1475), On the Governance of England, x., quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 180.

But if you compare his threatenings and his after-attempts you would say of them as that wise man shearing his hogs: Here is a great deal of cry, but a little wool.
Jer. T. Adams, Works, I. 47 c.

Hamburg wool, one of the varieties of German or Berlin wool made for fancy work. Hand-washed wool, wool washed before the sheep were shorn. Holmgren's wool, skeins of wool of different colors used as tests for color-blindness. Laid wool, wool from sheep which had been covered with tar and butter as a protection from the rigor of winter. Leviathan wool. See leviathan. Long wool. See def. 1. Mineral wool. See mineral. More squeak than wool, more noise than substance; [Scotch].

For matter of title he thought there was more squeak than wool.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 17. (Davies.)

Philosopher's wool, philosophic wool. See philosophic. Pine wool, pine needle wool. See pine needle. Scoured wool. See scour[1]. Shetland wool, a thin heavy undyed and very tenacious and strong worsted spun in the Shetland Islands from the wool of the native sheep, and very extensively used in the knitting of Shetland shawls and other garments. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 127. Skirted wool. See skirted. Spanish wool, wool imported from Spain. To pull the wool over one's eyes, to deceive or delude one; throw dust in one's eyes; prevent one from seeing clearly in any way. Wool-bundling machine, a machine for compressing and tying fleeces into bundles, a fleece-folder or wool-packer. Wool in the grease, the technical name for wool which has not been cleaned either before or after shearing. Also called yolky wool, cotty wool, dead wool, lamb's wool, skin wool, slag wool.

wool (wůl), v. t. [< wool, n.] To pull the hair of, in sport or anger; rumple or topple the hair of. [Colloq., U. S.]

wool-ball (wůl'bâl), n. A ball of wool, especially such as is found in the stomach of sheep and other animals.

wool-bearing (wůl'bâr'ing), a. Producing wool; having a fleece, as the sheep.

wool-bladet, n. A plant, apparently the mullein. See quotation at woody mullein (under woody).

wool-burler (wůl'bėr'lėr), n. One who burls wool or woolen cloth. See burl[3], v. t.

wool-carder (wůl'kär'dėr), n. One who cards wool. See wool-carding.

wool-carding (wůl'kär'ding), n. The process of separating the fibers of wool and laying them parallel preparatory to spinning. See card[2] and carding[2].

wool-cleaner (wůl'klē'nėr), n. A machine for beating, shaking, and cleaning wool previous to scouring and dyeing; a wool-duster or wool-picker.

wool-comber (wůl'kō'mėr), n. One employed in wool-combing.

wool-combing (wůl'kō'ming), n. The act or process of separating the fibers of wool, especially long-fibered wool, and laying them parallel as in wool-carding. See comb[1] and combing.

woold (wōld), v. t. [With excrescent d, < D. wouden, wind, wrap; < OHG. wuolen, MHG. wuelen, G. wühlen, stir, move, wallow, etc.; cf. wallow[1].] Naut., to wind; particularly, to wind (a rope) round a mast or yard, when made of two or more pieces, at the place where they are fished, for the purpose of confining and supporting them.

woolder (wōl'dėr), n. [< woold + -er[1].] 1. Naut., a stick used in woolding. 2. In rope-making, one of the pins passing through the top, and forming a handle to it. See top[3], 2.

wool-driver (wůl'drī'vėr), n. One who buys wool in different parts of a sheep-raising country, and brings it for sale to the woolen-mill or market. [Great Britain.]

wool-dryer (wůl'drī'ėr), n. A machine for drying wool which has been washed, dyed, etc.

wool-duster (wůl'dus'tėr), n. A machine for removing impurities from wool by means of beaters.

wool dyed (wůl'dīd), a. Dyed in the wool — that is, before spinning or weaving, as wool-dyed cloth.

woolen, woollen (wůl'en), a. and n. [< ME. wollen, wullen, < AS. wyllen (= OHG. wullīn, MHG. G. wollen), woolen, < wull, wool, + -en[3]; see wool, n.] I. a. 1. Made of wool; consisting of wool: as, woolen cloth. Bacon.

On a poure beggar pat a schrobe,
And wollen wedys pat warm will last.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 214.

2. Of or pertaining to wool: as, woolen manufactures. 3. Clad in the rough, homespun serges of former times, as opposed to the silk, velvet, and fine linen of the wealthier classes; hence, coarse; boorish; rustic; vulgar.

Have woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shak., Cor., iii. 2. 9.

Woolen back satin, satin of which the back is composed of loose woolen. It is durable and not liable to grease. Dict. of Needlework. Woolen plush, a plush with a woolen pile. Woolen velvet, a general name for a woolen cloth with velvet texture. See antikhan, beaver[1], Utrecht velvet (under velvet), and velvet.

II. n. Cloth made of wool, or chiefly of wool: an abbreviation of woolen cloth.

I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen. Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 35.

The pre-existence under concrete forms of the woollens, silks, and cottons we wear, we can trace some distance back. H. Spencer, First Principles, § 93.

woolen-cord (wůl'en-kôrd), n. A kind of corduroy, or ribbed stuff, of which the face is wholly of wool.

woolen-draper (wůl'en-drā'pėr), n. A dealer in woolen cloths of different kinds; especially, a retail dealer in woolens for men's wear.

woolenette, woollenette (wůl-e-net'), n. [< woolen + dim. -ette.] A trade name for a variety of woolen cloth.

woolen-matelassé (wůl'en mat-las'ā), n. Woolen cloth woven with flowers and other patterns in a light-ground silk. It is used for women's outer garments.

woolen-printer (wůl'en-prin'tėr), n. One who prints woolen cloth, such as flannel, with colored patterns.

woolen scribbler (wůl'en-skrib'lėr), n. Same as wool scribbler.

wool-extract (wůl'eks'trakt), n. Wool recovered from mixed fabrics of wool and cotton by subjecting them to a chemical process which destroys the cotton.

wool-fat (wůl'fat), n. 1. Same as suint. — 2. A fatty substance obtained from wool and used as a base for ointments; lanolin.

woolfell (wůl'fel), n. [< wool + fell[3].] The skin of a wool-bearing beast with the fleece still on it.

The duties on wool, sheepskins, or woolfells, and leather, exported were . . . payable by every merchant, as well native as stranger. Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

In 1275 the merchants granted ten shillings on the sack and woolfells and a pound on the last, but this also was regarded as illegal and superseded by royal ordinance.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 277.

woolfist (wůl'fist), n. Same as wolf's-fist.

wool-gathering (wůl'gaṫʜ'ėr-ing), n. The act of gathering wool: usually applied figuratively to the indulgence of idle fancies or to any foolish or fruitless pursuit. The allusion is probably to the practice of gathering the tufts of wool to be found on bushes and hedges, necessitating much wandering to little purpose.

His wits were a wool-gathering as they say, and his head busied about other matters. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 199

I crost the water in my gown and slippers,
To see my rents and buildings of the Banksides,
And I am slipt clean out of ken, fore god,
A wool gathering
Heywood, If you Know not me (Works, ed. 1874, I. 302).

What! I think my wits are a wool-gathering to day.
Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

wool-grass (wůl'gras), n. A rush-like plant, Eriophorum cyperinum (Scirpus Eriophorum), common in low grounds through the eastern half of North America. It grows from 2 to 5 feet high, bearing at the summit a spreading and drooping panicle of very numerous small heads which are woolly with the rusty tortuous bristles of the flowers.

I am particularly attracted by the arching and sheaf like top of the wool-grass. Thoreau, Walden, p. 241.

wool-grower (wůl'gro'ėr), n. One who raises sheep or goats for the production of wool.

wool-growing (wůl'gro'ing), a. Producing sheep and wool, especially noting a tract of country.

wool-hall (wůl'hal), n. A market-building or exchange devoted to the business of woolen-merchants.

wool-head (wůl'hed), n. Same as buffle-head (which see, with cut). G. Trumbull, 1888. [Currituck Sound, North Carolina.]

woollen, woollenette. See woolen, woolenette.

woolliness (wůl'i-nes), n. A woolly character or quality; the state of being woolly in fact or appearance; pubescence; flocculence.

woolly (wůl'i), a. [< wool + *-y*¹.] 1. Consisting of wool; fleecy; as, the woolly coat of the sheep, of a young seal, etc.—2. Resembling wool; exhibiting woolliness; having the appearance of wool: as, woolly hair; woolly clouds.

When clouds look woolly, snow may be expected.
Abercrombie, Weather, p. 114.

3. Clothed or covered with wool, or something like it; pubescent; flocculent.

When the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act,
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands.
Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 84.

4. In bot., covered with a pubescence of long and soft hairs like wool; lanate; tomentose.—White woolly currant-scale. See *white*¹. Woolly aphis, a plant-louse of the family Aphidiidæ and either of the subfamilies Lachninæ and Pemphiginæ. Many of them secrete a white filamentous substance resembling wool. Schizoneura lanigera is the woolly root-louse of the apple, or the American blight of Great Britain and the British colonies. See Lachninæ, Pemphiginæ, Pemphigus, root-louse, and Schizoneura (with cut). Woolly bear, the larva of any arctoid moth which is densely clothed with woolly hairs, as that of the tiger-moth, a member of the Crambidæ. See cuts under *bear*¹, Euprepia, and tiger-moth. Woolly beard-grass. See beard-grass. Woolly cheetah, the south African form of the cheetah or hunting-leopard, which differs in some respects from that of India, has been described as a distinct species (Felis lanea), and is also called Guepardus or Cynælurus jubatus var. lanea. The fur is somewhat woolly, and the spots are brown instead of black. Woolly elephant, the hairy mammoth Elephas primigenius. See mammoth. Woolly indri, the woolly lemur. See indri. Woolly lemur, the Madagascar Indris laniger. Woolly louse, a woolly aphis of the genus Schizoneura, as S. lanigera; a woolly plant-louse. See cut under Schizoneura. Woolly macaco, the Madagascar Lemur mongoz. Woolly maki, the woolly lemur.—Woolly monkey, any South American monkey of the genus Lagothrix. See cut under Lagothrix. Woolly pastinum, a name given in the East Indies to a kind of red orpiment or sulphid of arsenic. Woolly ragwort. See ragwort. Woolly rhinoceros, the tichorhine rhinoceros, Rhinoceros tichorhinus. This is the best known fossil rhinoceros, and the one whose remains, like those of the woolly elephant, have been found in Siberia embedded in ice. The species was two-horned, with the anterior horn of great size, and had a coat of pelage. It was widely distributed in northern latitudes of Europe and Asia and existed from the Miocene period. Woolly root-louse. See woolly aphis and woolly louse (above), and Schizoneura.

woolly-butt (wůl'i-but), n. A gum-tree, Eucalyptus longifolia, of New South Wales, reaching a height of 200 feet. The wood is hard, straight-grained, and easily worked, suitable for spokes of wheels, furniture, and a variety of purposes. The name refers to the fibrous bark of old trees. It is also applied to the manna-gum or black butt (E. viminalis), a moderate or sometimes very large tree with wood useful for general building purposes.

woolly-haired (wůl'i-hârd), a. 1. Woolly-headed, as a person or race of men; ulotrichous. See Ulotrichi.—2. Having the pelage more or less woolly or fleecy; woolly, as a beast.

woolly-head (wůl'i-hed), n. A negro: so called from the woolly hair of his head. [Colloq.]

woolly-headed (wůl'i-hed'ed), a. Woolly-haired or ulotrichous, as a person.—Woolly-headed thistle. Same as friar's-crown.

wool-mill (wůl'mil), n. A building where the spinning of wool and the weaving of woolen cloth are carried on.

woolmonger (wůl'mung'gėr), n. A dealer in wool. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 353.

wool-moter (wůl'mo'tėr), n. A person employed in picking wool and freeing it from motes and impurities.

wool-needle (wůl'ne'dl), n. A blunt needle with a large long eye, used for wool-work or worsted work.

wooloid (wůl'oid), n. [< wool + -oid.] A factitious kind of wool prepared by chemical processes from cows' and buffaloes' hair, largely used in the United States in making ingrain carpets. [A trade-name.]

wool-oil (wůl'oil), n. The secretion of the sebaceous glands of the sheep, which greases the fleece; lanolin: popularly called yolk. Compare wool-fat.

wool-oiler (wůl'oi-lėr), n. An attachment to a wool-carding machine for adding oil to the wool to prevent the fibers from becoming felted together in the process of spinning.

woolpack (wůl'pak), n. [< ME. wolpak; < wool + *pack*¹, n.] 1. The package in which wool was in former times done up for transportation and sale; specifically, a bundle or bale weighing 240 pounds.

Two gentlemen making a marriage between their heirs over a woolpack. Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 1.

Enforcing a sack as big as a wool-pack into rooms at the first too narrow for your arm, which extended by their instruments so that often they make the very decks to stretch therewith. Sandys, Travailes, p. 12.

A cannon-ball always doth mischief in proportion to the resistance it meets with, and . . . nothing so effectually deadens its force as a woolpack. Fielding, Amelia, x. 4.

As wool packs quash the leaden ball
Shenstone, Progress of Taste, i.

2. In her., a bearing representing a sort of cushion usually having four tufts at the corners.—3. Cirro-cumulus cloud; a cloud made up of rolled masses, with a fleecy appearance.

4. A concretionary mass of crystalline limestone in the beds of earthy and impure calcareous rock of which the Wenlock limestone is made up. These concretionary masses vary in size from a few inches up to 80 feet in diameter. Also called ballstone. Woolpack corded, in her., a bearing representing a bale tied round with cords in several places.

wool-packer (wůl'pak'ėr), n. 1. One who puts up wool for the market, as into woolpacks. See woolpack.—2. A table having various arrangements for collecting loose wool or fleeces into bundles ready for tying and otherwise preparing for transportation.

wool picker (wůl'pik'ėr), n. A machine for freeing wool from foreign matters by beating it with rapidly revolving blades; a wool-cleaner.

wool-powder (wůl'pou'dėr), n. Powder or dust obtained by scraping very dry wool. It is used for mosaic powder work, wall papers, etc.

woolsack (wůl'sak), n. [< ME. wollesak; < wool + *sack*¹, n.] 1. A sack or bag of wool.—2. A cushion stuffed with wool, especially that on which the lord chancellor sits in the House of Lords. It is a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with cloth.

He [Warren Hastings] was then called to the bar, was informed from the woolsack that the Lords had acquitted him, and was solemnly discharged.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

In the reign of Queen Elizabeth an Act of Parliament was passed to prevent the exportation of wool; and, that this source of our national wealth might be kept constantly in mind, woolsacks were placed in the House of Peers, whereon the Judges sat. Brewer, Dict. Phrase and Fable.

In front of the throne were the woolsacks on which the judges sat, and the table for the clerks and other officers of parliament. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 425.

woolsack-pie† (wůl'sak-pi), n. A kind of pie once to be had at "The Woolsack," a rather low ordinary and public house in London.

Her grace would have you eat no more Woolsack pies.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 2.

wool-sale (wůl'sal), n. A periodical public sale of wool in London, Melbourne, and other places where large quantities of wool are offered.

wool-scribbler (wůl'skrib'lėr), n. A machine for combing wool and forming it into thin, downy, translucent layers, preparatory to spinning. Simmonds.

woolsey (wůl'si), n. [Abbr. of linsey-woolsey.] 1. A material made of cotton and wool, as distinguished from linsey, which is made of linen and wool. Dict. of Needlework.

Who could possibly have substituted chaces for cloths here? unless he thought his verses were to sell by the cloth, no matter for the stuff, whether linsey or woolsey.
Bentley, On a Late Discourse of Free-Thinking, &c.

2. Same as linsey-woolsey, 1.

wool-shears (wůl'shêrz), n. sing. and pl. Shears of the kinds used for shearing sheep, consisting of two sharp-pointed blades so connected by a spring at the back of the handles that they remain open when not in use. The blades are closed and brought into contact for cutting by the hand of the operator. See cuts under sheep-shears.

wool-sorter (wůl'sôr'tėr), n. One who sorts wool; especially, one skilled in dividing wool into lots according to its quality, as length and fineness of fiber.—Wool-sorters' disease, blood-poisoning probably anthrax (although there is not always an external lesion), occurring in those engaged in handling and sorting alpaca, mohair, and other varieties of smaller wools which have not been previously disinfected. See anthrax.

wool-sower (wůl'sō'ėr), n. A woolly many-celled cynipid gall occurring on white-oak twigs in the United States, and made by the gall-fly Iudrieus seminator. This gall is round, a, Wool-sower gall; b, an individual cell. The gall is composed of many such cells.

usually an inch or more in diameter, the woolly material with which the cells are surrounded is rose-colored early in the season, but becomes rusty-brown toward the middle of the summer.

wool-sponge (wůl'spunj), n. A kind of bath-sponge, more fully called lamb's-wool sponge.

wool-staple (wůl'stā'pl), n. 1. A city or town where wool was formerly brought to the king's staple for sale.—2. The fiber or pile of wool. See *staple*², 7.

wool-stapler (wůl'stā'plėr), n. 1. A dealer in wool; a wool factor.

They bought the foreign wool directly from the importer, and the native of the fleece, or from the wool-stapler.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. clxxii.

2. A sorter of wool.

woolstock (wůl'stok), n. [< wool + *stock*¹, n.] A heavy wooden hammer with a broad smooth face, employed in dressing woolen cloth.

woolward† (wůl'ward), a. and adv. [Early mod. E. wolwarde; < ME. wolward, wollward, wulward; lit. 'against wool,' i. e. with the skin against wool; < wool + -ward.] With wool as clothing, especially next the skin: apparently always with the idea of doing penance by wearing an irritating and uncomfortable garment. To go woolward, to wear uncomfortable clothing; specifically, to do penance, especially by wearing woolens next the skin.

And worles flechles wroughte & water to drinken,
And werchen & wolward gon as we wreeches were.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 788.

Barefote and wolwarde I have hyght Thider for to go.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 121).

I have no shirt. I go woolward for penance.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 717.

Poor people fare coarsely, work hard, go woolward and bare. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 536.

woolward-going† (wůl'wärd-gō'ing), n. The act of one who goes woolward.

Fasting, watching, woolward-going, pilgrimage, and all bodily exercise must be referred unto the taming of the flesh only.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 86.

Woolwich gun. See *gun*¹.

wool-winder (wůl'win'dėr), n. A person employed to wind wool or make it up into bundles to be packed for sale.

wool-work (wůl'wėrk), n. Needlework imitating tapestry, usually done on canvas with Berlin wools. The name is sometimes given to other forms of embroidery with wools.—Mosaic wool-work. See mosaic[1].

woom (wōm), n. [Origin obscure.] A trade-name for the fur of the beaver. There are four sorts—silvery, pale, white, and brown.

woon[1] (wōn), n. [< Burmese wun, a burden.] An administrative officer; a governor: as, myo-woon, chief governor; ye-woon, water-governor; woon-gyre, high minister, or member of the council of state.

> The most arbitrary confiscation of their goods by every petty Woon who flourished one gold umbrella.
> J. W. Palmer, Up and Down the Irrawaddi, p. 36

woon[2]†. A variant of wone[2], won[2], won[4].

woont†, v. An obsolete form of wont[1]. Spenser.

woorali, woorara, woorari (wō'ra-li, -ra, -ri), n. South American arrow-poison: same as curare. Also wourali, wourari.

> Upon the application of a stimulus . . . contractions will still take place after the animal has been poisoned by woorara, which is known to paralyze the motor set of nerves. J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 116.

woorst†, a. An obsolete form of worst.

wooset†, n. An earlier form of ooze.

> The squish woose of Kent and Essex > Howell, Vindication, 1677 (Harl. Misc., VI. 120).

woost†. A variant of wost, second person singular indicative present of wit[1].

woosyt, a. An earlier form of oozy.

> What is she else, but a foul woosy Marish?
> Drayton, Polyolbion, xxv. 208.

woot†. A Middle English form of wot. See wot[1], v.

wootz (wōtz), n. [Supposed to be an orig. error or misprint, perhaps for "wond," repr. Canarese ukku (pron. wukku), steel.] The name given to steel made in India by fusing iron with carbonaceous matter. This is done in small crucibles holding a pound or two of the iron, and the wood selected to furnish the carbon to the metal is always that of Cassia auriculata, which is cut into small pieces, the same being done with the iron, and the whole covered by one or more green leaves, usually of a species of Convolvulus, the crucible being then covered with a lid of clay. A number of these crucibles are placed together in a hole dug in the ground, and heated in a charcoal fire urged by a pair of bellows made of ox-hide, the blast being kept up for three or four hours. The steel thus obtained is hard in temper, and requires much care in working. This is the oldest method of making steel of which anything definite is known, having been in use, without change, for an indefinite length of time, and being, as generally believed, original with the Hindus.

wop (wop), v. t.; pret. and pp. wopped, ppr. wopping. Same as whop.

> Old Osborne was highly delighted when George wopped her third boy . . . in Russell Square.
> Thackeray, Vanity Fair, lvi.

wopent. An obsolete strong past participle of weep[1].

wops (wops), n. [A variant of waps for wasp.] A wasp or hornet. Also waps. [Prov. Eng.]

worble (wėr'bl), n. Same as wabble[2] or warble[3], 3.

worc†, worcht. Middle English forms of work.

Worcester porcelain. See porcelain.

worcher†, n. A Middle English form of worker.

word[1] (wėrd), n. [Early mod. E. also woord, wourd; < ME. word, ward, weord (pl. word, wordes), < AS. word (pl. word) = OS. word = OFries. word, werd, wird = D. LG. woord = OHG. MHG. G. wort = Icel. orth (for vord*) = Sw. Dan. ord = Goth. waurd, a word, = Lith. vardas, a name, = L. verbum, a word, verb; orig. 'a thing spoken'; cf. Gr. εἶπεν, speak, ἔπος, speech, ὄψομαι, question, ὄψ, speaker, etc. (see rhetor). Doublet of verb.] 1. A sound, or combination of sounds, used in any language as the sign of a conception, or of a conception together with its grammatical relations; the smallest bit of human language forming a grammatical part of speech; a vocable; a term. A word may be any part of speech, as verb, noun, particle, etc.; it may be radical, as love, or derivative, as lovely, lovely-loveliness, or an inflected form, as loves, loved; it may be simple, or compound, as love-sick. Anything is a word that can be used as an individual member of a sentence, and that is not separable into parts usable independently and coördinately in making a sentence. A word is a spoken sign that has arrived at its value as used in any language by a series of historical changes, and that holds its value by virtue of usage, being exposed to such further changes, of form and of meaning, as usage may prescribe. The conception involved in a word may be of any grade, from the simplest, as one, to the most derived and complicated, as political; and the grammatical relations involved may also be of any degree, from true to untruthfulness, or from (Latin) ama to amabiturus.

> Geffray thefletters after broke and rayd, > Fro words unto word.
> Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 3187.

> Sift words out of which all the whole ditties is made, every of those size couplet-acing and ending his verse by course. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 72.

> Words are but the current tokens or marks of popular notions of things.
> Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 215.

> Words are sensible signs necessary for communication.
> Locke, Human Understanding, III. ii. 1.

> The deeper and more complex parts of human nature can be exhibited by means of words alone.
> Macaulay, Moore's Byron.

> Words which are a set of clickings, hissings, lispings, and so on mean very little, compared to tones and expression of the features. O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

2. The letter or letters or other characters, written or printed, which represent such a vocable: as, a word misprinted.—3. Speech; talk; discourse; conversation: commonly in the plural.

> Was Medea that micke mayde herd Allsaundrinus wordes whe was gretly gladed of hire gode bi hest
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 648.

> I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,
> Have you so slander any moment's leisure
> As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.
> Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 134.

> The Men began to murmur against Captain Swan for persuading them to come this Voyage; but he gave them fair words.
> Dampier, Voyages, I. 282.

> Can there be no sympathy without the gabble of words?
> Lamb, Quakers' Meeting.

4. Saying; remark; expression: as, a word of comfort or sympathy; a word of reproach.

> Him wil I cheare with chaunting al this night,
> And with that word she gan to cleare his throate.
> Gascoigne, Philomene, ed. Arber, p. 88.

5. A symbol of thought, as distinguished from thought itself; sound as opposed to sense.

> The majority attend to words rather than to things.
> Jeremy Taylor, Life of Phila. (tr. by Vethch), § 74.

> Life is short, and conversation apt to run to mere words.
> O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

> To mock at Society, Antinomians and Socialists are but words, are but ancient history.
> N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 73.

6. Intelligence; information; tidings; report: without an article, and used only as a singular: as, to send word of one's arrival.

> Ye god first of nome that neuer nan adouted,
> He words of youre wokes A youre wight dedis,
> And the pine of your prowes passes o tel!
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1688.

> I'll send him certain word of my success.
> Shak., M. for M., i. 4. 80.

> Word is to the kitchen gone,
> And word is to the hall,
> And word is to the noble room,
> Among the ladyes all.
> The Queen o Marris (Child's Ballads, III. 146).

> I did give them an account dismayed them all, and word was carried in to the King.
> Pepys, Diary, II. 440.

7. An expression of will or direction; an imperative; command; order.

> Sharp as the word, good, I'll own the thing.
> Vanbrugh, The Mistake, iii. 1.

> In my time a father's word was law.
> Tennyson, Dora.

8. A password; a watchword; a war-cry; a signal or term of recognition, even when consisting of several words.

> Ad. . . . our standards, set upon our foes,
> Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
> Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
> Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 340.

> I gave the word: advance, do thou stand;
> Thou shalt a thread be call, I'll be at hand.
> Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iv. 3.

> Let the word be Salt without mustard, your meat is very rare, sir.
> Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 1.

9. A brief or pithy remark or saying; a proverb; a motto.

> The old word is "What the eye views not, the heart grieves not."
> Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 3.

10. Affirmation; promise; obligation; good faith; a form of phrase implying or containing an assertion, declaration, assurance, or the like, which involves the faith or honor of the utterer of it, with a possessive: as, I pledge you my word; on my word, sir.

> They are not mine, these words.
> Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 166.

> Madam, I dare pass my word for her truth.
> Love and Fr., King and No King, ii. 1.

> Jail. Alas, master Alburn, 'tis but poor fifty pound!
> All. If that be all you, shall upon your word take up so much with me. Another time I'll run as far in your books.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.

> Oh! as I am, I take thee at my word.
> Dryden, Conquest of Granada, II., ii. 1.

> I hope you'll think it no way improper, and must beg of you it may be done, because my word's at stake.
> F. Gibson, in Ellis's Ill. Letters, p. 220.

> Our royal word upon it.
> He comes back safe.
> Tennyson, Princess, v.

11. Utterances or terms interchanged expressive of anger, contention, or reproach: in the plural, and often qualified by high, hot, hard, sharp, or the like.

> Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 66.

> She and I had some words last Sunday at church, but I think I gave her her own.
> Swift, Polite Conversation, i.

> Having had some words with Bessus, he stabbed him with his dagger to the heart, so that he fell dead without uttering a word.
> Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 103.

> He and I
> Had once hard words, and parted.
> Tennyson, Dora.

12. In theol.: (a) [cap.] The Son of God; God as manifested to man; same as Logos.

> Thou my Word, begotten Son, by thee
> This I perform.
> Milton, P. L., vii. 163.

(b) [cap. or l. c.] The Holy Scripture, or a part of Scripture, as, the Word of God, or God's Word.

> The excellency of this Word is so great and of so high dignity, that there is no earthly thing to be compared unto it.
> Latimer, 1st Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

> For, when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the Word, by and by he is offended.
> Mat. xiii. 21.

> Delivered in Six Sermons at Steeple Ashton in Wiltshire by George Webbe Preacher of the Word and Pastor there.
> The Practice of Quietness (1610).

> The sword and the word? do you study them both, master parson?
> Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 1. 44.

> You say there must be no Human Invention in the Church, nothing but the pure word.
> Selden, Table Talk, p. 58.

A play upon words. See play[1]. At short words. See short. A word and a blow, a threat and its immediate execution; liveliness in action: also used adjectively.

> I find there is nothing but a word and a blow with you.
> Swift, Polite Conversation, i. (Davies.)

> A Napoleon-like promptitude of action, which the unlearned operatives described by calling him "a word-and-a-blow man."
> Mrs. Trollope, Michael Armstrong, iv. (Davies.)

By word of mouth. See mouth.

> Howbeit this matter may be easily remedied, if you will take the pains to ask the question of Raphael himself, by word of mouth, if he be now with you.
> Sir T. More, Utopia, Dedication to Peter Gilles, p. 8.

> "This," he said, "is not a court in which written charges are exhibited. Our proceedings are summary, and by word of mouth."
> Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

Fallacy in words. See semilogical fallacy, under fallacy. God's Word. Same as the Word of God, below. Good word, favorable account or mention, expression of good opinion, commendation, praise: as, to speak a good word for one.

> Where your good word cannot advantage him,
> Your slander never can endamage him.
> Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 2. 42.

Hard words. (a) Words not easy to spell, pronounce, or define correctly. (b) Hot, angry, or reproachful words. See def. 11, and the quotation there from Tennyson. Homophonous words. See homophonous. Household word. See household. In a word, in one word, in one brief, pithy phrase, briefly, to sum up; in short.

> In a word, for far behind his worth
> Comes all the praises that I now bestow,
> He is complete in feature and in mind.
> Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 4. 73.

> In a word, to be a fine gentleman is to be a generous and a brave man.
> Steele, Spectator, No. 75.

> Here, in a word, and it is a rare instance in my life—I had met with a person thoroughly adapted to the situation which he held.
> Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 27.

In word, in speech only; hence, in mere profession or seeming.

> Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.
> 1 John iii. 18.

Mind the word. See mind[1]. Precatory words. See precatory. The Comfortable Words. See comfortable. The Word of God, the Bible: the Scriptures. This use is rejected by the Society of Friends, who limit the phrase to the meaning given in def. 12 (a).

> An account of a personal presence brought to bear upon Luther by the King who pointed out to him that his obedience was limited by the condition "so far as the Word of God allowed."
> Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 886.

To be as good as one's word. See good. To break one's word, to break word. See break. To eat one's words. See eat. To have a word with a person, to have some conversation with him.

> He bids you > Must have a word with Lancaster.
> Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 304.

To have the words for, to act as spokesman for.

> Our hoste hadde the wordes for us alle.
> Chaucer, Prol. to Pardoner's Tale, l. 67.

To make words. See make. To pass one's word. See pass. Word and deed, from beginning to end; everything.

> Of al this work he tolde hym worde and ende.
> Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 702.

Word for word, in the exact words or terms; verbatim; literally.

> And he wrote in hys booke worde for worde like as he hym tolde.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 254.

> Court. Do you read on then, . . .
> Free. (Reads.)
> Court. Word for word.
> Ethe. (one). She Would If She Could, iv. 2.

> I shall set it in a letter; down word for word as it came to me.
> Steele, Spectator, No. 37.

> Who with the News to Practis quick repair'd, > Repeating Word for Word what she had heard.
> Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, i.

Word of command, word of honor, words of inheritance, words of limitation. See command, etc. Words of institution. See institution, 8 (a). = Syn. 1. Phrase, etc. See term.

word[1] (wėrd), v. [< ME. worden, wordien; < word[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To express in words; phrase.

Word it
In the most generous terms
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, III 8.

The apology for the king is the same, but worded with greater deference to that great prince. Addison

2. To ply with or overpower by words; talk

If one were to be worded to Death, Italian is the fittest Language, in regard of the Fluency and Softness of it Howell, Letters, I. i. 42

3†. To flatter; cajole.

He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not Be noble to myself. Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 191

4. To make or unmake by a word or command. [Rare.]

Against him . . . who could word heaven and earth out of nothing, and can when he pleases word them into nothing again. South, Sermons, X. v.

II. intrans. To speak; talk; converse; discourse.

And tho that wisely worded can and wryten many bokes
Of witte and of wisdome with damned soules woneþ
Piers Plowman (C), x. 178

Thus wording timidly among the fierce
"O Father! I am here the simplest voice Keats, Hyperion, ii.

To word it, to wrangle, dispute, contend in words

He that descends not to word it with a shrew does worse than beat her Sir R. L'Estrange.

word[2]†, n. An erroneous form of ord.

word-blind (wėrd'blind), a. Deprived of the visual memory of the signs of language. Unable as a result of disease, to read, though possibly retaining the ability to speak, write, and understand spoken words.

M. de Capdeville noted the curious fact that word blind persons are sometimes able to read manuscript but not print. Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, III. 15 word-blindness (wėrd'blind-nes), n. Loss, through disease, of the ability to read, although the faculties of speaking, writing, and understanding spoken words may remain unimpaired.

word-book (wėrd'buk), n. [< word[1] + book, after D. woordenboek = G. wörterbuch = Icel. orthabók, Sw. ordbok, Dan. ordbog.] A book containing words with their explanations, arranged in alphabetical or other regular order; a vocabulary; a dictionary, a lexicon.

If no other bookes can be so well perfected, but still some thing may be added, how much less a Word booke of Florio, If Dict. (1598), To the Reader, p. [14] word-bound (wėrd'bound), a. Restrained or restricted in speech; unable or unwilling to express one's self; also, bound by one's word or promise.

Word bound he is not He'll tell it willingly J. Baillie

word-building (wėrd'bil'ding), n. The formation, construction, or composition of words word-catcher (wėrd'kach'er), n. One who cavils at words.

Each word catcher, that lives on syllables,
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 186.

word-deafness (wėrd'def'nes), n. Loss, through disease, of the ability to understand spoken language, although the sounds are heard and the faculties of reading and speaking may be unimpaired.

worder (wėr'dėr), n. [< word[1], v., + -er[1].] A speaker. Whitlock. [Rare.]

wordily (wėr'di-li), adv. In a verbose or wordy manner

wordiness (wėr'di-nes), n. The quality of being wordy or of abounding with words.

wording (wėr'ding), n. [Verbal n. of word[1], v.] 1. The style or manner in which something is expressed; the form of words used in expressing some thought, idea, or the like; diction; phraseology.

It is believed the wording was above his known style and orthography Milton.

2. Expression, or power of expression; language; words.

Things for which no wording can be found Keats, Endymion, ii.

wordish† (wėr'dish), a. [< word[1] + -ish[1].] Verbal, wordy.

An image of that whereof the Philosopher bestoweth but a wordish description
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 38.

wordishness† (wėr'dish-nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being wordish.—2. Verbosity; prolixity.

The truth they hide by their dark wordishness.
Sir K. Digby, Bodies, Prefatory Verses.

wordle (wėr'dl), n. [Origin obscure.] One of the pivoted adjustable cams which form the throat of a drawhead, the through which wire or lead pipe is drawn. E. H. Knight.

wordless (wėrd'les), a. [< ME. wordles (= Icel. orthlauss, orthalauss); < word[1] + -less.] 1. Silent; speechless.

Wordles he was, and wondes sicke.
Isle of Ladies, l. 516.

Her joy with heaved-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 112.

2. Unexpressed in words.

Wordless answere in no toun
Was tane for obligatioun
Se called surety in no wise.
Isle of Ladies, l. 880.

Silent people often get insane. It is not safe to have too many dealings with wordless thoughts Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1832.

word-memory (wėrd'mem'o-ri), n. The memory of words; the power of recalling words to the mind.

word-painter (wėrd'pān'tėr), n. A writer who has the power of graphic or vivid description in depicting scenes or events; one who displays picturesqueness of style.

word-painting (wėrd'pān'ting), n. The act of describing or depicting in words graphically or vividly.

word-picture (wėrd'pik'tūr), n. A graphic or vivid description of any scene or event, so that it is presented to the mind as in a picture.

wordsman† (wėrdz'man), n. [< words, pl. of word[1], + man.] One who attaches undue importance to words, or who deals in mere words; one skilled in the use of words; a verbalist. [Rare.]

Some speculative wordsman. Bushnell

wordsmanship† (wėrdz'man ship), n. [< wordsman + -ship.] Knowledge or command of words; fluency in speech or writing word-spite† (wėrd'spīt), a. Expressing spite; abusive.

A silly, yet ferocious, wordspite quarrel between Otho and Hugh Bestrand Sir F. Palgrave, Norm. and Eng., II. cxl.

word-square (wėrd'skwār), n. See square[1], 15.

wordstrife (wėrd'strīf), n. Disputing about words; logomachy. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 107. (Davies.)

Wordsworthian (wėrdz'wer-thi-an), a. and n. [< Wordsworth (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining to the English poet William Wordsworth (1770–1850), or to his style.

II. n. An admirer or a follower of the poet Wordsworth.

The Wordsworthians were a sect who, if they had the enthusiasm had also not a little of the exclusiveness and partiality to which sects are liable Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 201.

Wordsworth's flower. See Ranunculus

wordy[1] (wėr'di), a. [< ME. wordy (= Icel. orðugr); < word[1] + -y[1].] 1. Given to the use of many words; verbose

A wordy orator . . . making a magnificent speech to the people, full of vain promises Steele, Spectator, No. 445.

2. Full of words; wordish.

We need not lavish hours in wordy periods
Philips, The Briton.

Like wordy variance of domestic life
The tyrant husband, the retorting wife
Crabbe, Works, I. 159.

3. Consisting of words; verbal.

A silent, but amused spectator of this wordy combat Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, iv.

wordy[2]†, a. An obsolete Scotch form of worthy.

wore[1] (wōr). Preterit of wear[1].

wore[2]†, v. An obsolete variant of were. See was.

wore[3]†, v. t. [ME. woren, < AS. wōrian, weary, fatigue, wander.] To weary; fatigue. See weary[1], a. Ancren Riwle, p. 386.

woreld†, n. An obsolete form of world.

work (wėrk), v.; pret. and pp. worked or wrought, ppr. working. [< ME. worken, werken, wirken, also assibilated worchen, wurchen, werchen, wirchen, wyrchen (pret. wrought, wrogte, wrouhte, wrahte, worhte, pp. wrought, wrogt, wroht, wraht, worht), < AS. wyrcan, wircan, werican (pret. worhte, pp. geworht) = OS. wirkeon = OFries. wirka, werka = D. werken = MLG. werken, werkē = OHG. wirken, wurchen, MHG. wirken, würken, G. wirken = Icel. yrkja (for yrkva) = Dan. virke = Goth. waurkjan, work; a secondary verb, associated with the noun work, from a Teut. √ werk, √ work, = Gr. Ἔργον, perf. ἐοργα, work, ῥέζειν (for Ϝρεγ-ιειν), do (cf. ἔργον, a work, ὄργανον, instrument, organ), = Zend √ vrz, verez, work; cf. Pers. warz, gain, profit, habit, etc. From the Gr. words of this root are ult. E. erg, energy, organ, etc., and the second element in metallurgy, theurgy, etc., chirurgeon, surgeon, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To put forth effort for the accomplishment of something; exert one's self in the performance of some service; labor; toil; strive: as, to work ten hours a day.

But whi the werwolf so wrought wondred thei alle,
A wiȝ more with the king than with any other.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4035.

We commanded you that, if any would not work, neither should he eat. 2 Thes. iii. 10.

My sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness
Had never like executor. Shak., Tempest, iii. 1. 12.

His labor more than requited his entertainment; for he wrought among us with vigor, and either in the meadow or at the hay-rick put himself foremost Goldsmith, Vicar, viii.

2. To act; operate; carry on or perform a function; operate effectively; prove practicable: as, the pump will not work; a plan or system that works well; the charm works.

Lotac thi lippes a-twynne & let the goat worche.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 2.

Nature hath now no dominacioun
And certeynly ther nature wol nat wirche.
Farewel, phisyk! go bet the man to chirche.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1901.

But once the circle got within,
The charms to work do straight begin,
And he was caught as in a gin.
Drayton, Nymphidia.

Soon as the potion works, their human countenance,
The express resemblance of the gods, is changed
Milton, Comus, l. 68.

Love never fails to master what he finds,
But works a different way in different minds
Dryden, Cym. and Iph., l. 465.

You may make everything else out of the passions of men except a political system that will work
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 158.

3. To ferment, as liquors.

This experiment would be transferred unto other wine and strong beer by putting in some like substances while they work Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 782.

4. To be agitated or in a state of restless movement or commotion; seethe; toss; rage.

Calm is the sea, the waves worke lesse and lesse Surrey, Complaint by Night of Lover Not Beloved.

The dog-star foams and the stream boils
And curls and works, and swells ready to sparkle.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, I. 2.

The inward wretchedness of his wicked heart, he says, began to be discovered to him and to work as it had never done before; he was now conscious of sinful thoughts and desires which he had not till then regarded.
Southey, Bunyan, p. 23.

5. To make way laboriously and slowly; make progress, become, or get with exertion and difficulty: generally followed by an adjective, or by an adverb of direction, as along, down, into, out through, up, etc.: as, to work loose; to work out, to work up

Who would trust chance, since all men have the seeds
Of good and ill, which should work upward first?
Dryden.

After midnight . . . the wind worked gradually round and blew directly in our teeth.
Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, I. 1.

6. To carry on systematic operations in some department of human activity, especially as a means of earning a livelihood; be regularly engaged or employed in some operation, trade, profession, or business: as, to work in brass or iron.

They that work in fine flax . . . shall be confounded.
Isa. xix. 9.

Sea-faring men, who long have wrought
In the great deep for gain. M. Arnold, Balder Dead.

7. To do something; specifically, to be employed in handiwork, as in knitting, sewing, or embroidery.

"I always think it such a waste of time to sit out of doors or listen to reading without working." "But I can't work," said Archie, "except mending, and that I detest."
Mrs. Annie Edwards, Archie Lovell, xxx.

8. To blossom, as water; become full of some vegetable substance. See the quotation.

Nearly all the ponds rivers, and lakes work, or what is generally called 'blossom,' some waters once and some twice during the summer months. A vegetable substance that grows on the bottom, and during the summer the seed or bloom, breaks loose from the bottom and floats in the water. The leaves of the blossoms are of the same weight as the water, so that some kinds do not come to the top and float, but float about in the water, giving the water a thick oily appearance. Very few fish are caught when the water is in blossom. Seth Green.

To work at arm's length. See arm's-length.—To work at ease. See ease.—To work double tides. See tidal.—To work free. See free.—To work off, to be evacuated or eliminated, as poison from the system, by the bowels or kidneys.—To work on or upon. (a) To act or operate upon; exert a force or active influence upon; affect.

> A mark, and a hope, and a subject for every sophister in religion to work on. Donne, Letters, xc.

> We were now at a great loss, not knowing what course to take, for we tempted him [an Indian] with Beads, Money, Hatchets, Mucheats, or long Knives, but nothing would work on him. Dampier, Voyages, I. 13.

(b) To rely on.

> "I schal, sire," seide the child, "for saufliche y hope
> I may worche on your word to wite him fro harm."
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 257.

To work with, to endeavor to influence, as with reasoning, entreaty, etc.; strive with in order to influence in some particular way; labor with

> I wrought with him in private, to divert him
> From your assur'd destruction, had he met you > Beau. and Fl., Little French Lawyer, iii. 1.

=Syn. Act, Work, etc. See act.

II. trans. 1. To prepare by labor; manipulate: as, to work soil or clay.

> Plate lande ydounged moist and wel ywrought
> Onyons desire.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 82.

> When special pains are taken to "work the butter" thoroughly, thus more effectually getting rid of the water and buttermilk, it keeps for a much longer period in a "sweet" condition. Science, XVI. 71.

2. To convert to use by labor or effort; operate: as, to work a quarry; to work a scheme.

> The head member of the company that worked the mines was Mr. Peter Garstin and the same company received the rent for the Sugag Loaf. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xl.

> As the claim was worked back, the long tom was extended by means of sluice boxes, until a dozen or more miners were shoveling dirt into them on both sides. The Century, XLII. 140.

3. To make; form; fashion; execute; mold.

> Allas! that we wer wrought
> In worlde women to be. York Plays, p. 156.

> A moog other, a wonderfull gretnesse that he rygthi Curiously wrought and arn fyne gold garnyshed over all with stones of gret pryse. Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 11.

> That was one of the famous cups of Tours, wrought by Martin Dominique. Scott, Quentin Durward, iv.

> Here is a sword I have wrought thee.
> William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

4. To decorate or ornament, as with needlework; embroider.

> She hath a clout of mine
> B*rought* with good Coventry > Philadelphi Amita ane (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 211).

> You shall see my wrought shirt hang out at my breeches, you shall know me. Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I. v. 1.

> Ay, I have lost my thimble and a skein of Coventry blue I had to work Gregory Hitchfield a handkerchief. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Metamorphosed.

> A shape with amice wrapp'd around,
> With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
> Like pilgrim from beyond the sea.
> Scott, L. of L. M., vi. 26.

> A damask napkin wrought with horse and hound.
> Tennyson, Audley Court.

5. To do, perform, or accomplish; bring about; effect; produce; cause: as, to work mischief; to work a change; to work wonders.

> A felle man in fight, fuerse on his enmys,
> And in batell full bigg, & psyche bale wrought.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7571.

> Alias! wrecchis, what hane we wrought!
> To byggly bigs we bothe wer brought.
> York Plays, p. 91.

> Than he taught hir ther a pley that she wrought after many tymes, for he taught hir to do come a grete river over all theras her liked. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 312.

> For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 17.

> Changes were wrought in the parts.
> Bacon, Physical Fables, i., Expl.

> Not long after there fell out an unexpected Accident, that suddenly wrought the Lords Confusion.
> Baker, Chronicles, p. 110.

> The emancipation is observed in the islands, to have wrought for the negro a benefit as sudden as when a thermometer is brought out of the shade into the sun.
> Emerson, West Indian Emancipation.

6. To put or set in motion or action: as, to work one's fingers.

> The mariners all 'gan work the ropes,
> Where they were wont to do.
> Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, v.

> They are every one of them dead dolls, wooden worked with wires. Kingsley, Hypatia, xiii.

> Nodding in a familiar manner to the coachman, as if any one of them would be quite equal to getting on the box and working the team down street as well as he.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, I. 5.

7. (a) To direct the action or movements of; manage; handle: as, to work a sawmill.

> More personal valour could not supply want of knowledge in building and working ships. Arbuthnot.

(b) In music, to handle or treat (a voice-part or a theme).—8. To bring by action or motion into some particular state, usually indicated by an adverb or adverbial adjunct, as in, out, over, up, etc. See phrases below.

> Practise all things chiefly at two several times, the one when the mind is best disposed, the other when it is worst disposed; that by the one you may gain a great step, by the other you may work out the knots and stonds of the mind. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 236.

> So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
> Of rushing torrents and descending rains,
> Works itself clear, and as it runs refines.
> Addison, Cato, I. 6.

9. To manage or turn to some particular course or way of thinking or acting by insidious means; influence in some respect by plying with arguments, urgings, threats, bribes, etc.; prevail on or gain over; induce; persuade; lead: as, to work the committee; to work the jury.

> There is now hope that they will ever be wrought to serve faithfully against their old friends and kinsmen.
> Spenser, State of Ireland.

> I will try his temper
> And, if I find him apt for my employments,
> I'll work him to my ends.
> Fletcher, Spanish Curate, v. 1.

> The Clergy being thus brought on, on the nine and twentieth of April, the Cardinal came into the House of Commons, to work them also. Baker, Chronicles, p. 270.

> Many of the Jews were wrought into the belief that Herod was the Messias. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 3.

10. To excite by degrees; bring into a state of perturbation or passion; provoke; agitate.

> Some passion
> That works him strongly.
> Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 141.

> Sir, I'm not wrought on: He has left me full of [illegible] and I'll fight this evening, that so much good passion may not be wasted. Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 1.

11. To succeed in effecting, attaining, or making; win by labor; achieve: as, to work a passage through something.

> Through winds and waves and storms he works his way.
> Waller, Æneas, Calm, I. 3.

> Some of the afterwards Amory made his appearance at Colonel ——, having worked his way out before the mast from the Cape. Thackeray, Pendennis, xxv.

> We passed to and fader, junks slowly working their way upstream against what to any but the Chinese would have appeared insurmountable difficulties.
> The Century, XLI. 799.

12. To endeavor; attempt; try.

> I've seen the wife fast in the latch of the stable door, also could not clear her self: as she see me *a-*coming to do.
> Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 45.

13. To operate on, as a purgative or other drug; purge.

> Every one operates if eaten off a fasting-pot, but if you [illegible] Wholesome, and your Body Sound, it will work [illegible] sooner than the same quantity of ginger-bread.
> Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 106.

14. To ply one's trade, calling, vocation, or business on; carry on operations in or on: as, to work a district in canvassing for a publication. [Colloq.]

> I've worked both town and country on gold fish. I've served Lord Londesboro and Hastings.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 30.

> As a general rule, the "casual ward" of a workhouse was far from being a temporary refuge of deserving poor; it was a place of rendezvous for thieves and prostitutes and other vagabonds of the lowest class, gangs of whom worked London streets, and make them more or less unsafe, particularly at the Derby.
> A. Doyle, quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 282.

> The next day I started alone to explore the forest with gun and dog, leaving my friends to work the river.
> Forest and Stream, N. S., XLIII. 632.

15. To exact labor or service from; keep busy or employed; as, he works his horses too hard.

> Until the year 1825 the people in Great Britain had been prohibited to combine. Their only power against employers who worked them as many hours a day as they dared, and paid them wages as small as they could, was to take them collectively and look them up in a cell. Some factories was to combine to, and they were forbidden to combine.
> W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 201.

16. To solve; as, to work a sum in arithmetic or a problem in algebra. [Colloq.]—17. To cause to fit correctly; said of anything which is put into a board for that purpose. To work an observation. See observation. To work a traverse. See traverse sailing, under sailing. To work in. (a) To intermix or mix material with another in the process of manufacture or the like; weave or stir in: as, he worked the good yarn in with the bad. (b) To come to enter or penetrate by repeated efforts: as the wire was slowly worked in. To work into. (a) To introduce artfully; insinuate: as, he easily works himself into confidence by his plausibility. (b) To change or alter by gradual process or influence.

> This imperious man will work us all
> From princes into pages.
> Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 2. 47.

To work off, to get rid of: free or be freed from, or from the effects of, discharge, evacuate: as, to work off the effects of a debauch. To work one's passage, to give one's work or services as an equivalent for passage-money. To work one's will. See will. To work out. (a) To effect or procure by continued labor or exertion; accomplish.

> Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.
> Phil. ii. 12.

> Who can hide,
> When the malicious fates are bent
> On working out an ill intent?
> Wordsworth, The Waggoner, iv.

> O lift your natures up,
> Embrace our aims: work out your freedom.
> Tennyson, Princess, ii.

(b) To elaborate, develop, reduce to order, study out.

> She [Italy] did not work out the basis on her own type for herself, she left it to others to do that for her, and consequently never perfectly understood what she undertook or why it was done. J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 428.

> The minerals, which are now in the British Museum, were worked out by Mr. Davies of that establishment.
> Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XII. 466.

(c) To solve, as a problem.

> Mal. M—— Malvolio's M——, why that begins my name.
> Fab. Did not I say he would work it out?
> Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 130.

(d) To erase, efface, remove.

> Tears of joy, for your returning spill,
> Work out and expiate our former guilt.
> Dryden, Astræa Redux, l. 276.

(e) To exhaust, as to work out a mine or quarry. To work out a day's work (naut.), to compute a ship's position from the course and distance sailed. To work the twig. See twig, 4. To work up. (a) To excite; stir up; raise; rouse.

> It have very hard Matter to work up a heated and devout Imagination to the Fancy of Raptures and Ecstasies and Mystical Unions. Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. iii.

> We cannot but tremble to consider what we are capable of being wrought up to, against all the ties of nature, love, honour, reason and religion. Steele, Tatler, No. 179.

> They [the Moslems] work themselves up to such agonies of rage and lamentation that some, it is said, have given up the ghost from the mere effect of mental excitement.
> Macaulay, Lord Clive.

(b) To use up in the process of manufacture or the like; expend in any work: as, we have worked up all our materials.

> The industry of the people works up all their native commodities to the last degree of manufacture.
> Swift.

(c) To excite and enlarge; elaborate: as, to work up a story or an article from a few hints.

> We have read of "Handsome-shilt Moody," who for some years persisted in always appearing among men with his face covered with a handkerchief: an incident which Hawthorne has worked up in his weird manner into the story of "The Minister with the Black Veil."
> H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 484.

(d) To master by careful study or research: as, to work up a theme. (e) To achieve or attain by special effort: as, to work up a reputation for one's self. (f) Naut., to discipline or punish by setting at an unnecessary or hateful job, like scraping the anchor chain: such a piece of work is called a working-up job. To work water. See the quotation.

> Water is also frequently carried over from the boiler with the steam. When this occurs the boiler is said to prime, or to work water.
> Forney, Locomotive, p. 170.

work (wėrk), n. [< ME. work, werk, wurc, worc, werc, weorc, < AS. wyrc, wurc, weorc = OS. OFries. werk = D. werk = LG. werk = OHG. werch, werah, MHG. werc, G. werk = Icel. Sw. verk = Dan. værk = Goth. gawaurki; cf. Gr. ἔργον, work: see work, v.] I. Effort or exertion directed to the accomplishment of some purpose or end, expenditure of strength, energy, etc.; toil; labor; striving.

> He upon this quiet life I want work.
> Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 118.

> Man hath his daily work of body or mind > Appointed. Milton, P. L., iv. 618.

> Here work enough to watch
> The Master work, and catch > Hints of the proper craft.
> Browning, Rabbi Ben Ezra.

2. Opportunity of expending labor (physical or mental) in some useful or remunerative way, especially as a means of earning a livelihood; employment; something to do: as, to be out of work, to look for work.—3. That upon which one is employed or engaged, and in the accomplishment of which labor is expended or some operation performed; a task, undertaking, enterprise, or project.

> If I would please Him whose works it is to direct me to speed, as he sword over the sea as the good old woman of Abel did over the wall in the like exigent.
> N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 33.

> The great work of erecting a way of worshipping of Christ for Church fellowship.
> A. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 160.

To her dear Work she falls, and, as she wrought,
A sweet Creation followed her hands.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 61.

4. Something accomplished or done; doing; deed; achievement; feat; performance.

Thei knoulechen wel that the Werkes of Jesu Crist ben gode and his Wordes and his Dedes and his Doctryne bi his Gospelles weren trewe, and his Miracles also trewe.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 131.

It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.
Shak., K. John, iv. 3.

A people of that beastly disposition that they performed the most secret works of Nature in publique view.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 727.

Once more,
Act a brave work, call it thy last adventry.
B. Jonson, Epigrams, cxxxiii.

It would be easy to multiply illustrations of the difference between . . . the philosophy of words and the philosophy of works.
Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

5. pl. In theol., acts performed in obedience to the law of God. According to Protestant theology, such works would be meritorious only as they constituted a perfect and complete observance of the law; according to Roman Catholic theology, such works, if proceeding from grace and love, are so far acceptable to God as to be truly deserving of an eternal reward: see supererogation.

And gif I shal werke be here werkes to wynne me hennes,
And for hope werkes and for here wyt wende to pyne, Thanne wrongte I vnwisly with alle the wyt that I here!
Piers Ploreman (A), xi. 268.

For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast.
Eph. ii. 9.

6†. Active operation; action.

Where pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idle ease set them on worke against God.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 41.

7. Ferment; trouble. [Rare.]

Tokay and Coffee cause this Work
Between the German and the Turk.
Prior, Alma, iii.

8. That which is made or manufactured; an article, fabric, or structure produced by expenditure of effort or labor of some kind, whether physical or mental; a product of nature or art.

The work some praise,
And some the architect.
Milton, P. L., ii. 731.

Hence, specifically (a) That which is produced by mental labor; a literary or artistic performance; a composition: as, the works of Addison, the works of Mozart. See opus.

You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication
To the great lord.
Shak., L. of A., i. 1. 99.

No other Poet that I know of (save Ben Jonson), in those days gave his Plays the pompous Title of Works; of which Sir John Suckling has taken notice in his Session of the Poets . . . This puts me in mind of a Distich directed by some Poet of that Age to Ben Johnson:

Pray, tell me, Ben, where does the mystery lurk?
What others call a Play, you call a Work, which was thus answer'd by a Friend of his

The Author's Friend thus for the Author says, Both a Plays are Works, when others Works are Plays.
Langbaine, Eng. Dramatick Poets (1691), p. 204.

When I contemplate a modern library, filled with new works in all the bravery of rich gilding and binding.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 165.

(b) An engineering structure as a building, dock, embankment, bridge, or fortification.

And now ye Surreyns haue taken vp the stones of the same tumbe and put them to the werkes of theyr Monkey.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 2.

I will be walking on the works.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3.

Don Guzman, . . . who commanded the sortie, ought to have taken the work out of hand and annihilated all therein.
Kinglake, Westward Ho, iv.

Frail were the works that defended the hold that we held with our lives.
Tennyson, Defence of Lucknow.

(c) Design, pattern, workmanship.

Ther ys a gret Challis of fine gold of Curius werke.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 11.

Let there be three or five fine cupolas in the length of it placed at equal distance, and fine colored windows of several works.
Evelyn, Building (ed. 1818).

All his followers likewise were in their faces, in part or in whole painted, . . . some with crosses and other antick works.
Mourt's Journal, in Appendix to New England's Memorial, p. 355.

(d) Embroidery; ornamental work done with the needle, needlework.

I am glad I have found this napkin.
I'll have the work ta'en out,
And give 't Iago.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3.

I never saw any thing prettier than this high Work on your Point Despagne.
Etherege, Man of Mode, ii. 2.

9. An establishment for manufacturing, or for performing industrial labor of any sort: generally in the plural, including all the buildings, machines, etc., used in the required operations: as, iron-works; hence the plural is used as a collective singular, taking then a singular article: as, there is a large glass works in the town.

They have a Salt Work, and with that salt preserve the fish they take.
Capt. John Smith, Gen. Hist. Virginia (Arber's Eng. Garner, II. 295.)

Whereupon he gott a patent of the king (Chas. I.) for an allum worke (which was the first that ever was in England), which was worth to him two thousand pounds per annum, or better.
Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Chaloner).

10. In mech.: (a) The product of a force by the component displacement of its point of application in the direction of the force; or, if this is variable, the integral of all successive infinitesimal such products for any motion of the point of application. The work is thus the same whatever be the velocity of the motion or the mass moved, so long as the force and the displacement are the same. Thus, if an electrified body is moved by an electrical force along a horizontal surface, the work is the same whatever the mass of the body moved. But if the same electrical force moves the body for the same distance but upward against gravity, less work on the whole is done, since the force of gravity undoes a part of the work which the electrical force performs. Negative work, or work undone, is also called resistant work in contradistinction to motor work. The total work performed upon a particle is equivalent to the kinetic energy it gains, the total work undone, to the kinetic energy it loses. If a force is resisted by friction, the same amount of work is done as if it were not resisted; for, though the resultant force upon the mass moved is less by the amount of the friction, so that less work is done upon the mass as a whole, yet heat is produced and the particles receive displacements in the direction of the action of friction, the work of which makes up the balance. Mechanical work is work done in the displacement of sensible masses as opposed to work done in the displacement of molecules. If a gun is shot off in a horizontal direction, a force is brought to bear upon the bullet, and in carrying this a certain distance work proportional to the acceleration is performed, at the same time, the heat of the confined gases is reduced by a proportional amount and heat is said to be transformed into mechanical work.

We have thus arrived at the immensely important conclusion that no heat engine can convert into work a greater fraction of the heat which it receives than is expressed by the excess of the temperature of reception above that of rejection divided by the absolute temperature of reception.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 482.

(b) The negative of the work as defined above. In this sense a ball shot upward is said to do work by removing itself from the attracting earth. (Both these uses of the word work were introduced by Clausius, first in German.)

11. In physics and chem., the production of any physical or chemical change. For example, if a body is heated the effects are said to be the internal work of increasing the kinetic molecular energy — that is, increase of temperature, of change of volume, cohesive elasticity and the external work involved in its expansion, and hence overcoming the surrounding atmospheric pressure. An example of work in the chemical sense is that done when a chemical compound is decomposed, as by an electrical current in electrolysis. See further under energy, 7.

12. In mining, ores before they are cleaned and dressed. — 13. pl. The mechanism or effective part of some mechanical contrivance, such as a watch. — 14. Manner of working; management; treatment.

It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops . . . were not so wise as they should have been.
Stillingfleet.

Accommodation works. See accommodation. Advanced works, works placed beyond the covered ways and glacis of a permanent fortification, but in defensive relations with it. When placed beyond the range of small arms such works are termed detached works. - Agra work, an inlay of hard stones, such as agates and cornelians, and other costly materials in white marble, made at Agra in British India. - Bareilly work, woodwork decorated in black and gold lacquer, made in the Northwestern Provinces of India. - Beaten work. See beaten. - Berlin work, fancy work on canvas in Berlin wools or worsted. - Best work. See best. - Bone-work, same as bone lace. - Carnul work, decoration by means of lacquer painted with flowers in slight relief on a green ground, gold being freely used, from Carnul, or Kurnul, a town of India. - Cashmere work, a kind of metal work in which copper or brass is deeply engraved and the engraved lines are filled wholly or in part with a black composition like niello: small raised flowers of white metal are then applied to the surface in connection with the design engraved upon the body of the piece. - Combed-out work. See combed. - Covenant of works. See covenant. - Damascene work. See damascene. - Day's work. See day. - Delhi work, a variety of Indian embroidery distinguished by a free use of chain stitch, usually in gold and silver mixed with colored silk on colored grounds. - Dinged work. See ding. - Drawn and cut work, decorative work done upon fine linen or the like by cutting away parts and pulling out the threads in places: a kind of work often associated with embroidery. In the more elaborate sorts, a network of threads is fastened down upon a piece of linen lawn, the pattern is stitched usually in buttonhole-stitch upon the lawn, and after its completion the threads of the network and some of those of the lawn are pulled out and parts of the lawn cut away. Embossed-velvet work. See velvet. External work. See internal work, below. - False work. See false.

There are voices and a sound of tools, and we come to a wooden staging, or false work, and climb a short ladder, and stand close to the roof among a group of workmen.
The Century, XXXIX. 221.

Fancy, fat, frosted work. See the adjectives. — Guarled work. Same as gnarling. — Granulated work. See granulated. — Hammered work. See hammer, —

Hiroshima work, fine decorative metal-work made in Japan, in which various ornamental appliances are combined. The name is derived from the town of Hiroshima, where much of the finest has been made. — Holbein work, a kind of embroidery done in modern times in imitation of decorative borders and the like shown in paintings of Holbein and other artists of his time. The design is in outline without filling in, and consists of borders and other patterns of slight scrolls, zigzags, etc. It is worked especially with thread on washable material, and has the advantage of showing alike on both sides. — Honeycomb work. See honeycomb. — Incrusted work. See incrust. — Internal work, in physics, work done in or among the molecules of a body upon change of temperature, as in increasing their velocity, changing their relative position, etc.: contrasted with external work, that done against external forces as the body changes in volume. - Irish work. See Irish. — Lacertine work. See lacertine. — Laid work. See lay†. — Lap-jointed work. Same as clincher-work. - Lean, lump, madras, mechanical, meshed work. See the qualifying words. — Madeira work, embroidery in white thread upon lawn or cambric, made in the island of Madeira, and of remarkable fineness of execution. — Monghyr work, Indian decorative carving in black ebony, inlaid with ivory. — Moradabad work, decorative work in metal, in which two plates of different metals are soldered together and then engraved on one side in deep incisions, so as to show the one metal through the incisions in the other. In another variety the incisions are filled in with a black composition similar to niello. — Mother-of-pearl work. See mother of pearl. — Mounted work. See mounted. — Mynpuri work, an inlay of wood with brass and other metals similar in its character to buhl, practised in India in recent times. - Mysore work, decoration by painting in vivid opaque colors on a brilliant ground composed of translucent green lacquer laid upon tin-foil. — Niello-work. See niello. — Nulled work. See null. — Out of work (a) Out of working order.

There rises a fearful vision of the human race evolving machinery which will by and by throw itself fatally out of work.
George Eliot, Theophrastus Such, xvii.

(b) Without employment: as, he was out of work and ill. Phrygian work. See Phrygian. — Pierced work. See pierced. Pitched work. See pitch†. — Plaited string work, pounced work, process work, public works. See plaited, pounced†, etc. - Punctured work. See puncture. Raised work. See raise†. — Random work. See random. Reisner work [from its inventor, Reisner, a German of the time of Louis XIV.], a kind of inlaid cabinet work in which woods of contrasted colors are employed, designs being formed in woods lighter or darker than the ground; marquetry. — Reticulated work. See reticulated. - Rubbed work. See rub. — Russian-tapestry work, rustic work, Saracenic work. See Russian, rustic, . - Side of work, in coal-mining. See mined-way, n. - Sikh work, decorative work done by the Sikhs of northern India, especially embossed work in thin copper done with the hammer and punch. — Sindh work, decoration produced by laying upon wood several strata of lacquer in different colors, and afterward cutting through the lacquer to various depths, as in engraving on onyx. - Spanish work, embroidery of simple character, such as that done upon pillow-cases and table-cloths: a term of the seventeenth century. Spiritual and corporal works of mercy. See mercy. Stamped work. See stamp. — Swedish work. See Swedish. Tabular work. Same as table-work. — Tamil work, ornamental metal-work, containing much filigree, made in Ceylon, especially in the northern part of the island. Tessellated work. See tessellated. — Tied work, a kind of fancy work by which fringes are made of worsted, silk, or other fiber or cord. The cords are fastened and grouped together by a process like netting, producing a sort of knotted fringe. - To have one's work cut out (a) To have one's work prepared or prescribed. (b) To have all that one can do. [Slang.] — To lie to one's work. See lie†. — To make short work of or with, or to bring to a speedy conclusion; accomplish at once. (b) To deal with or dispose of summarily.

Mr. Canning made very short work of poor Mr. Erskine.
H. Adams, Gallatin, p. 294.

To run the works. See run. — Turkey work, rugs or carpeting brought from the East: the phrase was in use as late as the seventeenth century. — Upper works (naut.). Same as dead works. — Vienna work, decorative work in leather, including ornamental utensils of that material with patterns in slight relief and impressed. — Vizagapatam work, an inlay of ivory, horn, and other material in wood. The work is on a small scale, and is applied to the decoration of movable furniture, tea-caddies, chessboards, etc. - Work and turn, in printing, a form of type arranged to print two copies by turning the sheet. — Work of art. See art. — Works of supererogation. See supererogation. (See also pinpierhead-work, piquéwork, spider-work.)

Syn. 1. Work, Labor, Toil, Drudgery, occupation, exertion, business. Work is the generic term for exertion of body or mind; it stands also for the product of such exertion, while the others do not. Labor is heavier, the word may be qualified by strong adjectives: as, confinement at hard labor. We may speak of light work, but not of light labor. Toil is still heavier, necessarily involving weariness, as labor does not. Drudgery is heavy, monotonous labor of a servile sort.

All work, even cotton-spinning, is noble.
Carlyle, Past and Present, iii. 4.

He had been so far that he almost despair'd of getting back again: for a Man cannot pass thro' those red Mangroves but with very much labour.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 156.

With burden of our armour here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of thine.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 93.

The every-day cares and duties which men call drudgery are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time.
Longfellow, Kavanagh, xiii.

workability (wėr-ka-bil'i-ti), n. [{ workable + -ity (see -bility).] Practicability; feasibleness.

The workability of compulsory notification would depend on the general practitioners. Lancet, 1890, II. 21.

workable (wėr'ka-bl), a. [< work + -able.] 1. That can be worked, or that is worth working: as, a workable mine; workable coal. The term workable, as applied to coal, has two meanings: one refers to the maximum limit of depth, the other to the minimum limit of thickness of the bed or beds. In the Report of the English Royal Commission appointed in 1866, the limit of workable depth was taken as 4,000 feet, that of thickness at 1 foot. But no coal has yet been worked to so great a depth as that, and it has only very rarely happened that a seam of less than 2 feet in thickness has been actually mined.

Clay . . . soft and workable. Ascham, Toxophilus, ii.

I apprehend that the Commissioners [the English of 1866] placed the limit of thickness as low as 12 inches because their inquiries were not in that connection directed to the question what amount of coal would ultimately be found commercially workable; it was the simple physical limits which they were chiefly regarding.
Marshall, Coal, its Hist. and Uses p. 307.

2. Practicable; feasible: as, a workable scheme for lighting the streets.—3. Capable of being stirred or influenced.

These have nimble feet, forward affections, hearts workable to charity. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 410.

4. Capable of being set at work.

At the time of taking the last census there were very nearly seven millions of wives and children of a workable age still unoccupied.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 388.

workableness (wėr'ka-bl-nes), n. Practicableness; feasibility.

That fair trial which alone can test the workableness of any new scheme of social life. J. S. Mill, Socialism.

workaday (wėrk'a-dā), n. and a. [Formerly also workyday. Cf. workday.] I. n. A working-day.

Trade, I cashier thee till to morrow; friend Onion, for thy sake I finish this workday.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, iv. 3

We find a great Deference paid to Saturday Afternoon, above the other working-Days of the Week.
Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 145.

II. a. Working-day; relating to workdays; plodding; toiling.

Your face shall be tann'd
Like a sailor's worky-day hand.
Middleton and Rowley, Spanish Gypsy, iv. 1

Work a-day humanity.
Dickens, Uncommercial Traveller, iv.

This is a workaday, practical world, and . . . we must face things as they are. The Century, XXXIX. 639.

work-bag (wėrk'bag), n. A small bag of some textile material, formerly carried by women, and used to contain their needlework. The term was often used for the reticule.

The lawful fine of the pledged work-bag of the king's wife. O'Curry, Anc. Irish, II. xxiv.

work-basket (wėrk'bas'ket), n. A basket used by women either to hold the implements for sewing, as needles, thread, scissors, or thimble, in which case the basket is small, or to hold partly made garments, articles needing repair, etc., for which use the basket is large and has a wide opening.

On the table is . . . Elizabeth's workbasket.
Rhoda Broughton, Alas, xxxiv.

work-box (wėrk'boks), n. A box used by women to hold their materials for sewing and the needlework itself when not too bulky.

Here, lately shut, that work box lay,
There stood your own embroidery frame.
P. Locker, The Castle in the Air.

workday (wėrk'dā), n. and a. [< ME. werkdai, werkedai, werkedah, workday, working-day, < AS. wġorc-dæg (= G. werk-tag, werkel-tag = Icel. verkdagr); as work + *day*1.] I. n. A working-day; a week-day.

For a-pon the werkeday
Men be so busy in vche way,
So that for here occupacyone
They leue myche of here deuocyone.
Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests (E. E. T. S.), l. 1066.

II. a. Of or pertaining to a working-day or working-days.

Allow me my friends, my freedom, my rough companions, in their work-day clothes. Thackeray, Philip, vi.

worked-off (wėrkt'ôf'), a. In printing, noting a form of type from which a required edition has been printed.

worker (wėr'kėr), n. [< ME. worker*, worcher; < work + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which works: a laborer; a toiler; a performer; a doer.

False apostles, deceitful workers. 2 Cor. xi. 13.

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

With co-partnership between employer and employed, the worker would feel he was more nearly the equal of the capitalist. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 615.

2. In entom., the neuter or undeveloped female of various social hymenopterous and a few other insects, as bees, ants, and termites, which collects pollen, makes honey, builds or fabricates cells or a nest, stores up food, cares for the young, herds and milks the aphids kept as cows, and performs other services for the community of which it is a member. Among bees the worker is distinguished from the queen and the drone, or the perfect female and male. Among ants certain of the workers are specialized and specified as soldiers, these make war and capture slaves. See cuts under Apidæ, Atta, Monomorium Pharaonis, and umbrella-ant.

3†. Maker; creator.

And therfor in the worcher was the vyce,
And in the covetour that was so nyce.
Chaucer, Complaint of Mars, l. 261.

4. In a carding-machine, one of the urchins, or small card-covered cylinders.—5. A leather-workers' two-handled knife, used in scraping hides.

worker-ant (wer'kėr-ant), n. A working ant. See worker, 2.

worker-bee (wer'kėr-bē), n. A working bee. See worker, 2.

worker-bobbin (wėr'kėr-bob'in), n. In lace-making, one of the bobbins that are kept passing from side to side, as distinguished from a hanger-bobbin, the thread of which is left stationary while the other threads pass over and under it.

worker-cell (wėr'ker-sel), n. One of the cells of a honeycomb destined for the larva of a worker-bee. Eggs are laid in these first, afterward in the drone cells and queen-cells.

workfellow (wėrk'fel'ō), n. One engaged in the same work with another. Rom. xvi. 21.

work-folk, work-folks (wėrk'fok, wėrk'foks), n. pl. Persons engaged in manual labor; workpeople.

Oversee my work folks,
And at the week's end pay them all their wages.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, ii. 1.

workful (wėrk'ful), a. [< ME. workful; < work + -ful.] Full of activity and work; laborious; industrious. [Rare.]

You saw nothing in Coketown but what was severely workful. Dickens, Hard Times, I. 5.

workgirl (wėrk'gėrl), n. A girl or young woman who works or is engaged in some useful manual employment.

There are men and women working perpetually for every other possible class, but none for the workgirl.
Nineteenth Century, XXII. 851.

In the establishment were seated three hundred workgirls.
Lancet, 1888, II. 951.

work-holder (wėrk'hōl'dėr), n. A device for holding a fabric in a convenient position for needlework. It consists usually of spring jaws for holding the material, and a clamp for securing the holder to the edge of a table. Compare sewing-hand.

workhouse (wėrk'hous), n. [< late ME. werke house, < AS. wġorc hus; as work + *house*1, n.] 1. A house in which work is carried on; a manufactory.

Protogenes . . . had his workhouse in a garden out of town. Ingram, Obs. on Dufresnoy's Art of Painting.

But, lord of, that which I most surprised me in the Louvre was the Attelier or Work house of Monsieur Gerardon, he that made Cardinal Richelieu's Tomb, and the Statua Equestria designed for the Place de Vendosme.
Lister, Journey to Paris, p. 43.

2. A house in which able-bodied paupers are compelled to work; a poorhouse. Under the old poor laws of England there was a workhouse in each parish pertaking of the character of a bridewell, where beggars, vagrant, and idle people were set to work and supplied with food and clothing, or what is termed indoor relief. Some workhouses were used as places of confinement for rogues and vagabonds who were there confined and compelled to labor, whilst others were large almshouses for the maintenance and support of the poor. In the United States the workhouses or poorhouses are sometimes under the charge of the county, sometimes under that of the town or township.

Our laws have wisely determin'd that Work houses are the best Hospitals for the Poor who are able to help themselves. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. viii.

A tailor who has amassed a million suffers an old friend and benefactor to die in a work house and cannot be questioned before any tribunal.
Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

This poor old shaking body has to lay herself down every night in her workhouse bed by the side of some other old woman with whom she may or may not agree.
Thackeray, On some Carp at Saint-Ferjeux.

workhouse-sheeting (wėrk'hous-shē'ting), n. Stout twilled cotton cloth, used for the roughest service, and occasionally as a ground for embroidery.

working (wėr'king), n. [< ME. werking, werkynge, warkynge, worchinge, verbal n. of work, v.] 1. Action; operation: as, the workings of fancy.

Thei ben square and pointed of here owne kynde, bothe aboven and benethen with outen werchinge of manne hond. Mandeville, Travels, p. 186.

For mankind they say a Woman was made first, which by the working of one of the gods conceived and brought forth children. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 95.

The working of my own mind is the general entertainment of my life. Steele, Spectator, No. 4.

The proposition does not strike one, on the contrary, it seems to run opposite to the natural workings of causes and effects. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, VIII. 5.

The head which owns this bounteous fall of hazel curls is an excellent little thinking machine, most accurate in its workings. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxxv.

2. Method of operation; doing.

At his working nas but fraude and deceit.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 866.

3. Fermentation: as, the working of yeast.—4. pl. The parts of a mine, quarry, or open-work in which, or near which, mining or quarrying is actually being carried on. The abandoned portions of a mine are generally designated as 'old workings,' and in Cornwall as the 'old man.'

The men hurried from different parts of the workings to be out of the way of an impending blast.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, i.

Close to the mouth of the kennet, gravel has been extracted for many years, as shown by the old workings.
Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLVI. 580.

5. The process which goes on in water when it blossoms. See work, v. i., 8. Batch-working, in teleg., a system of working in which every station in turn sends several (usually five or more) messages at a time, before giving place to another station. Closed-circuit working, that method of operating telegraph-lines in which the battery circuit is always closed throughout the line, except when broken by the operation of the sending key during the transmission of messages. Double-current working. See double. Line-current working, that method of operation in which the receiving instruments on a telegraph circuit are worked directly, without the intervention of a relay. Open-circuit working, that method of operating a telegraph circuit in which the battery is not in contact with the line between messages. Open working, same as open-work, 1. Single working, in teleg., the sending of messages in one direction only at one time. Up-and-down working, on a telegraph-circuit, the transmission of messages alternately between stations at the opposite ends of a line.

working (wer'king), p. a. [Ppr. of work, v.] 1. Active; busy.

I know not her intent, but this I know,
He has a working brain, is minister
To all my lady's counsels.
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, iii. 2.

He was . . . a middle stature, strong sett, curled haire; a very working head, in so much that, walking and meditating before dinner, he would eate up a penny loafe, not knowing that he did it. Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Fuller).

2. Engaged in physical toil or manual labor as a means of livelihood, laboring: as, working people. Compare working man. - 3. Connected with the carrying on of some undertaking or business: as, working expenses.

working-beam (wėr'king bem), n. In mach. See beam, 2 (a).

working-class (wer'king klas), n. A collective name for those who earn their bread by manual labor, such as mechanics and laborers; generally used in the plural.

working-day (wer'king dā), n. and a. I. n. 1. Any day on which work is ordinarily performed, as distinguished from Sundays and holidays.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?
Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days, your grace is too costly to wear every day.
Shak., Much Ado, II. 1. 341.

2. That part of the day which is devoted or allotted to work or labor; the period each day in which work is actually carried on: as, a working day of eight hours.

II. a. Relating to days on which work is done, as opposed to Sundays and holidays; hence, plodding; laborious.

O, how full of briers is this working-day world!
Shak., As you Like It, I. 3. 12.

working-drawing (wer'king-drâ'ing), n. A drawing or plan, as of the whole or part of a structure or machine, drawn to a specified scale, and in such detail as to form a guide for the construction of the object represented.

working-face (wer'king-fās), n. See face, 1 (a).

working-house (wer'king hous), n. A workshop; a factory.

In the quick forge and working-house of thought.
Shak., Hen. V., v., Prol., l. 23.

working-man (wer'king-man), n. A laboring man; one who earns his living by manual labor.

Working men's party, any political party organized in the interests of working men. Such parties are also often called labor reform parties.

working-out (wėr'king-out'), n. In music, that section of a work or movement which follows the exposition of the themes and precedes their recapitulation, and which is devoted to the development of fragments, or modifications of the m, in a comparatively free and unsystematic way.

working-party (wėr'king-pär"ti), n. A party of soldiers told off for mechanical or manual work, as in the repair of fortifications, or the building of a causeway or a bridge.

working-plan (wėr'king-plan), n. Same as working-drawing.

working-point (wėr'king point), n. In mach., that part of a machine at which the effect required is produced.

working-rod (wer'king rod), n. Same as pontil.

work-lead (wėrk'led), n. [Tr. G. werkblei.] In metal., the lead as it comes from the smelting-furnace, still containing a small percentage of impurities (to be removed by softening or refining) and the silver which the ore originally contained, and which is separated from the lead by pattinsonization (see Pattinson process, under process) and subsequent expellation. The word is the literal translation of German Werkblei designating what is called in English (by Percy and others) blast-furnace lead.

workless (wėrk'les), a. [< work + -less.] 1. Without work; not working; unemployed: as, a lazy, workless fellow. [Rare.] 2. Without works; not carried out or exemplified in works.

Vdle workleuse faith. Sir T. More, Works, p. 441.

workman (wėrk'mun), n.; pl. workmen (-men). [< ME. werkman, werkmon, wercmon, wcarcman, < AS. (ONorth.) wercmonn (= Icel. verkmathr), workman; as work + man.] 1. A man who is employed in manual labor, whether skilled or unskilled; a worker; a toiler; specifically, an artificer, mechanic, or artisan; a handicrafts man.

Worthi is the werkmon his hure to haue Piers Plowman (A), B. 92.

The work of the hands of the workman with the ax
Jer. x. 3.

As a work man never weary,
And all-sufficient, he his works doth carry
To happy end
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 4.

As for matter to build with, they want none, no more doe they workmen, many excellent in that Art, and those Christians, being inticed from all parts . . . to work in their Arsenals Sandys, Travailes, p. 40.

2. In general, one who works in any department of physical or mental labor; specifically, a worker considered with especial reference to his manner of or skill in work — that is, workmanship. Employers and Workmen Act. See employer. Master workman. See master. Workman's candlestick, a simple candlestick consisting of a bent conical stem pointed at one end to be driven into a wall, and supporting at the other end a nozle or socket.

workmanlike (wėrk'man-lik), a. [< workman + -like.] Like or worthy of a skilful workman; hence, well-executed; skilful.

workmanlike (wėrk'man-lik), adv. [< workmanlike, a.] In a workmanlike manner.

They . . . doe agge them flesh, both legges, armes, and bodies, as workemanlike as a Jerkinmaker with vs jobketh a Jerkin. Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 401.

workmanly (wėrk'man-li), a. [< workman + *-ly*1.] Skilful; workmanlike.

In most of the houses the roofes are covered with fine gold, in a very workemanly sort Webbe, Travels (ed. Arber), p. 58.

workmanly (wėrk'man-li), adv. [< workmanly, a.] In a skilful manner; in a manner worthy of a competent workman.

The chappel [in Calicut] is on every side full of painted deuyls, and in euery corner thereof with a deuyll made of copper, and that workemanly modeled that he seemeth like flaming fire, miserably consuming the soul . . . of men
R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster's First Books of America, ed. Arber, p. 170.

And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.
Shak., T. of the S., Ind., II. 60.

A notable great Cup of silver curiously wrought, with verses graven in it, expressing the historie workmanly set out in the same Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 377.

workmanship (wėrk'man-ship), n. [< ME. werkmanshipe; < workman + -ship.] 1. The art or skill of a workman, as, his workmanship was of a high order. 2. The execution or finish shown in anything made; the quality of anything with reference to the excellence or the reverse in its construction or execution.

A gorgeous girdle, curiously embost
With pearle and precious stone worth many a marke,
Yet did the workmanship farre passe the cost.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. iv. 15.

The workmanship [of sculptures of Wells Cathedral] is comparatively coarse and sketchy, and far removed from the delicacy of French carving.
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 287.

3. The product or result of the labor and skill of a workman.

The mysterie of the waxe, the only workemanship of the honie Bee, was left to lighten the Catholike Church.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 352.

What more reasonable than to think that, if we be God's workmanship he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures? Tillotson.

workmaster (wėrk'mas'tėr), n. 1. The author, designer, producer, or performer of a work, especially of a great or important work; a skilled workman or artificer.

What time this worlds great Workmaister did cast
To make al things such as we now behold
Spenser, In Honour of Beautie, l. 29.

Thy desire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great Work-master, leads to no excess.
Milton, P. L., III. 696.

2. A superintendent of work.

A rich work-master,
That never pays till Saturday night!
Middleton, Women Beware Women, I. 1.

work-mistress (wėrk'mis'tres), n. A female author, designer, producer, or performer of any work.

Dame Nature (the mother and workemistresse of all things). Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxxi. 1. (Richardson.) work-people (wėrk'pe pl), n. People engaged in work or labor, particularly in manual labor.

The back-door, where servants and work-people were usually admitted Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xiii.

work-roller (wėrk'rō'lėr), n. In a knitting-machine, a weighted roller which winds up the work automatically as it is completed. E. H. Knight.

workroom (wėrk'rom), n. A room for working in, especially one in which women are employed.

workshop (wėrk'shop), n. A shop or building where a workman, mechanic, or artificer, or a number of such, carry on their work; a place where any work or handicraft is carried on.

Supreme beauty is seldom found in cottages or work shops Johnson, Journ. to Western Isles, Oatig.

Workshop Regulation Act, a British statute of 1867 (30 and 31 Vict., c. 146) which regulates the hours of labor of women and children.

worksome (wėrk'sum), a. [< work + -some.] Industrious, diligent.

So through seas of blood, to Equality, Frugality, worksome Blessedness, Fraternity.
Carlyle, French Rev., III. vi. 6.

work-stone (wėrk'stōn), n. In metal., in the ore-hearth (used in smelting lead ores), a flat plate of cast-iron connected with and sloping down from the front edge of the hearth-bottom. It has a raised border, and a groove running down the middle from the upper to the lower edge, down which the lead is conducted as it flows from the hearth-bottom during the reduction of the ore. Work stones and hearth bottoms are sometimes cast in one piece, and sometimes separately. See ore hearth.

work-table (wėrk'ta bl), n. A table or stand containing small drawers, or, in some cases, a receptacle like a work-box covered by a movable top, the whole intended for the use of women engaged in sewing. A common form of work table of the last century and later had a large bag hanging from, and forming the bottom of, the lowermost drawer, or, in other words, a large work-bag made accessible by pulling out the under drawer.

workwoman (wėrk'wum'an), n.; pl. workwomen (-wim'en). A woman who does manual labor for a living; not usually applied to brain-workers. See workman.

workyday† (wėrk'i-da), n. and a. An obsolete form of workaday.

world (wėrld), n. [< ME. world, worlde, warld, werld, weorld, worlt, worold, wereld, weoreld, weorold, also wrld, werd, werde, etc., < AS. world, woruld, weorald, weorold, weorulld = OS. werold = D. wereld = MLG. werld, werld = OHG. weralt, MHG. werelt, welt, velt, G. welt = Icel. verold = Sw. verld = Dan. verden (for verdon* (Goth. not recorded)), the world, the generation of men; an orig. compound, whose elements, later merged in one and lost from view (the word, owing to the unusual conjunction of consonants leaving undergone different contractions, is represented by the ME. word, etc., and the G. welt), are represented by AS. wer (= Goth. wair), man, + yldo, age (< eald, old): see *were*1 and old, old. The word has taken on extended applications; the sense of 'the earth' is not found in AS.] 1†. An age of man; a generation.

If any Prince or Romane Consul did chaunce to make any lawe either necessarie or very profitable for the people, they did vse for custome to intitle that law by the name of him that did inuent and ordeine the same, for that in the worldes to come it might be knowen who was the author therof.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 18.

2. Any state or sphere of existence; any wide scene of life or action: as, a future world; the world to come.

Yet tell me this, will there be no slanders,
No jealousies in the other world; no ill there?
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, iv. 3.

He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 176.

3. The system of created things; all created existences; the whole creation; the created universe: a use dating from the time when the earth was supposed to be the center and sum of everything.

Par aventure ge haue nogt herde
How oure ladi went out of this worde.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 75.

For god that al hy-gan in gynnynge of the worlde,
Ferde furst as a fust, and gut is, as ich leyue.
Piers Plowman (C), xx. 112.

Ffor all the gold that euer may bee,
Ffro hethyn unto the worldis ende,
Thou bese neuer betrayede for mee.
Thomas of Erseldoune (Child's Ballads, I. 107).

All the world's a stage. Shak., As you Like It, ii. 7. 139.

World is the great collective idea of all bodies whatever.
Locke.

Shaftesbury conceived the relation of God to the World as that of the soul to the body.
Fowler, Shaftesbury and Hutcheson, p. 106.

4. The inhabitants of the earth and their concerns or interests; the human race; humanity; mankind; also, a certain section, division, or class of men considered as a separate or independent whole; a number or body of people united by a common faith, cause, aim, object, pursuit, or the like: as, the religious world; the Christian world; the heathen world; the political, literary, or scientific world; the world of letters.

Then saide the yew that al this herde,
"Criste then are' author of this worde."
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 113.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 175.

Philaster. You are abus'd and so is she, and I.
Dion. How you my lord?
Philaster. Why, all the world's abus'd
In an unjust report. Beau. and Fl., Philaster, III. 1.

I have not loved the world, nor the world me.
Byron, Childe Harold, III. 113.

There is a constant demand in the fashionable world for novelty Irving.

Ye think the rustic cackle of your bourg
The murmur of the world Tennyson, Geraint.

5. The earth and all created things upon it; the terraqueous globe.

Men may well preven be experience and sotyle compassement of Wytte that, 3if a man fond passages be Schippes that wolde go to serchen the World, men myghte go be Schippe alle aboute the World, and aboven and benethen Mandeville, Travels, p. 180.

So he the world
Built on circumfluous waters calm
Milton, P. L., vii. 269.

6. That which pertains to the earth or to this present state of existence merely; secular affairs or interests; the concerns of this life, as opposed to those of the future life.

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 1 John ii. 15.

The world is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers.
Wordsworth, Misc. Sonnets, I. 33.

7. A particular part of the globe; a large portion or division of the globe: as, the Old World (the eastern hemisphere); the New World (the western hemisphere); the Roman world.

Europe knows,
And all the western world, what persecution
Hath rag'd in malice against us.
Ford, Perkin Warbeck, ii. 1.

8. Public life; life in society; intercourse with one's fellows.

Hence banished is banish'd from the world.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 3. 19.

Happy is she that from the world retires. Waller.

9. Any celestial orb or planetary body, especially considered as peopled, and as the scene of interests kindred to those of mankind.

But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the wars of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds.
Addison, Cato, v. 1.

The lucid interspace of world and world.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

10. The part of mankind that is devoted to the affairs of this life or interested in secular affairs; those concerned especially for the interests and pleasures of the present state of existence; the unregenerate or ungodly part of humanity.

I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me. John xvii. 9.

11. The ways and manners of men; the practices of life; the habits, customs, and usages of society; social life in its various aspects.

'Tis not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world. Shak., M. W. of W., II. 2. 183.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better (To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls, and plays)
Swift, Cadenus and Vanessa.

Mr. Beauclerk was very entertaining this day, and told us a number of short stories in a lively, elegant manner, and with that air of the world which has I know not what impressive effect. Boswell, Johnson, an. 1778.

He had seen the world, and mingled with society, yet retained the strong eccentricities of a man who had lived much alone. Irving.

12. A course of life; a career.

Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe.

13. The current of events, especially as affecting the individual; circumstances or affairs, particularly those closely relating to one's self.

How goes the world with thee?
Shak., Rich. III., III. 2. 98.

14. Any system of more or less complexity or development, characterized by harmony, order, or completeness; anything forming an organic whole; a microcosm.

Man is one world, and hath Another to attend him.
G. Herbert, The Temple, Man.

Dreams, books are each a world, and books, we know,
Are a substantial world, both pure and good.
Wordsworth, Personal Talk.

15. Sphere; domain; province; region; realm, as, the world of dreams; the world of art.

How it [moral philosophy] extendeth it selfe out of the limits of a mans own little world to the government of families, and maintayning of publique societies. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 81.

Will one beam be less intense,
When thy peculiar differences
Is cancell'd in the world of sense?
Tennyson, Two Voices.

16. A great number or quantity; as, a world of people; a world of words; a world of meaning. Compare a world, below.

He holt aboute him alwey, out of drede,
A world of folk, as com him wel of kynde,
The fresheste and the beste he konde fynde.
Chaucer, Troilus, III. 1751.

I can go no where
Without a world of offerings to my excellence.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 3.

There must a world of ceremonies pass.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, I. 1.

Being lead through the Synagogue into a privat house, I found a world of people in a chamber.
Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 15, 1644.

It cost me a world of woe. Tennyson, The Grandmother.

17. Used in emphatic phrases expressing wonder, astonishment, perplexity, etc.: as, what in the world am I to do? how in all the world did you get there? — Above the world. See above. — All the world. (a) Everybody.

All the worldis anon weneden hym ageyn.
Men, wemen, children, of eech side moste and leste.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 4858.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd.
Shak., Lear, ii. 2. 100.

(b) The sum of what the world contains; everything: as, she is all the world to me. Compare the whole world, below.

For evil werk that he wrought sethithe I wol it hold,
he wold it were not other al the world to haue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4457.

All the world and his wife, everybody: sometimes, everybody worth speaking about; also, an ill-assorted mass. [Humorous.]

Miss ——. Pray, madam, who were the company?
Lady Smart. Why, there was all the world and his wife.
Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

All the world and his wife and daughter leave cards.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, I. 17.

All the world to a hand-saw! See hand-saw. — Archetypal world. See archetypal. — A world, a great deal: used especially with a comparative force.

'Tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew.
Shak., T. of the S., II. 1. 313.

In the mills the boys are dressed in trousers a world too big, father's or grandfather's lopped off at the knees and all in tatters. The Century, XLI. 690.

Axis of the world. See axis. — Betypal world. See betypal. — External world. See external. — For all the world, from every point of view; exactly; precisely; entirely.

For al the world swiche a wolf as we here seigen,
It semeth rijt that selue bi semblant & bi hewe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3501.

He was for all the world, like a forked radish.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 2. 334.

Man of the world. See man. — Noetic world. See noetic. — Prince of this world. See prince. — The New World. See new. — The Old World, the eastern hemisphere comprising Europe, Asia, and Africa: so called from being that in which civilization first arose. — The other world. See other. — The whole world, the sum of what the world contains: the representative or equivalent of all worldly possessions: as, to gain the whole world. — The world's end, the remotest part of the earth; the most distant regions. — To carry the world before one. See carry. — To go to the world, to get married.

Thus goes every one to the world but I . . . I may sit in a corner and cry heigh-ho for a husband.
Shak., Much Ado, II. 1. 331.

Hence the expression woman of the world (that is, a married woman): used by Audrey in "As you Like It."

I hope it is no dishonest desire to desire to be a woman of the world.
Shak., As you Like It, v. 3. 5.

To make a noise in the world. See noise. — Woman of the world. See woman. See also to go to the world, above. — World without end, to all eternity, eternally, unceasingly: also used attributively, meaning 'never-ending,' as in the quotation from Shakspere.

Nor dare I chide the world without end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you.
Shak., Sonnets, lviii.

This man . . . thinks by talking world without end to make good his integrity.
Milton.

= Syn. 5. Globe, etc. See earth.

world (werld), v. t. [< world, n.] To introduce into the world; give birth to.

Like lightening it can strike the Child in the womb and kill it ere 'tis worlded, when the Mother shall remain unhurt. Feltham, Resolves, I. 60.

worlded (wer'ded), a. Containing worlds. [Rare.]

The fires that arch this dusky dot
Your myriad worlded way. Tennyson, Epilogue.

world-hardened (werld'här'dnd), a. Hardened by the love of worldly things.

worldhood† (werld'hud), n. [< world + -hood.] A worldly possession. [Rare.]

Content yourselves with what you have already or else seek honest means whereby to increase your worldhoods.
Henry VIII. of Eng., quoted in D'Israeli's Amen. of Lit., I. 406.

world language (werld'lang'gwaj), n. A language used by or known to the civilized world.

Greek was already well versed in the two classical and four great modern world languages.
Athenæum, No. 3226, p. 756.

worldliness (werld'li-nes), n. [< ME. worldlinesse, werldlinesse < worldli + -nesse.] The state or character of being worldly; worldly conduct. Jer. Taylor.

You may call your way of thinking prudence. I call it sinful worldliness. Thackeray, Philip, xviii.

worldling (werld'ling), n. [< world + *-ling*¹.] One who is worldly; one devoted to the affairs and interests of this life.

A fourie for the world and worldlings base!
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 3. 103.

Worldlings, whose whimpering folly holds the losses of their pleasure, health, and wealth such crosses.
Quarles, Emblems, i., Epig. 6.

worldly (werld'li), a. [< ME. worldly, worldlich, worldlike, werldlike, < AS. weorldlic (as world + -lic).] 1. Of or pertaining to the world or the present state of existence; temporal; earthly.

With all my worldly goods I thee endow.
Book of Common Prayer, Solemnization of Matrimony.

Keep us you here in rest
Secure from worldly cares and mishaps.
Shak., Tit. And., I. 1. 12.

2. Secular: opposed to monastic.

May men trade religion
In worldly habits here.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 6776.

3. Devoted to, interested in, or connected with this present life, and its cares, advantages, or pleasures: in the exclusion of those of a future life: devoted to temporal benefit or enjoyment merely; earthly, as opposed to heavenly or spiritual; carnal; sordid: vile: as, worldly hosts, cares, affections, pleasures, worldly men.

To live secure Worldly or Heavenly. Milton, P. L., x. 808.

Interest, pride and worldly honour. Dryden, Lucretius.

= Syn. 1. Mundane, terrestrial, sublunary. 1 and 3. Worldly, Secular, Temporal, Earthly, Unspiritual, Carnal. Worldly means of the world in fact or in spirit, in distinction from that which is above the world: as applying to mind, it indicates a pleasure in the things that belong to the external life and a disregard of spiritual or even intellectual pleasures: it is opposed to spiritual, expressing positively what unspiritual expresses negatively. Secular is opposed to sacred or to ecclesiastical: as, there are six secular days in the week; the secular arm. Secular and temporal are rarely used in a bad sense. Temporal is opposed to spiritual or eternal: as, lords temporal; merely temporal concerns. Earthly has, like worldly, the sense of mundane, but in the sense of unspirituality it suggests more of grossness or groveling, a thought which is carried still further by earthy, although earthy is not often used in that sense. Carnal suggests that which belongs to the gratification of the animal nature. It ranges from the merely unspiritual to the sensual. See sensual and temporal.

worldly (werld'li), adv. [< ME. worldliche, wordliche, werdliche, wrouldliche, < worldly, a.] In a worldly manner; with relation to this life.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton, P. L., xii. 568.

worldly-minded (werld'li-min'ded), a. Having a worldly mind; devoted to temporal pleasures and concerns.

worldly-mindedness (werld'li-min'ded-nes), n. The state or character of being worldly-minded. Bp. Sanderson.

worldly-wise (werld'li-wīz'), a. Wise with reference to the affairs of this world.

You then beheld things not as a worldly wise man, but as a man of God. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 87.

world-old (wėrld'ōld'), a. As old as the world; very old; reaching back through the ages.

world-richet, n. [ME., < world + riche.] The kingdom of this world; the earth.

For, as of trouthe, is ther noon her liche
Of al the women in this worlde-riche.
Chaucer, Anelida and Arcite, l. 77.

world-wearied (werld'wēr'id), a. Tired of the world.

world-wide (wėrld'wīd'), a. As wide as the world; extending over or pervading all the world; widely spread: as, world-wide fame; speedily, in comp., cosmopolitan; noting such habitat, or the fact of such distribution, but not the species or individuals themselves which inhabit all parts of the world.

worm (wėrm), n. [< ME. worm, wurm, wirm, werm, < AS. wurm, a worm, snake, dragon, = OS. wurm = D. LG. worm = OHG. MHG. G. wurm, worm, insect, snake, dragon, = Icel. ormr (for vormr*) = Sw. Dan. orm (for vorm*) = Goth. waurms, a worm, = L. vermis, cf. Gr. φόμις, φόνος (σφόμις*), a wood-worm; cf. Lith. kirmis, worm, = OBulg. chruvi = Russ. chervi, worm, Olr. cruim, a worm: cf. Ir. cromh, a maggot, W. pryf, worm), = Skt. krimi, worm (whence all L. crimson, carmine, q. v.). From the L. vermis are ult. E. vermin, vermicide, vermeil, etc.] 1. In popular language, any small creeping creature whose body consists of a number of movable joints or rings, and whose limbs are very short or entirely wanting; any vermiform animal.

Nowe pike outt mouthes, atteroppes, wormys
And butterflie whoos thonie engendryng worme is.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 138.

(a) Any annelid, as the earthworm, lobworm or lugworm, leech, etc. See the distinctive names.

Worms have played a more important part in the history of the world than most persons would at first suppose. In almost all humid countries they are extraordinarily numerous, and for their size possess great muscular power. Darwin, Vegetable Mould, p. 305.

(b) Any helminth whether parasitic or not, as a flat worm, brain worm, fluke worm, roundworm, tapeworm, pinworm, hairworm, threadworm, spoonworm, lungworm, whipworm, guinea worm, etc.: as, such words, and rinderpest, (c) One of several long slender vermiform echinoderms, as some holothurians and related forms. See Vermiformia, and cuts under Synapta and trepang. (d) Some small or slender acarine or mite, or its larva, as the worm found in sebaceous follicles. See comedo and Demodex. (e) A myriapod, a centiped or millepod: as, gally-worm. (f) The larva, grub, maggot, or caterpillar of many true hexapod insects: as, bag-worm, boll worm, book worm, wire-worm; rod-worm, snake-worm, joint-worm, silkworm, etc.: see the compounded and otherwise qualified names.

The larvæ of the lepidoptera are frequently but improperly so called. Indeed when worms are spoken of by the ordinary beekeeper, the larvæ of the bee-moth are almost always meant. Phin, Bee-Culture, p. 78.

(g) The adult of some true lizards whose body is long and flexible, as a glass-worm. (h) One of several long slender newts eyed with short legs or none which attach to or borrow in other animals, bur into wood, etc., as some kinds of hellbender, certain amphiumas, the wood shrimp, etc. (i) One of some vermiform mollusks as a teredo or shipworm or a worm-shell. See cuts under shipworm and Vermetus. (j) A small lizard with rudimentary legs or none as a blind-worm or slow-worm. (k) A serpent, a snake, a dragon. For a modern instance in composition, see worm-snake, 1.

He [Satan] . . .
Wents in lyk a serpent and tolde me a tale
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 321.

Hast thou the pretty worm of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?
Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 243.

Here will be subject for my snakes and me.
Hang to my neck and wrists, my loving worms.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, Ind.

2. Technically, in zoöl., any member of the Linnean class Vermes, or of the modern phylum or subkingdom of the same name; any turbellarian, planarian, nemertean, platyhelminth, nemathelminth, trematoid, cestoid, nematoid, chætognath, gephyrean, annelid, etc. By some authorities the rotifers and polyzoans are brought under this head. See Vermes, and the various words noted in 1 (a), (b), above.

3. A person or human being likened to a worm as an object of scorn, disgust, contempt, pity, and the like: as, man is but a worm of the dust.

Vile worm, thou wast o'erlooked even in thy birth
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 87.

Hence—4. Figuratively, of inanimate objects, something that slowly, silently, or stealthily eats, makes, or works its way, to the pain, injury, or destruction of the object affected: used emblematically or symbolically. (a) Corruption, decay, or dissolution; death itself.

Thus chides she Death—
"Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean,
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath?"
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 933.

My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone!
Byron, On his Thirty-sixth Birthday.

(b) An uneasy conscience; the gnawing or torment of conscience; remorse.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul!
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3. 222.

Beatrice. The true value,
Tak 't of my truth, is near three hundred ducats.
De Flores. 'Twill hardly buy a capcase for one's conscience though,
To keep it from the worm.
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, iii. 4.

5. In anat., some vermiform part or process of an animal's body. (a) The vermis of the cerebellum. See vermis. (b) The vermiform cartilage of a dog's tongue. See lytta.

There is one easy artifice
That seldom has been known to miss,
To snarl at all things, right or wrong,
Like a mad dog that has a worm in 's tongue.
S. Butler.

6. Anything thought to resemble a worm in appearance, or in having a spiral or curved movement. (a) The spiral part of a corkscrew or of a wood-screw. Also wormer. (b) A rod having at the end a double spiral as if two corkscrews were combined, used in withdrawing the cartridge or wad from the barrel of a gun. Also wormer. Compare wadhook. (c) The spiral pipe in a still, through which the vapor to be condensed is conducted. See distillation, 2, and cut under petroleum still. (d) A spiral tool with a sharp point, used to bore soft rock. E. H. Knight.

7. pl. Any disease or disorder arising from the presence of parasitic worms in the intestines or other tissues; helminthiasis. Clover-hay worm. See clover. Cystic worm. See cysticl. Double worms, the genus Diplozoon. See cut under syzygy. Gotthard worm, Dochmius intestinalis, so called because of the large number of cases of anemia among the workers on the St. Gotthard tunnel, caused by the presence of this parasite. See tunnel disease. Idle worms. See idle. Intestinal worm. (a) A worm having itself an intestine, an enteric or enterate worm, a cavitary. (b) A worm parasitic in the intestine of another animal, as a tapeworm, threadworm, pinworm, etc. Leaf-bearing worms. See Phyllobranchiæ. Muga worm, a kind of silkworm, Antheræa assama.

Silk cloth is made from the cocoons of the muga worm.
Encyc. Brit., XIV. 225.

Palm worm, the larva of one of the palm weevils, Rhynchophorus (Calandra) palmarum, and doubtless of any similar species, as R. (C.) cruentatus, found in the heart of the cabbage-palm. It is a large white worm, often eaten in South America, the West Indies, and elsewhere, known as the gru-gru, and by the French name ver palmiste. It is said to taste like almonds. Parenchymatous worms, the Parenchymata. Plaited worms, the Aspidogasterida. Rack-and-worm gear. See rack, 6. Reshta worm, the guinea worm, Dracunculus (or Filaria) medinensis. See cut under Filaria. Ringed, star-mouthed, tailed, vesicular worms. See the adjectives. White-rag worm. Same as lury. Worm gearing. Same as worm-gear.

worm (wėrm), v. [= D. wurmen, torment oneself, vex oneself, worry, work hard; cf. G. würmen, crawl, wriggle, be lost in thought, also tr. tease, grieve, wurmen, worm, worry; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To move like a worm; go or advance as a worm; crawl or creep sinuously; wriggle; writhe; squirm: as, to worm along.

"I little like that smoke, which you may see worming up along the rock above the canoe," interrupted the . . . scout. J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xx.

They wormed through the grass to within forty or fifty feet of the rifle-pits. The Century, XXIX. 189.

2. To work or act slowly, stealthily, or secretly.

When debates and fretting jealousies
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded.
G. Herbert, The Temple, Church-Rents and Schisms.

II. trans. 1. To effect by slow, stealthy, or insidious means: as, to worm one's way along. In this sense also, reflexively, of slow, insidious, or insinuating progress or action: as, he wormed himself into favor.

I was endeavoring to settle some points of the greatest consequence, and had wormed myself pretty well into him, when his under secretary came in—and interrupted all my scheme. Swift, Journal to Stella, Aug. 1, 1711.

Specifically—2. To extract, remove, expel, or take away by underhand means persistently continued: generally with out or from.

It is a riddle to me how this story of oracles hath not wormed out of the world that doubtful conceit of spirits and witches. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 30.

They find themselves wormed out of all power. Swift.

Who've loosed a guinea from a miser's chest,
And wormed his secret from a traitor's breast.
Crabbe, Works, I. 196.

3†. To subject to a stealthy process of ferreting out one's secrets or private affairs; play the spy upon.

I'll teach you to worm me, good lady sister,
And peep into my privacies, to suspect me.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, iv. 4.

4. To free from worms.

Wormes in the earth also there are, but too many, so that, to keepe them from destroying their Corne and Tobacco they are forced to worme them eury morning, which is a great labour, else all would be destroyed.
Capt. John Smith, Works, II. 116.

Another strange gardener . . . challenges as his right the binding or unbinding of every flowyr, the clipping of every bush, the weeding and worming of every bed, both in that and all other gardens thereabout.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst., vi.

5. To remove the charge, etc., from, as a gun, by means of a worm. See worm, n., 6 (b).—6. To remove the worm or lytta from the tongue of, as of a dog: supposed to be a precaution against madness.

Is she grown mad now?
Is her blood set so high? I'll have her madded!
I'll have her worm'd! Fletcher, Pilgrim, iv. 1.

I made it up with him by tying a collar of rainbow ribband about his neck for a token that he is never to be wormed any more. H. Walpole, To Mann, Oct. 3, 1743.

The men repaired her ladyship's cracked china, and assisted the laird in his sporting parties, wormed his dogs, and cut the ears of his terrier puppies. Scott.

7. To remove the beard of (an oyster or mussel).—8†. To give a spiral form to; put a thread on.

Grow'n more cunning, hollow things he formeth,
He hatcheth Files, and winding Vices wormeth,
He shapeth Shears, and then a Saw indenta,
Then beats a Blade, and then a Lock invents.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, The Handy-Crafts.

9. Naut., to wind rope-yarns, spun yarn, or similar material spirally round (a rope) so as to fill the spaces between the strands and render the surface smooth for parceling and serving. See cuts under parceling and serving-mallet.

wormal (wôr'mal), n. Same as warble[3].

worm-bark (werm'bärk), n. See cabbage-tree, 2, and Andira.

worm-burrow (wėrm'bur'ō), n. A fossil worm-cast; a scolite or helmintholite.

worm-cast (wėrm'kast), n. 1. The cylindrical casting of a worm; the slender tubular mass of earth voided by the common earthworm after digestion.

The worm-casts which so much annoy the gardener by deforming his smooth-shaven lawns.
R. P. Wright, Animal Life, p. 375.

2. The fossil cast, mold, or track of a worm or some vermiform creature; a helminthite or helmintholite; a worm-burrow.

worm-cod (wėrm'kod), n. See cod[2].

worm-colic (wėrm'kol'ik), n. Intestinal pain due to the presence of worms.

worm-dye (wėrm'dī), n. Same as vermeil.

worm-eat (wėrm'ēt), v. t. [A back-formation, from worm-eaten.] 1. To eat into, gnaw, bore, or perforate, as is done by various worms, grubs, maggots, etc.; eat a way through or into. See worm-eaten.—2. To affect injuriously, impair, or destroy by any slow, insidious process.

Leave off these vanities which worm-eat your brain.
Jarvis, tr. of Don Quixote, II. iv. 10. (Davies.)

worm-eat† (wėrm'et), p. a. Same as worm-eaten.

Worm-eat stories of old times. Bp. Hall, Satires, I. iv. 6.

worm-eaten (wėrm'ē'tn), p. a. [< ME. "wormeten, wormethe; < worm + eaten.] 1. Eaten into by a worm; gnawed, bored, or perforated by worms of any kind; abounding in wormholes; wormy: as, worm-eaten timber, fabrics, fruit.

We see the corne blasted, trees stricken downe, houses fall, woode wormeaten, cloath devoured with mothes, cattell doe ende, and menne doe die.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 448.

Concave as a covered goblet or a worm-eaten nut.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 4. 37.

2. Old, worn-out, or worthless, as if eaten by worms. Raleigh, Hist. World (ed. 1687), p. 66.

worm-eatenness (wėrm'ē'tn-nes), n. The state of being worm-eaten, or as if worm-eaten; decay; rot.

worm-eater (wėrm'ē'tėr), n. A bird or other animal that habitually eats or lives upon worms; specifically, the worm-eating warbler of the United States, Helmintherus vermivorus. See worm-eating and Vermivora. Edwards; Latham.

worm-eating (wėrm'ē'ting), a. Habitually eating worms; feeding or subsisting upon worms; vermivorous; in ornith., noting a number of American warblers of the genera Helmintherus and Helminthophaga (formerly Vermivora), and specifying the worm-eater, Helmintherus vermivorus, a common species of the eastern United States.

wormed (wėrmd), a. [< worm + -ed[2].] Affected by worms; gnawed, bored, or otherwise injured by worms; worm-eaten; wormy.

Occasionally the wood [mahogany] which has been floated in tropical seas is found to be badly wormed or attacked by marine borers. Encyc. Brit., XV. 228.

wormer (wėr'mėr), n. 1. Same as worm, 6 (a) and (b).—2. An angler who fishes with worms for bait; a worm-fisher. [Colloq.]

worm-fence (wėrm'fens), n. A zigzag fence made by placing the ends of the rails at an angle upon one another; a snake-fence.

They had reached the corner of the old worm-fence where the new school mistress had reined her horse.
Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 124.

worm-fever (wėrm'fē'vėr), n. A feverish condition in children which is attributed to the presence of intestinal parasites.

worm-fisher (wėrm'fish'ėr), n. One who fishes with worms for bait.

worm-fowl† (wėrm'foul), n. pl. [< ME. wermfoul; < worm + fowl[1].] Birds which live on worms.

"I for worm-foul," seyde the lewd kokkow.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 506.

worm-gear (wėrm'gėr), n. In mach., a gear-wheel of which the teeth are so formed that they are acted on and the wheel is made to revolve by a worm or shaft on which a spiral is turned—that is, by an endless screw. See cuts under Hindley's screw (at screw), steam-engine, and odometer.

worm-grass (wėrm'gràs), n. 1. Same as pink-root, 2.—2. An old name of a species of stonecrop, Sedum album, given on account of its worm-like leaves.

wormgut (wėrm'gut), n. Same as silkworm gut. See gut, n., 4.

worm-hole (wėrm'hōl), n. The hole or track made by a worm, as in timber, fruit, etc.

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 946.

worm-holed (wėrm'hōld), a. Perforated with worm-holes.

Like sound timber wormholed and made shaky.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 212.

Wormian (wôr'mi-an), a. Of or pertaining to Olaus Worm, a Danish physician and scientist (1588–1654).—Wormian bones. See bone[1].

wormil (wôr'mil), n. Same as wormal. See warble[3].

worming-pot (wėr'ming-pot), n. In pottery, a device for placing bands, stripes, or other ornaments in color upon pottery. It consists of a vessel from which the color issues through quill-like tubes in a continuous stream as the ware is revolved in a lathe.

worm-larva (wėrm'lär'vą), n. The larva of a worm; the larval stage of one of the Vermes.

worm-like (wėrm'lik), a. Resembling a worm in shape or movement; vermiform; vermicular; spiral or spirally twisted.

wormling (wėrm'ling), n. [= Icel. ormlingr; as worm + -ling[1].] A little worm; hence, a weak, mean creature.

O dusty wormlings! dar'st thou strive and stand
With Heav'ns high Monarch? wilt thou (wretch) demand Count of his deeds?
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., The Imposture.

wormod†, n. A Middle English form of wormwood. Wyclif.

worm-oil (wėrm'oil), n. Same as wormseed-oil.

wormpipe (wėrm'pīp), n. The worm of a still.

The gas then in its passage through the worm-pipe of the condenser (which is always surrounded with cold water) is condensed. Ure, Dict., IV. 727.

worm-powder (wėrm'pou'dėr), n. A powder used for expelling worms from the intestinal canal or other open cavities of the body.

worm-punch (wėrm'punch), n. A small, rather slender punch, used by coopers for clearing out worm-holes in staves or heads of casks, for the purpose of stopping the holes with wooden plugs to prevent leaking.

worm-rack (wėrm'rak), n. A rack gearing with a worm-wheel. The teeth are set obliquely, corresponding in obliquity with the pitch of the worm. See cut under rack[1], 6.

worm-safe (wėrm'sāf), n. A locked chamber containing a hydrometer, and attached to the worm of a still in such manner that a fractional part of the liquor distilled trickles into it from the worm. The mean specific gravity of the liquor is indicated by the hydrometer.

wormseed (wėrm'sēd), n. 1. Same as santonica. See santonica and santonin.

Worme-seede [cometh] from Persia. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. i. 278.

2. The fruit of the American herb Chenopodium ambrosioides, especially var. anthelminticum, which is often reckoned a distinct species; also, the plant itself. The seed is an official as well as a popular vermifuge. It yields wormseed-oil (which see), and is also given in the form of a powder. Distinguished as American wormseed; also called Mexican tea.

3. The treacle-mustard, Erysimum cheiranthoides, or primarily its seed, which was formerly a popular vermifuge in England. Also treacle-wormseed. — American wormseed. See def. 2. — Barbary wormseed, the heads of species of Artemisia growing in Syria and Arabia, used like santonica. Levant wormseed. See santonica. — Oil of wormseed. See oil and wormseed-oil. — Spanish wormseed, a chenopodiaceous plant, Salsola (Halopeplon, Carpyrlon) tamariscifolia, or particularly its seed, which is used as an anthelmintic. — Treacle-wormseed. See def. 3.

wormseed-mustard (wėrm'sēd-mus'tärd), n. See mustard.

wormseed-oil (wėrm'sēd-oil), n. A volatile oil obtained from wormseed. It is probably without active medicinal properties.

worm-shaft (wėrm'shäft), n. The screw-threaded shaft which engages the teeth of a worm-gear or worm-wheel.

worm-shaped (wėrm'shāpt), a. Having the form of a worm; vermiform; vermicular.

worm-shell (wėrm'shel), n. A mollusk of the family Vermetidæ, or its shell; so called from the long twisted or vermiform shape of the shell. See cut under Vermetus.

worms'-meat (wėrmz'mēt), n. Food for worms; dead flesh. [Rare.]

I am dead
Already, girl; and so is she and he,
We are all worms'-meat now.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, v. 1.

worm-snake (wėrm'snāk), n. 1. A blindworm; a worm-like angiostomatous or scolecophidian snake of the suborder Typhlopoidea; a ground-snake, as Carphophis (or Celuta) amœna. — 2. Same as snakeworm.

worm-tea (wėrm'tē), n. A decoction of some plant, generally a bitter plant, used as an anthelmintic.

worm-track (wėrm'trak), n. Same as worm-cast, 2.

wormul (wėr'mul), n. Same as warble[3].

worm-wheel (wėrm'hwēl), n. A wheel which gears with an endless or tangent screw or worm, receiving or imparting motion. By this means a powerful effect with a diminished rate of motion is communicated from one revolving shaft to another. See tangent-screw (under tangent), endless screw (under endless, with cut); also bats under Hindley's screw (at screw) and under steam-engine.

wormwood (wėrm'wůd), n. [< ME. wormwod, an altered form, simulating worm + wood[1], of the earlier wermode, wermad, wormod, < AS. wermod = MD. wermoed, wermoet, wermot, wermōde, wermēde, warmōt, warmōde, etc., = OHG. werimuota, weramōte, warmuota, wormuota, MHG. wermuot, wermüete, G. wermuth (> F. vermout), wormwood; formation uncertain; appar. lit. 'keep-mind,' preserver of the mind, from a supposed belief in its medicinal virtues (so hellebore was called in AS. wēdeberge, preservative against madness). < AS. werian (= D. weren, weeren = MHG. weren, G. wehren, etc.), defend, protect, keep, + mōd, mood. mind: see wear[2] and mood[1].] A somewhat woody perennial herb, Artemisia Absinthium, native in Europe and Asiatic Russia, found in old gardens and by roadsides in North America. This plant is proverbial for its bitterness, and was in medicinal use among the ancients. It is of a highly tonic property, and is still used in Europe for weak digestion; it was formerly employed for intermittents and some other troubles, and was once regarded as a vermifuge. It is very largely consumed, with a few other species, in preparing the absinthe beverage of the French. (See absinthe and absinthium (with cut)). The name is extended to the genus, or particularly to species closely related to this; various species have their own names, as southernwood, mugwort, tarragon, santonica, and sage-brush.

The soure Almaunde, & wermode, & feyn greeke,
Frote hem yfere asmoche as wol suffice
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 199.

These for frenzy be
A speedy and a sovereign remedy,
The bitter wormwood, sage, and marigold
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 2.

Figuratively — 2. Bitterness.

Weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 857.

Sir, with this truth
You mix such wormwood that you leave no hope
For my disorder'd palate e'er to relish
A wholesome taste again. Ford, Perkin Warbeck, i. 2.

His presence and his communications were gall and wormwood to his once partial mistress.
Scott, Kenilworth, xl.

Biennial wormwood, Artemisia biennis, a weed of the interior northern United States, now spreading eastward. It grows from 1 to 3 feet high, and has once- or twice-pinnatifid leaves, with numerous small greenish heads crowded in their axils. — Oil of wormwood, a volatile oil distilled from the common wormwood, usually of a dark green color, containing the property of the herb. — Roman wormwood. (a) Artemisia Pontica, an Old World species, more aromatic and less bitter than the common wormwood, preferred in Roman medicine, but now scarcely used. (b) By transference of the name, the common ragweed Ambrosia artemisiæfolia, a bitter plant with foliage dissected somewhat like that of an artemisia. Salt of wormwood. See salt[1]. Sea wormwood, the European Artemisia maritima. Silver wormwood, Artemisia argentea, a silvery silky shrub of Madeira. Tartarian wormwood. Same as santonica, 1. Tree-wormwood, Artemisia arborescens, an erect tree-like species found on rocky shores and islands of the Mediterranean. Wild wormwood of the West Indies. See Parthenium. — Wormwood wine, wine which has received a bitter taste from having artemisia steeped in it. Compare vermouth.

wormwood-moth (wėrm'wůd-mȯth), n. A rare British noctuid, Cucullia absinthia. It is gray with black spots, and its larva feeds on wormwood. It is found chiefly in Devonshire and Cornwall.

wormwood-pug (wėrm'wůd-pug), n. A British geometrid moth, Eupithecia absinthiata, whose larva feeds upon wormwood.

wormy (wėr'mi), a. [< worm + y[1].] 1. Containing a worm; full of worms; infested or affected with worms; lousy, as fish; measly, as pork; worm-eaten, as timber, fruit, etc.

Damned spite on all . . .
Already to their wormy beds are gone!
Shak. M. N. D., iii. 2. 384.

2. Worm-like; low; mean; debased; grovelling; earthy.

Sordid and wormy affections.
Sir Reynolds, The Passions, xxxvii. (Latham.)

3. Associated with earthworms, and hence with the cold or the grave; gloomy or dismal as the grave. [Rare.]

A weary wormy darkness. Mrs. Browning.

worn (wȯrn), p. a. [Pp. of wear[1], v.] 1. Impaired or otherwise affected by wear or use.

As she trode along the foot worn passages, and opened one crazy door after another, and ascended the creaking stair-case, she gazed wistfully and fearfully around.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

2. Spent; passed.

This is but a day, and 'tis well worn too now.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

3. Wearied; exhausted; showing signs of care, illness, fatigue, etc.

Thy worn form pursues me night and day,
Shaking reproach.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, i. 1.

The old worn world of hurry and heat.
Lowell, Invitation.

Lead the worn war-horse by the plumed bier
Even his horse, now he is dead, is dear.
T. B. Aldrich, Lander.

wornal, wornil (wȯr'nal, -nil), n. Same as wormal. See warble[3].

worn-out (wȯrn'out'), a. 1. So much injured by wear as to be unfit for use; as, a worn-out coat or hat. — 2. Wearied; exhausted, as with toil.

The worn-out clerk
Brow beats his desk below.
Tennyson, Sonnet to J. M. K.

3. Past; gone; removed; departed.

This pattern of the worn-out age.
Shak., Measure, i. 1256.

Pehor also, and Baal-pehor and the rest, whose Rites are now rotten, and the memorie worne out.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 97.

worowet, v. A Middle English form of worry.

worpet, worparet. Old spellings of warp, warper.

worret (wur'et), v. See worrit.

worricow (wur'i-kou), n. [Sc., also spelled borrycow and wurrycow; < worry + cow, a goblin, scarecrow.] 1. A hobgoblin; the devil.

Worricows and gyre-carlins that haunted about the auld wa's at e'en. Scott, Antiquary, xxi.

2. Any frightful object; an ugly, awkward-looking person; a fright; a bugbear; a scarecrow.

What a worricow the man doth look!
Naylor, Reynard the Fox, 39. (Davies.)

[Scotch in both uses.]

worrier (wur'i-ėr), n. [< worry, v., + -er[1].] One who worries or harasses (himself or others); one who is given to worrying or who harasses with anxious forebodings.

The worriers of souls. J. Spencer, Prodigies, p. 223.

worriless (wur'i-les), a. [< worry + -less.] Free from worry.

The professor, leading a comparatively congenial and worriless life, is a deeper sleeper and a less frequent dreamer [than the teacher]. Science, XIII. 88.

worriment (wur'i-ment), n. [< worry + -ment.] Trouble; anxiety; worry. [Colloq.]

worrisome (wur'i-sum), a. [< worry + -some.] Causing worry or annoyance; troublesome.

I must give orders . . . that you come in at once with that worrisome cough of yours.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlv.

worrit (wur'it), v. t. and i. [Also worret; a dial. form, with excrescent t, of worry, v.] To worry. [Colloq. or slang.]

I don't tell everything to your papa. I should only worrit him and vex him. Thackeray, Philip, xxiv.

Why, father, how you keep on worriting!
W. Wyke Melville, White Rose, I. vii.

worrit (wur'it), n. [< worrit, v.] Worry; annoyance; vexation. [Colloq. or slang.]

"Mrs. Richards's eldest, Miss!" said Susan, "and the worrit of Mrs. Richards's life!"
Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxiii.

worry (wur'i), v.; pret. and pp. worried, ppr. worrying. [< ME. worryen, wirryen, wyryen, wirien, woruwen, worowen, wirwen, wurgen, < AS. wyrgan, found in comp. āwyrgan, harm, = OFries. wergia, wirgia = MD. worghen, D. worgen, wurgen = MLG. LG. worgen = OHG. wurgan, MHG. G. würgen, strangle, suffocate, choke; cf. AS. wearh, wearg, werg, a wolf, outlaw (wyrgen, f., she-wolf, in comp. grundwyrgen), = MHG. warc = Icel. vargr, wolf, outlaw, accursed person; cf. AS. wyrgan, wyrigan, werigan, wergian, > ME. warien, curse: see warry, v., warriangle, etc.] I. trans. 1. To choke; suffocate. [Now only Scotch.]

His owen kynde briddis,
That weren anoyed in his nest and norished full ille,
And wel ny yworried with a wronge leder.
Richard the Redeless, iii. 72.

The rock will worrie me.
Loudoun Castle (Child's Ballads, VI. 256).

2. To seize by the throat with the teeth; bite at or tear with the teeth, as dogs when fighting; kill or injure badly by repeated biting, tearing, shaking, etc.: as, a dog that worries sheep; a terrier worrying rats.

Wolues that worryeth men, wommen and children.
Piers Plowman (C), x. 296.

A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death;
That dog that hath his teeth before his eyes,
To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 50.

3. To tease; trouble; harass with importunity or with care and anxiety; plague; bother; vex; persecute.

If departed of his own accord like that lost sheep (Luke 15. 4 &c.), the true church either with her own or any borrowed force worries him not in again, but rather in all charitable manner sends after him. Milton, Civil Power.

Let them rail
And worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.

The ghastly dog shall worry his sleep.
O. W. Holmes, Reflections of a Proud Pedestrian.

To worry down, to swallow or put down by a strong effort of the will. [Colloq.]

She worried down the tea, and ate a slice of toast.
E. E. Hale, Ten Times One, iv.

To worry the sword, in fencing, to fret one's opponent by small movements in rapid succession which seem about to result in thrusts or feints. The object is to discompose him until his guard becomes open or weak, and a thrust can be delivered with effect. = Syn. 2. Pester, Plague, etc. (see tease), disturb, disquiet.

II. intrans. 1. To choke; be suffocated, as by something stopping the windpipe. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

And, like a fool, did eat the cow,
And worried on the tail.
Marquis of Huntley's Retreat (Child's Ballads, VII. 270).

Ye have fasted lang and worried on a midge.
Ramsay's Scotch Proverbs, p. 82. (Jamieson.)

2. To fight, as dogs, by seizing and biting at each other; be engaged in biting, shaking, or mangling with the teeth.—3. To be unduly anxious and careful; give way to anxiety; be over-solicitous or disquieted about things; borrow trouble; fret.

Sensitive people, those who are easily wounded and discouraged, are most apt to worry when affairs go wrong, and yet they are just those whom worry will harm the most and who will lose the most in life by indulging in it.
Alien. and Neurol., VIII. 141.

To worry along, to get along by constant effort; keep on in spite of petty difficulties and anxieties. [Colloq.]

By and by, if I can worry along into tolerable strength, . . . I am going off – say in mid-winter – to the south of England. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 421.

worry (wur'i), n.; pl. worries (-iz). [< worry, v.] 1. The act of worrying or biting and mangling with the teeth; the act of killing by biting and shaking.

They will open on the scent . . . and join in the worry as savagely as the youngest hound.
Lawrence, Sword and Gown, iii.

2. Harassing anxiety, solicitude, or turmoil; perplexity arising from over-anxiety or petty annoyances and cares; trouble: as, it is not work but worry that kills; the worries of housekeeping.

Among over-burdened people extra trouble and worry imply, here and there, break-downs in health, with their entailed direct and indirect sufferings.
H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 51.

worrying (wur'i-ing), p. a. Teasing; troubling; harassing; fatiguing: as, a worrying day.

Grave is the Master's look, his forehead wears Thick rows of wrinkles, prints of worrying cares.
O. W. Holmes, The School Boy.

worryingly (wur'i-ing-li), adv. [< worrying + -ly[2].] In a worrying manner; teasingly; harassingly.

worschipent, v. A Middle English form of worship.

worse (wėrs), a. compar. [I. compar. worse; early mod. E. also werse, wars; < ME. wors, wurse, wirse, werse, wors, wers, < AS. wiersa, wyrsa = OS. wirsa = OFries. wirra, werra = MHG. wirser = Icel. verri = Sw. värre = Dan. værre = Goth. wairsiza, worse; with compar. suffix (lost or assimilated in the later forms, but appearing in the Goth. wairsiza), prob. from a Teut. root appearing in OHG. werran (G. wirren), twist, entangle, confuse (> OHG. werra, confusion, broil, war), perhaps allied to L. vervex (pret. verri, pp. versus), whirl, toss about, drive, sweep along: cf. war[1], and see war[2] (Sc. wour, etc.), ult. a doublet of worse. Cf. worser. II. superl. worst, < ME. worste, werste, wurst, < AS. wyrsta, wyrresta, also by assimilation wyrresta, = OS. wirrasta = OHG. wirsisto, wirsesto, contr. wirst = Icel. verstr = Sw. värst = Dan. værst, worst, superl. of the preceding. The s belongs to the root.] 1. The comparative of bad, evil, ill; more bad, evil, ill, unfortunate, or undesirable; less valuable or perfect; more unfavorable or unsuccessful; less well in health, or less well off in worldly circumstances. See bad, evil, and ill.

Me think the werre part is mine;
to take the flesshe if I assay,
then the blode wil ryn a-way,
forsdone ze haue me with zour dome.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 141.

Men . . . [who] unneth can speake one hole sentence in true latine, but, that worse is, hath all lewnyge in derision. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 13.

She . . . was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse.
Mark v. 26.

What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 207.

Sir Oliver S. You have had no opportunity of showing your talents.
Moses None at all; I hadn't the pleasure of knowing his distresses till he was some thousands worse than nothing. Sheridan, School for Scandal, iii. 1.

But what gave rise
To no little surprise,
Nobody seemed one penny the worse!
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 272.

Sometimes used substantively in the sense of something less good, desirable, fortunate, favorable, etc.

Thus bad begins and worse remains behind
Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 179.

Ah, farewell,
Least of mine eyes thou shouldst have worse to tell
Than now thou hast.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 307.

2. In logic, having, as a proposition, a character which, if belonging to one of two or more premises, must also belong to the conclusion. Thus, a negative is held to be worse than an affirmative proposition, and a particular worse than a universal. On the same principle, a spurious proposition is taken as in a second degree of particularity.—The worse, the less desirable part or share; disadvantage; defeat; loss: hence, to put to the worse, to defeat or discomfit; to have the worse, to fare badly, come out of any contest or business worse than before.

The folk of Troie hemselven so misleden
That with the wors at nyght homward they fledden.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 40.

Longe it endured that oon cowde not sey whiche party had the worse. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 459.

His enemyes prevailed and put his hoste to the worse, he being sore wounded.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 17.

And Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled every man to their tents. 2 Ki. xiv. 12.

I cannot tell who had the worse.
Playe of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 420).

worse (wėrs), adv. compar. [I. compar. worse, < ME. wors, wurs, wers, etc., < AS. wyrs = OS. wirs = MLG. wers = MHG. wirs = Icel. verr = Goth. wairs, worse; with compar. suffix, lost in the adv. (as with bet[1]): see worse, a. II. superl. worst, < ME. worst, werst, < AS. wyrst = Icel. verst = Sw. värst = Dan. værst, worst, superl. of worse: see above.] 1. In a more evil, wicked, severe, or disadvantageous manner; in a way that is less good, desirable, or favorable.

We will deal worse with thee than with them.
Gen. xix. 9.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere,
Ill faced, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 2. 20.

O Master Mayberry! before your servant to dance a Lancashire hornpipe! it shews worse to me than dancing does to a deaf man that sees not the fiddles.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

2. In a less or lower degree; less.

Thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee. Shak., Lear, i. 4. 44.

3. Less favorably or agreeably.

Then this they take worse than his working of miracles, or his working upon the Sabbath, That he would say that God was his Father. Donne, Sermons, xviii.

4. With more severity, intensity, etc.; in a greater degree.

That honorable grief lodged here which burns
Worse than tears drown. Shak., W. T., ii. 1. 112.

worse† (wėrs), v. [< ME. wersen, wursen, worsen, < AS. wyrsian, become worse, < wyrsa, worse: see worse, a.] I. intrans. To become worse.

Werlhede, thet maketh thane man wert and worst uram daye to daye. Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 33.

II. trans. To worst; put to disadvantage; discomfit.

Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes.
Milton, P. L., vi. 440.

worsen (wėr'sn), v. [= Icel. versna; < worse + -en[1]. Cf. worse, v.] I. intrans. To grow worse; deteriorate. [Rare.]

All the changing volitions of daily life, bettering or worsening as we advance in years.
Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 70.

II. trans. 1. To make worse; cause to deteriorate.

It is still Episcopacie that before all our eyes worsens and slugs the most learned and seeming religious of our Ministers. Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

The working-men are left to foolish devices, and keep worsening themselves, the best heads among them forsake their born comrades, and go in for a house with a high door-stop and a brass knocker. George Eliot, Felix Holt, v.

2. To obtain advantage of. Southey. [Rare.]

worser (wėr'sėr), a. and adv. [< worse + -er[3]; a double compar. form (like lesser), due to the fact that worse (like less) is not obviously a compar. form.] An old and redundant comparative of worse.

I cannot hate thee worser than I do
Shak., A. and C., ii. 5. 90.

Fools! they their worser Thraldom still retain'd!
Cowley, Davideis, ii.

Thou 'rt worser than a hog. J. Baillie.

worsett, n. and a. An old variant of worsted.

worship (wėr'ship), n. [< ME. worship, worshipe, worshepe, worschip, wurship, wurschipe, wirschip, wurthshipe, worthschipe, worthschepe, worthasipe, wurthshipe, wurthscipe, < AS. weorthscipe, wyrthscipe, honor, < weorth, wurth, worthy, honorable, + -scipe (> E. -ship): see worth[2], a., and -ship.] 1. Honor; dignity; distinction; worthiness; honorable character or condition; good name; credit.

Brynges wyues into wondur thaire worship to lose;
And erres ay to enyll ende & ernyst by the last.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2943.

That were to me grete worship, yif I myght dye for my lorde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 58.

Upon paine of my life, this young knight shall come unto great worship.
Sir T. Malory, Mort d'Arthure, III. xxxii.

Keep smooth your face, and still maintain your worship
With Berinthia. Shirley, Maid's Revenge, ii. 3.

2. The outward recognition of merit; reverence; respect; deference.

Then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. Luke xiv. 10.

Knighthood is a Dignity, but Esquires and Gentlemen are but Names of Worship.
Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1724), ii. 268.

Kings are like stars: they rise and set, they have
The worship of the world, but no repose.
Shelley, Hellas.

3. Specifically, the reverence and homage which is or ought to be paid to God or a deity; adoration, sacrifice, praise, prayer, thanksgiving, or other devotional acts performed in honor of the Supreme Being or a god, and as part of religion.

Nor are mankind simply content with this mock-worship of God, but also impose and father it upon him, as if he had chose and ordained it.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

The allies, after conquering together, retard thanks to God separately, each after his own form of worship.
Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

The happiest man is he who learns from nature the lesson of worship. Emerson, Nature, p. 75.

4. Fervent esteem, admiration, or devotion; adoration.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 5. 48.

Loyalty, Discipleship, all that was ever meant by Hero-worship, lives perennially in the human bosom.
Carlyle, Boswell's Johnson.

5. Praise; glorification; celebration.

And therfore thei don gret Worschipe thereto, and kepen it [an oak tree] full besyly. Mandeville, Travels, p. 69.

I made hire to the worshipe of my lord: . . .
Thus semeth me that Nature wolde seye.
Chaucer, Physician's Tale, l. 26.

That honourd the mount of caluary,
In wirschip of the cros namely.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 99.

6. A title of honor used in addressing certain magistrates and others of rank or station. Abbreviated wp.

My father desires your worship's company.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 271.

Dap. Is this the cunning-man?
Face This is his worship.
Dap. Is he a doctor?
Face. Yes. B. Jonson, Alchemist, i. 1.

House (or place) of worship. (a) A house or place of distinction.

As sche hadde seyn hused [used] in places of worshipe.
Paston Letters, III. 316.

(b) A church or chapel; a place devoted to the worship of God.

It is very probable that the Church of Kirkdale was considered in Doomsday-Book as the place of worship belonging to that manor. Archæologia, V. 197.

Worship of images. See image-worship.

worship (wėr'ship), v.; pret. and pp. worshiped, worshipped, ppr. worshiping, worshipping. [< ME. worshipen, worshippen, worschipen, worschapen, worshepen, wurschepen, worssipien, wirchipen, worthschipen, wurthschipen, wurthsupen, worthsipien; < worship, n.] I. trans. 1†. To honor; respect; regard with reverence, respect, or deference.

He was a frynde to my fader, & a fyn lover,
Worshippit hym on allwise & his will did.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5578.

Therfore oughte Men to worshipe it and holde it more worthi than any of the othere. Mandeville, Travels, p. 14.

2. To show respect to; treat with consideration or honor; pay one's respects to.

I grette the goode mon as the gode wyf me taughte,
And afterward his wyf, I worschupet hem bothe,
And tolde hire the tokenes that me i-taught were.
Piers Plowman (A), xi. 168.

Wee suffered to see this most noble queene of the world for to bee shamed openly, considering that her lord and our lord is the man of most worship in the world, and the most christned; and hee hath alway worshipped us all in all places. Sir T. Malory, Mort d'Arthure, III. clx.

To love one maiden only, cleave to her,
And worship her by years of noble deeds,
Until they won her. Tennyson, Guinevere.

3. Specifically, to adore; pay divine honors to; show reverence to, with supreme respect and veneration; perform religious service to.

He is fader of fel that formed ow alle
Bothe with fel and with face, and paf ow fyue wittes,
Forte worschupen him therwith, while ze lyuen here.
Piers Plowman (A), i. 13.

Thou shalt worship no other god. Ex. xxxiv. 14.

The Incas worship two silver plates, which they regard as husband and wife; they have no other deity.
Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 317.

4. To love or admire inordinately; devote one's self to; act toward or treat as if divine; idolize: as, to worship wealth or power.

With beaded knees I daily worship her.
Cowper, A Cruel Mistress.

Rose of the Garden! such is woman's lot:
Worshipp'd when blooming; when she fades, forgot.
Moore, Rose of the Desert.

Crown thyself, worm, and worship thine own lusts!
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

=Syn. 3. Adore, Worship, Reverence, etc. See adore.

II. intrans. 1. To perform acts of adoration; perform religious service.

Our fathers worshipped in this mountain. John iv. 20.

And Ethiopia spreads abroad the hand,
And worships. Cowper, Task, vi. 813.

2. To love or admire a person inordinately.

Was it for this I have loved, and waited, and worshipped in silence? Longfellow, Miles Standish, iii.

worshipability (wėr'ship-a-bil'i-ti), n. [< worshipable + -ity (see -bility).] Worthiness of worship, or of being worshiped. Coleridge. [Rare.] (Imp. Dict.) worshipable (wėr'ship-a-bl), a. [< worship + -able.] Capable of or worthy of being worshiped. Coleridge. (Imp. Dict.) worshiper, worshipper (wėr'ship-ėr), n. [< ME. worschipere; < worship + *-er*1.] One who worships; especially, one who pays divine honors to any being; an adorer.

Outlast thy Deity?
Deity? nay, thy worshippers.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

worshipful (wėr'ship-fûl), a. [< ME. worshipful, wurshipful, worthsiprol; < worship + -ful.] 1. Claiming respect; worthy of honor on account of character, dignity, etc.; honorable.

But worshipful chanouns religious,
Ne demeth not that I schaundre your hous,
Although my tale of a chanoun be Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 439.

He was oon of the worshipfullest men of all the contre.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 5.

I was born of worshipful parents myself, in an ancient family. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 350.

2. Specifically, a respectful epithet of address, especially to magistrates and corporate bodies; also, in freemasonry, specifying a certain official rank or dignity.

worshipfully (wėr'ship-fûl-i), adv. [< ME. worshipfully; < worship + -ful + *-ly*2.] 1. Honorably; creditably.

Hee is a gentleman wel and worshipfully borne and bredde.
Quoted in Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), Forewords, p. ix.

This woman (Shore's wife) was born in London, worshipfully friended, honestly brought up, and very well married. Sir T. More, Rich. III. (Int. to Utopia, p. lxxxiii).

Then Sir Lavaine did well and worshipfully;
He bore a knight of old repute to the earth.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

2. Reverentially; respectfully; deferentially.

The Iewes had parfyte knowlege that this Ioseph had so worshypfully brought the body of cryst in erthe.
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 27.

After all their communications there at that tyme, he [the mayor] shall be worshipfully accompanyed, with a certein of the said hous, home to his place
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 414.

See that she be buried worshipfully.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

worshipfulness (wėr'ship-fûl-nes), n. The state or character of being worshipful.

worshipless (wėr'ship-les), a. [< worship + -less.] Destitute of worship or of worshipers. [Rare.]

How long by tyrants shall thy land be trod?
How long thy temple worshipless, O God?
Byron, On Jordan's Banks.

worshiplyt (wėr'ship-li), adv. [< ME. worshiply, wurschiply; < worship + *-ly*2.] Honorably; respectfully; becomingly; with becoming respect or dignity.

My Lord Chaucier wold that my master schuld be beryed wurschiply, and C. mark almes done for hym.
Paston Letters, I. 444.

worshipper, n. See worshiper.

worship-worthyt (wėr'ship-wėr'*th*i), a. Worthy or deserving of honor or respect; worshipful.

Then were the wisest of the people worship-worthy.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 126.

worst (wėrst), a. and n. [See worse.] I. a. superl. The superlative of bad, evil, or ill; bad in the highest degree, whether morally, physically, financially, or otherwise: as, the worst sinner; the worst disease; the worst evil that can befall a state or an individual.

Of alle wymmanne
Wurst was Godhild thanne;
For Murri heo weop sore,
And for horn gute more.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 8.

Speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 132.

The worst fellow was he.
Billie Archie (Child's Ballads, VI. 94).

Corrupted freemen are the worst of slaves.
Garrick, Prol. to the Gamesters.

II. n. That which is most evil or bad; the most bad, severe, aggravated, or calamitous thing, part, time, or state; usually with the: as, in the worst of the storm; to get the worst of a contest; to see a thing at its worst; to do one's worst.

Take good heart, the worst is past, sir.
You are dispossest. B. Jonson, Volpone, v. 8.

I did the worst to him I loved the most.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 381.

At (the) worst, in the most evil, severe, or undesirable state, at the greatest disadvantage.

Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 2. 24.

A man leaveth things at worst, and depriveth himself of means to make them better.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 313.

If the worst comes to the worst, if things are in their worst possible condition; if things become so bad that nothing else can be done.

He live my owne woman, and if the worst come to the worst, I had rather prooue a wagge then a foole Marston, Dutch Courtesan, iii. 1.

To put to the worst, to inflict defeat on, overthrow entirely

Who ever knew Truth put to the worst in a free and open encounter? Milton, Areopagitica.

worst (wėrst), adv. [See worse, adv.] In a manner or to a degree the extreme of bad or evil; most or least (according to the sense of the verb).

When thou didst hate him worst. Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 106.

worst (wėrst), v. [Appar. < worst, a., like worse, v., < worse, a.; but prob. rather a var. of worse, with excrescent t after s, due to association with worst, a., or with the pret. worsted of worse, v.] I. trans. To get the advantage over in a contest; defeat; overthrow.

He challenged Cupid at wrestling, and was worsted.
Bacon, Fable of Pan.

I'll assure you, George, your rhetoric would fail you here, she should worst you at your own weapons.
Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, ii. 1.

=Syn. To beat, discomfit, foil, overcome.

II. intrans. To grow worse; deteriorate; worsen. [Rare.]

Anne haggard, Mary coarse, every face in the neighbourhood worsting, . . . had long been a distress to him Jane Austen, Persuasion, i.

worsted (wus'ted), n. and a. [< ME. worsted, worstede, worsted; so called from Worsted, now Worstead, in Norfolk, where it was first manufactured; < AS. Wurthestede, < wurth, worth, estate, manor, + stede, stead, place: see stead.] I. n. 1. A variety of woolen yarn or thread, spun from long-staple wool which has been combed, and in the spinning is twisted harder than is usual. It is knitted or woven into stockings, carpets, etc.

Of double worsted was his semi cope
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 262.

Item, j hallyng of blewe worstet contayning in lenthe xij yerds, and in bredthe iiij. yerds
Paston Letters, I. 480.

If a tenant carried but a piece of bread and cheese to eat by the way, as an inch of worsted to mend his stockings, he should forfeit his whole parcel
Scott, Story of the Injured Lady

2. Woolen yarn for ornamental needlework and knitting. The principal varieties are Berlin wool, zephyr-wool, which is very soft, and of which there are several grades, as single zephyr, double zephyr, split zephyr, Andalusian wool, which is tightly twisted, Shetland and Pyrenean, which are of finer qualities and levianthan, which is very full and soft, and designed for embroidery on coarse canvas. Hamburg worsted, an inferior quality of Hamburg wool, or an imitation of it.

II. a. Consisting of worsted; made of worsted yarn: as, worsted stockings. Worsted braid, braid for dress-trimming and similar purposes, including that made of ordinary wool, and of alpaca, mohair, and the like. Worsted damask. See damask, 1 (c). Worsted yarn. See yarn.

worsted-work (wus'ted-wėrk), n. Work done with worsted: especially, needlework done with threads of soft loose wool upon open canvas, the threads of the canvas guiding the worker, who counts them or the openings.

wort1 (wėrt), n. [< ME. wort, wurt, wert, wirte, wrt, < AS. wyrt, a plant, = OS. wurt, root, flower, = OHG. MHG. G. wurz, root, plant, = Icel. urt (for vurt), also spelled jurt (perhaps borrowed) = Sw. ört = Dan. urt = Goth. waurts, plant, root; also in dim. form, D. wortel = OHG. wurzala, MHG. G. wurzel, root. Cf. *root*1 and radix.] A plant; herb; vegetable. Wort is very frequent in old botanical names of plants, as in bone-, bishop-, blood-, cole, liver, lung, mead, sage, sea, spear, stitch-wort, etc. See colewort, lungwort, etc.

Laborers that haue no lande to lyue on but her handes beyned nought to dyne a-day nyat olde wortes
Piers Plowman (B), vi. 310.

In a bed of wortes stille he lay
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 401.

He drinks water, and lives on wort leaves
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 218.

It is an excellent pleasure to be able to take pleasure in worts and water, in bread and onions
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 699.

wort2 (wėrt), n. [< ME. wort, worte, < AS. wyrte (in comp. max-wyrte, lit. 'mash-wort'), wort, new beer, = MD. wort, wort, new beer, = LG. wort = G. würze, wort, spice, seasoning, = Icel. virtr = Sw. vört = Norw. vyrt, vort, wort, < AS. wyrt, etc., root: see *wort*1.] 1. The infusion of malt which after fermentation becomes beer.

Cley maad with hors or mannes heer, and olle
Of tartre, alum, glas, berm, wort, and argolle.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 800.

2. An infusion of malt, formerly used in scurvy and as a dressing to foul ulcers. Setting the wort, same as pitching, 4.

wort3 (wėrt), n. Same as wart.

wort-condenser (wėrt'kon-den'sėr), n. In brewing, a surface-condenser used to condense the vapor rising from wort in the process of boiling. E. H. Knight.

wort-cooler (wėrt'kö'lėr), n. In brewing, an apparatus for cooling wort; specifically, a series of pipes through which cold water or other refrigerant is passed while the wort is allowed to trickle over the exterior to cool it.

wort-filter (wėrt'fil'ter), n. In brewing, a filtering apparatus for separating the clear liquor from the boiled mash.

worth1 (wėrth), v. i. [< ME. worthen, wurthen, wurthen (pret. warth, wearth, werth, pl. wurthen, worthen, pp. worden, also wurthen, worthen), < AS. weorthan, wurthan, wyrthan (pret. wearth, pl. wurdon, pp. ge-worden), become, be, = D. worden = OHG. werdan, MHG. werden, G. werden = Icel. vertha = Sw. varda = Dan. vorde = Goth. wairthan, become, = L. vertere, turn, verti, turn into (see *verse*1). Hence ult. weird, and the suffix -ward.] 1†. To be or become.

"Daris," he seide, "the wurthe ded Bute if thu do me sumne red."
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 60.

Sone gow fro myschaunce,
And gine gow grace on this grounde good men to worthe.
Piers Plowman (B), viii. 61.

When thow wost that I am with hire there,
Worth thow upon a courser right anon.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1011.

2. To happen; befide: now used only in the archaic imprecative phrases woe worth the day, the man, etc., in which worth is equivalent to be to, and the noun is in the dative.

3if I wrong sede any word wo worth me euer.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4118.

Wo worth the faire gemme vertulles!
Wo worth that herb also that doth no bote!
Wo worth that beaute that is routheles!
Wo worth that wyght that trest ech under foote!
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 344.

What will worth, what will be the end of this man!
Latimer, 4th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God, Howl ye, Woe worth the day! Ezek. xxx. 2.

Wo worth the chase, woe worth the day,
That costs thy life, my gallant gray!
Scott, L. of the L., i. 9.

To worth off, to heed, pay attention to

Wel worthe of dremes ay this olde wyves,
And trewely lche, ek augurys of thise foweles.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 370.

worth2 (wėrth), a. [< ME. worth, wurth, werth, < AS. weorth, wurth, worth, worthy, honorable, = OS. wurth = MD. weerd, waerd, D. waard = MLG. wert = OHG. werd, MHG. wert, G. wert, commonly misspelled werth = Icel. verthr = Sw. värd = Dan. værd, worth, = Goth. wairths, adj., worthy; prob. not, as some suppose, < *worth*1, v., there being no connection of sense. It may be an orig. pp. with formative (*-th*2 = *-d*2); but the root is uncertain. Hence *worth*2, n., worthy, worthful, worthship > worship, etc.] 1†. Worthy; honorable; esteemed; estimable.

Ther william was & his worth burde [wife].
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2522.

The more that a man con, the more worth he ys.
Rob of Gloucester, p. 364.

He . . . accounts himself both a fit person to do the noblest and godliest deeds, and much better worth then to deject and defile with such a debasement and such a pollution as sin is, himself so highly ransom'd.
Milton, Church-Government, ii 3.

2. Having worth, esteem, or value in a given degree; representing a relative or comparative worth (of): used generally with a noun of measurement dependent directly upon it without a preposition.

A byrd in hand, as some men say, is worth ten flye at large.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 98.

Specifically—(a) Having a specified value in money or exchange; representing under fair conditions a price or cost (of); equivalent in value to; expressing either actual market value, or value obtainable under favorable or just conditions.

Schal no deuel at his deth-day deren him worth a myte Piers Plowman (A), viii. 54.

A score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 57.

(b) Possessed of; having estate to the value of; possessing: as, a man worth five millions.

To ennoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3. 82.

Poor Rutilus spends all he 's Worth,
In hopes of setting one good Dinner forth.
Congreve, tr. of Eleventh Satire of Juvenal.

(c) Having a specified moral value or importance; estimable or esteemed in a given way; reaching a certain grade of excellence.

But I remain'd, whose hopes were dim,
Whose life, whose thoughts, were little worth
Tennyson, In Memoriam.

3. Entitled to, by reason of excellence, importance, etc.; meriting; deserving: having the same construction as in sense 2: as, the castle is worth defending; the matter is not worth notice.

Me, wretch more worth your vengeance
Shak., Cymbeline, v. 4. 11.

Pray thee, let him alone, he is not worth thy anger.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, i. 1.

If what one has to say is worth saying, he need not beg pardon for saying it
O. W. Holmes, Over the Teacups, xii.

Not worth a continental, a hair, a leek, a maravedi, a rap, a snap, etc. See the nouns. The game is not worth the candle. See candle. To be worth one's salt. See salt[1]. Worth the whistle. See whistle. Worth while. See while).

worth[3] (wėrth), n. [< ME. worth, werth, wurth, worth, also worthe, wurthe, werthe, < AS. weorth, wurth = OS. werth, werd = D. waarde = OHG. werd (> Lith. wertas, OBulg. vredu?), MHG. wert, G. wert, werth = Icel. verth = Sw. värde = Dan. værd = Goth. waurths, value; from the adj.: see worth[2], a.] 1†. Honor; dignity.

I will do what worth
Shall bid me, and no more.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2.

Wee read sometimes of two Bishops in one place, and had all the Presbyters there beene of like worth we might perhaps have read of twenty Milton, Prelatical Episcopacy.

2. Worthiness; excellence of character; excellency; merit; desert: as, a man of great worth.

I dispute it not,
His worth forestals exception.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iv. 254.

I know your worths,
And thus low bow in reverence to your virtues.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 7.

Old letters, breathing of her worth.
Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

3. Value; importance; excellence; valuable or desirable qualities: said of things.

Thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held.
Shak. Sonnets, ii.

A beautiful object may have a worth for feeling independent of mere contemplation.
Mind, XII. 629.

4. Value, especially as expressed in terms of some standard of equivalency or exchange: as, what is his house worth? the worth of a commodity is usually the price it will bring in market, but price is not always worth.

"For ofte haue I," quod he, 'holpe gow atte barre,
And git zeue ze me neuere the worthe of a russhe.'
Piers Plowman (B), iv. 170.

A crown's worth of good interpretation
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 30.

If I had but in my pocket
The worth of one single pennie.
Wilkie Wallace (Child's Ballads, VI. 233).

5. That which one is worth; possessions; substance; wealth; riches.

He that helps him take all my outward worth.
Shak., Lear, iv. 4. 10.

In good worth†, in good part; without displeasure or offense.

It becometh me to take it in good worth; I am not better than he was.
Latimer, 3d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

=Syn. 2 and 3. Merit, etc. See desert[2].—4. Value, Cost, etc. See price.

worthful (wėrth'fūl), a. [< ME. wurthful, worthfolle, < AS. weorthfull, valuable, < weorth, worth: see worth[2] and -ful.] Full of worth; worthy.
Marston.

Thou high-born dames and worthful females whom Margaret the queen had drawn about her.
Rock, Church of our Fathers, ii. 272.

Penang and Singapore in the Straits of Malacca, Hong Kong on the route to Canton and Shanghai, are all very worthful.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XL. 873.

worthily (wėr'*th*ī-li), adv. [< ME. worthiliche, worthily; < worthy + -ly[2].] 1. In a worthy manner; honorably; with due dignity, reverence, or respect; reverently.

Worthili hire he welcomed wan he hire mette.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4290.

2. Excellently; rightly; becomingly; suitably; fittingly.

Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service
Did worthily perform
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 36.

He that hath begun so worthily,
It fits not with his resolution
To leave off thus, my lord.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, v. 2.

3. Deservedly; justly; according to merit.

They would not leave their sins, . . . therefore their destruction came worthily upon them
Latimer, Sermons and Remains (Parker ed.), p. 51.

Had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily term'd them merciless to us!
Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 100.

He found out the author, one Dyer, a most crafty fellow and his ancient Maligner, whom he worthily punished.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 228

You worthily succeed not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues.
Dryden, To the Duke of Ormond, Ded. of Fables.

I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated.
South, Sermons.

worthiness (wėr'*th*ī-nes), n. [< ME. worthinesse, worthynesse; < worthy, a., + -ness.] The quality of being worthy; honor; excellence; dignity; virtue; merit; desert.

After we shall returne hem for to socoure, for grete pite it were yef thei were deed or taken in so tendre age, for thei ben of high valoure and grete worthynesse
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 107.

The prayers which our Saviour made were, for his own worthiness, accepted.
Hooker.

I see, even in her looks, gentry and general worthiness
B. Jonson, Poetaster, ii. 1.

=Syn. See worth[2], n.

worthless (wėrth'les), a. [< worth[3] + -less; < AS. wurthleas, < wurth, worth, + -leas, E. -less.] 1. Of no value or use; valueless; useless.

Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 6.

'Tis but a worthless world to win or lose
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 40.

We read how men sell themselves to a certain Personage, and that Personage cheats them. He gives them wealth; yes, but the gold pieces turn into worthless leaves.
Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, On a Pear tree.

2. Lacking in or destitute of worth, dignity, excellence, or merit; mean; contemptible.

Some worthless slave of thine I'll slay.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 515.

Habits of dissimulation and falsehood, no doubt, mark a man of our age and country as utterly worthless and abandoned.
Macaulay, Machiavelli.

The mode of genesis of the worthy and the worthless seems the same.
W. James, Priu. of Psychol., I. 552.

3. Unworthy; not deserving.

A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honour.
Shak., J. C., v. 1. 61.

Her boons let foolish Fortune throw
On worthless heads, more glorious 'tis by far
A Diadem to merit than to wear.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 149.

Worthless they are of Cæsar's gracious eyes
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

=Syn. 1. Unserviceable, unprofitable. 2. Base, vile, depraved, graceless, trashy, trumpery, flimsy, tinsel, trifling, paltry, frivolous.

worthlessly (wėrth'les-li), adv. In a worthless manner.

worthlessness (wėrth'les-nes), n. The state or character of being worthless.

worthly† (wėrth'li), a. [ME. worthely, wurthliche; < worth[2] + -ly[1].] Worthy; excellent.

What schulde the mone ther compas clym,
& to euen wyth that worthly lyxt
That schynes vpon broking brym?
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 1071.

But onely the worthely werke of my wyll
In my spirite all emgyre the mightes of me.
York Plays, p. 1.

worthy (wėr'*th*ī), a. and n. [< ME. worthy, worthi, wurthy, wurthi, worthy (not found in AS.), = OS. wirthig = MD. weerdigh = MLG. werdig = OHG. wirdig, MHG. wirdec, G. würdig, worthy, = Icel. verthugr = Sw. värdig = Dan. værdig; as worth[2] + -y[1].] I. a. 1. Having worth; of high standing or degree; honorable; worshipful; excellent; deserving of honor, respect, praise, mention, attention, or the like; valuable; noble; estimable; virtuous; meritorious: noting persons and things.

Therfore whan the Soudan wille avance ony worthi Knyghte, he maketh him a Amyralle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 39.

The moste worthiest thes brethren gan take,
Vnto the castel conueing thaim certayn.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1923.

Salust is a wise and worthy writer.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 154.

I have done thee worthy service.
Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 247.

Against him Mauritius performed worthie attempts, which made way vnto him for the Roman Empire.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 362.

A really worthy life depends not only on the vividness and constancy of the ruling moral idea, but also on its volume and contents.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 168.

2†. Of high rank or social station.

And though that he were worthy, he was wys,
And of his port as meek as is a mayde.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 68.

3. Deserving; meriting: sometimes followed by of before the thing merited or deserved, sometimes by an accusative directly, and sometimes by an infinitive.

3e, sire, bote I pertly vnde that I haue the profred,
I am worthi muche blame; what mai I seize more?
Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

Now trewly ye be worthy to haue grete blame, for youre peple haue moche losse hadde seth ye wente from the batalle.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 404.

Worthy the owner, and the owner it.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 94.

Oh, thou hast open'd
A book in which, writ down in bloody letters,
My conscience finds that I am worthy of More than I undergo!
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iv. 2.

Epaminondas, amongst the Thebans, is worthy of note and memory, even to our ages and those that shall succeed us.
Ford, Line of Life.

Friends! we have liv'd too long. I never heard Sounds such as these, so worthy to be feared.
Cowper, Needless Alarm.

When we consider a right or a wrong action as done by another person, we think of that person as worthy of moral approbation or reprobation.
W. K. Clifford, Lectures, II. 180.

4. Well deserved.

Doing worthy vengeance on thyself.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 2. 87.

5. In keeping with the standing, character, dignity, etc. (of); fit; fitted; proper; suited; suitable: with of, for, or an infinitive clause.

Whan a werkman hath wrought thanne may men se the sothe,
What he were worthi for his werke and what he hath deserued,
And moost to fonge bifore for drede of disalowynge.
Piers Plowman (B), xiv. 188.

Worthy for an empress' love.
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 4. 76.

Wert thou a subject worthy of my sword,
Or that thy death, this moment, could call home
My banish'd hopes, thou now wert dead; dead, woman!
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, v. 1.

If your parts be worthy of me, I will countenance you.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1.

White gloves, and linen worthy Lady Mary!
Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 104.

After the greatest consociation of religious duties for preparation, no man can be sufficiently worthy to communicate.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 313.

Foemen worthy of their steel.
Scott, L. of the L., v. 10.

Worthiest of blood, in law, a phrase applied to males, as opposed to females, in the succession to inheritance. See lineality.

II. n.; pl. worthies (-*th*īz). 1. A person of eminent worth; one distinguished for serviceable and estimable qualities: as, Fuller's "History of the Worthies of England."

Thou thyselfe dost now expate
The worth[i]est worthy of the race of Brute.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 36.

What do these worthies
But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave Peaceable nations?
Milton, P. R., iii. 74.

At the first appearance of my work, its ails and faults were misapprehended by some of the descendants of the Dutch worthies.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 18.

2. A local celebrity; a character; an eccentric: as, a village worthy. [Humorous or colloq.]—3. Anything of worth or excellence. [Rare.]

In her fair cheek,
Where several worthies make one dignity.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3. 226.

The nine worthies. See nine.

worthy† (wėr'thi), v. t. [< ME. wurthen, worthien, wurthien, < AS. weorthian, wyrthian, wurthian (= OHG. werdôn, G. würdigen = Icel. virtha = Goth. wairthôn), value, < weorth, worth: see worth[2], a.] To render worthy; exalt.

Put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shak., Lear, ii. 2. 128.

wortle (wėr'tl), n. 1. A draw-plate, or the aperture in such a plate through which wire is drawn.

The wire [of manganese steel], owing to its hardness, breaking into short lengths when being pulled through the wortles. Science, XII. 280.

2. One of a series of metal collars through which a cylinder or plug of lead is sometimes drawn in the manufacture of lead pipe. The wortles are of graduated sizes, and the lead is passed from one through that next smaller, till the pipe has acquired the desired size.

wort-refrigerator (wėrt'rē-frij'e-rā-tor), n. A wort-cooler.

wortwale† (wėrt'wāl), n. [Origin obscure.] A hangnail.

Pipitulo, the skinne growing at the fingers ends about the nayle, called of some the wortwales, or liuerages. Florio, 1598.

worystt, n. An old variant of worsted.

wosbird, n. 1. Same as whore's-bird. [Slang.]

"Imp'dent old wosbird!" says he, "I'll break the bald head on un." T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 2.

2. A wasp. Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

woset, n. A form of wooze for ooze.

wost†. Second person singular indicative present of wit[1].

wot (wot). First and third persons singular indicative present of wit[1].

wought, n. An obsolete variant of wauk[1].

Fatte reed of myre yground and tempered tough,
Let daube it on the wough on leche aye de.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 15.

wouke†, n. A Middle English form of week[1]. Wyclif.

woul, v. t. Same as waul[1].

would (wůd). Preterit and past subjunctive of will[1].

would-be (wůd'bē), a. and n. [< would + be], expressing wish or desire in such expressions as "he would be thought rich," "he would be considered smart."] I. a. Wishing to be; vainly pretending to be; desirous of being or of being considered: as, a would-be philosopher. [Colloq.]

The would-be wits and can't-be gentlemen
Byron, Beppo, st. 76.

II. n. A vain pretender; one who affects to be something which he really is not.

A man that would have toll'd at their own play
A dozen would-be's of the modern day.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 612.

wouldert (wůd'ėr), n. [Irreg. < would + -er[1].] A wisher; one given to use the word would optatively. Latham. [Rare.]

The olde proverbe is exceeding true,
"That these great wishers, A these common wouldere, Are never (for the moste part) good householders."
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 108.

woulding† (wůd'ing), n. [Irreg. < would + -ing[1].] Emotion of desire; impulse; inclination.

It will be every man's interest . . . to subdue the exorbitancies of the flesh, as well as to continue the wouldings of the spirit.
Hammond. (Richardson.)

wouldingness† (wůd'ing-nes), n. Velleity; willingness. Hammond, Works, I. 23.

Woulfe's apparatus. An apparatus consisting of a series of three-necked bottles (called Woulfe's bottles) connected by suitable tubes, used for washing gases, or saturating liquids therewith. Watts' Dict. of Chem.

A Woulfe's Bottle.

wound[1] (wönd or wound), n. [< ME. wound, wounde, wund, wunde, wonde, < AS. wund = OS. wunda, wunde = OFries. wunde, unde = D. wond, wonde = OHG. wunta, MHG. G. wunde, a wound, = Icel. und (for vund*) = Dan. vunde, a wound; from an adj., ME. wund, < AS. wund = D. ge-wond = OHG. gi-wunt, G. wund = Goth. wunds, wounded; possibly orig. pp. (in -d[2]) of the verb which appears in AS. winnan (pp. wunnen), strive, fight, suffer: see win[1], v. The historical pron. is wound, parallel to that of ground, found, sound, bound, etc.] 1. In surg., a solution of continuity of any of the tissues of the body, involving also the skin or mucous membrane of the part, caused by some external agent, and not the result of disease.

I lately caught, will have a new made wound,
And captive like be manacled and bound.
Marlowe, tr. of Ovid's Elegies, ii.

2. In medical jurisprudence, any lesion of the body resulting from external violence, whether accompanied or not by rupture of the skin or mucous membrane—thus differing from the meaning of the word when used in surgery. Great difference of opinion, however, appears in the way in which the word is interpreted when occurring in criminal statutes. Some authorities have held that it necessarily implies the use of a hard or solid instrument other than the hand or fist, others that it necessarily implies the breaking of the skin beyond the cuticle or outer membrane.

3. A breach or hurt of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants.—4. Figuratively, injury; hurt; harm: as, a wound given to credit or reputation, feelings, etc.: often specifically applied in literature to the pangs of love.

Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine own.
Shak., As you Like It, ii. 4. 44.

The wounds of conscience, like other wounds, though generally received in public, must always be healed in private. Jer. Atterbury, Sermons, I. x

They will endeavour to give my reputation as many wounds as the man in the almanack. Swift, Tritical Essay.

5†. Plague.

I trowe it was in the dismal
That was the ten wounder of Egipte.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1207.

6. In her., a roundel purpure. Contused wound, a bruising of the soft parts, with perhaps little laceration of the skin, produced by a blow from a blunt body; the bruise of ordinary language. — Dissection-wound, a poisoned wound received while dissecting or performing an autopsy, by which septic material is introduced. Also called dissecting wound and post-mortem wound. — God's wounds. See wounds and gounds. — Gunshot-wound, a lacerated wound caused by a bullet or other missile discharged from a firearm: technically called vulnus sclopeticum. — Incised wound, a clean-cut wound made by a knife or other sharp instrument, the cut of ordinary language. — Lacerated wound, a wound caused by tearing rather than cutting, any laceration of soft parts. — Open wound, an operation-wound in which the integument is widely incised, as distinguished from a subcutaneous wound in which the skin opening is small. — Operation-wound, a wound made by the surgeon in the course of an operation as distinguished from one occurring accidentally. — Poisoned wound, a wound into which some poisonous matter is introduced in the act of wounding, as a dissection wound, the bite of a venomous reptile, or the sting of a poisonous insect. — Punctured wound, a narrow deep wound made by a sharp pointed body, such as a needle or a rapier.

wound (wönd or wound), v. [< ME. wounden, woundien, wunden, wundien, wondien, < AS. wundian = OHG. wuntôn, MHG. wunden, G. verwunden, wound; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To hurt by violence; cut, slash, or lacerate; injure, damage: as, to wound the head or the arm; to wound a tree.

Then cche wounde and kylde other.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 150.

He was wounded for our transgressions. Isa. liii. 5.

"'Tis not thy cause,
Thou has' no reputation wounded in't
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 3.

2. Figuratively, to cause injury or harm to; specifically, of persons, to hurt the feelings of; pain.

My wretched heart, wounded with bad bethle,
To craue his peace from reason is addrest.
Greene, Fran. ces's Sonnet (Works, ed. Grosart, VIII. 169).

Where ye sin against the brethren, and wound their weak consciences, ye sin against Christ. 1 Cor. viii. 12.

The pangs of wounded vanity seemed to him [Johnson] ridiculous. Macaulay, Boswell's Johnson.

II. intrans. To inflict hurt or injury, either physically or morally.

This courtesy
Wounds deeper than your sword can, or mine own.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, v. 1.

Willing to wound and yet afraid to strike
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 203.

wound[2] (wound). Preterit and past participle of wind[1].

woundable (wön'- or woun'da-bl), a. [< wound[1] + -able.] Capable of being wounded; liable to injury; vulnerable.

So woundable is the dragon under the left wing.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., IV. i. 5.

wounder (wön'dėr or woun'dėr), n. [< ME. wounder; < wound[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which wounds.

wound-fever (wönd'fē'vėr), n. A fever, probably mildly septic in its nature, which sometimes occurs after receiving a wound, whether accidental or made during an operation: in the latter case also called surgical fever.

wound-gall (wönd'gâl), n. A gall made on the stem of the grape-vine by an American weevil, Ampeloglypter sesostris. See vine-gall.

woundily (woun'di-li), adv. [< woundy[2] + -ly[2].] Woundy; excessively. [Colloq. or humorous.]

They look woundily like Frenchmen
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, I. 2.

Richard Penlake repeated the vow,
For woundily sick was he Southey, St. Michael's Chair.

wounding (won'- or woun'ding), n. [Verbal n. of wound[1], v.] Hurt; injury. Gen. iv. 23.

woundless (wönd'- or wound'les), a. [< wound[1] + -less.] 1. Free from hurt or injury.—2. Invulnerable; incapable of being wounded.

Hit the woundless air. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 1. 44.

3. Unwounding; harmless.

Turne thee to those that weld the awful crowne,
To doubted Knights, whose woundless armour rusts.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., October.

Not a dart fell woundless there. Southey, Joan of Arc, viii.

woundwort (wönd'wėrt), n. [< wound[1] + wort[1].] 1. A plant of the genus Stachys, particularly either of two species occurring in Great Britain, S. palustris, the marsh or clown's woundwort, and S. Germanica. The name alludes to a supposed vulnerary property.—2. The kidney-vetch, Anthyllis vulneraria, and occasionally other plants. Clown's woundwort. Same as clownheal. Knight's woundwort, the water-soldier, Stratiotes aloides. See Stratiotes. Saracen's woundwort. See Saracen's comfrey, under Saracen.

woundworth (wönd'werth), n. A composite plant, Inubum Brownei. [West Indies.]

woundy[1] (wön'di or woun'di), a. [< wound[1] + -y[1].] Causing or inflicting wounds. [Rare.]

A boy that shoots
From ladies' eyes such mortal woundy darts.
Heywood, Love.

woundy[2] (woun'di), a. [Of doubtful origin; perhaps a colloq. use of woundy[1]; cf. whopping, terrible, and other words of intensity, used as emphatics.] Excessive. [Colloq.]

Indeed there is a woundy luck in names, sirs.
And a main mystery. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 2.

A woundy hinderance to a poor man that lives by his labour. Sir R. L'Estrange.

woundy[2] (woun'di), adv. [< woundy[2], a.] Exceedingly; very. [Colloq.]

A woundy brag young fellow.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, i. 2.

Gad says I, an you play the fool and marry at these years, there's more danger of your head's aching than my heart.—He was woundy angry when I gav'n that wipe.
Congreve, Love for Love, iv. 13.

Travelled ladies are woundy nice. J. Baillie.

wourali, wourari (wö'rą-li, -ri), n. Same as woorali, woorari. See curari.

wourali-plant (wö'rą li-plant), n. The plant which yields wourali. See curari.

wournit, n. Same as warble[3].

wout†, n. Same as vaute, an old spelling of vault[1].

wou-wou, n. Same as wow wow.

wove (wov). Preterit and occasional past participle of weave[1].

woven (wo'vn). Past participle of weave[1].

wow (wou), interj. An exclamation of pleasure, surprise, or wonder.

O whan he slew his berry brown steed,
Wow but his heart was sair!
King Henry (Child's Ballads, I. 148).

And, wow! Tam saw an unco sight!
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

wowe[1]†, wower†. Obsolete forms of woo, wooer.

wowe[2]†, n. A Middle English form of waw[2].

wo-wer†, a. See woe and weary.

wowf (wouf), a. [Cf. waff[3].] Wild; deranged; disordered in intellect. [Scotch.]

He will be as wowf as ever his father was.
Scott, Pirate, ix.

wow-wow (wou'wou), n. [Native name.] 1 The active gibbon of Sumatra, Hylobates agilis. Also waw waw, unqaputi, and oungha.—2. The silvery gibbon of Java, Hylobates leuciscus. Also wau-wau, wa-wah.

woxt, woxet, v. t. Obsolete forms of wax[1].

woxent. Old preterit and past participle of wax[1].

wp. A contraction of worship.

wpful. A contraction of worshipful.

wrack[1] (rak), n. [Also wreck (also rack); < ME. wrak, wrek, wrec, something cast ashore, a kind of seaweed, also shipwreck (> F. varech, seaweed cast ashore, pieces of a wrecked ship cast ashore); partly < AS. wræc, banishment, exile, misery; partly < D. LG. wrak, or Icel. rek (for wrek*), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, = Sw. vrak, wreck, refuse, trash, = Dan. vrag, wreck. Wrack[1] is a doublet of wreck[1]; it is also spelled in some uses rack, while on the other hand rack[1] was sometimes spelled wrack. Indeed the whole series of words, wrack, wreck, rack, reck, wretch, etc., were formerly much confused in spelling. See wreck[1].] 1. That which is cast ashore by the waves. Specifically – (a) Seaweed cast ashore. The name is sometimes restricted to the species of Fucus, which form the bulk of the wrack collected for manure and sometimes for making kelp. Those found most plentifully on the shores of the British Islands are F. vesiculosus and F. nodosus. See sea-wrack, 2, and cut under Fucus. (b) Wreckage.

2†. The destruction of a ship by winds or rocks or by the force of the waves; shipwreck. See wreck[1].

> Ring the alarum-bell! Blow wind! come wrack!
> Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 51.

> Nay, some of them . . . run ashore before the pursuer, glad that with wrack of ship and losse of goods they may prolong a despised life. Sandys, Travailes (1632), p. 2.

3. Destruction; ruin.

> Forgetting shame's pure blush and honour's wrack
> Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 558.

> Nor only Paradise
> In this commotion, but the starry cope
> Of heaven perhaps, or all the elements
> At least had gone to wrack disturb'd and torn
> With violence of this conflict. Milton, P. L., iv. 994.

> Moaning and wailing for an heir to rule
> After him, lest the realm should go to wrack
> Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

Cart-wrack, various large algæ thrown up by the sea. [Scotch.] Kelp-wrack, Fucus nodosus. Lady-wrack, Fucus vesiculosus. See cut under Fucus.

wrack[1]† (rak), v. t. [< wrack, n. Cf. wreck[1], v.] To destroy; make shipwreck of; wreck.

> What profits it the well built ship to ride
> Vpon the surging billowes of the maine, . . .
> If, ere it fornies end it doth attaine,
> Soe wrackt it perish in the raging flood?
> Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 129.

> Oh, what a second ruthless sea of woes
> Wracks me within my haven!
> Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, I. 1.

wrack[2], n. A variant of rack[3].

wrack[3]†, v. t. An obsolete misspelling of rack[1], Cowley, Davideis, iii.

wrackful† (rak'ful), a. [< ME. wrakeful, wrakful; < wrack[1] + -ful. Cf. wreckful.] Ruinous; destructive.

> What wanton horrors marked their wrackful path!
> Scott, Vision of Don Roderick, Conclusion, st. 6.

wrack-grass (rak'gràs), n. Same as grass-wrack.

wracksome† (rak'sum), a. [< wrack[1] + -some.] Ruinous; destructive.

> Nor bring the wracksom engine to their wall.
> Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, ii.

wrain-staff (rān'stàf), n. Same as wring-staff.

wraith (rath), n. [Appar. an altered form due to some confusion of the dial. warth, an apparition; supposed to have been orig. a guardian spirit, < Icel. vorth (gen. varthar), a ward, guardian; cf. Norw. varde, a beacon, pile of stones, vardyrle, a guardian or attendant spirit said to go before or follow a man, also considered as an omen or a boding spirit: see ward[1].] An apparition in the exact likeness of a person, supposed to be seen before or soon after the person's death; in general, a visible spirit; a spectre; a ghost.

> His presence scared the clan,
> Who held him for some fleeting wraith,
> And not a man of blood and breath.
> Scott, L. of L. M., v. 28.

In 1790 a traveller writes of the peasants of Kirkcudbrightshire: "It is common among them to fancy that they see the wraiths of persons dying, which will be visible to one and not to others present with him."
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 405.

> Then glided out of the joyous wood
> The ghastly Wraith of one that I know.
> Tennyson, Maud, xxiii.

wrak†, wraket, n. and v. Old spellings of wreck[1].

wramp (ramp), n. [Origin obscure.] A sprain.

wran (ran), n. A dialectal form of wren.

> The wran! the wran! the king of all birds.
> Quoted in N. and Q., 1st ser., XII. 459.

wrang[1] (rang, locally vrang), a., n., and adv. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of wrong.

wrang[2]. An obsolete or provincial preterit of wring.

wrangle (rang'gl), v.; pret. and pp. wrangled, ppr. wrangling. [< ME. wranglen; a freq. form connected with LG. wrangen, wrangle, Dan. vrangle, twist, entangle, and ult. with wring: see wring.] I. intrans. 1. To dispute; argue noisily or in a quarrelsome manner; brawl; altercate.

> I am ready to distrust mine eyes,
> And wrangle with my reason.
> Shak., T. N., iv. 3. 14.

> I have been atoning two most wrangling neighbours.
> Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iii. 4.

> Tho' among ourselves with too much heat
> We sometimes wrangle, when we should debate
> Prior, To Boileau Despreaux (1704).

2. To engage in discussion and disputation; argue; debate; hence, formerly, in some universities, to dispute publicly; defend or oppose a thesis by argument.

> The Philosophers, as they scorne to delight, so must they bee content little to moone; sauing wrangling whether Vertue, bee the chiefe or the onely good, whether the contemplative or the active life doe excell.
> Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 41.

> Then, in the scale of reas'ning life, 'tis plain,
> There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man:
> And all the question (wrangle e'er so long)
> Is only this, if God has placed him wrong.
> Pope, Essay on Man, i. 49.

Syn. 1. To bicker, spar, jangle. See quarrel[1], n.

II.† trans. To contest or dispute, especially in the usually brawling manner of the schools.

> Sir Philip, while they wrangle out their cause, let us agree.
> Brome, Northern Lass, v. 8.

wrangle (rang'gl), n. [< wrangle, v.] An angry dispute; a noisy quarrel.

> I have found the court of assistants usually taken up in little wrangles about coachmen, and adjusting accounts of meal and small beer.
> Swift, Proposal for giving Badges to Beggars.

Syn. Squabble, Altercation, etc. (see quarrel[1]), controversy.

wrangler (rang'glėr), n. [< wrangle + -er[1].] 1. One who wrangles or disputes; a debater; especially, an angry or noisy disputant.

> True, true, ever at odds. They were the common talke of the towne for a paire of wranglers.
> Brome, Sparagus Garden, i. 1.

> You should be free and pleasant in every answer and behaviour, rather like well-bred gentlemen in polite conversation than like noisy and contentious wranglers.
> Watts, Improvement of Mind, I. xiii. § 20.

> I burn to set th' imprison'd wranglers free,
> And give them voice and utt'rance once again.
> Cowper, Task, iv. 34.

> As thy great men are fighters and wranglers, so thy mighty things upon the earth and sea are troublesome and intractable incumbrances.
> Landor, Imag. Conv., Diogenes and Plato.

2†. A stubborn opponent or adversary.

> Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler
> That all the courts of France will be disturb'd > With chaces.
> Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 264.

3. In Cambridge University, one who has attained the first class in the elementary division of the public examination for honors in pure and mixed mathematics, commonly called the mathematical tripos, those who compose the second rank of honors being designated senior optimes, and those of the third order junior optimes. The student taking absolutely the first place in the mathematical tripos used to be called the senior wrangler, those following next in the same division being respectively termed second, third, fourth, etc., wranglers. But in the final examination now, to which only wranglers are admitted, the names are arranged in divisions alphabetically. The name is derived from the public disputations in which candidates for degrees were until recent times required to exhibit their powers. Compare tripos.

> Maule was senior wrangler and senior medallist at Cambridge, and is a lawyer. Greville, Memoirs, Jan. 2, 1831.

wranglership (rang'glėr-ship), n. [< wrangler + -ship.] In Cambridge University, the position or rank of a wrangler.

wranglesome (rang'gl-sum), a. [< wrangle + -some.] Contentious; quarrelsome. Halliwell.

wrangling (rang'gling), n. [< ME. wranglinge, wranglyng; verbal n. of wrangle, v.] Disputation, especially contentious argumentation.

> Much wrangling they had, but at last they confirmed him according to promise, eight shares of land, and so he was dismissed of his charge, with shew of favour and much friendship. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 132.

> We may read what wrangling the Bishops and Monks had about the reading or not reading of Origen.
> Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

wrangous† (rang'us), a. A Scotch form of ranjous.

wrap[1] (rap), v. t.; pret. and pp. wrapped or wrapt, ppr. wrapping. [E. dial. transposed warp; < ME. wrappen, also wlappen (with l for r), > E. lap: see lap[3], and cf. envelop, develop.] 1. To roll or fold together, as a pliable or flexible object: usually with the preposition around (or round) or about: as, to wrap paper about a book.

> This said, he took his mantle's foremost part,
> He gan the same together fold and wrap. Fairfax.

> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.
> Bryant, Thanatopsis.

2. To envelop; surround; cover by winding something round in folds; muffle: often with up: as, to wrap up a child in its blanket; to wrap the body in flannels.

> As a weigh woful he wrapped him ther-inne,
> For no man that he met his morwyng schuld knowe.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 746.

> The Sarazines wrappen here Hedes in white lynnene Clothe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 109.

> I, . . . wrapp'd in mist
> Of midnight vapour, glide secure.
> Milton, P. L., ix. 186.

> The mother . . .
> Then brought a mantle down and wrapt her in it.
> Tennyson, Geraint.

3. To cover and fasten securely, as in paper or pack-sheet, in order to protect from injury or injurious exposure, as in transit or during storage, or in order to conceal: generally with up: as, to wrap up an umbrella or a book to send by express; to wrap up one's things in a bundle.—4. To conceal by involving or enveloping; hide in a mass of different character; cover up or involve generally.

> In these fewe lines I have wrapped vp the most tedious part of Grammer. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 27.

> The evil which is here wrapt up.
> Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 117.

> Wrapping up Religion in strange figures and mysterious non-sense, which the Egyptians were so much given to.
> Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. iii.

Wrapped up in. (a) Bound up with or in; comprised or involved in, entirely associated with or dependent on.

> His [Leontine's] young wife (in whom all his happiness was wrapt up) died. Addison, Spectator, No. 123.

(b) Engrossed in or with, entirely devoted to: as, she is wrapped up in her son; he is wrapped up in his studies.

> O then, O first for your own royal sake,
> And next for ours, wrapp'd up in you, beware
> Of his Designs in time. J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 152.

> The state pedant is wrapt up in news, and lost in politics. Addison, Spectator, No. 105.

(c) Comprised or involved in, as an effect or consequence.

wrap[1] (rap), n. [< wrap[1], v.] An article of dress intended to be wrapped round the person, as on a journey; a wrapper. In the plural, the word is applied collectively to all coverings used, in addition to the usual clothing, as a defense against the weather, as cloaks, shawls, scarfs, and railway-rugs.

> Mrs Aleshine . . . was sitting in her bonnet and wraps, ready to start forth. F. R. Stockton, The Dusantes, ii.

wrap[2]† (rap), v. t. A misspelling of rap[2].

> The least of these delights, that you devise,
> Able to wrap and dazzle human eyes.
> Peele, Arraignment of Paris, ii. 2.

> Wrapp'd in amaze, the matrons wildly stare.
> Dryden, Æneid, v. 860.

wrappage (rap'āj), n. [< wrap[1] + -age.] 1. The act of wrapping.—2. Anything which wraps, or is used for wrapping; collectively, things used as wraps or wrappers.

> It seems somehow the very central essence of us, Song; as if all the rest were but wrappages and hulls!
> Carlyle, Heroes and Hero-Worship, iii.

> Hence was the need, on either side, of a lie
> To serve as decent wrappage.
> Browning, Ring and Book, iv. 523.

> To-morrow this sheet . . . shall be the wrappage to a bar of soap, or the platter for a beggar's broken victuals.
> Lowell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser., vi., note.

wrapper (rap'ėr), n. [< wrap[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who wraps.—2. That in which anything is wrapped or inclosed; an outer covering: as, newspaper wrappers.

> As soon as such a number of books are perfected, the surplus of the various signatures are thrown aside for wrappers and other special uses.
> Rev. W. Tooke, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 480.

Specifically – (a) The loose and detachable cover of paper put about a book bound in cloth to preserve its freshness: sometimes, incorrectly, the sewed or pasted cover of a pamphlet. (b) Tobacco-leaf specially suited or prepared for covering cigars: distinguished from filler. See filler, 4.

> Sumatra tobacco consists of large, strong, flexible leaves, which are imported into this country solely for the purpose of making cigar wrappers. Tax Statistics, XLVIII. 329.

3. A loose garment meant to envelop the whole, or nearly the whole, person: applied to both indoor and outdoor garments, such as dressing-gowns, overcoats, and shawls. Also called loose the name is used of some special form of garment, though for outdoor garments wrap is much more usual.

Nitella . . . was always in a wrapper, nightcap, and slippers when she was not decorated for immediate show.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 115.

Similar mantles, not assumed as wrappers for extra warmth or protection against the weather, were in general use at ceremonies and festivals. Encyc. Brit., VI. 466.

She wore a dismal calico wrapper, which made no compromise with the graciousness of her figure.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 137.

4. An undershirt. [Colloq. or trade use.] — 5. In Fungi, same as volva.

wrapping-paper (rap'ing-pā'pėr), n. See paper.

wrapping-silk (rap'ing-silk), n. See silk.

wrap-rascal (rap'ras'kal), n. [< wrap + obj. rascal; a humorous term, like hap-harlot.] A loose greatcoat worn by people of elegance about 1746, in supposed imitation of the coarse coats of the poorer people; hence, any surtout or long outer garment.

His dress was also that of a horse-dealer — a close-buttoned jockey-coat, or wrap-rascal, as it was then termed, with huge metal buttons, coarse blue upper stockings, called boot-hose, because supplying the place of boots, and a slouched hat. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xiii.

The driver, by means of a wrap-rascal, had covered a great part of the rags of his lower garment.
Thackeray, Irish Sketch-Book, xix.

wrasse (ras), n. [Also, better, wrass; said to be < W. gwrachen, the W. name for the fish being gwrachen y môr.] An acanthopterygian teleost fish of the family Labridæ; any labrid, or labroid fish, having thick fleshy lips, strong sharp teeth, and usually brilliant coloration. See parrot-fish (with cut). They are carnivorous salt-water fishes of littoral habits, haunting chiefly rocky shores, and many of them are esteemed food-fishes. The species to which the name applies as a book-name are very numerous; but those of which wrasse is actually spoken are chiefly the British species, as the ballan-wrasse and the red wrasse. (See cut under Labrus.) In America the best-known wrasses (though not so called) are the common cunner, the tautog, and the fathead. See cuts under these words. — Comber wrasse. Same as comber[1], 2. — Cook wrasse, the striped wrasse, Labrus mixtus. — Ctenoid wrasses, wrasses with ctenoid scales, the Ctenolabridæ. — Cycloid wrasses, wrasses with cycloid scales, the Cyclolabridæ. — Servellan wrasse. Same as ocellatus, 3. — Small-mouthed wrasse, Centrolabrus exoletus. (See also ballan-wrasse, rainbow-wrasse.)

wrasse-fish (ras'fish), n. A wrasse. See Labrus (with cut).

wrastle (ras'l), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal form of wrestle.

wrath (räth, sometimes ráth), n. [< ME. wrathe, wraththe, wraththe, wreththe, wrathe, wreathe, also erroneously wrauth, < AS. (ONorth.) wrǣththo, wrǣtho (= Icel. reithi (for wreithi*) = Sw. Dan. vrede), anger, wrath, < wrāth, angry, wroth: see wroth. Wrath is thus the noun of wroth. The historical pron. is räth, which is also almost or quite universal in the United States.] 1. Fierce anger; vehement indignation; rage.

Yet in his wrauth this thought he euer among,
If he should avenge hym sodenly.
All his pepill wold say he did hym wrong.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1378.

Wrathe of children is overcome soone.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 31.

Then boyling Wrath, stern, cruell, swift, and rash,
That like a Boar her teeth doth grinde and gnash.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Furies.

2†. Heat; impetuosity.

They are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs cannot part them.
Shak., As you Like it, v. 2. 44.

3. The effects of anger; the just punishment of an offense or crime; vengeance. Rom. xiii. 4. — To pour out vials of wrath. See vial. — Syn. 1. Anger, Vexation, Indignation, etc. (see anger[1]).

wrath† (räth), a. An obsolete (in early modern use erroneous) form of wroth.

Wherwat the Prince full wrath his strong right hand
In full avengement heaved up on hie.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. viii. 43.

Oberon is passing fell and wrath.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 20.

wrathe† (räth), v. [< ME. wrathen, wratthen, wrathien, < AS. gewrāthian (= OS. wrōthian = Icel. reitha), be angry, < wrāth, angry: see wroth and wrath, n.] I. intrans. To become wroth or angry; manifest anger.

Than the worthy at his wife wrathet a little,
And blamyt the berde for hir bold speche.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6442.

And appere in his presence whyle hym pleye lyketh,
And yf he wrathie, we mowe be war and hus way roume.
Piers Plowman (C), i. 169.

II. trans. 1. To make wroth or angry; cause wrath or anger in; anger; enrage.

Melechmansur . . . on a day played at the Chesse, and his Sword lay beyde him; and so befelle that on wrathed him, and with his owne propre Sword he was slayn.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 37.

I wol not wrathe him, also mote I thryve.
Chaucer, Prol. to Manciple's Tale, l. 80.

And that es drede perfite in vs and gastely when we dredе to wrethe God in the leste syne that we kane knawe and flese it als venyme.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 12.

2. To be angry with; exhibit anger or wrath to.

Whi wrathhest thou me? y greue thee nought.
Whi art thou to thi freend vnkinde?
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 161.

wrathful (räth'fûl), a. [< ME. wrathful, wrathful, wrathful; < wrath, n., + -ful.] 1. Full of wrath; very angry; greatly incensed.

Strong men, and wrathful that a stranger knight
Should do and almost overdo the deeds
Of Lancelot. Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

2. Expressive of or prompted or characterized by wrath or anger; raging; impetuous; furious: as, wrathful passions; a wrathful countenance.

How now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn
Here in our presence? Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 237.

Like Lightning, swift the wrathful Faulchion flew.
Pope, Iliad, x. 534.

3. Executing wrath; serving as the instrument of wrath. [Rare.]

While we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 87.

= Syn. 1. Indignant, resentful, exasperated, irate.

wrathfully (räth'fûl-i), adv. [< ME. wrathfully; < wrathful + -ly[2].] In a wrathful manner; with anger; angrily.

Then thes Paynymes wrathfully thes thens
Whent, lenyng anon ther stourdy tilolens.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2218.

Kill him boldly, but not wrathfully.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 172.

wrathfulness (räth'fûl-nes), n. The character or state of being wrathful; vehement anger.

wrathily (ra'thi-li), adv. [< wrathy + ly[2].] With wrath or great anger; angrily. [Colloq.]

The master wrathily insisted
G. W. Cable, Old Creole Days, Poison Jone.

wrathless (rath'les), a. [< ME. wrathelees; < wrath, n., + -less.] Free from anger. Waller, Of the Countess of Carlisle's Chamber.

wrathy (ra'thi), a. [< wrath, n., + -y[1].] Angry. [Colloq.]

wrawt, a. [ME. wraw, wrah, wro, pl. wrowe, perverse, angry, fierce; cf. wro, a corner.] Angry; froward; peevish.

With this speche the cook wex wroth and wraw.
Chaucer, Prol. to Manciple's Tale, l. 46.

wrawful, a. [ME., < wraw + -ful.] Peevish; angry.

Ire . . . ofdeth a man, and acceldie maketh hym hevy, thoghtful and wrawful. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

wrawl, v. i. [Prob. a var. of wawl, waul.] To cry as a cat; waul; whine; moan.

Nor practize scoffingly to speake, for that doth imitate
The brutish storke and Elephant, yea, and the wrawling cat.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 288.

Cats that wrawling still did cry Spenser, F. Q., VI. xii. 27.

wrawnesst, n. [< ME. wrawnesse, perverseness, peevishness; < wraw + -ness.] Anger; peevishness; frowardness.

He doth alle thyng with anoy, and with wrawnesse slak neesse and excusacioun. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

wraxling (raks'ling), a. A dialectal form of wrasting for wrestling. Davies. [Prov. Eng.]

As long as there 's a devil or devils, even as was or wasn, in the universe, one will have to turn out to the reveille now and then, wherever one is, and satisfy one's wraxle, rage, or pluck, which Plato averreth (for why, he'd have been a wraxler man, and therefore was a philosopher, and the king of 'em) to be the root of all virtue.
C. Kingsley, Life, II. 53. (Davies.)

wray† (rā), v. t. [< ME. wreyen, wreien, wregen, < AS. wregan = OS. wrogian = OFries. wrōgia = OHG. ruogen = Icel. rœgja = Goth. wrōhjan, accuse, betray. Cf. bewray.] 1. To reveal, disclose.

Thou shalt upon thy treuthe me ayre me hevre
That to no wight thou shalt this conseil wreye.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 317.

The work wreyes the man.
Mir. for Magi, p. 87. (Notes.)

2. To betray.

Hense' tyte, but thou the hye
With doulle her schall thou dye,
That wreyes hym on this wise
York Plays, p. 180.

wret, v. t. Same as wry[2].

wreak[1] (rēk), v. t. [Formerly also wreek; < ME. wreken (pret. wrak, wrek, pl. wreken, pp. wroken, wroke, wreke), < AS. wrecan (pret. wræc, pp. wrecen), wreak, revenge, punish, orig. drive, urge, impel. = OS. wrecan = OFries. wreka = D. wreken, repel, toss, also wreak vengeance, = OHG. rehhan, MHG. recken, ti. rächen, revenge, etc., = Icel. reka (for wreka), drive, thrust, repel, toss, also wreak, = Sw. vräka, reject, refuse, throw, = Dan. vrage, reject, = Goth. wrikan, persecute, ga-wrikan, avenge; cf. Lith. varyti, suffer affliction, vargas, affliction, ORuss. Russ. vragŭ, enemy, foe, persecutor; L. vergere, bend, turn, incline (see verge[2]), urgere, press, urge (see urge), Gr. ῥίπτειν, repel, Skt. √ vraj, turn, twist.] 1. To revenge; avenge: with either the offense or the person offended as the object. [Obsolescent.]

Now tyme, by my trauthe, to take it on hond,
To mene vs with manhode & our mys wreke.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1780.

Thogh his bowe be nat broken
He wol nat with his arwes been wreken
On thee ne me, ne noon of oure figure.
Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Scogan, l. 23.

To send down Justice for to wreak our wrongs.
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 3. 51.

Grant me some knight to do the battle for me,
Kill the foul thief, and wreak me for my son.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

2. To execute; inflict: as, to wreak vengeance on an enemy.

Working that malice on the creatures heere, which he could not there so easily wreake on their Creator.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 25.

On me let Death wreak all his rage.
Milton, P. L., iii. 241.

No Roman fleet came to wreak the imperial revenge on the German shore. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 121.

wreak[1]† (rēk), n. [< ME. wreke, wrake, wreche (= D. wraak); < wreak[1], v.] 1. Revenge; vengeance; furious passion; resentment.

For syn thou take no wreke on me.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 105.

I drede of thyn unhappe,
Lest for thy gilt the wreche of Love procede
On alle hem that ben here and rounde of shape,
That ben so lykly folk in love to spede.
Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Scogan, l. 30.

Our writings are,
By any envious instruments that dare
Apply them to the guilty, made to speak
What they will have to fit their tyrannous wreak.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, iv. 3.

If revenge
An unexpected wreak were ever pleasing,
Or could endear the giver of such blessings,
All these I come adorn'd with.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 1.

2. Punishment.

Therto we wrecched wommen nothyng konne,
When we ben wo, but sitte and wepe and thynke;
Our wreche is this oure owen wo to drynke.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 784.

wreak[2]†, v. An erroneous spelling of reck.

wreaker (rē'kėr), n. [< ME. wreker, wrekere (= MD. wreker), avenger; < wreak[1], v., + -er[1].] One who wreaks.

The stork, the wrekere of avoutrye
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 361.

Infernal furies ske ye wreakers of wrong, . . .
Receive these words, and ske your heavy power Withdraw from me. Surrey, Æneid, iv.

If we let sin alone, his kingdom flourisheth, if we strike at him and hit not the bough he sits on, we move him not; if we do, we are judged partial, personal, and wreakers of our own spleen. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 466.

wreakful† (rēk'ful), a. [Also wreekful; < ME. wrakeful; < wreak + ful.] Revengeful; angry.

What thing is love? It is a power divine,
That reigns in us, or else a wreakful law.
Greene, Sonnetto.

Working wreakfull vengeance on my Foes.
Shak., Tit. And., v. 2. 32 (fol. 1623).

wreakless[1]† (rēk'les), a. [< wreak[1] + -less.] Unpunished; unavenged.

You still wreakless live.
Gnaw, vermin like, things sacred, no awe give
To your devouring. Chapman, Odyssey, ii. 223.

wreakless[2], a. An erroneous spelling of reckless.

wreath (rēth), n. [< ME. wrethe, wrethe, < AS. wrīth, a twisted band, bandage, < writhan (pret. wrāth), writhe, twist: see writhe.] 1. A twisted band; something twisted, as a flowering branch, into a circular form; especially, a sort of crown made of natural or artificial flowers sewed to a stem, or of thin metal-work, filigree, or the like; a garland; a chaplet.

A wrethe of gold arm-greet, of huge wighte,
Upon his heed, set ful of stones brighte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1937.

With bruised arms and wreaths of victory.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 110.

[He] afterward attain'd
The royal Scottish wreath, upholding it in state.
Drayton, Polyolbion, v. 61.

With wreaths of grace he crowns my conquering brows.
Quarles, Emblems, v. 8

A lute she held, and on her head was seen
A wreath of roses red, and myrtles green.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., l. 1128

Round the sufferer's temples bind
Wreaths that endure affliction's heaviest shower,
And do not shrink from sorrow's keenest wind.
Wordsworth.

2. In her.: (a) A garland or diadem for the head (1) A chaplet of flowers or leaves, the general character being described in the blazon. (2) A sort of twist or heavy cord composed of the chief color and the chief metal in the achievement. It is not often used as a bearing, but is placed upon or above the helmet to receive the crest. It is

Wreath, as worn at the end of the 14th century: the origin of the heraldic wreath being under the crest and seeming to support it (From Viollet le Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier Fran., etc.") then shown edgewise, and resembles a short piece of stout rope, and should show three turns of the metal and three of the color, beginning at the dexter side with the metal. Such a wreath may also be borne on the head of a man or a woman. It is then represented in perspective as in nature. (b) The tail of a wild boar: mentioned in the blazon only when of a different tincture from the rest of the bearing. — 3. Something resembling a twisted band; something narrow, long, and circular, of slightly irregular outline.

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths. Milton, P. L., vi. 88.

As wreath of snow, on mountain-breast,
Slides from the rock that gave it rest.
Scott, L. of the L., vi. 27.

A wreath of airy dancers hand-in-hand
Swung round the lighted lantern of the hall.
Tennyson, Gulnevere.

4. A defect in glass, consisting of a wavy appearance, due to want of uniform density. This defect is most common in flint-glass. — 5. The trochal disk of a rotifer with its fringe of cilia. See cuts under Rotifera and trochal. — Civic wreath. See civic. — Purple wreath. See Petrea. — St. Peter's wreath. Same as Italian vine (which see, under vine).

Wreath Circular

Wreath circular, in her., a wreath shown fully, not edgewise or in perspective, forming, therefore, a complete circle. It is in this form that a wreath is generally shown when used as a bearing.

wreath, v. See wreathe.

wreath-animalcule (rēth'an-i-mal'kūl), n. An animalcule of the family Peridinidæ.

wreathe (rēᵺ), v.; pret. and pp. wreathed (pp. also wreathen), ppr. wreathing. [Also wreath; < ME. wrethen; < wreath, n.] I. trans. 1. To twist; form by twisting.

Of them the shepheard which hath charge in chief
In Triton, blowing loud his wreathed horne
Spenser, Colin Clout, l. 345

Two chains of pure gold . . . of wreathen work.
Ex. xxviii. 14.

An adder
Wreathed up in fatal folds.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 879

And in the acru'd ship, with a well-wreath'd cord,
They stiatly bound me Chapman, Odyssey, xiv. 485

They killed a man which was a first borne, wreathing his head from his bodie, and embalming the same with salt and spices Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 137

2†. To writhe; contort; distort.

Then walks off melancholic, and stands wreathed,
As he were pinned up to the arras thus
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 2.

Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreathes his shining body round
Gay, Rural Sports, i.

3. To form into a wreath; adjust as a wreath or circularly; cause to pass about something.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreathed itself.
Shak., As you Like it, iv. 3. 109.

Then he found a door
And darkling felt the sculptured ornament
That wreathen round it made it seem his own.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

4. To form or make by intertwining; also, to twist together or intertwine; combine, as several things into one, by twisting and intertwining

From his slack hand the garland wreathed for Eve Down dropp'd. Milton, P. L., ix. 892.

5. To surround with a wreath or with anything twisted or twined; infold; twist, twine, or fold round.

Each wreathed in the other's arms.
Shak., Tit. And., ii. 3. 25.

Dusk faces with white silken turbans wreathed.
Milton, P. R., iv. 76.

And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance.
Dryden, Æneid, vii. 549.

Wreathed in smoke the ship stood out to sea.
M. Arnold, Balder Dead, iii

6. To form or become a wreath about; encircle.

In the Flow'rs that wreathe the sparkling Bowl Fell Adders hiss Prior, Solomon, ii.

Wreathed column, in arch., a column so shaped as to present a twisted or spiral form.

II. intrans. 1. To take the form of a wreath; hence, to mingle or interlace, as two or more things with one another.

A bow'r
Of wreathing trees.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Eclogues, ix. 85.

2. In milling, to hug the eye of the millstone so closely as to retard or prevent its descent: said of flour or meal.

wreathen (rē'ᵺn), p. a. [< ME. wrethen, var. of writhen, pp. of writhe: see writhen. In present use wreathen is regarded as a poetical form for wreathed, pp. of wreathe, v.] Wreathed; twisted; specifically, in her., having many coils or circular curves, as a serpent when the body is coiled in different parts of its length.

The hegge also . . .
With sicamour was set and eglatere
Wrethen in fere so wel and cunningly Flower and Leaf, l. 57.

wreather (rē'ᵺėr), n. One who or that which wreathes, twists, or twines.

Wreather of poppy buds and weeping willows!
Keats, Sleep and Poetry.

wreath-shell (rēth'shel), n. Any member of the Turbinidæ, and especially of the genus Turbo. The species are numerous, and some of them highly ornamental when polished. See cuts under Turbo, Imperator, and operculum.

wreathy (rē'ᵺi), a. [< wreath + *-y*¹.] 1. Twisted; curled; spiral. Sir T. Browne. — 2. Surrounded or decked with a wreath or with something resembling a wreath.

Shake the wreathy spear. Dryden, Æneid, iv. 458.

wrecchet, wrecchedt. Middle English forms of wretch, wretched.

wrechet, n. See *wreak*¹.

wreck¹ (rek), n. [< ME. wrak, wrek, wrec, < AS. wræc, expulsion, banishment, exile, misery (= D. wrak, wreck, = Icel. rek (for wrek), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, = Sw. vrak, refuse, trash, wreck, = Dan. vrag, wreck), < wrecan = Icel. reka, etc., drive: see *wreak*¹, and cf. *wrack*¹, a doublet of *wreck*¹.] 1. The destruction, disorganization, disruption, or ruin of anything by force and violence; dilapidation: as, the wreck of a bridge; the wreck of one's fortunes.

Hence grew the general wreck and massacre.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 135.

The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.
Addison, Cato, v. 1.

2. That which is in a state of wreck or ruin, or remains from the operation of any destroying agency; as, the building is a mere wreck; he is but the wreck of his former self.

But still the brave old soul held on, making the most of the wreck of life, now drifting alone to the Islands of the Blessed. Theodore Parker, Historic Americans, vi.

Naught remains the saddening tale to tell,
Save home's last wreck the cellar and the well!
O. W. Holmes, Island Ruin.

3. The partial or total destruction of a vessel at sea or in any navigable water, by any accident of navigation or by the force of the elements; shipwreck.

Go, go, begone, to save your ship from wreck,
Which cannot perish, having thee on board.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 136.

4. A vessel ruined by wreck; the hull and spars, more or less dismembered and shattered, of a vessel cast away or completely disabled by breaching, staving, or otherwise breaking.

In the statute of Westminster the first (3 Edw. I., c. 4), the time of limitation of claims given by the charter of Henry II. is extended to a year and a day, . . . and it enacts that, if a man, a dog, or a cat escape alive, the vessel shall not be adjudged a wreck. Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

5. That which is cast ashore by the sea; shipwrecked property, whether a part of the ship or of the cargo; wreckage; in old Eng. common law, derelict of the sea cast upon land within the body of a country, and not in the possession of the owner or his agents. Wreck, or more fully wreck of the sea, was at common law applied only to wrecked property cast by the sea upon the land; and this included things grounded — that is, not floating at the time of seizure, although in a position where the tide would float them again. All such property was originally the perquisite of the crown, or of its tenant the lord of the manor, but in course of time an exception was made of wrecks from which any living thing escaped to land, in which case a presumption that an owner would appear arose and the property was preserved for a year and a day, after which if no claim was established the right of the crown was recognized. Wrecked matter floating was within the jurisdiction not of the common-law courts, but of admiralty, and known as derelict, or derelict of the sea. This too was a perquisite of the crown, claimed under the name of a droit of admiralty. Such matter was classed as flotsam, jetsam, and lagan or ligan (which see). In the United States the right to derelict for which the owner does not appear is in the Federal government, the right to wreck for which he does not appear is in the State to whose coast it comes, usually in either case to the right of the rescuer of it to a compensation known as salvage.

6. Seaweeds cast ashore by storms; wrack. — Commissioners of wrecks (in Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island), receivers of wrecks (in Great Britain), wreck-masters (in New York and Texas), officers whose duty it is to take charge of wrecked property on the part of the coast for which they are appointed, and preserve it for the owner, or, if unclaimed, for the state.

Wreck commissioner, in Great Britain, one of a tribunal consisting of not more than three, appointed by the lord chancellor, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 and 40 Vict., c. 80), for the purpose of investigating shipping casualties.

wreck¹ (rek), v.; pret. and pp. wrecked, ppr. wrecking. [< *wreck*¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To cause the wreck of, as a vessel; suffer to be ruined or destroyed in the course of navigation or management: said specifically of the person under whose charge a vessel is at the time of its wreck, and usually implying blame, even in case of misfortune.

Friends, this frail bark of ours, when sorely tried,
May wreck itself without the pilot's guilt,
Without the captain's knowledge.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

2. To cause the downfall or overthrow of; ruin; shatter; destroy; bring into a disabled or ruinous condition by any means: as, to wreck a railroad-train or a bank; to wreck the fortunes of a family.

Weak and envy'd, if they should conspire
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iii. 17.

The meeting-houses of the Dissenters were everywhere wrecked. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., I.

3. To involve in a wreck; imperil or damage by wreck: as, a wrecked sailor; wrecked cargo.

Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wrecked as homeward he did come.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 3. 26.

The spurious tea men are also the buyers of wrecked tea — that is, of tea which has been part of the salvage of a wrecked vessel.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 151.

Like golden ripples hasting to the land
To wreck their freight of sunshine on the strand.
Lowell, Legend of Brittany, l. 18.

II. intrans. To suffer wreck or ruin. [Rare.]

Rocks, whereon greatest men have oftest wreck'd.
Milton, P. R., ii. 228.

wreck²† (rek), v. and n. An obsolete form of *wreak*¹.

wreckage (rek'āj), n. [< *wreck*¹ + -age.] 1. The act of wrecking, or the state of being wrecked.

Wreckage and dissolution are the appointed issue.
Carlyle, French Rev., II. v. 2.

2. That which remains of or from a wreck of any kind; wrecked material in general.

Only a few years ago, the procession of the fat ox remained. . . . a real piece of wreckage from vanished civilizations. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXII. 247.

Littered above the pavement with the wreckage and refuse of the market. W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 61.

wreck-chart (rek'chärt), n. A chart showing the location and date of wrecks on any coast, as an aid in avoiding them or as a guide in searching for them.

wrecker (rek'ėr), n. [< *wreck*¹ + *-er*¹.] 1. A person who purposely causes a wreck by wrecking age of any kind, or a person who commits depredation upon such wreckage. Specifically—(a) One who lures a ship to destruction on a dangerous coast by false lights or signals, or otherwise, for the purpose of plunder; or one who makes a business of watching for and plundering wrecked vessels. Such wreckers formerly abounded in many parts of the world, sometimes including whole communities in favorable localities.

Those mad days of the Buccaneers and their nominally more respectable descendants, the Wreckers, are gone.
Amer. Jour. Psychol., II. 522.

(b) One who causes the wreck or ruin of anything; one who lays snares or uses artful or dishonest means to cause physical, financial, or moral wreckage: as, a train-wrecker (on a railroad); a bank-wrecker; the wrecker of another's character.

2. A person employed in recovering wrecked or disabled vessels, or cargo and other property from such vessels, on account of the owners, underwriters, or other persons legitimately concerned; also, a vessel employed in this service.

wreck-fish (rek'fish), n. The stone-bass, cernier, cherna, or cherne, Polyprion cernium. See Polyprion, and cut under stone-bass.

wreck-free (rek'fre), a. Exempted from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels. This privilege was granted to the Cinque Ports by a charter of Edward I.

wreckful (rek'ful), a. [< wreck[1] + -ful. Cf. wreckful.] Causing wreck; producing or involving destruction or ruin. [Archaic and poetical.]

The southern wind with brackish breath
Dispersed them [the ships] all amongst the wreckful rocks.
Marlowe and Nashe, Tragedy of Dido, I. 2.

O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out Against the wreckful siege of battering days?
Shak., Sonnets, lxv.

A summer mere with sudden wreckful gusts
From a side-gorge. Tennyson, Harold, iii. 1.

wrecking-car (rek'ing-kär), n. A car provided with means and appliances for clearing wreckage or other obstructions from a railroad-track. Sometimes it is a long platform-car fitted with a small derrick and a house at one end. [U. S.]

wrecking-instrument (rek'ing-in'strö-ment), n. Same as pocket-relay.

wrecking-pump (rek'ing-pump), n. A special steam-pump of great capacity, used in freeing sunken or damaged vessels from water.

wreck-master (rek'mas'tėr), n. 1. A person appointed by law to take charge of goods, etc., cast ashore from a wreck. See under wreck, n.—2. A person appointed by owners or salvors to take charge of a wrecked ship or cargo.

wreck-wood (rek'wůd), n. Wood or timber from wrecked vessels.

There stood upon it, in these days, a single rude house of unecemented stones, approached by a pier of wreck-wood.
R. L. Stevenson, Memoirs of an Islet.

Wredin's test. Absence of a certain gelatinous matter from the middle ear of the fetus, taken as evidence that a child has breathed and therefore had been born alive.

wren (ren), n. [Also dial. wran; < ME. wrenne, wranne, a wren, < AS. wrenna, wrænna, a wren.] A very small migratory and insectivorous singing-bird of Great Britain and other European countries, with a slender bill and extremely short tail, and of dark reddish-brown coloration varied with black, inhabiting shrubbery, and belonging to the family Troglodytidæ; hence, any member of this family, and, with a qualifying term, one of various other small birds of different families, as certain warblers, kinglets, etc. See the phrases below. Wren originally specified the bird technically known as Sylvia troglodytes, Troglodytes parvulus, T. vulgaris, T. europæus, Anorthura troglodytes, A. communis, etc., the only member of its genus and family found in Europe. It is only about four inches long, very active and sprightly, with a pleasing song at times, and a characteristic habit of carrying the short tail cocked up. This little bird figures extensively in English folklore, and has a host of local, provincial, or familiar names with wren expressed or implied, as bobby, cutty, kitty, jenny, sally, scuttyciddy, tiddy, titty, also our Lady of Heaven's hen, etc. This wren is a northerly type, and one of several species of the restricted genus Troglodytes (or Anorthura), as T. fumigatus of Japan, T. alascensis of Alaska, and the well-known winter wren of North America, T. hiemalis, which is no closer the English wren as to be by some naturalists regarded as only a variety. (See cut under Troglodytes.) In the United States the commonest wren, and the one which plays there the part taken by the English wren in Europe, is the house wren, T. ædon or T. domesticus, which abounds in most parts of North America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, runs into several geographical races, and is represented in Mexico and warmer parts of America by several other varieties or congeneric species. The common house wren in settled districts attaches itself closely to man, and nests by preference in crotches and crannies of outhouses, though it is more retired and wood-loving in other regions. It trills a hearty and voluble song, and lays numerous (from 6 to 10) pinkish-white eggs very heavily spotted with brown, in the large mass of rubbish which it carries into its hole for a nest. This wren is migratory, and in many parts of the United States its presence is complementary to that of the winter wren. Certain wrens of North America, of the genus (Nistothorus (and its section Telmatodytes), inhabit marshes and low wet shrubbery, and are known as marsh-wrens. (See the generic names, marsh-wren, and rush-wren.) Various others, chiefly of southern regions of the United States, and thence southward, as the great Carolina and Bewick's, are of the genus Thryothorus (which see, with cut). Others are the rock-wrens, cañon wrens, and cactus-wrens of the genera Salpinctes, Catherpes, and Campylorhynchus. (See the compound and technical names, with cuts.) All these belong to essentially Neotropical types which have but few outlying forms in the United States, though richly represented by very numerous species of various genera in the warmer parts of America (as those above named Thryophilus, Uropsila, Henicorhina, Cyphorhinus, and Microcerculus). The wrens above noted are all properly so called (Troglodytidæ); with the exceptions named, they are all American. The qualified application of wren to various small birds of both hemispheres including some of other families than Troglodytidæ, is given in the phrases following.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 2. 9.

Alaskan wren. See def. above. Bay wren, Cinnycerthia unirufa, of the United States of Colombia. Bewick's wren. See Thryothorus. Black wren, the hedge-sparrow, Accentor modularis: a misnomer. See cut under Accentor. [Ireland.] Blue wren. Same as superb warbler (which see under warbler). Cabot's wren, Thryothorus albinucha, of Yucatan. Cashmere wren, Troglodytes nipalensis, confined to the hills of the said country. Chestnut wren, Thryophilus castaneus, of Panama. David's wren, Spelæornis troglodytoides, of the mountains of western Szechuen. Fan-tailed wrens, the Campylorhynchinæ. See cut under Campylorhynchus. Faroe wren, a dark variety of the common wren found in the Faroes and Iceland. Fire-crested wren, the fire-crested kinglet, Regulus ignicapillus, closely resembling the goldcrest. Floridian wren, a variety of the great Carolina wren found as a local race in Florida. Golden-crested wren, the goldcrest (see cut under goldcrest); also, the American golden-crested kinglet, Regulus satrapa. Golden-crowned wren, the golden-crested wren of Europe, Regulus cristatus. See cut under goldcrest. Golden wren, gold wren. (a) The willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus (b) The goldcrest or kinglet, Regulus cristatus. See cut under goldcrest. [Eng. in both senses.] Great Carolina wren. See Thryothorus (with cuts). Green wren, the yellow wren, or willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus, also, P. sibilatrix. See cut under wood-wren. [Eng.] Hill-wrens, various small wren-like or tit-like birds of the hill country in India, as of the genera Pnoepyga, Tesia, etc. See hill tit under tit[2] (with cuts), also cuts under Pnoepyga, Tesia, and tit-babbler. House wrens, certain American members of the genus Troglodytes specifically, T. ædon and its congeners. See def. above. Japanese wren, Troglodytes fumigatus, closely related to the English wren, winter wren and Alaskan wren. Long-billed wren, Thryophilus longirostris, of Brazil. Long-tailed wren, Cranchila leucogastra, of the Isthmus and Manitour Hills, commonly placed in the genus Uropsila. Muffle wren, the willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. [Eng.] Musician wren, Cyphorhinus musicus, of Guiana. Nepal wren, Troglodytes nipalensis, of the Himalayan region from Cashmere to Nepal and Sikhim. Pacific wren, that variety of the winter wren which is found along the Pacific coast of the United States. Pale wren, Troglodytes pallidus, the common wren of central Asia. Parkman's wren, a western variety of the house wren named Troglodytes parkmanus by Audubon in 1839, after Dr. George Parkman (1790–1849). Ruby-crowned wren, the American ruby-crowned kinglet, Regulus calendula. [U. S.] Satrap-crowned wren, the American golden-crested kinglet, Regulus satrapa. Sedge-wren. Same as sedge-warbler. [Local, British.] Spotted wren, Tesia maculosa, a rare Indian species found in the neighborhood of Darjeeling. Texan wren, a variety of the great Carolina wren found in Texas and southward. Vinous-brown wren, the Japanese wren. Wedge-billed wren, Sphenocichla humei, of Sikhim. White-bellied wren. (a) A western variety of Bewick's wren. (b) Uropsila leucogastra, of Oaxaca and Tamaulipas in Mexico, originally described by J. Gould in 1836 as Troglodytes leucogastra, a name subsequently retained to denote the white-bellied wren (a). White-breasted wren, Henicorhina prostheleuca, of Central America. White wren, the willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. [Eng.] Winter wren. See def., and cut under Troglodytes. Yellow wren, the willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus, and the wood-warbler, P. sibilatrix. See cut under wood-wren. [Eng.] (See also cactus-wren, cañon wren, marsh wren, reed-wren, rock-wren, yellow wren, wood-wren.)

wren-babbler (ren'bab'lėr), n. A babbler of small size or otherwise resembling a wren: indiscriminately applied to various such timeliine birds. See Alcippe, 2, babbler, 2, hill tit (under tit[2]), hill-wrens (under wren), tit-babbler, and Timalia, with various cuts.

wrench (rench), n. [Also dial. wrinch; < ME. wrench, wrenche, also unassibilated wrenk, wrenke, wrink, < AS. wrenc, wrenc, guile, fraud, deceit (the orig. physical sense being preserved in mod. E., but not recorded in ME. and AS.), = MHG. runc, quick movement, motion, G. ränk, trick, artifice, intrigue, G. dial. also crookedness; from the root of wring, cf. mod. E. wrong, a and n., in the metaphorical senses, ult. from the root of wring.] I. n. 1. A crooked or tortuous action; a fraudulent device; a trick; a deceit; a stratagem.

His wyly wrenches thou me mayst not flee.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 70.

For it bides a man with wrenches and with wyles,
And as the last it hem begyles.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1360, quoted in Relig. Pieces (E. E. T. S.), p. 105.

2. A violent twist or turn given to something; a pulling awry; a sudden twisting out of shape, place, or relation; used of both material and immaterial things: as, to sprain one's foot by a wrench; the change was a great wrench to his feelings.

If one strains make them not confess, let them be stretched but one wrench higher, and they cannot be silent.
Bp. Hall, The Ark and Dagon.

There are certain animals to whom tenacity of position is a Leg of life: they can never flourish again after a single wrench.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, iii. 1.

I might chance give his meaning a wrench,
He talking his patois and I English French.
Lowell, Black Preacher.

3. A sharp turn; specifically, in coursing, the turning of a hare at less than a right angle. Encyc. Brit., VI. 515.—4. In mathematical physics, a force, or variation of force, tending to give a body a twist about an imaginary or real screw.—5. A tool consisting essentially of a bar of metal having jaws at one end a, monkey-wrench; b, wagon-wrench; c, socket-wrench for bolt-heads; d, socket-wrench with crow-bar handle, also called key-wrench; e, bed-wrench; f, screw-wrench; g, machine-wrench; h, combination wrench, for opening a hammer and a pipe-wrench; i, flat jack-screw wrench; k, alligator-wrench; monkey-wrench.

Wrenches

adapted to catch upon the head of a bolt or a nut, or to hold a metal pipe or rod, so as to turn it. Some wrenches have a variety of jaws to suit different sizes and shapes of nuts and bolts, and others, as the monkey-wrench, have an adjustable inner jaw.

6†. Means of compulsion. [Rare.]

He . . . resolved to make his profit of this business . . . of Naples as a wrench and means for peace.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 90.

wrench (rench), v. [< ME. wrenchen, wrench, twist, turn, < AS. wrencan, deceive, = MHG. G. renken, G. (verrenken, dislocate, twist, sprain; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To twist or turn about with effort or violence; give a sudden twist to; hence, to distort; pervert; turn awry.

Now there can no bein a maker a fowler fault then . . . to wrench his words to le pleine rime
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 67.

I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 120.

2. To injure or pain by a twisting action; produce a distorting effect in or upon; distort; sprain: as, to wrench one's ankle.

Through the space
Of twelve ensuing days his frame was wrenched,
Till nature rested from her work in death.
Wordsworth.

3. To pull or draw with torsion; extract by twisting or tortuous action; hence, to wrest forcibly or violently.

Wrench his sword from him. Shak., Othello, v. 2. 253.

To wrench it [a fixed opinion] out of their minds is hardly less difficult than pulling up an oak Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

II. intrans. To have or undergo a wrenching motion; turn twistingly. [Rare.]

Let not thy venturous steps approach too nigh
Where, gaping wide, low steps Cellarius lie,
Should the Shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,
And overturn the wedding Huckster's Stall Gay, Trivia, iii. 139.

wrench-hammer (rench'ham'ėr), n. A hammer fitted with a movable jaw so that it can also serve as a spanner.

wrench-handle (rench'han'dl), n. A double-armed wrench for use with dies in cutting threads and similar work. E. H. Knight.

wrenning (ren'ing), n. [< wren + -ing.] The act or sport of stoning a wren to death on St.

Stephen's day, in the north of England, in commemoration of the martyrdom of the saint.

wrenning-day (ren'ing-dā), n. St. Stephen's day, on which wrenning is practised in the north of England.

wren-tit (ren'tit), n. A bird, Chamæa fasciata, peculiar to California, of uncertain relations, usually made the type and sole member of a family Chamæidæ: so called from its uniting, to some extent, the habits of a wren and of a titmouse. It is about 6 inches long, with very short rounded wings, a long tail, the beak somewhat like that of a titmouse, the plumage remarkably soft and loose, of a dark-brown color, paler below, and the eye white. See Chamæa (with cut). Also called ground tit.

wrest (rest), v. [< ME. wresten, wrasten, wrasten, < AS. wrǽstan, twist forcibly (cf. AS. wræst, firm, strong, = Icel. reista, wrest; cf. Dan. vriste, wrest); prob., with formative -t (-tht > -st), < wrīthan (pret. wrāth), writhe, twist: see writhe, and cf. wreath[1]. Cf. also wrist, wrestle.]

I. trans. 1. To twist or turn; especially, to deflect, as from the existing or normal state, character, course, or significance: now used chiefly of immaterial things.

> And finaly he gan his herte wreste
> To trusten hire, and tok it for the beste.
> Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1427.
>
> Wrest once the law to your authority
> To do a great right do a little wrong.
> Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 215.

The chemists have absurdly, and too literally, wrested and perverted the elegance of the term micro cosm.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

2. To remove, obtain, or bring by or as if by twisting or wringing; extract or pluck with much effort; wring; wrench.

> Thay . . . wrast out myn ygen.
> Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 80.
>
> In May whan the nightyngale
> Wrestes out her notes many; all as pure as glas.
> Joseph of Arimathie (E. E. T. S.), p. 40.

Industrious people wresting a wholesome living out of that stern environment.
Froude, Sketches, p. 92.

II.† intrans. To wrestle; contend; strive.

> Thei . . . wrested against the truth of a long time.
> Bp. Gardiner, Of True Obedience, fol. 33. (Encyc. Dict.)

wrest (rest), n. [< ME. wrest, wreste, wrast; from the verb.] 1†. A twist; a writhing.

> First to the ryght honde thou shalte go,
> Sitthen to the left honde thy neghe thou cast;
> To hem thou beghe withouten wrast.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 300.

2†. A tortuous action; distortion; perversion; hence, a ruse; a stratagem. Compare wrench, n., 1.

> Than shall we wayte tham with a wrest,
> And make all wast that thei have wroght.
> York Plays, p. 133.

3. An instrument of the wrench, screw-key, or spanner kind; specifically, a key or small wrench for tuning stringed musical instruments, as the harp or piano, by turning the pins to which the strings are fastened. See tuning-hammer, and tuning-key (under key[1]).

> The Minstrel . . . wore around his neck a silver chain, by which hung the wrest, or key with which he tuned his harp.
> Scott, Ivanhoe, xliii.

4. The partition in an overshot wheel which determines the form of the buckets. E. H. Knight.

wrest-beer† (rest'bēr), n. A kind of beer which, according to Selden, was kept in cellar for a year to mature.

> In brewing of Wrest-Beer, there's a great deal of business in grinding the Mault.
> Selden Table-Talk, p. 81.

wrest-block (rest'blok), n. In the pianoforte, a wooden block, often made of several pieces, into which the wrest-pins are driven. It is of great importance in securing permanence of tune and sonority of tone. Also called pin-block, back-block, wrest-plank.

wrester (res'tėr), n. [< wrest + -er[1].] One who wrests or perverts.

wrestle (res'l), v.; pret. and pp. wrestled, ppr. wrestling. [Also formerly or dial. wrastle, Sc. warstle; < ME. wrestlen, wrastlen, wrastelen, wrystelen, < AS. wræstlian, wrestle (rare), the form more commonly found being wræxlan (> ME. wraxlen, wraxlen) = OFries. wraxlia = MD. wrastelen, worstelen = MLG. wrestelen, worstelen, LG. wo-seln, worstels, wrestle; freq. of wrest.]

I. intrans. 1†. To twist or wind about; especially, to writhe; wriggle; squirm; struggle, as with the limbs.

> Perfrus peyned hym sore to a-rise and turned wrastelinge; but all that availed not.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 656.
>
> From hence the river having with a great turning compass after much wrestling gotten out towards the North > Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 279. (Davies.)
>
> And aye she wrestled, and aye she swam,
> Till she swam to dry land.
> The Water o' Wearie's Well (Child's Ballads, I. 200).

2. To struggle in a hand-to-hand contest; strive, as for some advantage or for mastery, with bodily strength and adroitness: specifically, to struggle, as two persons striving to throw each other to the ground, especially in a contest governed by certain fixed rules.

> For many a man that may not stonde a pul,
> It liketh hym at wrastelyng for to be > Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 165.
>
> Wrothely thai wrythyne and wrystille togeders.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1161.
>
> And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day. Gen. xxxii. 24.
>
> You have wrestled well, and overthrown
> More than your enemies.
> Shak., As you Like it, i. 2. 266.
>
> Each one may here a chooser be,
> For room ye need not wrastle.
> Drayton, Nymphidia.

Hence — 3. To contend in any way, as in a struggle for mastery; maintain opposition or resistance, especially against a moral foe or force; strive.

> I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick,
> To wish him wrestle with affection,
> And never to let Beatrice know it.
> Shak., Much Ado, iii. 1. 42.
>
> Put on the whole armour of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, for we wrestle not against flesh and blood but against spiritual wickedness.
> Eph. vi. 12.
>
> 'Twill be some pleasure then to take his Breath,
> When he shall strive, and wrestle with his Death.
> Cowley, Davideis, i.

4. To deal, as with a troublesome duty; apply one's self vigorously; grapple: as, to wrestle with a knotty problem; to wrestle with a distasteful task. [Colloq.] — 5. Hence, to devote one's self earnestly to prayer; pray. [Cant.]

> My reverend Clergy, look ye say
> The best of thanksgiving ye ha'e,
> And wrastle for a sunny day.
> Scott, Carle, now the King's Come, ii.

II. trans. 1. To contend with in wrestling: as, I will wrestle you for so much. [Colloq.] — 2. On a cattle-range, to throw for the purpose of branding, as an animal. [Slang, western U. S.]

> A fire is built, the irons heated, and a dozen men dismount to, as it is called, wrestle the calves.
> T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 861.

wrestle (res'l), n. [Also dial. wrastle; < wrestle, v.] A bout at wrestling; a wrestling-match.

> Corineus, . . . whom in a wrestle the giant catching aloft, with a terrible hugg broke three of his ribs.
> Milton, Hist. Eng., i.
>
> If he had gone out for a few days with his sinewy cousins in the country, and tried a wrestle with one of them, he would have quickly found that his body was a pretty slim affair.
> Tribune Book of Sports, p. 5

wrestler (res'lėr), n. [< ME. wrastlere, wrestler; < wrestle + -er[1].] 1. One who wrestles; specifically, one who makes a practice of wrestling, as a professed athlete.

> Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?
> Shak., As you Like it, i. 1. 94.

2. One who wrestles cattle on a range. [Slang, western U. S.]

> The calf-wrestlers, grimy with blood, dust, and sweat, work like beavers.
> T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 861.

wrestling (res'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wrestle, v.] The act of trying to throw another person to the ground; the act of two persons contending which shall throw the other to the ground and overpower him. Wrestling, as a game subject to special rules, is of great antiquity. It was held in high esteem by the Greeks and their youth were taught it by special masters as part of the public education. In its highest and simplest form it was the fifth of the five tests of the pentathlon. In this contest the wrestlers wrestled standing and naked, any hold being allowed, and three falls constituting victory. Wrestling, in combination with boxing formed the arduous and dangerous contest known as the pancratium, a contest much more resembling a fight to a finish than an athletic contest. A third form of wrestling, which does not seem to have come down to modern times, consisted in interlocking the fingers, pushing the palms of the hands together, and twisting the joints and wrists, without the assistance of any other member or of any hold of the body. The highest and purest form of Greek wrestling does not appear to have been transplanted to Rome, although the more contentious and cruel pancratium — a sport more nearly allied to the Roman gladiatorial spirit — was introduced there by Caligula, and became very popular.

> Go not to the wrastelinge, ne to scholynge at eek.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 40.

wrest-pin (rest'pin), n. In the pianoforte and harp, a steel pin driven into the wrest-block or frame, around which one end of a string is wound, and by turning which the string may be tuned; a tuning-pin. The upper part of the pin is square in section, so as to be turned by a tuning-hammer or -key. See cut under harp. — Wrest-pin plate, in the pianoforte, a metal plate through which the wrest-pins are screwed into the wrest-block.

wrest-plank (rest'plangk), n. Same as wrest-block.

wretch (rech), n. and a. [< ME. wrecche, wrechche, wrecche, wrechche, < AS. wrecca, wrecca, wrecca, outcast, exile (= OS. wrekkio, an adventurer, warrior, = OHG. wreccho, recche, a banished man, exile, stranger, adventurer, MHG. G. recke, a warrior, hero, giant), lit. 'one driven out'; cf. wræc, exile, < wrecan, drive out, banish, persecute, avenge, wreak: see wreak[1].] I. n. 1. A very miserable person; one who is in a state of desperate unhappiness or misfortune, or is exposed to unavoidable suffering or disgrace.

> I wrecche, which that wepe and waille thus,
> Was whylom wyf to King Capaneus.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 78.
>
> Fly, ye Wretches, fly, and get away, for your King is slain.
> Baker, Chronicles, p. 15.
>
> The poor wretch, half dead with fear, expected every moment to fall by the bloody hands of the Djawi.
> Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 360.

2. A sorry or contemptible creature; a despicable person: a term of opprobrium applied to one who has incurred condemnation by misconduct, and often used on slight occasion and with little intended force.

> Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou livest
> To walk where any honest men resort.
> Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 27.
>
> Does not every dowager in London point to George Fitz-Boodle as to a dissolute wretch whom young and old should avoid?
> Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions.

3. Body; creature; thing: used (in some manner that indicates the intention) of a person regarded with some degree of kindly or ironical commiseration, or, when genuine words of endearment seem inadequate, with tender sympathy or passion, or even with admiration.

> Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
> But I do love thee!
> Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 90.
>
> Poor wretch was never frighted so.
> Drayton, Nymphidia, st. 27.
>
> Come forth,
> Fond wretch, and know thyself and him aright.
> Shelley, Adonais, xlvii.

II.† a. Miserable; wretched.

> Thu wreche wiht.
> Owl and Nightingale, l. 556.

wretchcock†, n. See wretchock.

wretched (rech'ed), a. [< ME. wrecched, wrechched, wrichched, wretched, miserable; < wretch + -ed[2]. For the form, cf. wicked[1].] 1. Suffering from or affected by extreme misery or distress; deeply afflicted; miserable; unhappy.

> Thir wormes etc that wreche [var. wrecched] manne.
> Old Eng. Metr. Homilies (B), l. 215. (Morris and Skeat.)
>
> I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine.
> Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 158.
>
> O wretched husband of a wretched wife!
> Born with one fate, to one unhappy life!
> Pope, Iliad, xxii. 606.
>
> All his life long he had been learning how to be wretched, as one learns a foreign tongue.
> Hawthorne, Seven Gables, x.

2. Characterized by or causing misery or unhappiness; very afflicting, annoying, or uncomfortable; distressingly bad in condition or relation: as, the wretched condition of a prison; wretched weather; a wretched prospect.

> Unhappy, wretched, hateful day!
> Shak., R. and J., iv. 5. 48.
>
> It was not merely during the three hours and a half which Uncle Sam claimed as his share of my daily life that this wretched numbness held possession of me.
> Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 39.
>
> The wretched business of warfare must finally become obsolete all over the globe.
> J. Fiske, Amer. Pol. Ideas, p. 161.

3. Of miserable character or quality; despicable; contemptible; reprehensible; strongly objectionable: used of persons or things: as, a wretched blunderer or quibbler; a wretched quibble; wretched stuff.

> Safe where no critics damn, no dunes molest,
> Where wretched Withers, Ward, and Gildon rest.
> Pope, Dunciad, i. 290.
>
> At war with myself and a wretched race.
> Tennyson, Maud, x. 4.

4. Worthless; paltry; very poor, mean, insufficient, unsatisfactory, unskilful, or the like: as, a wretched poem; a wretched cabin; a wretched defense or piece of work.

> Affected noise is the most wretched thing
> That to contempt can empty scribblers bring.
> Roscommon, Translated Verse.

=Syn. 1. Furlorn, woebegone. — 2. Vile, sorry, shabby, pitiful.

wretchedhead, n. [< ME. wrecchedhede; < wretched + -head.] Misery; wretchedness. Rob. of Gloucester, p. 102.

wretchedly (rech'ed-li), adv. [< ME. wrecchedliche; < wretched + -ly[2].] In a wretched or worthless manner; miserably; contemptibly; poorly.

Thei lyven fulle wrecchedliche; and thei eten but ones in the day, and that but lytille, neuthur in Courtes ne in other places. Mandeville, Travels, p. 251.

Nor yet by kindly death she perished;
But wretchedly before her fatal day.
Surrey, Æneid, iv. 930.

The defenses of Plymouth were wretchedly insufficient. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv

He touches on the wretchedly careless performances of early comedy. Amer. Jour. Philol., X. 368.

wretchedness (rech'ed-nes), n. [< ME. wrecchednesse; < wretched + -ness.] 1. The state or condition of a suffering wretch; a wretched or distressful state of being; great misery or affliction.

Is wretchedness deprived that benefit,
To end itself by death? Shak., Lear, iv. 6, 61.

2. Wretched character or quality; distressing, reprehensible, or despicable nature; aggravated or aggravating badness of any kind.

Thy kynde is of so lowe a wrechednesse
That what love is thou canst not seen ne gesse.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 601

The gray wretchedness of the afternoon was a fit prelude to Barra. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 782.

3†. That which is wretched or distressingly bad; wretched material, conduct, or the like; anything contemptible or despicable; wretched stuff.

Yet hath this bird by twenty thousand fold
Lavere in a forest that is rude and cold
Goon ete wormes and swich wrecchednesse.
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 67.

=Syn. 1. Affliction, Grief, Sorrow, etc. See affliction.

wretchful† (rech'fûl), a. [< wretch + -ful. Cf. wreakful and wrackful.] Wretched. Wyclif.

wretchlesst, wretchlessly†, etc. Misspellings of retchless, retchlessly, etc., variants of reckless, recklessly, etc.

The product of these is a wretchless spirit: that is, an aptness to any unworthiness. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 725

Cursed are al they that do the Lord's busines wretchlesly. Tract, an. 1556 (Strype's Cat. of Originals, No. 44).

The Devil doth thrust them either into desperation, or into wretchlessness of most unclean living, no less perilous than desperation. Thirty nine Articles (Amer. Revision, 1801), xvii wretchockt, wretchcockt (rech'ok, rech'kok), n. [Appar. < wretch + -ock or cock[1], n., used as dim.] A stunted or abortive cock; the smallest of a brood of domestic fowls; hence, any puny or imperfect creature.

The famous imp yet grew a wretchock [in some editions wretch-cock], . . . though for seven years together he was carefully carried at his mother's back.
B. Jonson, Gipsies Metamorphosed

wrethe[1]†, v. A Middle English form of wreathe.

wrethe[2]†, v. A Middle English form of wrath.

wrethe[3]†, v. An obsolete form of writhe.

wrayet, v. t. An old spelling of wray. Chaucer.

wrick (rik), v. [< ME. wricken, < MD. wricken, D. wrikken = LG. wrikken, move to and fro, = Sw. vricka = Dan. vrikke, move, turn, wriggle, sprain. Cf. wrig, wriggle, wry[1].] To twist; turn. [Prov. Eng.]

wrick (rik), n. [< wrick, v.] A sprain.

wrist, v. t. A variant of wry[2].

wrigt (rig), v. i. and t. [Early mod. E. wrygge, a var. of wrick. Cf. wriggle.] To wriggle.

The bore his tayle wryggyes,
His rumpe also he frygges
Agaynst the rye bouche.
Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, l. 177.

Worms . . .
Do wrigge and wreat their parts divorc'd by knife.
Dr. H. More, Psychathanasia, II. ii. 37.

wriggle (rig'l), v.; pret. and pp. wriggled, ppr. wriggling. [Formerly also wrigle, riggle; < D. wriggelen = LG. wriggeln; freq. of the verb represented by wrig, wrick.] I. intrans. 1. To move sinuously; twist to and fro; writhe; squirm; wiggle.

Cumberland acknowledged her merit, after his fashion, by biting his lips and wriggling in his chair whenever her name was mentioned. Macaulay, Misc. D'Arblay

2. To move along sinuously, or by twisting and turning the body, as a snake, an eel, or a worm; hence, figuratively, to proceed by shifts and turns; make way by sinuous or crooked means: as, to wriggle out of a difficulty.

We may fear he'l wrigle in Twixt him and us, the prime man in her favour.
Brome, Queens Exchange, i.

It is through these gaps that the people barely wriggle.
F. Bennet, Fifty Years Ago, p. 15.

II. trans. To cause to wriggle; twist and shake slightly and quickly; effect by wriggling.

Their tayls with ercompled knot twisting awaishlye they wrygled. Stanihurst, Æneid, ii

When you wait behind a chair at meals, keep constantly wriggling the back of the chair, that the person behind whom you stand may know you are ready to attend him.
Swift, Advice to Servants (Footman).

The Pi-Utes . . . wriggled their way out through the passages in the rocks. The Century, XLI. 649.

wriggle (rig'l), n. [< wriggle, v.] 1. The motion of one who or that which wriggles; a quick twisting motion or contortion like that of a worm or an eel.

The dapper men have always a peculiar spring in their arms, a wriggle in their bodies, and a trip in their gait.
Steele, Tatler, No. 85.

He was a person of sinuous, snake-like presence, and seemed capable of shedding his complete attire by means of one deft wriggle. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 223

2. Something showing the effect of wriggling or sinuous action; a sinuosity or contortion; a wrinkle. [Rare.]

Minor folds and wriggles [in rocks] are frequent.
Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV. 11.

wriggler (rig'lèr), n. [< wriggle + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wriggles; specifically, one of the active larvæ, as of mosquitos, seen in stagnant water. Also waggler. — 2. A person who practises wriggling methods; one who proceeds by sinuosity or trickery.

For Providence, . . .
In spite of all the wrigglers into place,
Still keeps a seat or two for worth and grace Cowper, Prœdium, l. 482

wriggling (rig'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wriggle, v.] Same as wriggle.

wright (rīt), n. [< ME. wright, wrihte, wiȝte, wruhte, wurhte, wrte, < AS. wyrhta (= OS. wurhto = OHG. wurhto), a worker, wright, < AS. wyrht, geworht (= OS. wurht = OHG. wurkt, wuraht, a work, deed), < wyrcan, etc., work: see work.] One whose occupation is some kind of mechanical business; an artificer; a workman, especially a constructive workman. As a separate word it originally signified, as it still does in Scotland and some parts of England, a carpenter or any worker in wood. It is common in composition, as in cartwright, wainwright, wheelwright, millwright, shipwright, etc., and, in a somewhat figurative sense, playwright.

He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 614

All the laid on steel
Can how no further than may serve to give the timber th end
Fore-purpos'd by the skilful wright
Chapman, Iliad, xv. 570

Wrightia (rī'ti-ä), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1811), named after William Wright, a physician and botanist in Jamaica.] A genus of plants, of the order Apocynaceæ, tribe Echitideæ, and subtribe Parsonsieæ. It is characterized by having a corolla-tube usually short and bearing on the throat five or more scales and an exserted cone of anthers, and by seeds furnished with a tuft of hairs at the base and with broad convolute cotyledons. There are about 12 species, natives of tropical Asia, Africa, and Australia. They are shrubs or small trees, with long lance branches opposite feather-veined leaves, and red, white, or yellowish salver-shaped flowers, commonly in terminal cymes. W. antidysenterica, a small tree, the source of conessi bark (see bark[2], n., 1), in India a leading remedy for dysentery, is now classed under Holarrhena. For W. tinctoria, see palay, 1, and teeyty-tree.

wrightin (rī'tin), n. Same as conessine.

wrightry† (rīt'ri), n. [ME., < wright + -ry (see -ry).] The business of a wright.

Now assay wille I
How I can of wrightry
Towneley Mysteries, p. 26.

wrimplet (rim'pl), v. and n. Same as rimple.

I holde a forme within a wrimpled skin.
G. Whetstone, Remembrance of Gascoigne.

wrinch† (rinch), v. and n. An obsolete variant of wrench.

These devout prelates for these many years have not ceased in their Pulpits wrinching and speaking the text Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

wrine[1]† (rīn), v. t. Same as wry[2].

wrine[2] (rīn), n. [Appar. a particular use of rine[1], a ditch, trench, applied in imitation of wrinkle.] A wrinkle. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wring (ring), v.; pret. and pp. wrung (formerly sometimes wringed; wrang, the original preterit, is now only provincial); ppr. wringing. [< ME. wringen (pret. wrang, wrong, wronge, pl. wrungen, wrongen, pp. wrungen, wronge), < AS. wringan (pret. wrang, pp. wrungen), press, strain, wring, = D. wringen = LG. wringen, twist together, = OHG. wringan, MHG. G. ringen, wring, struggle, wrestle, wrest, = Goth. wriggus*, indicated by the derivs. wraggjan, anare; cf. Sw. vränga, distort, wrest, pervert, Dan. vringe, twist, tangle (*vringel-horn*t, having twisted horns); prob. connected with wrick, wrig, wry[1]. Hence ult. wrangle, wrong, etc.] I. trans. 1. To twist in the hands, as something flexible; twist or flex forcibly: as, to wring clothes after washing, to force out the water; to wring a friend's hand in cordial greeting: often with out.

Mark how she wrings him by the fingers.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 2.

Just help me wring these [clothes] out, and then I'll take 'em to the mangle. Mrs. Inchbald, Mary Bagton, viii.

2. To twist out of place, shape, or relation; bend or strain tortuously or twistingly: as, to wring a mast; to wring the neck of a chicken.

His neck in twa I wat they hae wrang.
Jock o' the Side (Child's Ballads, VI. 86).

My spirit yearns to bring
The lost ones back — yearns with intense desire
And struggles hard to wring
Thy bolts apart, and pluck thy captives hence.
Bryant, The Past.

3. To turn or divert the course or purport of; distort; pervert. [Archaic.]

Octavio was ever more wrung to the worse by many and sundry spites.
Ascham, To John Astelay. (Encyc. Dict.)

Or else they would strainе us out a certaine figurative Prelat, by wringing the collective allegory of those seven Angels into seven single Rochets.
Milton, Church-Government, i. 8.

4. To affect painfully by or as if by some contorting or compressing action or effect; torture; rack; distress; pain.

Woe know where the shoe wringes you.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

Oh, Portius! didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly.
Addison, Cato, i. 1.

5. To force out, as a fluid, by twisting or contorting pressure; extract or obtain by or as if by a squeezing flexure; hence, to squeeze out in any way; extort: as, to wring water from clothes; to wring a reluctant consent from a person; often with out.

If death, my lord, wring from me a hollow leave
By laboursome petition. Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 58.

The English government now chose to wring money out of Charles' King. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

To wring off, to force off or separate by wringing.

The priest shall . . . wring off his head. Lev. i. 15.

To wring out. (a) To force or squeeze out by twisting.

He . . . thrust the flower together and wringed the dew out of the flower. Judges vi. 38.

(b) To free from a liquid by twisting or compression: as, to wring out clothes.

And the Cabalists . . . say that Eves signe was nothing but the wringing out of grapes to her husband.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 10.

To wring the (or one's) hands, to manifest pain or distress by clasping the hands tightly together, with or without a twisting motion.

So efter that he longe hadde hyre employned,
His handes wronge, and seyde that was to seye.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1171.

She wrings her Hands, and beats her Breast
Congreve, Death of Queen Mary.

Under emotion we see sayings of the body and wringings of the hands.
H. Spencer, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVIII. 11.

II. intrans. 1. To writhe; twist about, as with anguish; squirm; suffer torture.

Let him care and wepe and wringe and waille.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 1156.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 1, 24.

Such as are impatient of rest
And wring in much some private discontent.
Chapman, Byron's Conspiracy, i. 1.

2. To pinch; pain.

A faire shoe wringes, though it be smoothe in the wearing. Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 474.

3†. To force one's way by pressure.

Thus out at holes genne wringe
Every tydinge streght to Fame.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 2110.

wring (ring), n. [< ME. wringe, wrenge, < AS. wringe*, in wæn-wringe, a wine-press, < wringan, press, wring: see wring, v.] 1. A wringer or presser; a wine-press or cider-press. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And ofte sette on werkyng hem the wringe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 22.

2†. Action expressive of anguish; writhing.

> The sighs, and tears, and blubbers, and wrings of a disconsolate mourner Bp. Hall, Contemp., iv. 24.

wringer (ring'ėr), n. [< ME. wringer; < wring + *-er*1.] 1. One who wrings, as clothes.

> His washer and his wringer. Shak., M. W. of W., I. 2. 5.

2. An apparatus for forcing water from anything wet; especially, a utensil for laundry purposes, in which, however, the clothes are not wrung or twisted, but are passed between two or more adjustable rollers which press strongly against each other.— 3. An extortioner.

wringing-machine (ring'ing-ma-shēn'), n. A machine for pressing moisture from something; especially, a clothes-wringer.

wringing-wet (ring'ing-wet), a. So wet as to require wringing; so wet that water may be wrung out.

> A poore fisherman, . . . with his clothes wringing-wet Hooker, Sermon on Jude wring-staff (ring'staf), n. A strong bar of wood used by shipwrights in bending planks and binding them in place. Also wrain-staff.

wrinkle1 (ring'kl), n. [< ME. wrinkil, wrinkel, wrincle, wrynkyl, < AS. wrincle* (Sommer) = MD. wrinkel, wrynckel, a wrinkle; a dim. form, perhaps from the root of wring, v. The Icel. hrukka = Sw. rynka = Dan. rynke, a wrinkle, appear to be of different origin: see *ruck*2.] A slight ridge in or raised line on a surface caused by contraction, folding, puckering, or rumpling; a line of corrugation, generally one of a series, either regularly or irregularly disposed; a crease; as, wrinkles in a garment, or in an old man's face; wrinkles (small corrugations) in a rock.

> Wrynkyl or playte in clothe. Plica
> Prompt. Parv., p. 534.
>
> With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come Shak., M. of V., I. 1. 80.
>
> A glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle Eph. v. 27.

wrinkle1 (ring'kl), v.; pret. and pp. wrinkled, ppr. wrinkling. [< MD. wrinckelen, wryncklen, from the noun.] I. trans. To form wrinkles in; contract, fold, or pucker into small ridges and furrows or creases; corrugate; crease.

> Hollow eye and wrinkled brow Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 270
>
> Within the surface of the fleeting river
> The wrinkled image of the city lay Shelley, Evening
>
> So yellow as she was, so wrinkled, so sad of mien! Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vii
>
> No care may wrinkle thy smooth brow. William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 15

II. intrans. To become contracted into wrinkles; shrink into furrows and ridges; be marked with wrinkles.

> When high in the field the fern leaves wrinkle,
> And brown is the grass where the mowers have mown R. W. Gilder, Lyrics, Song of Early Autumn.
>
> Mrs. Putney was a small woman, already beginning to wrinkle Howells, Annie Kilburn, iv

wrinkle2 (ring'kl), n. [A particular use, orig. slang, of *wrinkle*1, n. According to Skeat, it is a dim. of ME. wrink, wrenk, < AS. wrenc, a trick: see wrench, n.] A short pithy piece of information or advice; a valuable hint; a bit of useful knowledge or instruction; a good idea; a trick; a point; a notion; a device. [Colloq.]

> They are too experte in lone, having learned in this time of their long peace every wrinckle that is to be seene or imagined Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 389.
>
> Phillip, when thou goes courtin', come t' me, and I'll give thee many a wrinkle Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xii
>
> Oh, you are up to this wrinkle, are you? Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 530.

wrinkle-beaked (ring'kl-bēkt), a. Having a wrinkled, sulcate, or ridged and furrowed bill, specifying one of the anis, Crotophaga sulcirostris. This bird is common in parts of Texas, and thence through much of South America. See cut under ani.

wrinkled (ring'kld), a. In zoöl., marked with parallel and somewhat irregular raised lines; having wrinkles; rugose; corrugated. Wrinkled hornbill, the bird Craneorhinus corrugatus, whose high carinated casque is laterally corrugated.

wrinkling-machine (ringk'ling-ma-shēn'), n. A machine for forming transverse wrinkles on the upper leathers of boots and shoes.

wrinkly (ringk'li), a. [< *wrinkle*1 + *-y*1.] Somewhat wrinkled; having a tendency to be wrinkled; puckered; creased.

> His old wrinkly face grew quite blown-out at last Carlyle, The Century, XXIV. 18.
>
> Mrs. Waule . . . giving occasional dry wrinkly indications of crying. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxxii.

Wrisbergian (ris-bėr'gi-an), a. [< Wrisberg: see def.] Of or pertaining to, or named after, H. A. Wrisberg (1739–1808), a German anatomist: noting various anatomical parts, commonly described in English as of Wrisberg, or Wrisberg's, not Wrisbergian.

Wrisberg's abdominal brain. The solar plexus of the sympathetic nerve.

Wrisberg's cartilage. See cartilage of Wrisberg, under cartilage.

Wrisberg's ganglion. See cardiac ganglion of Wrisberg, under ganglion.

Wrisberg's nerve. See nerve of Wrisberg, under nerve.

wrist (rist), n. [Early mod. E. also wreast, wrest; < ME. wrist, wriste, also wirste, wyrste, < AS. wrist (usually in comp. hand-wrist) = OFries. wrist, rust, wirst, werst (hand-wrust, 'hand-wrist,' fot-wrust, 'foot-wrist,' instep) = MD. wrist = MHG. rist, riste, G. rist (G. dial. frist), hand- or foot-joint; cf. G. wider-rist, withers of a horse (see withers), = Icel. rist = Sw. Dan. rist, instep; with formative -t (-th > -st), < writhan, twist, writhe: see writhe, and cf. wrest.] 1. That part of the fore limb or arm which comes between the forearm and the hand, and by which the latter is joined or jointed to the former; the wrist-joint; technically, the carpus, or the carpal articulation. The wrist is the first segment of the manus, and its skeleton consists in man of seven carpal bones, together with a sesamoid bone (the pisiform) on the ulnar side, these eight bones being disposed in two rows of four each, proximal and distal. The whole set of bones, their articulations with one another and with the radius, ulna, and the several metacarpals, together with the ligaments and other associated soft parts, are included in the term wrist. The motions of the wrist as a whole upon the forearm include all the movements of flexion, extension, abduction, adduction, and circumduction together with the movements of pronation and supination impressed upon the wrist by the rocking of the radius about the ulna, but the motion of the individual carpal bones upon one another is slight and that between the distal carpals and the metacarpals is still less. In most other animals than man, the movements of the wrist are more restricted. The term is extended to the corresponding joint of the fore limb of other mammals, birds, and reptiles. Thus the so-called knee of the horse's fore leg is anatomically the carpus or wrist. See carpus, and cuts under hand, pasiform, and scapholunar.

> Little Preston was found there with both his hands cut off by the wrests.
> B. Patten, Ex. into Scotland (Arber's Eng. Garner, III. 128).

2†. The ankle or the instep.

> Then he put on the old man's hose,
> Were patch'd from knee to wrist
> Robin Hood Rescuing the Widow's Three Sons (Child's Ballads, V. 254).

3. In mach., a stud or pin projecting from the side of a crank, wheel, or other moving part, and forming a means of attachment to a connecting-rod leading to some other part of the mechanism. Also called wrist pin. — Bridle wrist, in the manège, the wrist of the horseman's left hand. Compare bridle-hand. — Twist of the wrist. See twist. — Wrist touch, in pianoforte-playing, a stroke or touch which proceeds from the wrist rather than from the fingers alone or from the whole forearm.

wristband (rist'band, colloq. ris'band), n. That band or part of a sleeve, especially of a shirt-sleeve, which covers the wrist. The wristbands sewed on to shirt-sleeves were formerly continued with a flare over the upper part of the hand, serving the purpose of the separate stiff cuffs buttoned to the narrow wristbands now in use. In the times of more elaborate dressing such wristbands were often very long, and adorned with rich lace or fine embroidery.

> With that the hands to pocket went,
> Full wristband deep Pinbrugh, Æsop, II. 1.
>
> He . . . wore very stiff collars, and prodigiously long wrist bands Dickens, A Rogue's Life, i. (Household Words.)

wrist-bone (rist'bōn), n. Any bone of the wrist or carpus; a carpal bone. See carpus, wrist, and cuts under hand, pasiform, and scapholunar.

wrist-clonus (rist'klō'nus), n. A series of jerky movements of the hand produced in certain nervous diseases by a sudden forcible bending back of the wrist.

wrist-drop (rist'drop), n. Inability to extend the hand, owing to paralysis of the extensor muscles in the forearm. It is commonly associated with lead-poisoning. Also called drop wrist.

> The case of chronic lead poisoning, with its accompanying wrist drop, caused by the paralysis of the extensors Amer. Anthropologist, I. 68.

wrister (ris'tėr), n. A covering for the wrist; a wristlet. [Local, U. S.]

> A neighbor, come to tea, was crocheting wristers for her guardian. The Century, XXVI. 824.

wristfall (rist'fâl), n. A deep ruffle of various materials, usually lace, falling from a wristband or the lower part of a sleeve. See ruffle, n., 8.

> Men and women alike were in Puritan dress. Some, however, had discarded the lace wristfalls and neckbands. A. E. Barr, Friend Olivia, iii.

wrist-guide (rist'gid), n. Same as chiropleust.

wrist-joint (rist'joint), n. The carpal joint proper; the radiocarpal articulation, by which the hand as a whole moves upon the forearm; chiefly used as applied to man. See carpus, wrist, and radiocarpal articulation (under radiocarpal).

wristlet (rist'let), n. [< wrist + -let.] 1. A band worn around the wrist: applied to various useful or ornamental objects of the sort. (a) A covering of thick material for the wrist to protect it under exposure to cold. (b) A bracelet.

> A siren lithe and debonaire,
> With wristlets woven of scarlet beads.
> T. B. Aldrich, Pampinea.

2. A handcuff. [Humorous or slang.]

> Two or three of the party wearing black dresses instead of grey, with leg irons as well as wristlets, to show that they were bad-conduct men.
> Daily Telegraph, Dec. 31, 1881. (Encyc. Dict.)

wrist-link (rist'lingk), n. A link with connected buttons, used for the wristband or cuff. Encyc. Dict.

wrist-pin (rist'pin), n. 1. In mach., any pin forming a means of connecting a pitman to a cross-head or crank; more particularly, the pin of the crank to which a pitman is connected. The pin in the cross-head is in the United States more generally called cross-head pin.

2. A pin in a wrist-plate of a steam-engine, whether connected with an eccentric-rod or with a valve-rod.

wrist-plate (rist'plāt), n. 1. A plate which oscillates on a central pivot, and from the face of which project one or more crank-pins or -wrists for the connection of rods or pitmans.— 2. Specifically, a plate used in some kinds of automatic cut-off engines. It has a reciprocating rotary motion on a central pivot, and is actuated through a limited arc by the rod of an eccentric on the crank-shaft of the engine. From its face project four crank-wrists, which give it its name. Two of these wrists are respectively connected with rods that actuate the rocker-arms of two separate oscillating plug-valves, for introducing steam into the cylinder on opposite sides of the piston alternately. The other two wrists are similarly connected to independently operating exhaust-valves.

writ1 (rit), n. [< ME. writ, wryt, wrytt, iwrit, < AS. ge-writ, writ, a writ, writing, or scripture (= OHG. ri, a letter, MHG. riz, G. riss, a rent, a tear, ritze, a wound, a scratch, = Icel. rit, a writ, writing, penmanship, = Goth. writs, a stroke, a point), < writan, etc., write: see write.] 1. That which is written; a writing: used especially of the Bible, with holy or sacred, often capitalized as a title.

> Wherfore thei come meche of Holy Wrytt, but thei understonde it not but aftre the Lettre.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 126.
>
> O cursed Eld! the canker-worme of writs,
> How may these rimes so rude as doth appeare,
> Hope to endure? Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 33.

This city [Cæsarea] is remarkable in sacred writ upon several accounts. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 60.

2. In law, a precept under seal, in the name of the people, or the sovereign, or other competent legal authority, commanding the officer or other person to whom it is addressed or issued to do or refrain from doing some specified act. In early times, when the pleadings and proceedings generally in actions were oral, writs were, as the name implies, the written parts of an action (besides judgments in courts of record), it being for obvious reasons required that the warrant by which a person or his property might be seized, or his conduct controlled under penalty of contempt, should be expressed in writing and attested by the name and seal of the government.

3. A formal instrument or writing of any kind.

> Folded the writ up in form of the other.
> Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 51.

Barons by writ. See baron, 1. — Close writ. See close. — Indorsed writ. See indorse. — Judicial writ, a writ issued by the court, as distinguished from an original writ. — Optional writ. See optional. — Original writ. (a) The writ formerly required to be issued from Chancery, under the seal of the sovereign, before the commencement of an action in a court of common law: so called to distinguish it from judicial writs, or writs issued by the court in which the action was thus brought, in the course of prosecuting the action. (b) In the United States, a mandatory precept issuing out of the clerk's office in any of the courts of law, by the authority and in the name of the State or commonwealth, under the seal of the court from which it issues, bearing teste of the chief justice of the court, if he is not a party, and signed by the clerk of the court. (Heard.) Its object is to compel the appearance of the defendant, or at least to give him due notice that he is sued. In most of the States it has been superseded by a summons, issued by the plaintiff's attorney, giving such notice and requiring the defendant to plead. See also original writ, under original. — Peremptory, Prohibition, Summons, Supersedeas, Testatum, Venire facias, etc. See the words.

Fugitive writ. See the qualifying words. — Service of a writ. See service. — Ship writ, in Eng. hist., a writ issued in the name of the crown imposing the tax known as ship-money (which see): notably one of such writs issued under Charles I. which led to Hampden's opposition. They were declared illegal by 16 Car. I., c. 14 (1640). — The writ runs. (a) The writ is expressed in terms of or including: as, the writ runs in the name of the people. (b) The writ is legally capable of enforcement: as, the writ of subpœna runs throughout the state. (c) The writ is practically capable of enforcement: as, "When lawlessness has yielded to order; when the Queen's writ runs; when the edicts of the civil courts are obeyed; . . . and when sedition is trampled under foot — then, and then only, is there some chance for the development of remedial measures." (Edinburgh Rev., CLXV. 567.) — To serve a writ. See to serve a process, under serve. — To serve a writ of attachment. See to serve an attachment, under serve. — Twelve-day writ, in Eng. law a writ allowed by 18 and 19 Vict., c. 67, in actions on bills and notes if brought within six months after maturity, warning defendant to appear within twelve days, otherwise judgment would go against him. — Vicontiel writs. See vicontiel. — Writ of account. See action of account, under account. — Writ of assistance, bezayle, capias, certiorari, consultation, dower, error, estrepement. See assistance, etc. — Writ of execution. See execution, 3 (b). — Writ of habeas corpus, inquiry, mandamus, possession, privilege, prohibition, protection, recaption, restitution, right, spoliation, subpœna, etc. See habeas corpus, inquiry, etc. — Writs of extent. See extent, 3 (b).

writ[2] (rit). An obsolete form of the third person singular present indicative (for writeth), and an obsolete or archaic form of the past participle, of write.

writability (ri-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< writable + -ity (see -bility).] Ability or disposition to write. [Nonce-word.]

> You see by my writability in my pressing my letters on you that my pen has still a colt's tooth left.
> Walpole, Letters, IV. 485. (Davies.)

writable (ri'ta-bl), a. [< write + -able.] Capable of being written; such as might be set down in writing. [Rare.]

> The talk was by no means writable, but very pleasant.
> Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, II. 108. (Davies.)

writative (ri'ta-tiv), a. [Irreg. (after talkative) < writ(e) + -ative.] Disposed or inclined to write; given to writing. [Nonce-word.]

> Increase of years makes men more talkative, but less writative.
> Pope, To Swift, Aug. 17, 1730.

write (rit), v.; pret. wrote (obs. or dial. writ, archaic writ), pp. written (obs. or archaic writ, formerly erroneously wrote), ppr. writing. [< ME. writen (pret. wrot, wroot, writ, pl. writen, write, pp. writen, write — with short i), < AS. writan (pret. wrāt, pl. writon, pp. writen), write, inscribe, orig. score, engrave, = OS. wrītan, cut, injure, write, = OFries. writa = D. rijten, tear, split, = LG. riten = OHG. rīzan, cut, tear, split, draw, delineate, MHG. rīzen, G. reissen, tear, = Icel. rita, scratch, cut, write, = Sw. rita, draw, delineate, = Goth. wreitan* (in deriv. writs, a stroke or point made with a pen), write. Hence writ*[1].] I. trans. 1. To trace or form upon the surface of some material (a significant character or characters, especially characters constituting or representing words); set down, in a manner adapted for reading, with a pen, pencil, style, or anything with which marks can be made; inscribe: as, to write a word on paper; to write one's name with the finger in sand.

> Above, in the Dust and in the Powder of the Hilles that wrote Lettres and Figures with hire Fingres.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 17.

> They . . . whose names are not written in the book of life.
> Rev. xvii. 8.

> The Greek metropolitan has a very fine manuscript of the Pentateuch, supposed to have been wrote about the year eight hundred.
> Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 38.

> There is a Book
> By seraphs writ with beams of Heavenly light.
> Cowper, Sonnet to Mrs. Unwin.

2. To cover with writing; trace readable characters over the surface of.

> And it [the roll] was written within and without.
> Ezek. ii. 10.

> There will she sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper.
> Shak., Much Ado, ii. 3. 138.

3. To express or communicate in writing; give a written account of; make a record of, as something known, thought, or believed: as, to write one's observations; he wrote down all he could remember. Sometimes, in this and the next sense, the verb is followed by a dative without its sign: as, write me all the news.

> Thanne sit he down and writ in his dotage
> That wommen kan nat kepe hir mariage.
> Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 709.

> Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer?
> Mark xi. 17.

> All your better deeds
> Shall be in water writ, but this in marble.
> Beau. and Fl., Philaster, v. 3.

> I chose to write the Thing I durst not speak.
> Prior, Solomon, ii.

4. To set forth as an author, or produce in writing, either by one's own or another's hand; compose and produce as an author.

> Write me a sonnet.
> Shak., Much Ado, v. 2. 4.

> When you writ your Epigrams, and the Magnetic Lady, you were not so mad.
> Howell, Letters, I. v. 16.

5. To designate by writing; style or entitle in writing; record: with an objective word or phrase.

> O that he were here to write me down an ass!
> Shak., Much Ado, iv. 2. 78.

> They belonged to the arrogerous part of the population, and were entitled "to write themselves Esquire."
> De Quincey, Bentley, I.

6. To record; set down legibly; engrave.

> There is written in your brow . . . honesty and constancy.
> Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 162.

> The history of New England is written imperishably on the face of a continent.
> Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 228.

To write down. (a) To set down in writing; make a record or memorandum of.

> Having our fair order written down.
> Shak., K. John, v. 2. 4.

> It was the manner of that glorious captain [Cæsar] to write down what scenes he passed through.
> Steele, Spectator, No. 374.

(b) To write in depreciation of; injure by writing against: as to write down a play or a fashional undertaking, to write down an actor or a candidate.

> Without some infusion of spite it seems as if history could not be written; that no man's zeal is roused to write unless it is moved by the desire to write down.
> Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 110.

To write off, to cancel by an entry on the opposite side of the account or bill: as, to write off discounts, to write off bad debts. To write out. (a) To make a copy or transcription of, especially, to make a perfect copy of, after a rough draft: record in full: as, when the document is written out you may send it off. (b) To exhaust the capacity or resources of by excessive writing: used reflexively: as, that author has written himself out. To write up. (a) To bring up to date or to the latest fact or transaction in writing; write out in full or in detail: as, to write up an account or an account-book; to write up a fire or a celebration for a newspaper. (b) To attempt to elevate in estimation or credit by favorable writing; commend to the public; puff: as, to write up a new play or a candidate. Written law. See law[1].

II. intrans. 1. To be acquainted with or practise the art of writing; engage in the formation of written words or characters, either occasionally or as an occupation: as, to write in school; to write as a lawyer's clerk.

> He can write and read and cast accompt.
> Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 92.

2. To express ideas in writing; practise written composition; work as an author, or engage in authorship.

> When I wrote of these devices, I smiled with my selfe, thinking that the readers would do so to.
> Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 84.

> Like Egyptian Chroniclers,
> Who write of twenty thousand Years.
> Cowley, Pindaric Odes, xii.

> Beyond this, though he wrote in a dramatic form, had little of dramatic genius.
> Macaulay, History.

3. To conduct epistolary correspondence; communicate by means of letter writing; convey information by letter or the like; as, to write to a distant friend; write as soon as you arrive.

> I go. Write to me very shortly.
> Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 428.

write (rit), n. [< write, v.] Writing: chiefly in the phrase hand of write. [Colloq. or vulgar.]

> We trust you will call back yourself from errors and heresies so lately which you have maintained rashly, and set forth by word and write busily.
> Hardin to Jewell, in Bp. Jewell's Works (Parker Soc. ed.), [II. 864.

> It was a short, but a well-written letter in a fair hand of write.
> Galt, Annals of the Parish, I. (Davies.)

writee (ri-tē'), n. [< write + -ee[1].] A person to or for whom something is written: a reader as contrasted with a writer. [Occasional.]

> And, indeed, where a man is understood, there is ever a proportion between the writer's wit and the writee's.
> Chapman, Iliad xiv., Com. to Reader.

write-of-hand (rit'ov-hand'), n. Handwriting; the art of writing. [Vulgar.]

> "A could wish as a'd learnea write-o'-hand," said she, "for a've that for to tell Christopher as might set his mind at ease."
> Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xliii. (Davies.)

writer (ri'tėr), n. [< ME. writere, < AS. wrītere (= Icel. ritari); as write + -er[1].] 1. A person who understands or practises the art of writing; one who is able to write; a penman.

> My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.
> Ps. xlv. 1.

2. One who does writing as a business; a professional scribe, scrivener, or amanuensis: used specifically in England of clerks to the former East India Company, and of temporary copying clerks in government offices; in Scotland, loosely, of law agents, solicitors, attorneys, etc., and sometimes of their principal clerks. — 3. A person who writes what he composes in his mind; the author of a written paper or of writings; an author in general; a literary producer of any kind: as, the writer of a letter; a writer of history or of fiction.

> Tell prose writers stories are so stale
> That penny ballads make a better sale.
> Prince.

> "I love," said Mr. Sentry, "a critic who mixes the rules of life with annotations upon writers."
> Steele, Spectator, No. 550.

[For other uses of the word, see letter-writer, 2, and type-writer.]

Ship's writer. See ship. The writer, the author of this writing; the writer hereof: used elliptically by a writer with reference to himself, to avoid saying I. — Writer of the tallies. See tally[1], 1. Writers' cramp, an occupation-neurosis occurring in those who write much, especially in a contracted hand. It affects at first usually only those muscles which are directly concerned in the production of writing movements, but, if the act is persisted in, the neighboring muscles may also share in the disturbances. The affection may manifest itself under one of four forms or a combination of them: namely, paralytic, in which weakness in the fingers or even absolute inability to hold the pen is experienced; spastic, in which the attempt to write excites clonic or tonic contractions of the fingers; tremulous, in which the hand shakes so while writing that the letters formed are indistinguishable; and sensory, in which the effort to write causes severe pain, tingling, or other abnormal sensations in the hand and at times in the forearm also. The symptoms vary greatly in different individuals, usually, however, increasing in severity as long as the attempt to use a pen is persisted in. The use of steel pens and metal penholders is supposed to increase the liability to the affection. Also called scrivener's cramp or palsy, writers' palsy or paralysis, and graphospasm. — Writers to the signet. See signet, 1.

writeress (ri'tėr-es), n. [< writer + -ess.] A female writer or author. [Humorous.]

> Remember it henceforth, ye writeresses, there is no such word as authoress. Thackeray, Misc., II. 470. (Davies.)

writerling (ri'tėr-ling), n. [< writer + -ling[1].] A petty or sorry writer or author. [Rare.]

> Every writer and writerling of name [in France] has a salary from the government.
> W. Taylor, 1802 (Robberds's Memoir, I. 490). (Davies.)

writership (ri'tėr-ship), n. [< writer + -ship.] The office or employment of a writer in some official capacity.

writhe (rīth), v.; pret. and pp. writhed, ppr. writhing. [< ME. writhen, wrythen (pret. wroth, wrooth, wrath, pl. writhen, pp. writhen (with short i), < AS. wrīthan (pret. wrāth, pp. writhen), twist, wind about, = OHG. ridan, MHG. rīden, G. dial. wridеln, twist together, = Icel. rītha = Sw. vrida = Dan. vride, wring, twist, turn, wrest. Hence ult. wreath, wrest, wrist.] I. trans. 1. To turn and twist about; twist out of shape or position; wrench; contort.

> The stertes [grape-stalks] softe in handes wol that take
> And writhe hem and so wrethen wol that lete
> Hem hange and drie awhile in sonnes hete.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 208.

> So said we wrythe all ayn away,
> That in our breistis bred.
> The Rludy Sork (Child's Ballads, VIII. 161).

> The desolate little shanty was plainly to be seen among the naked and writhen boughs of the orchard.
> The Atlantic, LVIII. 809.

2. To wrest perversely; wrest; pervert.

> The reason which he yieldeth showeth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writhed.
> Hooker.

3. To wrench; wring; extort. [Obsolete or archaic.]

> The nobility hesitated not to follow the example of their sovereign in writhing money from them by every species of oppression.
> Scott, Ivanhoe, v. (Imp. Dict.)

II. intrans. To move or stir in a twisting or tortuous manner; twist about, as from pain, distress, or stimulation.

> The poplar writhes and twists and whistles in the blast.
> Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 185.

> Supposing a case of tyranny, the Tuscans will wriggle under it rather than writhe, and if even they should writhe yet they will never stand erect.
> Landor.

> She writhed under the demonstrable truth of the character he had given by conduct.
> George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 6.

> The writhing worm . . . failed to allure the scaly brood.
> Goldie, Bird. Sketches, I.

writhe (rīth), n. [< writhe, v.] 1. A contortion of form or features, as from pain or other emotion; an act of writhing. [Rare.]

> Perhaps pleasure is the emotion evidenced by the silent writhe with which Jim receives this piece of information.
> R. Broughton, Alas, xvi.

2. The band of a fagot. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

writhelt, writhlet (rīᵺ'l), v. t. [Freq. of writhe; cf. lt. dial. writeln, twist together.] To wrinkle; shrivel; distort.

This weak and writhled shrimp.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 23.

Cold, writhled old, his life-sweat almost spent.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, iv. 35.

writhent (rīᵺ'en), p. a. Obsolete or archaic past participle of writhe.

writheneck (rīᵺ'nek), n. Same as wryneck, 3.

writhingly (rī'ᵺing-li), adv. In a writhing manner; with writhing. [Rare.]

"Oh!" turning over writhingly in her chair.
R. Broughton, Belinda, xxx.

writhlet, v. t. See writhel.

writing (rī'ting), n. [< ME. writing, writunge (cf. Icel. ritning); verbal n. of write, v.] 1. The recording of words or sounds in significant characters; in the most general sense, any use of or method of using letters or other conventional symbols of uttered sounds for the visible preservation or transmission of ideas; specifically, as distinguished from printing, stamping, incision, etc., the act or art of tracing graphic signs by hand on paper, parchment, or any other material, with a pen and ink, style, pencil, or any other instrument; also, the written characters or words; handwriting; chirography.

We have, thus, in this inscription at Abou-Simbul a cardinal example of Greek writing as it was used by the Ionian and Dorian settlers in Asia Minor and the islands about the beginning of the sixth century B. C.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 101.

Roman writing — capital, uncial, half uncial and cursive — became known to the Western nations and in different ways played the principal part in the formation of the national styles of writing.
Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 156.

2. The state of being written; recorded form or expression: as, to put a proposition in writing; to commit one's thoughts to writing. In law the expressions in writing and written are often construed to include printed matter as well as manuscript.

Thyr (in Candia) was lawe fyrst put in wryttyng.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 19.

Then Huram the king of Tyre answered in writing.
2 Chron. ii. 11.

3. That which is written, or in a written state; a record made by hand in any way; a paper or instrument wholly or partly in manuscript; an inscription.

The writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.
Ex. xxxii. 16.

Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement.
Mat. v. 31.

I accepted of the Offer, and Writings were immediately drawn between us.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 513.

4. A production of the pen in general; a literary or other composition; any expression of thought in visible words; a scripture.

I know not whether it cause greater pleasure to reade their writings, or astonishment and wonder at the Nation.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 176.

The later Greek and Latin writings occasionally contain maxims [concerning war] which exhibit a considerable progress in this sphere.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 273.

5. The expression of thought by written words; the use of the pen in conveying ideas; literary production.

It is to the credit of that age [eighteenth century] to have kept alive the wholesome tradition that Writing, whether in prose or verse, was an Art that required training at least, if nothing more.
Lowell, New Princeton Rev., II. 156.

Direct or independent writing. Same as pneumatography, 1. Writing obligatory. Same as obligation 5 (a).

writing-book (rī'ting-bůk), n. A blank book for practice in penmanship; a copy-book.

writing-box (rī'ting-boks), n. A small box containing a set of the materials used in Chinese or Japanese writing. See writing-set, 2.

writing-cabinet (rī'ting kab'i-net), n. A piece of furniture in which a writing-desk is combined with drawers or cupboards, shelves for books, or other appliances.

writing-case (rī'ting-kās), n. A case containing materials and affording facilities for writing; a kind of portable writing-desk.

writing-chambers (rī'ting-cham'bėrz), n. pl. Rooms or offices occupied by a lawyer and his clerks, etc.; a law office.

writing-desk (rī'ting desk), n. 1. A writing table, especially one in which the whole or a part of the top is sloping, and the space below the top is occupied with drawers, pigeonholes, or shelves: sometimes there is also a raised frame or case of drawers, shelves, or pigeonholes. Compare writing-table and escritoire.—2. A portable writing-case, usually made of wood and of moderate size, closing up tightly for security and convenience, and fitted to contain stationery of all sorts, papers on file, writing materials, etc.

writing-folio (rī'ting-fō'liō), n. A cover for writing-paper, etc., usually having leaves of blotting-paper within it, which serve as a pad for writing on.

writing-frame (rī'ting-frām), n. A frame for the use of blind or partially blind persons in writing, made to hold the sheet of paper firmly, and furnished with an adjustable guide for the formation of lines.

writing-ink (rī'ting-ingk), n. See *ink*¹, 1.

writing-machine (rī'ting-ma-shēn'), n. A typewriter.

writing-master (rī'ting-más'tėr), n. 1. One who teaches the art of penmanship.—2. The yellow bunting, Emberiza citrinella: so named from the irregularly scribbled lines on its eggs. Also called scribbling or writing lark, for the same reason. See cut under yellowhammer. [Local, Eng.]

writing-paper (rī'ting-pā'pėr), n. Paper finished with a smooth surface, generally sized, for writing on.

writing-reed (rī'ting-rēd), n. See *reed*¹.

writing-school (rī'ting-skōl), n. A school or an academy where handwriting or calligraphy is taught.

writing-set (rī'ting-set), n. 1. A set of small objects, necessary or useful, designed for a library-table, as inkstand, pen-tray, rack for pens, case for paper and envelops, portfolio holding blotting-paper, candlesticks, etc., and sometimes larger articles in which two or more of the above are combined. These objects are often made to correspond in material and design.—2. A set of the boxes, ink-stone, waterpot, etc., used in Chinese and Japanese writing, often of lacquer, or mounted in metal.

writing-table (rī'ting-tā'bl), n. 1. A table fitted for writing upon, sometimes differentiated from a writing-desk, as being a piece of furniture for the library rather than for the business office.—2†. A tablet; a table-book.

He asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John.
Luke i. 63.

The author defies them and their writing-tables.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 2.

Knee-hole writing-table, a writing-table having a square or arched opening by which the knees of the person using it are accommodated under the surface upon which he writes, but with drawers, closets with pigeonholes or shelves, etc., on one or both sides. Also knee-hole desk.

writing-telegraph (rī'ting-tel'ē-grāf), n. Any telegraphic system in which the message is automatically recorded; more commonly, a telegraphic apparatus by means of which the record of the message reproduces the handwriting of the sender—for example, the telautograph.

written (rit'n). Past participle of write.

wrixlet, v. t. [ME., < AS. wrixlian, exchange.] 1. To exchange.—2. To envelop; wrap; confound.

What whyleues, or wanspede, wrixles our mynd?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 9327.

wrizzledt (riz'ld), a. [Prob. a form of writhel, writhle, confused with grizzled.] Wrinkled; shrivelled.

Her wrizzled skin, as rough as maple rind.
Spenser, F. Q., I. viii. 47.

His wrizzled [var. wrinkled] visage.
Gay, Wine, l. 9.

wroghtet, wrohtet. Middle English forms of wrought, preterit and past participle of work.

wrokent, wroket. Obsolete past participles of *wreak*¹.

wrong (rông), a. and n. [Sc. wrang; I. a. < ME. wrong, wrang, < AS. wrang* (not found as adj.) = MD. wrang, wranck, D. wrang, bitter, harsh, sharp (of acids), = Icel. rangr, wry, wrong, unjust, = Sw. vrång = Dan. vrang, wrong), < wringan (pret. wrang): see wring, v., and II. Cf. F. tort, wrong, ult. < L. tortus, twisted. II. n. < ME. wrong, wrang, < late AS. wrang = MD. wrang, wranck, wrong: see I.] I. a. 1†. Crooked; twisted; wry. Wyclif.

His bee (an eagle's) is yet bifore wrong,
They hise limes senden strong.
Reliquiæ Antiquæ, I. 210.

2. Not right in state, adjustment, or the like; not in order; disordered; perverse; being awry or amiss.

I've heerd my aunt say as she found out as summat was wrong wi' Nancy as soon as th' milk turned bingy.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xv.

3. Deviating from right or truth; not according to fact or reality; erroneous; false; unjustifiable in fact or morals; erroneous; perverse: as, wrong ideas; wrong courses.

If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 1. 135.

For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight,
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right.
Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 306.

It is a wrong, egotistical, savage, unchristian feeling, and that 's the truth of it.
Thackeray, Waterloo.

Men's judgments as to what is right and wrong are not perfectly uniform.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 556.

4. Deviating from that which is correct, proper, or suitable; not according to intention, requirement, purpose, or desire: as, the wrong side of a piece of cloth (the side to be turned inward).

He call'd me sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.
Shak., Lear, iv. 2. 8.

I observe the Moral is vitious; It points the wrong way, and puts the Prize into the wrong Hand.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 210.

I swear she 's no chicken; she 's on the wrong side of thirty, if she be a day.
Swift, Polite Conversation, i.

Were their faces set in the right or in the wrong direction?
Macaulay, Sir J. Mackintosh.

5. In a state of misconception or error; not correct in action, belief, assertion, or the like; mistaken; in error.

I was wrong,
I am always bound to you, but you are free.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

You are wrong, sir, you are wrong. I have quite done with you. Be under no mistake upon that point.
W. Besant, St. Katharine's, ii. 28.

Wrong is in all senses the opposite and correlative of right.

In the wrong box. See *box*². — Wrong font, said of a printers' type, etc., that is not of the proper size or face for its position. Abbreviated w. f. — Syn. 2. Unfit, unsuitable, inappropriate, inapposite.—3. Immoral, inequitable, unfair.—4. Incorrect, faulty.

II. n. 1. That which is wrong, amiss, or erroneous: the opposite of right, or of propriety, truth, justice, or goodness; wrongfulness; error; evil.

And the abusyng of your Office, . . .
And 3our fals gloseing of the wrong,
Sall noght mak 3ow to rax heir lang.
Lawder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 131.

A free determination
'Twixt right and wrong.
Shak., T. and C., ii. 2. 171.

The weak, against the sons of spoil and wrong,
Banded, and watched their hamlets, and grew strong.
Bryant, The Ages, st. 11.

Those who think to better wrong
By working wrong shall seek thee wide
To slay thee.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 34.

2. Wrong action or conduct; anything done contrary to right or justice; a violation of law, obligation, or propriety; in law, an invasion of right, to the damage of another person; a tort: as, to do or commit wrong, or a wrong.

For that Percevale ly Galoys was accused with grete wronge for the deth of the same host, like as an Ermyte hit totde after that hadde seyn all the dede.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 475.

Cease your open wronges!
Cannot our Bishops scape your slanderous tongues?
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 10.

It is probable that a man never knows the deep anguish of conscious wrong until he has had the courage to face in solitude its naked hideousness.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 154.

3. Harm or evil inflicted; damage or detriment suffered; an injury, mischief, hurt, or pain imparted or received: as, to do one a wrong.

To forgive wrongs darker than death or night.
Shelley, Prometheus, iv.

4. A state of being wrong or of acting wrongly: an erroneous or unjust view, attitude, or procedure in regard to anything: chiefly in the phrase in the wrong.

They were neither of them dissatisfied with the knight's determination, because neither of them found himself in the wrong by it.
Addison, Spectator, No. 122.

When Peopleasnce are in the wrong,
Each Line they add is much too long.
Prior, Alma, iii.

It is I who ought to be angry and unforgiving; for I was in the wrong.
Thackeray, De Finibus.

Abandonment for wrongs. See abandonment, 3. In the wrong. See def. 4.—Private wrong. See private. To have wrong. (a) To have or be on the wrong side; be wrong, or in the wrong.

When I had wrong and shal the right,
She wolde alwey so goodely
Forgeve me so debonairly.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1302.

(b) To suffer the infliction of wrong; have wrong treatment.

Cæsar has had great wrongs.
Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 118.

To put in the wrong, to cause to appear wrong or in error; give a wrong character to or misrepresentation of: as, your remarks put me, or my sentiments, in the wrong. —Syn. 1 and 2. Sin, Iniquity, etc. See crime.

wrong (rông), adv. [< wrong, a.] In a wrong manner; not rightly; erroneously; incorrectly; amiss; ill.

> The right divine of kings to govern wrong.
> Pope, Dunciad, iv. 188.

To go wrong. See go.

> Your strong possession much more than your right,
> Or else it must go wrong with you and me.
> Shak., K. John, i. 1. 41.

wrong (rông), v. t. [< wrong, n.] 1. To do wrong to; treat unfairly, unjustly, or harmfully; do or say something injurious or offensive to; injure; harm; oppress; offend.

> You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house.
> Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 4. 73.

2. To be the cause of wrong or harm to; affect injuriously; be hurtful to; in an old nautical use, to take the wind from the sails of, as a ship in line with another to windward.

> All authority being dissolved, want of government did more wrong their proceedings than all other crosses whatsoever. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 267.

> It (a play) is good, though wronged by my over great expectations, as all things else are. Pepys, Diary, I. 149.

> To use the seaman's phrase, we were very much wronged by the ship that had us in chase.
> Smollett, Roderick Random, lxv.

3. To be in the wrong in regard to; view or consider wrongly; give an erroneous seeming to; put in the wrong, or in a false light.

> Thy creatures wrong thee, O thou sov'reign Good!
> Thou art not lov'd because not understood.
> Cowper, Happy Solitude—Unhappy Men (trans.)

> Thy friendship thus thy judgment wronging
> With praises not to me belonging > Scott, Marmion, iii. Int.

wrong-doer (rông'dö'ėr), n. 1. One who does wrong, or commits wrongful or reprehensible acts; any offender against the moral law.

> Especially when we see the wrong doer prosperous do we feel as if the injustice of fortune ought to be redressed.
> Channing, Perfect Life, p. 10.

2. In law, one who commits a tort or trespass; a tort-feasor.

wrong-doing (rông'dö'ing), n. The doing of wrong; behavior the opposite of what is right; blameworthy action in general.

wronget, wrongent. Middle English forms of wrang.

wrongeous, a. An old spelling of wrongous.

wronger (rông'ėr), n. [< wrong + -er[1].] One who inflicts wrong or harm; an injurer; a misuser.

> Hold, shepherd, hold! learn not to be a wronger
> Of your word. Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iv. 3.

> Caitiffs and wrongers of the world. Tennyson, Geraint.

wrongful (rông'fúl), a. [< ME. wrongful: < wrong, n., + -ful.] Full of or characterized by wrong; injurious; unjust; unfair: as, a wrongful taking of property.

> I am so far from granting thy request
> That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit.
> Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 107.

—Syn. See wrong, a.

wrongfully (rông'fúl-i), adv. In a wrong manner; in a manner contrary to the moral law or to justice; injustly: as, to accuse one wrongfully; to suffer wrongfully.

> Accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully.
> Shak., Much Ado, iv. 2. 51.

wrongfulness (rông'fúl-nes), n. The quality of being wrong or wrongful; injustice.

wronghead (rông'hed), a. and n. [< wrong + head.] I. a. Same as wrongheaded. [Rare.]

> This jealous, waspish, wrong-head, rhyming race
> Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 14.

II. n. A wrongheaded person. [Rare.]

wrongheaded (rông'hed'ed), a. [< wronghead + -ed[2].] Characterized by or due to perversity of the judgment; obstinately opinionated; misguided; stubborn.

> A wrongheaded distrust of England.
> Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 436.

wrongheadedly (rông'hed'ed-li), adv. In a wrongheaded manner; obstinately; perversely.

> He [Johnson] . . . then rose to be under the care of Mr Hunter, the head-master, who, according to his account, was very severe, and wrongheadedly severe.
> Boswell, Johnson, an. 1719.

wrongheadedness (rông'hed'ed-nes), n. The state or character of being wrongheaded; perversity of judgment.

> There is no end of his impertinence and wrongheadedness!
> Walpole, Letters, II. 220.

wronghearted (rông'här'ted), a. Wrong in heart or sensibility; not right or just in feeling.

wrongheartedness (rông'här'ted-nes), n. The state or character of being wronghearted; perversity of feeling.

> Wrong-headedness may be as fatal now as wrong-heartedness.
> The Century, XXIX. 910.

wrongless (rông'les), a. [< wrong, n., + -less.] Void of wrong. [Rare.]

wronglessly (rông'les-li), adv. Without wrong or harm; harmlessly. [Rare.]

> He was . . . honourably courteous and wrongelessly valiant. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

wrongly (rông'li), adv. [< ME. wronglyche; < wrong + -ly[2].] In a wrong or erroneous manner; unjustly; mistakenly.

> Thou . . . wouldst not play false,
> And yet wouldst wrongly win.
> Shak., Macbeth, i. 5. 22.

wrongminded (rông'min'ded), a. Having a mind wrongly inclined; entertaining erroneous or distorted views.

wrongness (rông'nes), n. [< ME. wrongnesse; < wrong, a., + -ness.] 1†. Crookedness; wryness; unevenness. Prompt. Parv., p. 534.—2. The state or condition of being wrong or erroneous; heinousness; faultiness.

> The best have great wrongnesses within themselves, which they complain of, and endeavour to amend.
> Butler, Analogy of Religion. (Latham.)

> The wrongness of murder is known by a moral intuition.
> H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 14.

wrongous (rông'us), a. [Also wrongeous, < ME. wrongous, for earlier wrongwis, wrangwes (= Sw. vrångvis), wrong, iniquitous; < wrong + wise[2] (cf. righteous.)] 1†. Wrongful; unjust; improper.

> I will not father my taken on you,
> Nor on no wrongous man.
> Childe Vyet (Child's Ballads, II. 77).

2. In Scots law, not right; unjust; illegal: as, wrongous imprisonment.

> Every wrong must be judged by the first violent and wrongous ground whereupon it proceeds.
> James I., To Bacon, Aug. 25, 1617.

wrongously† (rông'us-li), adv. [Also wrongeously, < ME. wrongously; < wrongous + -ly[2].] Unjustly; wrongfully; unfairly.

> Here hane we done and shewid curtesay,
> Where to wrongously villanous ye doo,
> To thys noble damisel and lady.
> Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1857.

Wronski's theorem. See theorem.

wroot†, v. An old spelling of root[2].

wrot†. An old spelling of wrote[1].

wrote[1] (rōt). Preterit and obsolete or vulgar past participle of write.

wrote[2]†, v. A Middle English form of root[2].

> Right as a songhe wroteth in everich ordure, so wroteth hire beautee in the stynkyng ordure of synt.
> Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

wrote[3] (rōth), a. [< ME. wrath, wrooth, < AS. wrāth angry (= OS. wrēth = D. wreed, cruel, = Icel. reiðr = Sw. Dan. vred, angry); prob. orig. 'twisted,' perverse (= MHG. rei, reid, curled, twisted), < writhan, pret. wrāth, twist, writhe: see writhe. Hence ult. wrath, n.] Excited by wrath; wrathful; indignant; angry: rarely used attributively.

> Revel and trouthe, as in a low degree,
> Ther been ful wrothe al day, as men may see.
> Chaucer, Cook's Tale, l. 54.

> In every thyng thanne was he grevid sore,
> And more wrother thanne he was before.
> Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1558.

> Sir Aldingar was wrothe in his mind,
> With her hee was never content.
> Sir Aldingar (Child's Ballads, III. 244).

> Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell.
> Gen. iv. 5.

wroth† (rōth), v. i. [ME. wrothen, var. of wrathen: see wrath, v.] To become angry; be wrathful; rage.

> Again Medusine wrothed he ful sore,
> That to hir seyd moch repref and velony.
> Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1351.

wrothful (roth'fúl), a. An erroneous form for wrathful.

> The knight, yet wrothfull for his late disgrace,
> Fiercely adventst his valorous right arme.
> Spenser, F. Q., II. xi. 34.

wrothly† (rōth'li), adv. [< ME. wrothly: < wroth + -ly[2].] Wrathfully; angrily.

> When William saw hire wepe wrothli he spide,
> "For seynt mary leve, madame, why make ye this sorwe?"
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2983.

wrought (rât), p. a. [Pp. of work.] Worked, as distinguished from rough: noting masonry, carpentry, etc.

wrought-iron (rât'ī'ėrn), n. Iron that is or may be wrought into form by forging or rolling, and that is capable of being welded; malleable iron. See iron.

wrung (rung). Preterit and past participle of wring.

wry[1] (rī), v.; pret. and pp. wried, ppr. wrying. [< ME. wrien, wryen, < AS. wrigian, drive, tend, turn, bend. Cf. wreak, wrig, wriggle. Hence wry[1], a., awry.] I. intrans. 1. To turn; bend; wind; twist or twine about, with or without change of place.

> How well a certain wrying I had of my neck became me.
> Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

> The first with divers crooks and turnings wries.
> P. Fletcher, Purple Island, v.

2. To swerve or go obliquely; go awry or astray; deviate from the right course, physically or morally.

> And she sprong as a colt doth in the trave,
> And with her heed she wried faste awey.
> Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 97.

> No manere mede shulde make him wrye,
> For to trien a trouthe betwynne two eldis.
> Richard the Redeless, ii. 84.

> How many
> . . . murder wives much better than themselves
> For wrying but a little!
> Shak., Cymbeline, v. 1. 5.

II. trans. 1. To turn; twist aside.

> Soone thei can ther hedys a-way wrye,
> And to falce speche lightly thier eyes close.
> Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 63.

2. To give a twist to; make wry; writhe; wring.

> Using their wried countenances, instead of a vice, to turn the good aspects of all that shall sit near them.
> B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 4.

> Guests by hundreds . . . not one caring
> If the dear host's neck were wried.
> Browning, In a Gondola.

3. Figuratively, to pervert; alter.

> They have wrested and wryed his [Christ's] doctrine, and like a rule of lead have applied it to men's manners.
> Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

> Ill slant eyes interpret the straight sun,
> But in their scope its white is wried to black.
> Swinburne, At Eleusis.

[Obsolete or archaic in all uses.]

wry[1] (rī), a. and n. [< wry[1], v. Cf. awry.] I. a. 1 Abnormally bent or turned to one side; in a state of contortion; twisted; distorted; askew.

> With fah black eyes and hair and a wry nose.
> B. Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry.

> He calls them (the clergy) the Saints with Screw'd Faces and wry Mouths.
> Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 282.

2. Crooked; bent; not straight. [Rare.]

> Losing himself in many a wry meander.
> W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 2.

3. Devious in course or purpose; divaricating; aberrant; misdirected.

> He's one I would not have a wry thought darted against, willingly.
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

> Every wry step by which he imagines himself to have declined from the path of duty affrights him when he reflects on it.
> Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. xv.

To make a wry face or mouth, to manifest disgust, displeasure, pain, or the like, by distorting or puckering up the face or mouth.

> You seem resolved to do credit to our mystery, and die like a man, without making wry mouths.
> Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxiv.

II. n. A twisting about, or out of shape or course; distortion; a distorting effect. [Rare or prov. Eng.]

> If the leach looks so innocent you make full sure to prog him well in spite of the wry of the water.
> R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, viii.

wry[2]†, v. t. [< ME. wrye, wryen, wrien, < AS. wrīðan, wrihan*, (ONorth. wria (pp. wrigen), cover, clothe. Cf. rug[2].] To cover; clothe; cover up; cloak; hide.

> Wry [var. wre] the gleed, and hedge is the fyr.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 736.

> But of his hondwerk wolde he gete > Clothes to wrye hym, and his mete.
> Rom. of the Rose, l. 6564.

> With fessle gravel let diligence hem wrie,
> And XXX dayes under that hem kepe.
> Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 218.

wrybill (rī'bil), n. A kind of plover, Anarhynchus frontalis, of New Zealand, having the bill bent sidewise. See second cut under plover.

wry-billed (rī'bild), a. Having the bill awry or bent sidewise: as, the wry-billed plover. See second cut under plover.

wryly (rī'li), adv. [< wry[1] + -ly[2].] In a wry, distorted, or awkward manner.

Most of them have tried their fortune at some little lottery-office of literature, and, receiving a blank, have chewed upon it harshly and wryly.
Lander, Imag. Conv., Southey and Porson, i.

wrymouth (ri'mouth), n. In ichth.: (a) Any fish of the family Cryptacanthodidæ (which see). The common wrymouth is Cryptacanthodes maculatus, a spotless variety of which is the ghost-fish, specified as C. inornatus. It is a blenioid of slender eel-like form, normally profusely spotted, found not very commonly on the Atlantic coast of North America.

The cod-fish, the cunner, the sea-raven, the rock eel, and the wry-mouth, which inhabit these brilliant groves, are all colored to match their surroundings.
Science, X V. 212.

(b) The electric ray, torpedo, or numb-fish. See cuts under Torpedinidæ and torpedo.

wry-mouthed (ri'moutht), a. 1. Having a crooked mouth; hence, unflattering.

A shaggy tapestry . . .
Instructive work! whose wry-mouth'd portraiture
Display'd the fates her confessors endure.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 115.

2. In conch., having an irregular or distorted aperture of the shell. P. P. Carpenter.

wryneck (ri'nek), n. 1. A twisted or distorted neck; a deformity in which the neck is drawn to one side and rotated. See torticollis.—2. A spasmodic disease of sheep, in which the head is drawn to one side.—3. A scansorial piearian bird of the genus Iynx (Junx, or Yunx), allied to the woodpeckers, and belonging to the same family or a closely related one; so called from the singular manner in which it can twist the neck, and so turn it awry. The common wryneck of Europe is I. (J. or Y.) torquilla; there are several other similar species. These birds have the toes in pairs, the bill straight and hard, the tongue extremely long, slender, and extensile, and most other characters of the true Picidæ or woodpeckers, but the tail-feathers are soft, broad, and rounded at the ends, and not used in climbing. The wryneck is migratory and insectivorous, and its general habits are similar to those of woodpeckers. It has a variety of names pointing to its arrival in the British Islands at the same time as the cuckoo, as cuckoo's-fowl, -messenger, -mate, leader, -maid, mate, -messenger, -marrow, -skite, etc. It is also called arithoneck and snake-bird, from the twisting of its neck; long-tongue and tongue-bird, from its long tongue, emmet-hunter, from feeding on ants, pea-bird, weet-bird, from its cry, turkey-bird, nile-bird, and sleb, for some unexplained reasons.

Common Wryneck (Iynx torquilla).

Even while I write I hear the quaint queak, queak, queak of the wryneck.
Mortimer Collins, Thoughts in my Garden, I. 62.

The wryneck will tap the tree, to stimulate the insect to run out to be eaten entire.
P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 86.

wry-necked (ri'nekt), a. Having a wry or distorted neck.

When you hear the drum,
And the vile squealing of the wry-neck'd fife.
Shak., M. of V., II. 5. 30.

[By some this is understood as an allusion to the bend of the fifer's neck while playing upon his instrument; by others (less probably) to an old form of the flute, called the flute-à-bec, having a curved mouthpiece like the beak of a bird at one side.]

A fife is a wry necked musician, for he always looks away from his instrument.
Barnaby Rich, Irish Hubbub (1616). (Nares.)

wryness (ri'nes), n. The state of being wry or distorted.

wryt, wryte, wrythe†. Obsolete spellings of writ[1], write, writhe.

W. S. An abbreviation of writer to the signet. See signet.

W. S. W. An abbreviation of west-southwest.

wt. A contraction of weight.

wucht. An obsolete form of which[1].

wud (wud), a. A Scotch form of wood[2].

wudder (wud'ėr), r. i. See wuther.

wudet, n. A Middle English form of wood[1].

wulfenite (wul'fen-it), n. [Named after Baron von Wulfen or Wülfen (1728–1805), an Austrian scientist.] Native lead molybdate, a mineral of a bright-yellow to orange, red, green, or brown color and resinous to adamantine luster. It occurs in tetragonal crystals, often in very thin tabular form, also granular massive. Also called yellow lead ore.

wull. An obsolete or dialectal form of will[1], will[2].

wummel, wummle, n. Scotch forms of wimble[1].

wunt, v. i. See won[1].

wungee (wun'jē), n. [E. Ind.] A variety in India of the muskmelon, Cucumis Melo, sometimes regarded as a species, C. cicutrinatus. It is of an ovate form, about 6 inches long.

wurali, wurari, n. Same as curari.

wurdt, n. An old spelling of word[1].

wurmal† (wėr'mal), n. Same as wormal.

wurrus (wur'us), n. [< Ar. wars, a dyestuff similar to kamala.] A brick-red dye-powder, somewhat like dragon's-blood, collected from the seeds of Rottlera tinctoria.

wurset, wurst†. Old spellings of worse, worst.

Würtemberger (wėr'tem-bėrg-ėr; G. pron. vür'tem-ber-gėr), n. [< Würtemberg (G. Württemberg) (see def.) + -er[1].] An inhabitant of Würtemberg, a kingdom of southern Germany.

Würtemberg siphon. See siphon.

wurth†. An old spelling of worth[1], worth[2].

wurtzilite (wėrt'sil-it), n. [Named after Dr. Henry Wurtz, of New York (b. 1828).] A kind of solid bitumen found in the Uintah Mountains, Utah. It has a deep-black color and brilliant luster, and breaks with a conchoidal fracture. It is elastic when slightly warmed, and in boiling water becomes soft and plastic.

wurtzite (wėrt'sīt), n. [After C. A. Wurtz (1817–1884), a French chemist.] Sulphid of zinc occurring in hexagonal crystals, isomorphous with greenockite. Sulphid of zinc is accordingly dimorphous, the common form, sphalerite or zinc blende, being isometric. Also called spauterite.

Würzburger (wėrts'bėrg-ėr; G. pron. vürts'bürgėr), n. Wine made in the neighborhood of the city of Würzburg, in Bavaria. This name is often given to the wines more properly called Leisten-wein and Stein-wein, and to the famous "wine of the Holy Ghost."

wus[1]†, v. i. See wis[4].

wus[2]†, n. A Middle English form of woose, ooze.

Hee wringes onto the wet wus and went on his gate.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 712.

wuther (wuтн'ėr), v. i. [Also wudder; perhaps ult. < AS. woth, a noise, cry, sound.] To make a sullen roar, as the wind. [North. Eng.]

The air was now dark with snow; an Iceland blast was driving it wildly. This pair neither heard the long wuthering rush, nor saw the white burden it drifted.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxxiii.

From time to time the wind wuthered in the chimney at his back.
R. L. Stevenson and L. Osbourne, The Wrong Box, vi.

There was also a wuthering wind sobbing through the narrow wet streets.
A. E. Barr, Friend Olivia, iv.

wuther (wuтн'ėr), n. [Also wudder; < wuther, v.] A low roaring or rustling, as of the wind. [North. Eng.]

I felt sure . . . by the wuther of wind amongst trees, denoting a garden outside.
Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xvi.

wuzzent (wuz'ent), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of wizened.

An I had ye amang the Frigate Whins, wadna I set my ten talents in your wuzzent face for that very word!
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xviii.

wuzzle (wuz'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. wuzzled, ppr. wuzzling. [Origin obscure.] To mingle; mix; jumble; muddle. [New Eng.]

He wuzzled things up in the most singular way.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 63.

wyandotte (wī'an-dot'), n. [From the American Indian tribal name Wyandotte.] An American variety of the domestic hen, of medium size and compact form, hardy, and valuable for eggs and for the table. The silver wyandotte, the typical variety, has every feather white, except heavily margined with black, except the black tail-feathers and primaries, the hackle (and in males the saddle) white striped with black, and the white wing-bows of the males. The golden wyandotte replaces the white of the silver variety by orange or deep-buff; and the white wyandotte is pure white. The combs are rose, legs yellow, and ear-lobes red.

wych (wich), n. See wich[4].

wych-elm, wych-hazel, n. See witch-elm, witch-hazel.

Wyclifite, Wycliffite (wik'lif-it), a. and n. [Also Wickliffite, Wickliffite; < Wyclif, etc. (see def.), + -ite[2].] I. a. Of or pertaining to John Wyclif or de Wyclif (a name also written Wiclif, Wicklif, Wycliffe, Wyckliffe, and in various other ways reflecting the varying orthography of his time), properly in modern spelling Wickliff[1], an English theologian, reformer, and translator of the Bible from the Vulgate (died 1384).

II. n. One of the followers of Wyclif, commonly called Lollards. Wyclif's doctrines, propagated in his lifetime and later by open-air preachers called "poor priests," largely coincided with the later teachings of Luther.

wyde†, a. An old spelling of wide.

wydewhert, adv. See widewhere.

wye[1]†, n. See wie.

wye[2] (wī), n. The letter Y, or something resembling it.

wyert, n. In her., same as vivre.

wyf†, n. An old spelling of wife.

Wykehamist (wik'am-ist), n. [< Wykeham (see def.) + -ist.] A student, or one who has been a student, of Winchester College in England, founded by William of Wykeham (1324–1404), Bishop of Winchester and Chancellor of England, as a preparatory school for New College at Oxford, also founded by him. Also used attributively.

It may reasonably be hoped that this is not Wykehamist Greek.
Athenæum, No. 3203, p. 212.

We notice a complaint that Wykehamists obtained an undue proportion of the university prizes.
The Academy, No. 873, p. 56.

wylet, n. An old spelling of wile[1].

wylie-coat (wī'li-kōt), n. [Sc.; also spelled wyle-coat, wylie-coat; first element uncertain.] A flannel garment worn under the outer clothes; an under-vest or under petticoat.

wylot, n. An old spelling of willow[1].

wynt, n. An old spelling of wine.

wynd[1] (wind), n. [Another spelling and use of wind[1], n.] An alley; a lane; especially, a narrow alley used as a street in a town. [Scotch.]

The wynds of Glasgow where there was little more than a chink of daylight to show the hatred in women's faces.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxvii.

wynd[2]†, n. A Middle English spelling of wind[2].

wyndast, n. An obsolete spelling of windas.

wyndewet, wyndowet, wyndwet, wynewet, r. Middle English forms of winnow.

wyndret, v. An unexplained verb, 'probably meaning 'to attire' or 'to adorn,' found in the following passage:

It nedede nought
To wyndre hir or to peynte hir ought.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1020.

wynkt, n. A Middle English spelling of wink[1].

wynn (win), n. [Origin obscure.] A kind of timber truck or carriage. Simmonds.

wynt†. A contraction of windeth; third person singular indicative present of wind[1].

wypet, n. [< ME. wipe, wype, a bird, < Sw. Norw. repa = Dan. vibe, lapwing; perhaps so called from its habit of fluttering its wings (cf. Vanellus), from the verb represented by Sw. rippa, rock, see-saw, tilt: see whip[1]. Otherwise imitative; cf. weep[2].] A lapwing.

Wipe, brydo or lapwynge. Upupa. Prompt. Parv., p. 530.

wypert, n. Same as wiper.

wyppyl-tre†, n. A Middle English form of whippel-tree.

wyst, wyset, a. Old spellings of wise[1]. Chaucer.

wytet, v. and n. Another spelling of wite[2].

wythe†, n. See withe.

wyvet, v. An old spelling of wive.

wyvert, n. See wivern.

wyvernt, n. See wivern.

X

1. The twenty-fourth letter and nineteenth consonant-sign in the English alphabet. In the Latin alphabet, from which it comes to ours, it followed next after U or V (which were then only one letter: see U), and was till a late date the last letter in that alphabet, till Y and Z (see these letters) were finally added from the Greek to represent peculiar Greek sounds. The sign X was a Greek addition to the Phenician alphabet: it had in early Greek use a divided value: in the eastern alphabets, that of kh (besides the signs for ps and ks); in the western, that of ks (besides the signs for ps and ts or ds). The former of the two came afterward to be the universally accepted value in Greece itself; while the latter was carried over into Italy, and so became Roman, and was passed on to us. Hence our X has in general the Latin value ks; but as initial (almost only in words from the Greek, and there representing a different Greek character, the kh) we have reduced it to the z-sound, as in Xerxes, xanthous. In many words also, especially among those beginning with ex, it is made sonant, or pronounced as gz. The accepted rule for this is that the gz sound is given after an unaccented before an accented vowel, as in exert, exhale (egzert, egzhāl), over against exercise, exile (eksersīz, eksīl). But usage does not follow the rule with exactness, and many cultivated speakers disregard the distinction altogether, pronouncing everywhere alike ks (or kz). In any case, the sign X is superfluous in English, as it was in Latin and in Greek, it denotes no sound which is not fully provided for otherwise. In Old English it was sometimes used for sh, as in xal = shall.

2. As a numeral, X stands for ten. When laid horizontally (Ↄ), it stands for a thousand, and with a dash over it (X̄) it stands for ten thousand.

3. As an abbreviation, X. stands for Christ, as in Xn. (Christian), Xmas. (Christmas).—4. As a symbol: (a) In ornith., in myological formulas, the symbol of the semitendinosus muscle. A. H. Garrod. (b) In math.: (1) [l. c.] In algebra, the first of the unknown quantities or variables. (2) [l. c.] In analytical geometry, an abscissa or other rectilinear point-coördinate. (3) In mechanics, the component of a force in the direction of the axis of x.—5. Originally, a mark on brewers' casks: hence, a name given to ale of a certain quality. Compare XX, XXX.—X function. See function.

xanorphica (zā-nôr'fi-kä), n. A musical instrument, resembling the harmonichord and the tetrachordon, invented by Röllig in 1801, the strings of which were sounded by means of little bows.

Xantharpyia (zan-thär-pī'i-ä), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + NL. Harpyia, q. v.] A genus of Pteropodidæ. X. amplexicaudata is a fruit-bat of the Austromalayan subregion.

xantharsenite (zan-thär'se-nīt), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + E. arsenite.] A hydrated arsenate of manganese, occurring in sulphur-yellow massive forms. It is found in Sweden, and is related to chondrarsenite.

xanthate (zan'thāt), n. [< xanthic + *-ate*¹.] A salt of xanthic acid.

xanthein (zan'thē-in), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + *-ein*².] That part of the yellow coloring matter in flowers which is soluble in water, as distinguished from xanthin, which is the insoluble part.

xanthelasma (zan-thē-las'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ἔλασμα, a plate.] Same as xanthoma.

Xanthia (zan'thi-ä), n. [NL. (Ochsenheimer, 1816), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of moths, of the family Orthosiidæ, having slender porrect palpi, and mostly yellow or orange fore wings undulating along their exterior border. It comprises about 30 species, and is represented in Europe, Asia, North and South America, and the West Indies. X. fulvago is the sallow-moth of Europe. Its larva feeds when young on catkins of willow, later on bramble and plantain.

Xanthian (zan'thi-an), a. [< Gr. Ξάνθος, Xanthus (see def.).] Of or belonging to Xanthus, an ancient town of Lycia in Asia Minor.—Xanthian sculptures, a large collection of sculptures chiefly sepulchral, from Xanthus and the neighboring region, preserved in the British Museum. The collection includes the reliefs from the so-called Harpy tomb. See Harpy monument, under harpy.

xanthic (zan'thik), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -ic.] Tending toward a yellow color; of or relating to xanthin; yellow, referring to the color of the urine.—Xanthic acid, the general name of the esters or other acids of thiosulphocarbonic acid, as ethyl xanthic acid, $C_3SO.C_2H_5.SH$, a heavy, oily liquid with a penetrating smell and a sharp, astringent taste, many of whose salts have a yellow color. Xanthic calculus, a urinary calculus composed in great part of xanthin. Xanthic flowers, flowers which have yellow for their type, and are capable of passing into red or white, but never into blue. Those flowers of which blue is the type, and which are capable of passing into red or white, but never into yellow, have been termed cyanic flowers.—Xanthic oxid, xanthin.—Xanthic-oxid calculus. Same as xanthic calculus.

xanthid (zan'thid), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + *-id*².] A compound of xanthogen.

xanthin, xanthine (zan'thin), n. [Also xanthin; < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + *-in*², *-ine*².] One of several substances, so named with reference to their color. Especially (a) That part of the yellow coloring matter of flowers which is insoluble in water. (b) The yellow coloring matter contained in madder. (c) A gaseous product of the decomposition of xanthates. (d) A complex body, $C_5H_4N_4O_2$, related to uric acid, occurring usually in small quantity in the blood, urine, and liver, and occasionally in urinary calculi. It is a white diamorphous body, and combines with both acids and bases.—Xanthin calculus. Same as xanthic calculus. See xanthic.

xanthinuria (zan-thi-nū'ri-ä), n. [< xanthin + Gr. οὖρον, urine.] The excretion of xanthin in abnormal quantity in the urine. Also xanthuria.

Xanthispa (zan-this'pä), n. [NL. (Baly, 1858), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + NL. Hispa, q. v.] A genus of leaf beetles, of the family Chrysomelidæ, erected for the single species X. semicostata, from Cayenne.

xanthitane (zan'thi-tān), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + titanium.] An alteration product of the sphene (titanite) from Henderson county, North Carolina. In composition it is analogous to the clays, but contains chiefly titanic acid instead of silica.

xanthite (zan'thīt), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + *-ite*².] A variety of vesuvianite found in limestone near Amity, New York.

Xanthium (zan'thi-um), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700, earlier by Lobel, 1576), < Gr. ξάνθιον, a plant, said to be X. strumarium, and to have been so named because its infusion turned the hair yellow: < ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Helianthoideæ and subtribe Ambrosiæ. It is characterized by unisexual flower-heads, the male with a single row of separate bracts, Upper Part of the Staminate and Pistillate Heads and Leaves of Cocklebur (Xanthium strumarium).

a staminate flower; b pistillate flower; involucre inclosing two pistillate flowers.

the female armed with numerous hooked prickles. Twenty-one species have been described, perhaps to be reduced to four: they are mostly of uncertain, perhaps of American, origin, but are now widely naturalized throughout warm regions. They are coarse weedy annuals with alternate leaves which are lobed and cloth-like tomentose, or are coarsely toothed and greenish. The small monœcious flower-heads are solitary or clustered in the axils, in the fertile heads the fruit-bound a large spiny bur containing the achenes. The species are known as cocklebur, or as clotbur, 8 occur in the United States, only 1 of which is native, X. Canadense, which varies near the coast and the Great Lakes to a dwarf variety, echinatum, known as sea-burdock; of the others X. spinosum, the spiny clot-bur, thought to be a native of Chili, is armed with slender yellowish trifid spines in the axils, and X. strumarium is the common species of Europe. In England it is known as ditch bur, burweed, louse bur, and small burdock.

xanthiuria (zan-thi-ū'ri-ä), n. Same as xanthinuria.

Xantho (zan'thō), n. [NL. (Leach, 1815), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of brachyurous crustaceans, of the family Cancridæ, with numerous species. Also Xanthus.

xanthocarpous (zan-thō-kär'pus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., having yellow fruit.

Xanthocephalus (zan-thō-sef'a-lus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1850), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + κεφαλή, head.] A genus of Icteridæ, or American blackbirds, having as type the common yellow-headed blackbird of the United States, first described by Bonaparte in 1825 as Icterus icterocephalus, and now known as X. icterocephalus. This large blackbird, of striking aspect, abounds in North America from Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin westward, extending north into the British possessions, and south into Mexico. The male is jet-black, with the whole head and neck bright yellow, except the black lores and a black space about the base of the bill; there is a large white wing-patch, and usually there are a few yellow feathers on the thighs and vent. The length is from 10 to 11 inches, the extent 16½ to 17½. The female is smaller and chiefly brownish. This blackbird nests in marshy places, and lays from three to six eggs of a grayish-green color spotted with reddish-brown. Also called Xanthosomus.

Yellow-headed Blackbird (Xanthocephalus icterocephalus), male.

Xanthochelus (zan-thō-kē'lus), n. [NL. (Chevrolat, 1873), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + χηλή, a claw.] A genus of snout-beetles, of the family Curculionidæ and subfamily Cleonina, having wings and some what prismoid elytra. It contains less than a dozen species, distributed from Egypt to Siberia.

Xanthochlorus (zan-thō-klō'rus), n. [NL. (Loew, 1857), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + χλωρός, greenish-yellow.] A genus of dipterous insects of the family Dolichopodidæ, comprising 4 small rust-colored species with yellow wings, of which 3 are European and 1 is North American. Leptopus is a synonym.

Xanthochroa (zan-thok'rō-ä), n. [NL. (Schmidt, 1846), < Gr. ξανθόχροος, with yellow skin, < ξανθός, yellow, + χροιά, χρόα, the skin.] A genus of beetles, of the family Œdemeridæ, comprising 7 species, of which 3 are European, 1 in South America, and 3 are North American. They are small slender beetles with contiguous middle coxæ, obliquely spurred front tibiæ, and deeply emarginate eyes.

Xanthochroi (zan-thok'rō-ī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of xanthochrous: see xanthochrous.] In ethnol., one of the five groups into which some anthropologists classify man, comprising the blond type, or fair whites.

The Xanthochroi or fair whites — tall, with almost colourless skin, blue or grey eyes, hair from straw colour to chestnut, and skulls varying as to proportionate width are the prevalent inhabitants of Northern Europe, and the type may be traced into North Africa and eastward as far as Hindostan. On the south and west it mixes with that of the Melanochroi, or dark whites, and on the north and east with that of the Mongoloids.

E. B. Tylor, Encyc. Brit., II. 113.

xanthochroia (zan-thō-krō'i-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + χροά, the skin.] A yellow discoloration of the skin resulting from pigmentary changes. Also xanthopathia, xanthopathy.

xanthochroic (zan-thō-krō'ik), a. [< xanthochro-ous + -ic.] Same as xanthochroous.

That distinction of light- and dark-haired populations and individuals which anthropologists have designated xanthochroic and melanochroic.

A. Winchell, N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 254.

xanthochroöus (zan-thok'rō-us), a. [< NL. xanthochrous*, < Gr. ξανθόχρους, yellow-skinned, < ξανθός, yellow, + χρόα, skin, color.] Yellow-skinned; of or pertaining to the Xanthochroi.

xanthocon, xanthocone (zan'thō-kon, -kōn), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + κόνις, dust.] An arsenio-sulphid of silver, of a dull-red or clove-brown color, occurring in hexagonal tabular crystals, but commonly in crystalline reniform masses. When reduced to powder it becomes yellow (whence the name). Also xanthoconite.

xanthocreatine (zan-thō-krē'a-tin), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + κρέας (κρεατ-), flesh, + *-ine*2.] A basic nitrogenous substance found in muscular tissue and occasionally in urine, occurring in the form of yellow crystalline plates.

xanthocreatinine (zan'thō-krē-at'i-nin), n. Same as xanthocreatine.

xanthocyanopsy (zan'thō-si-an'op-si), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + κύανος, dark-blue, + ὄψις, appearance.] Color-blindness in which the ability to distinguish yellow and blue only is present, vision for red being wanting.

Xanthocycla (zan-thō-sī'klä), n. [NL. (Baly, 1876), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + κύκλος, a ring, circle.] A genus of beetles, of the family Chrysomelidæ, agreeing somewhat with Euphitrœa in sternal structure, but with punctate striate elytra, and different hind thighs. The type is A. chapuisi from India. The genus is supposed to be synonymous with Amphimela (Chapuis, 1875).

xanthoderma (zan-thō-der'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + δέρμα, the skin.] Yellowness of the skin from any cause; xanthochroia.

Xanthodes (zan-thō'dēz), n. [NL. (Guenée, 1852), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + εἶδος, form.] A genus of noctuid moths, of Guenée's family lemitidæ, comprising a few species inhabiting southern Europe, Asia, and Africa, whose metamorphoses are unknown. The fore wings are entire, usually rounded, and pale-yellow in color, with red or violet-brown markings.

xanthodont (zan'thō-dont), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] Having yellow teeth, as a rodent. The enamel of the front surface of the incisors in rodents is, as a rule, of some bright color into which yellow enters, usually orange or of a still more reddened tint, furnishing a notable exception to the white teeth of most mammals, the pleconic or reddish black teeth of most shrews being another exception to the rule.

xanthodontous (zan-thō-don'tus), a. [< xanthodont + -ous.] Same as xanthodont.

xanthogen (zan'thō-jen), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -γενής, producing: see -gen.] A hypothetical radical formerly supposed to exist in xanthic acid and its compounds.

Xanthogramma (zan-thō-gram'ä), n. [NL. (Schiner, 1860), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + γράμμα, mark, letter.] A genus of dipterous insects, of the family Syrphidæ, closely allied to the genus Syrphus, and comprising 3 European and 5 North American species. They are large, almost naked flies, of a metallic black color broken with yellow spots and bands. The larvæ probably feed on plant-lice.

Xantholestes (zan-thō-les'tēz), n. [NL. (R. B. Sharpe, 1877), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + λῃστής, a robber: see Lestes.] In ornith., a genus of Philippine flycatchers, inhabiting the island of Panay. X. panayensis is the only species; 4½ inches long, olive-yellow above and bright yellow below.

Xantholinus (zan-thō-lī'nus), n. [NL. Serville, 1825), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + NL. Staphylinus.] A genus of rove-beetles or Staphylinidæ, of universal distribution, and comprising about 100 species, distinguished chiefly by the long terminal joint of the maxillary palpi. They are found under dead leaves, stones, and moss; but a few European species are myrmecophilous, living in the nests of Formica rufa and F. fuliginosa.

Xantholites (zan-thō-lī'tēz), n. [NL. (Etheridge), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + λίθος, stone.] A genus of fossil crustaceans from the London clay.

xanthoma (zan-thō'mä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξάνθωμα, yellow, + -oma.] A connective-tissue new growth in the skin, forming soft yellow patches, either flat (xanthoma planum) or tuberculated (xanthoma tuberosum). The former is especially apt to occur on the eyelids being then called xanthoma palpebrarum. Also called vitiligoidea and xanthelasma.

xanthomatous (zan-thom'a-tus), a. [< xanthoma(t-) + -ous.] In pathol., of or pertaining to xanthoma: as, the xanthomatous diathesis.

xanthomelanous (zan-thō-mel'a-nus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + μέλας (μελαν-), black.] Noting a type or race of men. See the quotation.

The Xanthomelanous, with black hair and yellow, brown, or olive skins. Huxley, Critiques and Addresses, p. 153.

Xanthonia (zan-thō'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Baly, 1863), < ξανθός, yellow.] A genus of chrysomelid beetles, comprising 4 species, all North American. X. stevensi and X. villosula feed on the leaves of the black walnut.

xanthopathy (zan-thop'a-thi), n. [< NL. xanthopathia, < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πάθος, disease.] Same as xanthochroia.

Xanthophæa (zan-thō-fē'ä), n. [NL. (Chaudoir, 1848), < ξανθός, yellow, + φαιός, dusky.] A genus of beetles, of the family Carabidæ, comprising 2 species, one from Australia and the other from Oceanica.

xanthophane (zan'thō-fān), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + φανής, < φαίνεσθαι, appear.] A yellow coloring matter derived from the retina.

xanthophyl, xanthophyll (zan'thō-fil), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + φύλλον, leaf.] In bot., the peculiar yellow coloring matter of autumn leaves, due to the decomposition of chlorophyl. Its chemical composition and the processes of its formation are not well known. See chlorophyl, chrysophyl. Also called phylloxanthin.

xanthophylline (zan-thō-fil'in), n. [< xanthophyl + *-ine*2.] Same as xanthophyl.

xanthophyllite (zan-thō-fil'īt), n. [As xanthophyl + *-ite*2.] A mineral allied to the micas, occurring in crusts or implanted globules in talcose schist; found in Zlatoust in the Ural. Wahlewite is a variety in distinct tabular crystals. Xanthophyllite is closely allied to seybertite (clintonite), and these species, with chloritoid, ottrelite, etc., constitute the clintonite group, or the brittle micas.

xanthopicrin (zan-thō-pik'rin), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πικρός, bitter, + *-in*2.] In chem., a name given by Chevallier and Pelletan to a yellow coloring matter from the bark of Xanthoxylum Caribæum, afterward shown to be identical with berberine.

xanthopicrite (zan-thō-pik'rit), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πικρός, bitter, + *-ite*2.] Same as xanthopicrin.

xanthopous (zan'thō-pus), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πούς (ποδ-) = E. foot.] In bot., having a yellow stem.

xanthoproteic (zan-thō-prō'tē-ik), a. [< xanthoprotein + -ic.] Related to or derived from xanthoprotein. — Xanthoproteic acid, a non-crystallizable acid substance resulting from the decomposition of albuminoids by nitric acid.

xanthoprotein (zan-thō-prō'tē-in), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + E. protein.] The characteristic yellow substance formed by the action of hot nitric acid on proteid matters.

xanthoproteinic (zan-thō-prō-tē-in'ik), a. [< xanthoprotein + -ic.] Related to xanthoprotein.

xanthopsin (zan-thop'sin), n. [As xanthops-y + *-in*2.] Yellow pigment of the retina.

xanthopsy (zan'thop-si), n. [< NL. xanthopsia, < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ὄψις, appearance.] Color-blindness in which all objects seem to have a yellow tinge; yellow vision.

xanthopsydracia (zan-thop-si-drā'si-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ψυδρακία, a blister.] The presence of pustules on the skin.

Xanthoptera (zan-thop'te-rä), n. [NL. (Sodoffsky, 1837), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πτερόν, wing.] A genus of noctuid moths, of Guenée's family Anthophilidæ, comprising a few American species, distinguished by the presence of a subcellular areole on the fore wings. X. semicrocea feeds in the larval state on the leaves of the pitcher-plant (Sarracenia). The larva is a semi-looper, and is beautifully banded with white and purple or lake-red.

Xanthoptera semicrocea.

a, egg, natural size indicated at side; b, larva, dorsal view; c, one of its appendages, enlarged; d, larva, side view; e, pupa within cocoon; f, moth with closed wings; g, moth with expanded wings.

xanthopuccine (zan-thō-puk'sin), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + puccoon + *-ine*2.] An alkaloid found in Hydrastis Canadensis.

Xanthopygia (zan-thō-pij'i-ä), n. [NL. (Blyth, 1849, and Xanthopygia, Blyth, 1847), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πυγή, rump.] A genus of Old World flycatchers or Muscicapidæ, ranging from Japan and China to the Malay peninsula and the Philippines. There are 4 species, of 3 of which the males have the rump yellow (whence the name), the throat and breast yellow, and the tail black. These are X. tricolor and X. narcissina. X. cyanomelana is chiefly blue and black in the male. X. fuliginosa (see water-robin, under robin, 3) is different again, and is the type of two other genera (Rhacornis and Nymphæus). X. narcissina has given rise to the generic name Charidalus; and X. cyanomelana to that of Cyanagrilla.

Water-robin (Xanthopygia fuliginosa).

Xanthopygus (zan-thō-pī'gus), n. [NL. (Krantz, 1857), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + πυγή, rump.] A genus of American rove-beetles, comprising 1 North American species, X. cacti, and about 15 species from South America, characterized by having the marginal lines of the thorax distinct in front, the inner well defined.

xanthorhamnine (zan-thō-ram'nin), n. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ῥάμνος, buckthorn (see Rhamnus), + *-ine*2.] A yellow coloring matter contained in the ripe Persian or Turkish berries and in Avignon grains. See Persian berries, under Persian.

Xanthornus (zan-thôr'nus), n. [NL. (P. S. Pallas, 1769; Scopoli, 1777; generally miscredited to Cuvier), prop. Xanthornis*, < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ὄρνις, bird.] A large genus of Icteridæ; strictly synonymous with Icterus of Brisson (1760). Most of the American caciques, orioles, hang-nests, or troopials have at some time been placed in this genus. Also called Pendulinus. See cut under troopial.

Xanthorrhiza (zan-thō-rī'zä), n. [NL. (Marshall, 1789), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ῥίζα, root.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Ranunculaceæ, tribe Helleboreæ, and subtribe Coniferæ. It is characterized by regular racemose flowers with five or ten stamens, and five or ten carpels which become follicles in fruit. The only species, X. apiifolia, is a native of the United States, growing on shaded mountain banks from Pennsylvania and western New York to Kentucky and southward. It is a dwarf shrub with its stem yellowish within, bearing pinnately decompound leaves and pendulous compound racemes of brownish-purple flowers with petaloid sepals and small gland-like petals. Its yellow rootstock accounts it the name of shrub-yellowroot (which see); this and the bark are intensely bitter, and afford a simple tonic of minor importance.

Xanthorrhœa (zan-thō-rē'ä), n. [NL. (Smith, 1798), so called from the red resin of some species; < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ῥοία, a flow, < ῥεῖν, flow.] A genus of liliaceous plants of the tribe Lomandreæ. It is characterized by bisexual flowers with distinct and partly glumaceous perianth-segments, and a three-celled ovary with few or several ovules in each cell. The 11 species are all Australian; they produce a thick rhizome commonly growing up into an arborescent woody trunk, covered or terminated by long linear, rigid crowded brittle leaves. The numerous small flowers are densely compacted in a long cylindrical terminal spike, Xanthoptera rubigera.

Arnd resin and balsam, X. Amyris and other species, known as acaroid gum, or Botany Bay resin. See acaroid gum (under acaroid), blackboy, and grass-tree.—Xanthorrhœa resin. Same as acaroid resin (which see, under acaroid).

xanthosis (zan-thō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -osis.] In pathol., a yellowish discoloration, especially that sometimes seen in cancerous tumors.

Xanthosoma (zan-thō-sō'mạ), n. [NL. (Schott, 1832), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + σῶμα, body.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Aroideæ, tribe Colocasioideæ, and subtribe Colocasieæ. It is characterized by coriaceous sagittate or peltate leaves, by two- or three-celled ovaries separate below but dilated and united above, forming berries in fruit which are included within the spathe-tube, and by anatropous ovules with an inferior micropyle, mostly attached to the partitions. There are about 20 species, natives of tropical America. They are herbs with a milky juice, producing a tuberous rootstock or thick elongated caudex. They bear long thick petiolate leaves; the flower-stalks are usually short, often numerous, and produce a spathe with an oblong or ovoid convoluted tube which bears a boat-shaped lamina and enlarges in fruit. The spadix is shorter and included; the fertile and densely flowered lower part is separated by a constriction from the elongated male section. X. atrovirens is known in the West Indies as tule, and X. peregrinum (perhaps the same as the last) as tayo; for X. sagittifolium, see tannier.

xanthospermous (zan-thō-spėr'mus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., having yellow seeds; yellow-seeded.

Xanthotænia (zan-thō-tē'ni-ạ), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1867), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ταινία, a band: see tænia.] A genus of beautiful butterflies, of the nymphalid subfamily Morphinæ, containing only the species X. busiris, from Malacca, where it was discovered by A. R. Wallace.

Xanthoura, n. See Xanthura.

xanthous (zan'thus), a. [< Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + -ous.] Yellow: in anthropology and ethnography specifying the yellow or Mongoloid type of mankind.

> The second great type, the Mongolian or Xanthous or "yellow." W. H. Flower, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 316.

xanthoxyl (zan-thok'sil), n. A plant of the former order Xanthoxylaceæ (now the tribe Xanthoxyleæ). Lindley.

Xanthoxylaceæ (zan-thok-si-lā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1835), < Xanthoxylum + -aceæ.] A former order of plants, equivalent to the present tribe Xanthoxyleæ.

Xanthoxyleæ (zan-thok-sil'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Nees and Martius, 1823), < Xanthoxylum + -eæ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants of the order Rutaceæ. It is characterized by regular flowers with free spreading petals and stamens usually an annular or pulvinate disk, from two to five carpels each with two ovules, and a straight or arcuate embryo commonly with flat cotyledons. It includes 25 genera, mainly tropical, 14 of which are widely separated monotypic local genera. See Xanthoxylum (the type) and Pentaceras.

xanthoxyloin (zan-thok-sil'ō-in), n. [< Xanthoxylum + *-in*².] A neutral principle extracted from the bark of the prickly-ash, Xanthoxylum Americanum.

Xanthoxylum (zan-thok'si-lum), n. [NL. (Philip Miller, 1760), altered from the Zanthoxylum of Linnæus, 1753, and of Plukenet, 1696, the name of some West Indian tree; applied to this from the yellow heartwood; < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + ξύλον, wood.] A genus of plants, of the order Rutaceæ, type of the tribe Xanthoxyleæ. It is characterized by alternate pinnate leaves, by polygamous flowers with from three to five imbricate or induplicate petals and three to five stamens, and by a fruit of one to five somewhat globose and commonly two-valved carpels. There are about 100 species, widely distributed through tropical and warm regions; nearly 50 occur in Brazil, many others in the West Indies, Mexico, and Central America, and 5 in the United States. They are trees or shrubs, sometimes armed with straight or recurved prickles. The leaves are commonly odd-pinnate, rarely reduced to one to three leaflets; the leaflets are entire or crenate, oblique, and pellucid-dotted. The flowers are small, usually white or greenish, commonly in crowded axillary and terminal panicles. The fruit is usually aromatic and pungent, with a glandular-dotted pericarp. The bark, especially that of the roots, is powerfully stimulant and tonic, and often used for rheumatism, to excite salivation, and as a cure for toothache; it contains a bitter principle (berberine) and a yellow coloring matter; in the West Indies it is esteemed an antisyphilitic. Three species in the United States are small trees, of which X. clavi-herculis (X. Carolinianum) is the satinwood of Florida, the West Indies, and the Bermudas, its wood, used in the manufacture of small articles, having at first the color of true satinwood. X. Pterota (X. Pterota) is the wild lime of Florida and western Texas, extending also through Mexico to Brazil and Peru, and has been also known as Fagara Pterota and F. lentiscifolia; in southern Florida it is one of the most common of small trees, often a tall slender shrub, it produces a hard heavy reddish-brown wood, known as satin- or ironwood in the West Indies. (See wild-lime, under *lime*¹.) X. monophyllum (X. caribæum), known as lancewood or lignum-vitæ in the West Indies, and exported thence under the name of rosewood, also extends to Florida, where it is a shrub with coriaceous shining leaves. The 2 other species of the United States are known as toothache-tree and as prickly-ash (which see); of these X. Americanum is a shrub found from Massachusetts and Virginia to Minnesota and Kansas, and X. Clava-Herculis is a small tree ranging from Virginia southward, also known as pepper-wood. For X. Carolinianum, see prickly yellow-wood, under yellow-wood. The other species of the West Indies are there known in general as yellow-wood and as fustic, several producing a valuable wood, in Jamaica X. coriaceum is also known as yellow manwood, and X. spinifex as rum-spoil (which see); in Australia X. brachyacanthum is used for cabinet work; in Cape Colony X. Capense is known as knobwood (which see), 6 other woody species occur in the Hawaiian Islands, all there known as kaea. The fruit of many tropical species is used as a condiment and also medicinally, as X. piperitum, the Japanese pepper, and X. schinifolium (X. Mantschuricum), the anise pepper of China. The Chinese bitter pepper, or star pepper, X. Daimelli, is now referred to the genus Evodia. X. nitidum is in China a valued febrifuge, and X. alatum a sudorific and anthelmintic, the leaves of the latter are used as food for silkworms, its fruit in India as a condiment, and its seeds as a fish poison.

Xanthoxylum fraxineum.
1, branch with male flowers; 2, branch with fruits and leaves; a, male flower; b, female flower; c, fruits.

Xanthura (zan-thu'rạ), n. [NL. (Schater, 1862, after Xanthoura, Bonaparte, 1850), < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + οὐρά, tail.] A genus of beautiful American jays, having the tail more or less yellow; the green jays, as X. luxuosa, of the Rio Grande region and southward. These resplendent birds vie with any of the blue jays in color and are of very unusual hues for this group. The species named is yellowish green, bright yellow, greenish blue, ultramarine blue, jet black, and hoary white in various parts. It is not crested.

Yellow-faced Jay (Xanthura luxuosa).

The length is 11 or 12 inches, the extent 14½ to 15½. It nests in bushes, and lays usually three or four eggs of a greenish drab color marked with shades of brown. Another and still more richly colored species is the Peruvian jay, X. yncas.

xanthuria (zan-thū'ri-ạ), n. Same as xanthuramin.

Xanthyris (zan'thi-ris), n. [NL. (Felder, 1862), prop. Xanthothyris, < Gr. ξανθός, yellow, + θυρίς, window.] A genus of bombycoid moths, of the family Arctiidæ, comprising one or more species from South America.

Xantus gecko. See gecko.

Xantusia (zan-tū'si-ạ), n. [NL. (S. F. Baird, 1852), named after L. J. Xantus de Vesey, who collected extensively in California and Mexico.] The typical genus of Xantusiidæ.

Xantusiidæ (zan-tū-si'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xantusia + -idæ.] An American family of eriglossate lacertilians, typified by the genus Xantusia, having the parietal bones distinct and the supratemporal fossæ roofed over.

xd. A contraction of ex div. (which see).

xebec (zē'bek), n. [Also sometimes xebec, sebeck, shebec, shebeck, = F. chebec = Sp. jabeque = Pg. chaveco, xaveco = It. scabecco, also zambecco; said to be < Turk. sumbeki; cf. Pers. Ar. sumbuk, a small vessel.] A small three-masted vessel, formerly much used by the Algerine corsairs, and now in use to some extent in Mediterranean commerce. It differs from the felucca chiefly in having several square sails as well as lateen sails, while the latter has only lateen sails.

Xebec.

Our fugitive, and eighteen other white slaves, were put on board a zebec, carrying eight six-pounders and sixty men. Sumner, Orations, I. 253.

Xema (zē'mạ), n. [NL. (Leach, 1819); a made word.] A genus of Larridæ; the fork-tailed gulls. X. sabinei is the only species. This gull is 13 or 14 inches long. The adult is snowy white, with extensive slaty-blue mantle, the outer five primaries black tipped with white, the head hooded in slate-color with a jet-black ring, the feet black, and the bill black tipped with yellow. The forking of the tail is about one inch. This remarkable and beautiful gull inhabits arctic America both coastwise and interiorly, and strays irregularly southward in winter though it is not often seen in the United States. It has been taken in the Bermudas, in Peru, and in Europe. The nest is made on the ground; the eggs are three in number, measuring 1¾ by 1¼ inches, and of a brownish-olive color sparsely splashed with brown. The swallow-tailed gull (see swallow-tailed) has sometimes been wrongly referred to this genus.

Fork-tailed Gull (Xema sabinei).

xenacanthine (zen-a-kan'thin), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Xenacanthini.

II. n. One of the Xenacanthini.

Xenacanthini (zen-a-kan-thī'nī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἄκανθα, spine, + -ini.] An order of fossil selachians. They had the notochord rarely if ever constricted, neural and hemal arches and spines long and slender, and pectoral fins with long segmented axis. The order includes many extinct fishes which flourished in the seas of the Carboniferous and Permian periods, and which have been referred to the families Pleuracanthidæ and Cladodontidæ.

Xenaltica (zē-nal'ti-kạ), n. [NL. (Baly, 1875), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + NL. Haltica, q. v.] A genus of beetles, of the family Chrysomelidæ, having the four anterior tibiæ with a small spine and the hind tibiæ with a double spine. The two known species are from Old Calabar and Madagascar. The genus is supposed to be synonymous with Morcona (Chapuis, 1875).

xenarthral (ze-när'thrạl), a. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἄρθρον, a joint.] Peculiarly or strangely jointed, as a mammal's vertebræ; having certain accessory articulations of the dorsolumbar vertebræ, as the American edentates: the opposite of nonarthral. Gill, 1884.

Xenarthral Articulations of Twelfth and Thirteenth Dorsal Vertebræ of Great Ant-eater (Myrmecophaga jubata), side view, two thirds natural size.

ax, process zygapophysis, with ax', additional ... ax, ... accessory articular facet; px, postzygapophysis with px', px'', additional ... facets; sp, spinous process; tr, metapophysis; ... facet for articulation of capitulum of rib; x, the same for tubercle of rib.

xenelasia (zen-e-lā'si-ạ), n. [NL., < Gr. ξενηλασία, the expulsion of strangers, an alien act, < ξένος, a stranger, + ἐλαύνειν (ἐλασ-), drive.] A Spartan law or alien act which prohibited strangers from residing in Sparta without permission.

xenia, n. Plural of xenium.

xenial (zē′ni-al), a. [< Gr. ξενία, hospitality, < ξένος, Ionic ξεῖνος, a guest, also a host, in Homer a friendly stranger.] Pertaining to hospitality, or to the rights, privileges, standing, or treatment of a guest, or to the relations between a guest and his host; specifically, noting such relations, etc., in Greek antiquity.

Again, it is curious to observe that the xenial relation was not less vivacious than that of blood. The tie of blood subsists in the second generation from the common ancestor; and Diomed and Glaucus similarly own one another as ξεῖνοι because two generations before Œneus had entertained Bellerophon.

Gladstone, Studies on Homer, II. 490.

Xenichthyinæ (zē-nik-thi-ī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenichthys + -inæ.] A subfamily of Sparidæ, typified by the genus Xenichthys, having the dorsal fin deeply emarginate, the vomer toothed, and all the teeth villiform in narrow bands.

Xenichthys (zē-nik′this), n. [NL. (Gill, 1863), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] A genus of sparoid fishes, typical of the Xenichthyinæ, as X. californiensis. This queer fish is of a silvery color with continuous dusky stripes along the several rows of scales on the upper part of the body, and is found from San Diego southward.

Xenicidæ (zē-nis′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenicus + -idæ.] A family of non-oscine (clamatorial or mesomyodian) passerine birds, typified by the genus Xenicus, and confined to New Zealand. Also called Acanthisittidæ. They were formerly supposed to be creepers, warblers, nuthatches, or wrens, and classed accordingly, but are now placed in the vicinity of the Old World ant thrushes and related forms (Pittidæ, etc.). There is only one intrinsic syringeal muscle, the sternum is single notched on each side behind, the nasal bones are holorhinal, the maxillopalatines are slender, and the vomer is broad, with anterior emargination; the tarsi are not laminiplantar; the primaries are ten, with the first about as long as the second, and the rectrices are ten. Acanthisitta chloris (the citrine warbler of Latham, 1783) is a short-tailed creeper, quite like a nuthatch in appearance and habits; the species of Xenicus resemble wrens. Also Xenicus.

Xenicus (zen′i-kus), n. [NL. (G. R. Gray, 1855), < Gr. ξεῖνος, of a stranger, < ξένος, a stranger.] The name-giving genus of Xenicidæ. It contains two species. 1. longipes is the long-legged warbler of Latham (1783), remarkably like a wren in appearance and habits; the other species is X. gilviventris of Julius Haast.

Xenisma (zē-nis′mä), n. [NL. (Jordan, 1876), < Gr. ξένισμα, amazement, < ξενίζειν, surprise, make strange, < ξένος, strange.] A genus of cyprinodonts, or a subgenus of Fundulus, whose dorsal fin is high and begins opposite or slightly behind the anal. Two species inhabit tributaries of the Lower Mississippi. See cut under studfish.

xenium (zē′ni-um), n.; pl. xenia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ξένιον, usually in pl. ξένια, a gift to a guest from his host, neut. of ξένιος, of a guest, < ξένος, a guest, stranger.] In classical antiq., a present given to a guest or stranger, or to a foreign ambassador.

Xenocichla (zen-ō-sik′lä), n. [NL. (Hartlaub, 1857), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + κίχλη, a thrush.] An extensive genus of Ethiopian birds, conventionally referred to the Timeliidæ, and also called Illadu, Pyrrhurus, Bixopogon, and Trichetes. Fifteen species are described; they differ much from one another. Some have often been put in such genera as Pycnonotus, Crateloes, or Trichophorus, and all are called by the name bulbul, in common with other birds more or less nearly related. X. xeterus is the yellow-browed bulbul; X. flavicollis, the yellow-throated; X. tephrolæma, the ashy throated; X. simplex, Marche's; X. flavicrata, Barratt's; X. serina, the red billed; X. syndactula (the type of the genus, from Senegambia to Gaboon), the chestnut-tailed; X. scandens, the pale; X. albigularis, Usher's, X. indicator, the honey-guide; X. leucopleura, the white-bellied; X. notata, the yellow marked; X. crassispilla the gray-headed.

Xenocratean (zē-nok-rā-tē′an), a. [< Xenocrates (see def.).] Pertaining to the doctrine of Xenocrates, a Greek philosopher, who was the head of the Academy, the second after Plato. He is known to have been a voluminous and methodical writer, adhering pretty closely to his master's teachings, but inclined to the doctrines of the Pythagoreans. He held that the ideas were numbers, and that all numbers were produced from 1 and 2.

Xenocratic (zen-ō-krat′ik), a. Same as Xenocratean.

Xenocrepis (zen-ō-krē′pis), n. [NL. (Förster, 1856), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + κρηπίς, a half-boot.] A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the chalcid subfamily Pteromalinæ, having thirteen-jointed antennæ with two ring-joints, the stigmal club small, and the marginal vein thickened. The species are European.

Xenodacnis (zen-ō-dak′nis), n. [NL. (Cabanis, 1873), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + NL. Dacnis, q. v.] A genus of guitguits or Coerebidæ. The type is X. parinas of Peru, 4½ inches long, the male of a nearly uniform dull purplish-blue, the wings and tail blackish edged with blue. The form is peculiar among the guitguits, the bill having a parine shape, though no nasal bristles.

xenoderm (zen′ō-dėrm), n. [< NL. Xenoderma.] A wart-snake of the subfamily Xenodermatinæ.

Xenoderma (zen-ō-dėr′mä), n. [NL. (Reinhardt), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + δέρμα, skin.] The typical genus of Xenodermatinæ, with granular scales, simple urosteges, and no frontal nor parietal plates. The genus has also been placed in Nothopsidæ. Also Xenodermus.

Xenodermatinæ (zen-ō-dėr-ma-tī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenoderma(t-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Acrochordidæ or wart-snakes, represented by the genus Xenoderma. Also Xenodermina.

xenodermine (zen-ō-dėr′min), a. [< Xenoderma + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the Xenodermatinæ.

Xenodermus (zen-ō-dėr′mus), n. [NL.] Same as Xenoderma.

xenodocheum, xenodochium (zen′ō-dō-kē′um, -ki′um), n.; pl. xenodochea, xenodochia (-ä). [LL. xenodochium, < Gr. ξενοδοχεῖον, a place for strangers to lodge in, a hotel, < ξένος, a stranger, + δοχεῖον, a receptacle, < δέχεσθαι, receive.] 1. In classical antiq., a building for the reception of strangers.—2. In modern Greek lands, a hotel; an inn; also, a guest house in a monastery.

xenodochy (zē-nod′o-ki), n. [< Gr. ξενοδοχία, the entertainment of a stranger, < ξένος, a stranger, + δοχή, a receiving, < δέχεσθαι, receive.] 1. Reception of strangers; hospitality.—2. Same as xenodocheum.

xenogamy (zē-nog′a-mi), n. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., cross-fertilization—that is, the impregnation or fecundation of the ovules of a flower with pollen from another flower of the same species, either on the same or (usually) on a different plant.

xenogenesis (zen-ō-jen′e-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, stranger, + γένεσις, birth.] The generation of offspring which pass through an entirely different life cycle from that of the parents, and never exhibit the characters of the latter: a mode of biogenesis supposed by Milne-Edwards to occur, but not proved to have any existence in fact.

The term Heterogenesis . . . has unfortunately been used in a different sense [than that of the offspring being altogether and permanently unlike the parent], and M. Milne Edwards has therefore substituted for it Xenogenesis, which means the generation of something foreign.

Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 353.

xenogenetic (zen′ō-jē-net′ik), a. [< xenogenesis (-t-) + -ic.] Of the nature of or pertaining to xenogenesis.

I have dwelt upon the analogy of pathological modification, which is in favour of the xenogenetic origin of microzymes. Huxley, Lay Sermons (ed. 1871), p. 370.

xenogenic (zen-ō-jen′ik), a. [< xenogen-y + -ic.] Same as xenogenetic.

xenogeny (zē-noj′e-ni), n. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + -γενεια, < -γενής, -born.] Same as xenogenesis.

xenolite (zen′o-līt), n. A silicate of aluminium, related to fibrolite, found at Petershoff, Finland.

xenomenia (zen-ō-mē′ni-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + μήνια, menses.] A loss of blood occurring at the time of the menstrual flow elsewhere than from the uterus, and taking the place of the regular flow; vicarious menstruation. Compare stigma[1], 4.

Xenomi (zē-nō′mī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ὦμος, shoulder.] A suborder of fishes, resembling the Haplomi, but distinguished by peculiarities of the pectoral arch (whence the name). It consists of the family Dallidæ alone. See cut under Dallia.

xenomorphic (zen-o-mór′fik), a. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + μορφή, form.] In lithol., noting the mineral constituents of a rock when they are bounded by planes not formed as the result of their own molecular structure, but the result of their contact with other minerals also forming constituents of the same rock, which having crystallized first have impressed their form on those adjacent to them: the counterpart of idiomorphic. Also called allotriomorphic.

xenomous (zē-nō′mus), a. [< NL. Xenomi.] Peculiar in the structure of the pectorals, as the Alaskan blackfish: of or pertaining to the Xenomi.

Xenopeltidæ (zen-ō-pel′ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenopeltis + -idæ.] A family of colubriform ophidians, represented by the genus Xenopeltis. They have no supraorbital or postorbital bone, have a coronoid bone, premaxillary teeth, and gastrosteges, and have no rudiments of hind limbs.

Xenopeltis (zen-ō-pel′tis), n. [NL. (Reinhardt, 1827), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + πέλτη, a shield.] The typical genus of Xenopeltidæ, having the lower jaw produced, the teeth very fine, and no anal spurs. X. unicolor, formerly Portvis sinensis, is a singular snake of nocturnal and carnivorous habits, found in Malaysia and some other regions.

Xenophanean (zē-nof-a-nē′an), a. [< Xenophanes (see def.).] Pertaining to the doctrines of Xenophanes of Colophon, the founder of the Eleatic school of philosophy. He seems to have been the first of the Greeks to propound a monotheistic doctrine, probably of a pantheistic character; but he did not go to the length of denying the reality of the manifold, as Parmenides and his followers did.

Xenophora (zē-nof′ō-rä), n. [NL. (Fischer von Waldheim, 1807), also Xenophorus (Philippi, 1847), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + -φορος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] The typical genus of Xenophoridæ, so called from their carrying foreign objects attached to the shell. Formerly also called Phorus (a name too near the prior Phora in entomology). See also cut under carrier-shell.

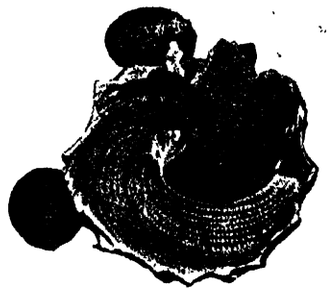
Xenophora pallidula, side view, reduced.



Xenophora pallidula, lower view, reduced.

Xenophoridæ (zen-ō-for′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenophora + -idæ.] A family of taenioglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Xenophora: formerly called Phoridæ (a name preoccupied in entomology). They are known as carrier-shells, conchologists, and mineralogists. See cuts under carrier-shell and Xenophora.

xenophoroid (zē-nof′ō-roid), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the Xenophoridæ.

II. n. Any member of this family.

xenophthalmia (zen-of-thal′mi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ὀφθαλμία, ophthalmia.] Conjunctivitis excited by the presence of a foreign body.

Xenopicus (zen-ō-pī′kus), n. [NL. (S. F. Baird, 1858), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + L. picus, a woodpecker.] An isolated genus of North American woodpeckers, based on the Picus albolarvatus of Cassin, and characterized by the structure of the tongue and hyoid bone, in which is seen an approach to that of Sphyropicus. The body is black, without spots or stripes; the head is white, with a scarlet nuchal crescent in the male; the wings are blotched with white; the length is about 9 inches, the extent 16. This remarkable woodpecker inhabits the mountains of Cali-forms, Oregon, and Washington, where it is common in pine woods.

White-headed Woodpecker (Xenopicus albolarvatus).

Xenopeltidæ (zen-ō-pel'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenopeltis (-pelt-) + -idæ.] A family of African aglossal or tongueless toads, typified by the genus Xenopus: same as Dactylethridæ. They are related to the American Pipidæ, but have upper teeth and some long tentacular processes on the head.

Xenops (zē'nops), n. [NL. (Illiger, 1811), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ὤψ, face, appearance.] A genus of Dendrocolaptidæ, or South American tree-creepers, characterized by the short, compressed, and upturned bill, and ranging from Mexico to southern Brazil. There are 2 distinct species. X. genibarbis has the back olivaceous and the belly streaked; in X. rutilans the back is rufous and the belly is not streaked. They are very small birds, 4 or 5 inches long, both with a white cheek stripe.

Xenops genibarbis.

Xenopterus (zē-nop'te-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + πτερόν, wing, fin.] A genus of plectognath fishes, of the family Tetrodontidæ, characterized by the infundibuliform nostrils and the peculiarity of the dermal ossifications. They inhabit the Indian archipelago. X. naritus is a typical example.

Xenopterus naritus.

xenopterygian (zē-nop-te-rij'i-an), a. and n. I. a. Having the characters of or pertaining to the Xenopterygii.

II. n. A fish of this suborder.

Xenopterygii (zē-nop-te-rij'i-i), n. pl. [< Gr. ξένος, strange, + πτέρυξ, wing (fin).] A suborder of teleocephalous fishes, represented by the family Gobiesocidæ, and characterized by the development of a complicated suctorial organ in the pectoral region. The xenopterygians had usually been placed with the lump fishes and sunfishes, in consequence of their common possession of a sucking-disk, which, however, is formed differently in the present suborder, being chiefly developed from the skin of the breast, in connection with the ventral fins. They are mostly fishes of oblong or lengthened coniform shape, with scaleless skin and spineless fins, one posterior dorsal fin, more or less nearly opposite the anal, and the sucker either entire or divided. They are small fishes, most common in tropical and warm temperate seas between tidemarks, adherent to rocks. There are 10 genera and 25 or 30 species, as Gobiesox roticulatus, abundant in tide pools on the Pacific coast of the United States.

Xenopus (zen'ō-pus), n. [NL. (Wagler, about 1830), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + πους (ποδ-) = E. foot.] The typical genus of Xenopodidæ. There are several species, all of tropical Africa, as X. lævis. They are called clawed toads.

Xenorhina (zen-ō-rī'nā), n. [NL. (Peters, 1863), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ἰς (ἰν-), nose, snout.] A genus of batrachians, peculiar to New Guinea, typical of the family Xenorhinidæ. The species is X. oxycephala.

Xenorhinidæ (zen-ō-rin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenorhina + -idæ.] A family of Papuan batrachians, represented by the genus Xenorhina.

Xenothrips (zen-ō-rī'pis), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1856), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + θρίψ, also θρίπς, woodworm.] A genus of buprestid beetles, containing the single species X. brendeli, from Illinois, remarkable in that the male antennæ are flabellate, a unique structure in the family Buprestidæ.

Xenorhynchus (zen-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1855), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + ῥύγχος, beak.] A genus of storks or Ciconiinæ, representing the Indian and Australian type of jabirus. X. australis is the black-necked stork (which see, under stork).

Xenos (zē'nos), n. [NL. (Rossi, 1792), < Gr. ξένος, strange.] A genus of parasitic coleopters, of the family Stylopidæ, having four-jointed antennæ and four-jointed tarsi. The species are found in middle and southern Europe and in North and South America. They are among the most remarkable of insects, and the genus is historically notable as containing the earliest known strepsipters. Also, and preferably, Xenus.

Xenosauridæ (zen-ō-sâ'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xenosaurus + -idæ.] A family of American eriglossate lacertilians, related to the Iguanidæ, based on the genus Xenosaurus.

Xenosaurus (zen-ō-sâ'rus), n. [NL. (Peters, 1861), < Gr. ξένος, strange, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] The typical genus of Xenosauridæ, based on X. grandis, a Mexican lizard about 10 inches long.

xenotime (zen'ō-tim), n. [< Gr. ξενότιμος, favoring strangers, < ξένος, strange, + τιμή, honor.] A native phosphate of yttrium, having a yellowish-brown color, and crystallizing in squares, octahedrons, and prisms. It resembles zircon in form, but is inferior in hardness.

Xenotis (zē-nō'tis), n. [NL. (Jordan, 1877), also Xenodes, < Gr. ξένος, strange, + οὖς (ὠτ-), ear.] A genus of centrarchoid fishes, very near Lepomis, in which it is sometimes merged, but having very short, weak, and flexible gill-rakers, and no palatine teeth. Species are X. megalotis, X. marginatus, and X. holbrookianus, of the United States, the first named known as the long-eared sunfish. This is 6 inches long, highly colored, and abounds in many parts of the United States.

xenurine (zē-nū'rin), n. and a. [< Xenurus + *-ine*².] I. n. An armadillo of the genus Xenurus, a kabassou. In these forms of Dasypodidæ the buckler is more rudimentary than in the true dasypodines, and the tail is nearly naked; the feet are also somewhat peculiar in the proportions of the metacarpals and phalanges.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the genus Xenurus.

Xenurus (zē-nū'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ξένος, strange, + οὐρά, tail.] 1. In ornith., same as Electrurus. Bote, 1826.—2. In mammal., a genus of armadillos, named by Wagler in 1830; the xenurines or kabassous. There are 2 species,

X. unicinctus and X. hispidus, which inhabit tropical America, and burrow with great ease underground.

Xenus (zē'nus), n. [NL.: see Xenos.] 1. In entom., same as Xenos.—2. In ornith., same as Terekia (where see cut). J. J. Kaup, 1829.

Xeocephus (zē-os'ē-fus), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1850), and Xeocephalus (G. R. Gray, 1869), and Zeocephus (R. B. Sharpe, 1879); formation uncertain.] A genus of Muscicapidæ, confined to the Philippines. X. rufus of Luzon is 7 inches long and mostly of a cinnamon color. X. cinnamomeus of Basilan is smaller, with a white belly. X. cyanescens is mostly of a grayish cobalt blue, 5½ inches long, and found in Palawan.

xerafin (zer'a-fin), n. [Also xeraphine, xerapheen, xeraphin, also, as Pg., xerafim, < Pg. xerafim, xarafim, < Ar. ashrafi (cf. sharafi, noble), applied prop. to the gold dinar, but also to the gold mohur, < sharif, noble: see sherif.] An Indo-Portuguese silver coin formerly current in Goa. About 1835 it was worth 75 United States cents.

xerasia (zē-rā'si-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρασία, a drying, a disease of the hair so called, < ξηραίνειν, dry, < ξηρός, dry.] A disease of the hair, characterized by excessive dryness and cessation of growth.

Xerobates (zē-rō-bā'tēz), n. [NL. (Agassiz), < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + βάτης, one that treads, < βαίνειν, go.] A genus of tortoises, so called from inhabiting the dry pine-barrens of the southern United States; now often merged in Testudo. X. or T. carolina is the common gopher. See gopher, 3.

xerocollyrium (zē'rō-ko-lir'i-um), n. [LL., < Gr. ξηροκολλύριον, a dry or thick eye-salve, < ξηρός, dry, + κολλύριον, eye-salve: see collyrium.] A dry collyrium or eye-salve.

xeroderma (zē-rō-dėr'mą), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + δέρμα, skin.] A mild form of ichthyosis, in which the skin is dry and harsh in consequence of diminished activity of the sudoriferous and sebaceous glands. Also called dermatoxerasia and dryskin.—Xeroderma pigmentosum, a disease of the skin, beginning usually in childhood, characterized by areas of capillary dilatation and pigment deposit, followed by localized atrophy of the skin alternating with small patches of hypertrophied epithelium.

xerodermia (zē-rō-dėr'mi-ą), n. [NL.] Same as xeroderma.

xerodes (zē-rō'dēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρώδης, dryish, dry-looking, < ξηρός, dry, + εἶδος, form.] Any tumor attended with dryness.

xeroma (zē-rō'mą), n. [< Gr. ξηρός, dry, + -oma.] Same as xerophthalmia.

xeromyrum (zē-rom'i-rum), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρόμυρον, a dry perfume, < ξηρός, dry, + μύρον, perfume, ointment.] A dry ointment.

xerophagy (zē-rof'ą-ji), n. [< LL. xerophagia, < Gr. ξηροφαγία, the eating of dry food, abstinence, < ξηρός, dry, + φαγεῖν, eat.] The habit of living on dry food, especially a form of abstinence, as in the early church, in which only bread, herbs, salt, and water were consumed.

xerophil (zē'rō-fil), n. [< Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φίλος, love.] In bot., a plant of Alphonse de Candolle's second "physiological group" in his natural system of geographical distribution. The plants of this group, like those of the first group, the megatherms, require a hot climate, but, unlike the latter, are adapted to one of great dryness only. They are chiefly found between latitudes 20° and 35° south and north of the equator, and embrace among the most characteristic families the Zygophyllaceæ, Cactaceæ, Artocarpeæ, Proteaceæ and Cycadaceæ. Compare megatherm, mesotherm, microtherm, and hekistotherm.

xerophilous (zē-rof'i-lus), a. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φίλος, love.] Loving dryness: in botany noting plants which are in various ways peculiarly adapted to dry, especially to hot and dry climates, as by possessing coriaceous leaves, succulent stems, etc.; specifically, belonging to the group of xerophils. See xerophil.

xerophthalmia (zē-rof-thal'mi-ą), n. [NL., < LL. xerophthalmia, < Gr. ξηροφθαλμία, dryness of the eyes, < ξηρός, dry, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] A dry form of conjunctivitis, resulting in a thickening and skin-like condition of the conjunctiva. Also xeroma, and xerosis of the conjunctiva.

Xerophyllum (zē-rō-fil'um), n. [NL. (Richard, 1803), so called from the harsh dry leaves; < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + φύλλον, leaf.] 1. A genus of liliaceous plants, of the tribe Northoeæ. It is characterized by crowded linear radical leaves, flowers with three styles and a loculicidal capsule. The 2 species are natives of the United States, and are known as turkeybeard. They are perennials, with a short thick woody rhizome, tall erect unbranched stem, and a great number of harsh rigid elongated leaves, usually forming a conspicuous basal tuft and also numerous along the stem, but much smaller and thinner, finally diminished into bristles. The flowers are white and very showy, forming a long terminal raceme which is at first densely pyramidal or oblong and becomes afterward greatly elongated. X. setifolium, the eastern species, is a native of pine barrens from New Jersey to Georgia, the western, X. Douglasii, with a smaller raceme, occurs from the Columbia river to Montana; the racemes of X. tenax, of California, is fragrant and dense, becoming over a foot in length.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

xerosis (zē-rō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξήρωσις, a drying up, < ξηρός, dry: see xerasia.] Same as xerasia.—Xerosis of the conjunctiva, same as xerophthalmia.

xerostomia (zē-rō-stō'mi-ą), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + στόμα, mouth.] Abnormal dryness of the mouth.

xerotes (zē'rō-tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρότης, dryness, < ξηρός, dry.] In med., a dry habit or disposition of the body.

xerotic (zē-rot'ik), a. [< xerotes + -ic.] Characterized by dryness; of the nature of or pertaining to xerotes or xerosis.

xerotripsis (zē-rō-trip'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηροτριβία, dry rubbing, < ξηρός, dry, + τρίβειν, rub.] Dry friction.

xerotripsis (zē-rō-trip'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ξηρός, dry, + τρῖψις, rubbing, < τρίβειν, rub.] Same as xerotribia.

Xerus (zē'rus), n. [NL. (Hemprich and Ehrenberg), so called from the character of the fur; < Gr. ξηρός, dry.] A genus of African ground-squirrels, having dry, harsh fur, which in some cases is bristly and even spiny. They are of more or less terrestrial and fossorial habits, like sparmophiles. The species are few. The best-known is X. rutilans, 11 inches long, the tail 9 more, and of a reddish yellow color above, paler or whitish below. The red-footed is X. erythropus.

African ground-squirrel (Xerus rutilans)

Xestia (zes'ti-ą), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816), < Gr. ξεστός, smooth, smoothed by scraping, < ξέειν, scrape.] 1. A genus of noctuid moths, of the family Orthosiidæ. Three species are known, two from Europe and one from North America. —2. A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Cerambycidæ, named by Serville in 1834. About a dozen species are known, all South American.

Xestobium (zes-tō'bi-um), n. [NL. (Motschulsky, 1845), < Gr. ξεστός, smooth, dry, + βίος, life.] A genus of bark-boring beetles, of the family Ptinidæ, having the prosternum very short and the tarsi broad. Three species are described from Europe, and three from North America. X. affine breeds in dead maple-stumps in the United States.

xi (zī), n. The Greek letter Ξ, ξ, corresponding to the English x and z.

Ximenia (zi-mē'ni-ą), n. [NL. (Plumier, 1703), named after Francisco Ximenes, a Spanish naturalist, who wrote in 1615 on medicinal plants.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Olacineæ and tribe Olaceæ. It is characterized by flowers with the calyx persistent unchanged, the petals inwardly bearded, the stamens in number more than double the petals and each bearing an oblong or linear anther. There are 5 species, natives chiefly of the tropics, one widely dispersed through both the Old and New Worlds, one Polynesian, and one South African. They are shrubs or trees, smooth or tomentose, often armed with spinescent branches. They bear alternate entire leaves, often in clusters. The flowers are whitish, larger than in most of the order, and arranged in short axillary cymes. X. Americana, a native of the West Indies, Florida, and Mexico, is known as tallow nut (which see), in Florida as hog plum and wild lime, and in the West Indies as mountain-plum, seaside plum, and false sandalwood.

Xiphiadidæ (zif-i-ad'i-dē), n. pl. See Xiphiidæ[2].

Xiphianæ (zif-i-ā'nē), n. pl. See Xiphiidæ[2].

Xiphias (zif'i-as), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1748), < L. xiphias, < Gr. ξίφιας, a swordfish, a sort of comet, < ξίφος, sword.] 1. The typical genus of Xiphiidæ, now restricted to swordfishes without teeth or ventral fins, and thus exclusive of the sailfishes and spear-fishes (Histiophorus and Tetrapturus). The dorsal fins are two, the first high and falcate, and the second very small and situated on the tail, opposite the small second anal. In younger individuals, however, teeth are present, and the two dorsals are connected, so that the banner is more like that of a sailfish. The first anal resembles the first dorsal, but is smaller and less falcate; the pectorals are moderate and falcate. The caudal keel is single; the skin is rough and naked, or in the young has rudimentary scales. X. gladius is the common swordfish widely dispersed in both Atlantic and Pacific oceans, attaining a weight of 400 or 600 pounds, with the sword a yard long. It is dark-bluish above, dusky below, with the sword blackish or tan.

3. In astron.: (a) A constellation made by Peter Theodori in the fifteenth century, in the south pole of the ecliptic, and now named Hydrus. (b) [l. c.] In older authors, a sword-shaped comet.

Xiphicera (zī-fis'e-rą), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1825), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + κέρας, horn.] A genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Acrididæ, or forming a family Xiphiceridæ. They are very large strong grasshoppers with crested pronotum and ensiform antennæ. About 25 species have been described, mainly from South America. Others are found in Mexico, the West Indies, Australia, Java, China, and Corea. Also Xiphocera (Burmeister, 1838).

Xiphiceridæ (zif-i-ser'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (S. H. Scudder, as Xiphoceridæ), < Xiphicera + -idæ.] A family of short-horned grasshoppers, founded on the genus Xiphicera, and containing some half dozen genera of large tropical and subtropical forms.

Xiphidion (zi-fid'i-on), n. [NL. (Serville, 1831), also Xiphidium (Agassiz, 1846), erroneously Xyphidium (Fieber, 1854); < Gr. ξιφίδιον, dim. of ξίφος, sword.] 1. In entom., a genus of orthopterous insects, of the family Locustidæ, synonymous in part with Orchelimum. They are slender long-horned grasshoppers which lay their eggs in the pith of plants, thus sometimes damaging cereals, especially maize.

2. In ichth., a genus of blennioid fishes: so called by Girard in 1859. Being preoccupied in entomology, the name has been changed to Xiphister (which see).

Xiphidiontidæ (zi-fid-i-on'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Xiphidion + -idæ.] A family of fishes, the gunnels or gunnel-fishes: same as Murænoididæ. See cut-eel.

Xiphidiopterus (zi-fid-i-op'te-rus), n. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1853), < Gr. ξιφίδιον, dim. of ξίφος, sword, + πτερόν, wing.] A genus of spur-winged plovers, of which the West African X. albiceps is the type. It is a remarkable bird, being the only one of these plovers presenting the combination of wattles and spurs and only three toes (see spur-winged); in consequence, it has been placed in five different genera.

White-crowned Lapwing (Xiphidiopterus albiceps)

It is known as the black-shouldered and white-crowned lapwing, and these color-marks are quite distinctive. It is a very rare bird, originally described by Gould from the Niger.

Xiphidiorhynchus (zī-fid'i-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL., Reichenbach, 1845), < Gr. ξιφίδιον, dim. of ξίφος, sword, + ῥύγχος, snout.] An Australian genus of wading birds, resembling both stilts and avosets. The species is X. pectoralis. See stilt, n., 6. Also called Leptorhynchus and Cladorhynchus.

Xiphidium (zi-fid'i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. ξιφίδιον, dim. of ξίφος, sword.] Same as Xiphidion, 1.

xiphihumeralis (zif-i-hū-mē-rā'lis), n.; pl. xiphihumerales (-lēz). [NL. (sc. musculus), < xiph(oid) + humerus.] A muscle which in some animals passes from the xiphoid cartilage to the proximal end of the humerus.

Xiphiidæ[1] (zi-fī'i-dē), n. pl. In mammal. See Ziphiidæ.

Xiphiidæ[2] (zi-fi'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xiphias + -idæ.] A family of fishes, typified by the genus Xiphias; the swordfishes. It has included forms now placed in Histiophoridæ. Exclusive of these, it is the same as Xiphiidæ. Also Xiphiadæ, Xiphioidei, Xiphiformes, Xiphiidæ, and Xiphianæ. See cut under swordfish.

xiphiiform (zif'i-i-fôrm), a. Same as xiphioid[2].

Xiphiiformes (zif-i-i-fôr'mēz), n. pl. [NL., < Xiphias + L. forma, form.] Same as Xiphiidæ[2].

Xiphiinæ (zif-i-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xiphias + -inæ.] A subfamily of Xiphiidæ, represented by the true swordfishes alone, without teeth or ventral fins. See cut under swordfish.

xiphioid[1] (zif'i-oid), a. and n. In mammal. See xiphoid.

xiphioid[2] (zif'i-oid), a. and n. [< Xiphias + -oid.] I. a. Resembling the swordfish; related to the swordfish; belonging to the Xiphiidæ, or having their characters. Also xiphiiform.

II. n. A member of the family Xiphiidæ.

xiphiplastral (zif-i-plas'tral), a. [< xiphiplastron + -al.] Of the nature of, or pertaining to, the chelonian xiphiplastron. Also used substantively.

The imperfect left xiphiplastral.
Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. 611.

xiphiplastron (zif-i-plas'tron), n.; pl. xiphiplastra (-trą). [NL., < Gr. ξίφος, a sword, + E. plastron.] The fourth lateral piece of the plastron of a turtle; one of the pair of terminal pieces of the plastron in Chelonia, called xiphisternum by some. See cuts under plastron and Chelonia.

Xiphister (zī-fis'tėr), n. [NL. (Jordan, 1879), < Gr. ξιφιστήρ, a sword-belt, < ξίφος, sword.] A genus of blennioid fishes, the type of which is the species called Xiphidion mucosum by Girard. This is found along the coast from Monterey to Alaska, reaching the length of 18 inches, and is abundant about tide-rocks, where it feeds on seaweeds. X. papenteis is a smaller but similar fish, found with the preceding; and a third member of the genus, of the same habitat and still smaller, is X. chirus.

Xiphisterinæ (zī-fis-te-ri'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xiphister + -inæ.] In Jordan and Gilbert's classification, a subfamily of Blenniidæ, typified by the genus Xiphister.

xiphisternal (zif-i-stėr'nal), a. [< xiphisternum + -al.] 1. In anat., of the nature of the xiphisternum, or last sternebar of the sternum; pertaining to the xiphisternum; ensiform or xiphoid, as a cartilage or bone of the breast-bone.

Dissect out the xiphisternal cartilage of a recently-killed frog, and remove its membranous investment (perichondrium). Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 128.

2. In Chelonia, xiphiplastral. See cuts under Chelonia and plastron.

xiphisternum (zif-i-stėr'num), n.; pl. xiphisterna (-nä). [NL., prop. xiphosternum, < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + στέρνον, breast-bone.] 1. The hindmost segment or division of the sternum, corresponding to the xiphoid appendage or ensiform cartilage of man. It is of various shapes in different animals, sometimes forked or double, there being a right and a left xiphisternum, as in some lizards. It succeeds the segment or segments called the mesosternum. See cuts under mesosternum and sternum.

2. The xiphiplastron of a turtle. See second cut under Chelonia.

Xiphisura (zif-i-sū'rą), n. pl. [NL. (orig. erroneously Xyphosura (Latreille), later Xyphisura, Xiphiura, Xiphosura (which see), and prop. Xiphura), noting the dagger-like telson of the king-crab; < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + οὐρά, tail.] In Latreille's classification, the first family of his Paracopoda, contrasted with his Siphonostoma, and containing only the genus Limulus. Compare Synxiphosura. See cuts under horse-shoe-crab and Limulus.

Xiphiura (zif-i-fi'rą), n. pl. See Xiphisura.

Xiphius (zif'i-us), n. In mammal. See Ziphius.

Xiphocera, Xiphoceridæ. See Xiphicera, Xiphiceridæ.

Xiphocolaptes (zif'ō-kō-lap'tēz), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1840), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + κολαπτής, taken for κολαπτήρ, a chisel: see Dendrocolaptes.] A genus of Dendrocolaptidæ, including some of the largest piculules, having the bill much compressed and moderately long (not half as long again as the tarsus). It includes about a dozen species of tropical America, averaging a foot long, which is large for this family, as X. albicollis, etc.

xiphodidymus (zif-ō-did'i-mus), n. [< Gr. ξίφος, sword, + δίδυμος, twin.] Same as xiphopagus.

Xiphodon (zif'ō-don), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1822), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] A genus of fossil artiodactyl mammals, of Eocene age and small size, now referred to the Dichobunidæ.

Xiphodontidæ (zif-ō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xiphodontus + -idæ.] A family of anoplotherioid mammals, at one time recognized as composed of the 3 genera Xiphodon, Canotherium, and Microtherium.

Xiphodontus (zif-ō-don'tus), n. [NL. (Westwood, 1838), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Lucanidæ, having but one species, X. analope, from South Africa, remarkable for its long sword-like mandibles.

xiphoid (zif'oid), a. and n. [< Gr. ξιφοειδής, sword-shaped, < ξίφος, sword, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Shaped like or resembling a sword; ensiform. — Xiphoid appendage, appendix, or cartilage, the xiphisternum. See cartilage, and compare under mesosternum and sternum. Also called xiphoid process. — Xiphoid bone, in ornith., the occipital style of the cormorant and some related birds; a long sharp dagger-like or sagittate ossification in the anchal ligament, attached to the occiput by its base, and pointing backward.

Terrell designated the "occipital sigmoid" thickness as the xiphoid process. Science, III. 406.

Xiphoid ligament, a small ligament connecting the ensiform cartilage or xiphisternum with the cartilage of the seventh rib on either side. — Xiphoid process. (a) In anat., the ensiform appendage of the sternum; the xiphisternum. See cut under mesosternum and sternum. (b) The telson of a crustacean, as the king-crab. See cut under horseshoe-crab.

II. n. The ensiform or xiphoid cartilage in man, or its representative in other animals. See xiphisternum, 1.

xiphoides (zi-foi'dēz), n. [NL.] In anat., same as xiphoid.

xiphoidian (zi-foi'di-an), a. [< xiphoid + -ian.] In anat., same as xiphoid.

xiphopagus (zi-fop'a-gus), n.; pl. xiphopagi (-jī). [NL., < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + πάγος, that which is fixed or firmly set.] In teratol., a double monster connected by a band extending from the ensiform cartilage to the umbilicus. The Siamese twins constituted a xiphopagus. Also xiphodidymus.

xiphophyllous (zif-ō-fil'us), a. [< Gr. ξίφος, sword, + φύλλον, leaf.] In bot., having ensiform leaves.

xiphorhamphus (zif-ō-ram'fus), n. [NL. (Blyth, 1843), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ῥαμφος, beak.] 1. A genus of timeliine birds of the eastern Himalayas. X. superciliaris, the only species, is 7½ inches long. The general color above is olivaceous-brown; over the eye is a white streak, but most of the plumage is of sober shades of ashy and rufous. See Xiphorhynchus, 2.

2. A genus of fishes. Müller and Troschel, 1844.

Xiphorhynchus (zif-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1827, also Xyphorhynchus, 1837), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + ῥύγχος, snout.] 1. A genus of South American dendrocolaptine birds, named from the long, thin, and much-curved bill; the saberbills, as X. procurvus. This tree-creeper is 10 inches long, and mainly of a fulvous color, the head blackish with pale shaft-spots. The genus ranges from Costa Rica to southern Brazil and Bolivia, and contains 4 other species — X. trochilirostris, X. lafresnayanus, X. pusillus, and X. pucherani. In the last-named the bill is shorter and less curved, and there is no such white spot under the eye as all the rest have. See cut under saberbill.

2. A different genus of birds, named by Blyth in 1842 in the form Xiphirhynchus, and changed by him in 1843 to Xiphorhamphus. — 3. A genus of Dryophidæ, or wood-snakes: so called from the acute appendage of the snout. X. langaha is the langaha of Madagascar. (See cut under langaha.) This genus was named by Wagler in 1830, but the name is preoccupied in ornithology.

4. A genus of fishes. Agassiz, 1829.

Xiphosoma (zif-ō-sō'mą), n. [NL. (Spix), < Gr. ξίφος, a sword, + σῶμα, body.] A genus of large serpents, of the family Boidæ, or boas. X. caninum is the dog-headed boa of South America.

xiphosternum (zif-ō-stér'num), n. Same as xiphisternum. [Rare.]

Xiphosura (zif-ō-sū'rą), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + οὐρά, tail.] Same as Xiphosura: in this form, in Lankester's classification, brought under Arachnida as one of three orders (the other two being Eurypterina and Trilobitæ) brigaded under the name Dolobranchia.

xiphosuran (zif-ō-sū'ran), a. and n. [< Xiphosura + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Xiphosura, as a horseshoe-crab.

II. n. A member of the group Xiphosura; a xiphosure.

xiphosure (zif'ō-sūr), n. One of the Xiphosura, as a horseshoe-crab.

xiphosurous (zif-ō-sū'rus), a. [< Xiphosura + -ous.] Same as xiphosuran.

Xiphotheuthis (zif-ō-thū'this), n. [NL., < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + τευθίς, squid.] A genus of belemnites, characterized by a very long, narrow, deeply chambered phragmacone. Only a single species is known, from the Lias. See Belemnitidæ.

Xiphotrygon (zif-ō-trī'gon), n. [NL. (Cope, 1870), < Gr. ξίφος, sword, + τρυγών, a sting-ray.] In ichth., a genus of elasmobranchiate fishes, of the family Trygonidæ.

Xiphura (zi-fū'rą), n. pl. The more proper form of Xiphisura.

xiphurous (zi-fū'rus), a. [< Gr. ξίφος, sword, + οὐρά, tail.] Having a long sharp telson like a dagger, as the king-crab; of or pertaining to the Xiphosura or Xiphura; xiphosuran. See cut under horseshoe-crab.

Xiphydria (zi-fid'ri-ą), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1802), < Gr. ξιφύδριον, a kind of shell-fish, < ξίφος, sword.] In entom., a notable genus of hymenopterous insects, of the family Tenthredinidæ, or typical of a family Xiphydriidæ, having the ovipositor considerably exserted, the neck elongate, and certain peculiar venational characters. Ten North American and three European species are known. X. camelus and X. dromedarius are British species, known as camel wasps from their long neck. The white-horned camel-wasp is X. albicornis. They are found commonly in willows and hedges. Also Xyphidria, Xyphotria.

White-horned Camel-wasp (Xiphydria albicornis), female, twice natural size.

Xiphydriidæ (zif-i-drī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., also Xiphidriadæ (Leach, 1819), Xiphydriada, Xyphydriadæ, etc.; < Xiphydria + -idæ.] A family of hymenopterous insects, named from the genus Xiphydria, now merged in Oryssidæ.

Xirichthys (zī-rik'this), n. Same as Xyrichthys. De Kay, 1842.

X-leg (eks'leg), n. Knock-knee. [Rare.]

Xmas. See X, 3.

xoanon (zō'a-non), n.; pl. xoana (-nȧ). [< Gr. ξόανον, a carved image, < ξέειν, scrape, carve, especially in wood.] In anc. Gr. art, a work of sculpture of the most ancient and primitive class, rudely formed in wood, the eyes being generally represented closed, and the limbs, when indicated at all, extended stiffly. The examples of these statues representing deities which were preserved in Greek historic times were looked upon with much veneration as divine gifts fallen from heaven; they were usually cloaked with precious stuffs and rich embroideries. No specimen survives, but representations of these old works are found on painted vases. The term is sometimes applied attributively to primitive statues in stone advanced but little beyond the wooden prototypes, as the xoanon statue discovered by the French in 1866. See cut under palladium.

Xolmis (zol'mis), n. [NL. (Bole, 1828; also Xolmus (Swainson).] A genus of South American tyrant-flycatchers; a synonym both of Tæniopteryx and of Fluvicola.

xonaltite (zō-nal'tīt), n. [< Xonalta (see def.) + *-ite*².] In mineral., a hydrous silicate of calcium, occurring in massive form of a white or bluish-gray color.

Xorides (zor'i-dēz), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1809).] A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the ichneumond subfamily Pimplinæ, or giving name to an unused family Xoridida, having the face narrowed, the cheeks tuberculate behind the eyes, and the tibiæ and tarsi long and slender. The species are peculiar to northern regions, 14 having been described from northern Europe, including 1 from Lapland, and 4 from British America.

Xoridida (zo-rid'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Xorides + -idæ.] A family of hymenopterous insects, named by Shuckard in 1840 from the genus Xorides, but now included in Ichneumonidæ. It has not even nominally rank, its characters being shared by a number of genera of Pimplinæ.

X-ray. See ray.

XX, XXX. Symbols noting ale of certain qualities or degrees of strength, derived originally from marks on the brewers' casks.

Xya (zī'ą), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1809), < Gr. ξύειν, scrape, smooth, polish.] A genus of mole-crickets, of the orthopterous family Gryllidæ, having filiform ten-jointed antennæ and transverse frontal front legs. The species are mainly tropical, but one is European and one (X. vespiformis) North American. Also called Tridactylus and Rhaphidæ.

Xyela (zī-ē'lą), n. [NL. (Dalman, 1818), < Gr. ξύλον, a plane or rasp, < ξέειν, scrape.] A genus of saw-flies, of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ, giving name to the subfamily Xyelinæ, and having the fourth and following joints of the antennæ long, slender, and filiform. The species are small and have a remarkably long ovipositor. One North American and three European species are known. The generic name has recently been ascertained to be a synonym of Pteleia (Brébisson, 1818).

Xyelinæ (zī-e-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Xyela + -inæ.] A subfamily of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidæ, founded on the genus Xyela, and having the antennæ nine- to thirteen-jointed, irregular, third joint very long, anterior wings with three marginal and four submarginal cells, and ovipositor long. Also Xyelidæ, Xyelides, Xyelites.

xylanthrax (zī-lan'thraks), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ἄνθραξ, coal.] Woodcoal: in distinction from lithanthrax.

Xyleborus (zī-leb'o-rus), n. [NL. (Eichoff, 1864), < Gr. ξυλοβόρος, eating wood, < ξύλον, wood, + βορός, devouring.] A notable genus of bark-boring beetles, of the family Scolytidæ, having the antennal funicle five-jointed, the club subglobose and submannulate, the tarsi with the first three joints subequal and simple, and the tibiæ with the outer edge curved and finely serrate. About 75 species are known, of which 14 inhabit North America. X. dispar is common to Europe and North America. It is known in the United States and Canada as the pin-borer, shot borer, and pear-blight beetle. See these words, and cuts under pin-borer and wood-engraver.

xylem (zī'lem), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ξύλον, wood.] In bot., that part of a fibrovascular bundle which contains ducts or tracheids — that is, the woody part, as distinguished from the phloëm, or bast part. Compare phloëm. See protoxylem, leptoxylem.

xylene (zī'lēn), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -ene.] Any one of the three metameric dimethyl benzines $C_6H_4(CH_3)_2$. They are volatile, inflammable liquids obtained from wood-spirit and from coal-tar. Also xylol, xyloL.

Xylesthia (zī-les'thi-ą), n. [NL. (Clemens, 1859), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ἐσθίειν, eat.] A peculiar genus of North American tineid moths, allied to Ochsenheimeria and Hapsifera of the European fauna. X. prunivorella, the type, feeds as a larva upon the black knot of the plum (Sphæria morbosa), and the larva of X. clemensella feeds upon dead locust-timber.

Xyletinus (zī-le-tī'nus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1829), irreg. < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + NL. Ptinus, q. v.] A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Ptinidæ, comprising about 30 species, and very widely distributed. The elytra are striate and the antennæ serrate with joints nine to eleven, not elongate. Seven species occur in North America, as X. pectinatus.

Xyleutes (zī-lū'tēz), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816), < Gr. ξυλεύς, a wood-cutter, < ξύλον, wood.] A Common Locust-borer (Xyleutes robiniæ), female, natural size.

genus of moths, of the family Cossidæ. X. robiniæ is the common locust-borer of the United States. See also cut under carpenter-moth.

xylharmonica (zil-här-mon'i-kȧ), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + E. harmonica.] An enlarged and improved form of the xylophon (which see).

Xylia (zil'i-ą), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1852), so called from the woody pod; < Gr. ξύλον, wood.] A genus of leguminous trees, of the tribe Eumimoseæ. It is characterized by a broadly falcate compressed woody two-valved pod with transverse obovate seeds. The only species, X. dolabriformis (formerly Inga xylocarpa), is a tall tree of tropical Asia, producing a hard wood and bearing bipinnate leaves of only two pinnæ, these each four or five pairs of large falcate leaflets and an odd one. The small pale-green flowers are condensed into globose heads which form terminal racemes or axillary clusters. It is known as the ironwood of Pegu, or by its Burmese name, pyengadu (which see).

xylidine (zil'i-din), n. Same as xylidine.

Xylina (zil'i-nȧ), n. [NL. (Treitschke, 1826), < Gr. ξύλινος, of wood, < ξύλον, wood.] A genus of noctuid moths, giving name to the Xylinidæ, and having the male antennæ simple, the proboscis short, the body robust, and the fore wings rounded at the apex. The larvæ usually live on trees and the pupæ are subterranean. The genus is represented in all parts of the world, and the species number about of which 8 are European and about 20 North American. X. cinerea, of the United States, is called the ash-gray pinion, and its larva bores into green apples and peaches, and Ash-gray Pinion (Xylina cinerea).

a, larva, boring into a peach; b, moth feeds upon the foliage of various trees. Three of the British species are fancifully named respectively the conformist, X. furcifera (X. conformis), the nonconformist, X. lambda, and the gray shoulder-knot, X. ornithopus.

Xylinidæ (zī-lin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Guenée, 1852), ‹ Xylina + -idæ.] A family of noctuids, named from the genus Xylina, many of which are known as shark-moths. They have the antennæ almost always simple, well-developed palpi, thorax robust, wings oblong, with longitudinal markings, and somewhat plicated when at rest, giving the insect an elongated appearance. The family includes about 20 genera.

xylobalsamum (zī-lō-bal'sa-mum), n. [‹ L. xylobalsamum, ‹ Gr. ξυλο βάλσαμον, the wood of the balsam-tree, ‹ ξύλον, wood, + βάλσαμον, balsam.] 1. The wood, or particularly the dried twigs, of the balm-of-Gilead tree, Commiphora Opobalsamum. The wood is heavy, pinkish, and fragrant. A decoction of it, as also of the fruit (carpobalsamum), is given in the East as a carminative, etc. 2. The balsam obtained by decoction from this wood.

Xylobius (zī-lō'bi-us), n. [NL., ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + βίος, life.] 1. A genus of beetles, of the family Eucnemidæ, named by Latreille in 1834, and containing two European species. Also called Xylophilus. — 2. A genus of fossil chilognath myriapods. Dawson, 1859.

xylocarp (zī'lō-kärp), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., a hard and woody fruit.

xylocarpous (zī-lō-kär'pus), a. [As xylocarp + -ous.] Having fruit which becomes hard or woody.

xylochlore (zī'lō-klōr), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + χλωρός, greenish yellow.] An olive-green crystalline mineral, closely resembling apophyllite, if not a variety of it.

Xylocopa (zī-lok'ō-pä), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1802), ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -κοπος, ‹ κόπτειν, cut.] An extensive genus of solitary bees, containing many of those large species known as carpenter-bees. They resemble bumblebees, from which they differ in having the abdomen usually naked, and in important venational characters. Their burrows Virginian Carpenter-bee (Xylocopa virginica).

c, hind tarsus of female carpenter-bee; d, hind tarsus of bumblebee are formed in solid wood, and their cells are separated by partitions usually made of agglutinated sawdust and provisioned with pollen. Six species occur in Europe and nine in North America. X. violacea is the common European species, and X. virginica the common one in the United States. See also carpenter bee (with cut).

Xylocopus (zī-lok'ō-pus), n. [NL. (Cabanis, 1863), ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -κοπος, ‹ κόπτειν, cut.] A genus of woodpeckers, such as Picus minor and P. major, respectively the lesser and greater spotted woodpeckers of Europe: generally considered a synonym of Picus proper. See Dendrocopus, 2, and cut under Picus.

xylogen (zī'lō-jen), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -γενής, producing.] 1. Same as lignin. — 2. Wood or xylem in a formative state.

xylograph (zī'lō-gräf), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + γράφειν, engrave, write.] 1. (a) An engraving on wood. (b) An impression or print from a wood-block. In both senses the term is most commonly applied to old work, especially to that of the very earliest period. 2. A mechanical copy of the grain of wood, executed by a method of nature-printing, and used as a surface decoration. The wood to be copied is treated chemically so that the grain remains in relief and serves to give an impression in a suitable pigment.

xylographer (zī-log'ra-fėr), n. [‹ xylograph-y + *-er*¹.] An engraver on wood, especially one of the earliest wood-engravers, as of the fifteenth century.

xylographic (zī-lō-graf'ik), a. [‹ xylograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to xylography; cut in or on wood.

Some of these changes of form, otherwise inexplicable, since they are from simpler and easier forms to others more complicated and seemingly more difficult, can be readily accounted for by the fact that the runes were essentially a xylographic script.

Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, II. 221.

xylographical (zī-lō-graf'i-kal), a. [‹ xylographic + -al.] Same as xylographic.

Xylographus (zī-log'ra-fus), n. [NL. (Dejean, 1834); see xylograph.] A genus of coleopterous insects of the family Cucujidæ, distinguished mainly by the structure of the legs. About a dozen species are known, most of which are South American. Two, however, are from southern Europe, one is from Algeria, and one from Madagascar.

xylography (zī-log'ra-fi), n. [= F. xylographie; ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -γραφία, ‹ γράφειν, engrave, write. Cf. ξυλογραφεῖν, write on wood.] 1. Engraving on wood: a word used only by bibliographers, and chiefly for the woodcut work of the fifteenth century. — 2. A process of decorative painting on wood. A selected pattern or design is drawn on wood and is then engraved, or the design is reproduced on zinc by the ordinary method. An electrotype cast is taken from the woodcut or zinc plate, and smooth surfaces of wood are printed from the electrotype, under a regulated pressure, with pigments prepared for the purpose. The color penetrates the wood, leaving no outside film, and after being French polished, or covered with a fluid enamel, the wood may be washed, scrubbed, or even sandpapered without destroying the pattern. Ure.

xyloid (zī'loid), a. [‹ Gr. ξυλοειδής, like wood, ‹ ξύλον, wood, + εἶδος, form.] Woody; of the nature of, resembling, or pertaining to xylem or wood; lignoous.

xyloidine (zī-loi'din), n. [As xyloid + *-ine*².] An explosive compound ($C_6H_8NO_7$) produced by the action of strong nitric acid upon starch or woody fiber. It somewhat resembles gun-cotton in its nature. Also called xyloidine.

xylol, xylole (zī'lol, zī'lōl), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + L. oleum, oil.] Same as xylene.

xyloma (zī-lō'mä), n.; pl. xylomata (-ma-tä). [NL., ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -oma.] In bot., a sclerotioid body in certain fungi which produces sporogenous structures in its interior.

Xylomelum (zī-lō-mē'lum), n. [NL. (Smith, 1798), so called from the woody apple-like fruit; ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + μῆλον, apple.] A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Proteaceæ and tribe Grevilleæ. It is characterized by opposite leaves, densely spicate flowers, an ovary with two ovules laterally affixed, and a hard, nearly indehiscent, somewhat ovoid fruit. The 6 species are all Australian. They are trees or tall shrubs, with opposite entire or spiny-toothed leaves. The flowers are of medium size, sessile in pairs under the bracts of a dense spike, which is commonly perfect below, but in the upper part sterile. The spikes are opposite or axillary, or crowded into a terminal cluster which finally becomes lateral. X. pyriforme, the wooden-pear tree of New South Wales, is remarkable for its fruit, which is exactly like a common pear in size and shape, but attached by the broad end and composed of a hard woody substance difficult to cut; when ripe it splits lengthwise, discharging a flat winged seed. The tree grows from 20 to 40 feet high, 6 to 8 inches in diameter, producing a dark reddish wood, used in cabinet-work.

Xylomiges (zī-lom'i-jēz), n. [NL. (Guenée, 1852, as Xylomyges), ‹ Gr. ξυλομυγές, mixed with wood, ‹ ξύλον, wood, + μυγνύναι, mix.] A genus of noctuid moths, of the family Apamidæ, comprising species of moderate size, robust body, short proboscis, and palpi hardly reaching above the head. The genus is wide-spread, but contains only about a dozen species, of which 9 inhabit the United States. See silver-cloud.

xylonite (zī'lō-nīt), n. [Irreg. ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + -ite.] Same as celluloid.

Xylonomus (zī-lon'ō-mus), n. [NL. (Gravenhorst, 1829), ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + νέμειν, graze, feed.] An important genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the ichneumonid subfamily Pimplinæ, having very long legs and antennæ, and the marginal cell of the fore wing extending nearly to the apex of the wing. The species are rather large, are wide-spread, and are parasitic upon the larvæ of the larger wood-boring beetles, such as the Cerambycidæ; 15 are known in Europe, and 9 have been described from the United States.

xylopal (zī-lō'pal), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ὀπαλλος, opal.] Same as wood-opal.

Xylophaga¹ (zī-lof'a-gä), n. [NL. (Turton, 1822), ‹ Gr. ξυλοφάγος, wood-eating, ‹ ξύλον, wood, + φαγεῖν, eat.] 1. A genus of boring bivalves, of the family Pholadidæ, as X. dorsalis. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Xylophaga looks like a very short ship-worm, and burrows in floating wood, against the grain, about as long. P. P. Carpenter, Lectures on Mollusca (1866, MS.).

Xylophaga² (zī-lof'a-gä), n. pl. [NL.: see *Xylophaga*¹.] 1. A series of Hymenoptera Trochata, in Hartig's classification (1837), embracing only the family Uroceridæ: distinguished from the Phytophaga on the one hand and the Parasitica on the other. Compare these two words. — 2. A group of rhynchophorous insects. Motschulsky, 1845.

xylophagan (zī-lof'a-gan), a. and n. [‹ Xylophaga + -an.] I. a. In entom., of or pertaining to the Xylophaga, in either sense.

II. n. A member of the Xylophaga, in either sense.

xylophage (zī'lō-fāj), n. [‹ Xylophagus.] A xylophagous insect. [Rare.]

Wood yellowish, . . . of a somewhat unequal coarse fiber, soon attacked by xylophages.

Kurz, Flora Brit. Burmah.

Xylophagi (zī-lof'a-jī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Xylophagus, q. v.] 1. In Latreille's system of classification, the second family of his tetramerous Coleoptera, containing many forms now distributed among the Bostrichidæ, Mycetophagidæ, Cimlæ, Lathridiidæ, Cucujidæ, Colydiidæ, and Trogositidæ. — 2. In Meigen's classification, same as Xylophagidæ.

Xylophagidæ (zī-lō-faj'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Stephens, 1829), ‹ Xylophagus + -idæ.] A family of brachycerous dipterous insects, typified by the genus Xylophagus. They have the costal vein encompassing the entire wing, and the tibiæ spurred. Their larvæ live in dead and decaying wood, and the adults are found most commonly on tree-trunks in high places in the woods. About 60 species are known. Compare Beridæ.

xylophagous (zī-lof'a-gus), a. [‹ Gr. ξυλοφάγος, wood-eating, ‹ ξύλον, wood, + φαγεῖν, eat.] 1. Wood-eating; habitually feeding upon wood; ligniverous, as an insect. See Cis (with cut). — 2. Perforating and destroying as if eating timber, as a mollusk or a crustacean.

Xylophagus (zī-lof'a-gus), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1803): see xylophagous.] The typical genus of Xylophagidæ. The larvæ live in garden-mold or under the bark of decaying trees, and the adult flies are remarkable for their resemblance to certain hymenopterous insects. They are rather large, almost naked, blue or black in color, often with a broad brownish band on the abdomen. A dozen or more species are known, of which eight are North American. Also incorrectly Xylophagus (Latreille, 1829).

Xylophasia (zī-lō-fa'si-ä), n. [NL. (Stephens, 1829), ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + φάσις, an appearance.] A genus of noctuid moths, of the family Apamidæ, allied to Xylomiges, but having the palpi reaching above the head. X. lepidea is the clouded brindle moth, X. polyodon is the dark arches, expanding about 2 inches. Many of the species formerly included in this genus are now placed in Hadena and Mamestra.

xylophilan (zī-lof'i-lan), n. [‹ Xylophili + -an.] Any member of the Xylophili.

Xylophili (zī-lof'i-lī), n. pl. [NL. (Latreille, 1825), pl. of Xylophilus: see xylophilous.] A group of scarabæoid beetles, including several genera of the modern family Scarabæidæ, corresponding to the families Dynastidæ and Rutelidæ of Macleay.

xylophilous (zī-lof'i-lus), a. [‹ NL. Xylophilus, ‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + φίλειν, love.] Fond of wood, as an insect; living or feeding upon wood.

Xylophilus (zī-lof'i-lus), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1825): see xylophilous.] 1. A genus of small beetles, of the family Rhipiceridæ. It is represented in many parts of the world, and comprises more than 40 species, of which 16 are found in the United States, as X. wolfhemeri, remarkable in that the males have flabellate antennæ. 2. Same as Xylobius, 1. Mannerheim.

xylophone (zī'lō-fōn), n. [‹ Gr. ξύλον, wood, + φωνή, voice.] A musical instrument consisting of a graduated series of wooden bars, often supported on bands of straw, and sounded by means of small wooden hammers or by rubbing with rosined gloves. The tone is often agreeable and effective. Also gigelira, timpanon, and straw-fiddle.

Xylophone.

Xylopia (zi-lō'pi-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1763), for Xylopicrum, so called from the bitter wood; < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πικρός, bitter.] A genus of plants, of the order Anonaceæ, type of the tribe Xylopieæ. It is characterized by flowers with a conical receptacle bearing externally numerous stamens with truncate anthers, in the center excavated and containing from one to five carpels, each with two to six ovules. There are from 30 to 40 species, natives of the tropics, chiefly in America, but with several in India and Africa. They are trees or shrubs with coriaceous and commonly two-ranked leaves. The flowers are solitary or clustered in the axils, and are nearly or quite sessile, each with six petals, the outer elongated, thick, boat-shaped, carving, erect, and almost meeting at the summit, surpassing the three inner petals. The fruit consists of oblong or elongated berries produced on a convex receptacle. X. Æthiopica, of western tropical Africa, is the source of African, negro, or Guinea pepper; it is a tree with pointed ovate leaves, and a fruit consisting of several dry black quill-like aromatic carpels about 2 inches long. These are sold in native markets as a stimulant and condiment, and were formerly imported into Europe, forming the piper Æthiopicum of old writers. For X. polycarpa, of tropical Africa, see pellow dye-tree (under yellow). From the pervasive flavor of their wood various American species are called bitter-wood, especially X. glabra in the West Indies and X. frutescens in Guiana. The fruit of X. aromatica in Brazil serves as a spice, and its bark torn from the tree in ribbon-like strips is twisted into coarse cordage, and would be available for matting. X. frutescens, known in Brazil as embira, has similar uses. Several species have formerly been classed under the genera Uvaria, Unona, and Habzelia.

Xylopieæ (zi-lō-pi'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Xylopia + -eæ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Anonaceæ. It is characterized by densely crowded stamens, and thick exterior petals which are connivent or scarcely open, the inner ones are valvate and smaller, and are sometimes minute or absent. It includes 8 genera, chiefly of tropical trees, of which the chief are Anona, Habzelia, and Xylopia (the type).

Xylopinus (zi-lō-pī'nus), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1863), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πεινάν, be hungry.] A genus of tenebrionid beetles, peculiar to North America, having the antennæ slender with the distal joints triangular, the anterior tarsi of the male little dilated, and the anterior margin of the front not reflexed. Three species are known. They live under the bark of dead trees.

xylopyrography (zī-lō-pī-rog'rą-fi), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + πῦρ, fire, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Same as poker-painting.

xyloretine (zī-lō-ret'in), n. [For xylorhetine*; < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ῥητίνη, resin: see resin.] A subfossil resinous substance, found in connection with the pine-trunks of the peat-marshes of Holtegaard in Denmark.

Xyloryctes (zī-lō-rik'tēz), n. [NL. (Hope, 1837), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ὀρυκτής, a digger.] A peculiar genus of scarabæid beetles, having the head of the male armed with a long horn, and the female head tuberculate. The genus corresponds in the western hemisphere to the eastern Oryctes. X. satyrus is rather common in the eastern United States. Its larva is said to injure the roots of ash trees.

Xyloryctes satyrus, female, natural size xylostiston (zī-lō-sis'tron), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + στείστρον, sistrum: see sistrum.] A musical instrument, invented by Uthe in 1807, resembling Chladni's euphonium, but having wooden instead of glass rods. Compare xylharmonica.

xylostein (zī-los'tē-in), n. [< NL. Xylosteum (see def.) (< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + ὀστέον, bone) + *-in*².] An active poisonous principle which has been isolated from the seeds of Lonicera Xylosteum, a species of honeysuckle.

Xylostroma (zī-lō-strō'mą), n. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + στρῶσις, anything spread or laid out.] A genus or form-genus of polyporoid fungi, which continues indefinitely, without fruiting, as a thick dense leathery sheet covering the wood upon which it lives.

xylostromatoid (zī-lō-strō'mą-toid), a. [< NL. Xylostroma(t-) + -oid.] In bot., resembling the genus or form-genus Xylostroma — that is, having a tough woody or leathery appearance — as the matted mycelium of certain polyporoid fungi.

Distinguished by its distinct xylostromatoid sub-stratum. M. C. Cooke, Handbook of British Fungi, I. 282.

Xylota (zī-lō'tą), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1822), < Gr. ξύλον, wood.] A large genus of syrphid flies, comprising medium-sized or large species, slender, with the abdomen more or less red, yellow, or metallic. More than 40 species are found in North America, and about 15 in Europe. The larvæ are found in decaying wood, and the adults frequent the foliage of bushes in blossom.

Xyloteles (zī-lot'ē-lēz), n. [NL. (Newman, 1840), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τέλος, end.] A genus of Polynesian cerambycid beetles, comprising about a dozen species from New Zealand and the Philippines. They are rather large pubescent beetles, with the intercoxal prominence of the abdomen in the form of an acute triangle.

Xyloterus (zī-lot'ē-rus), n. [NL. (Erichson, 1836), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τρυπᾶν, bore.] 1. A genus of bark-boring beetles, containing several very destructive species, as X. bivittatus, which seriously injures the spruce in North America. They have the antennal club large, oval, solid, pubescent on both sides, the eyes completely divided and the tibiæ serrate. Five species occur in the United States. By European authors the genus is considered a synonym of Trypodendron (Stephens, 1830).

2. A genus of hornbills, comprising two European species. Boie, 1837.

xylotile (zī-lō-til), n. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τίλος, down.] A mineral of fibrous structure and wood-brown color, probably an altered form of asbestos.

xylotomous (zī-lot'ō-mus), a. [< Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τομή, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] Wood-cutting, as an insect.

Xylotrogi (zī-lō-trō'jī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τρώγειν, gnaw.] In Latreille's classification, a group of serricorn beetles, distinguished among serricorns from Malacodermi and from Sternoxi.

Xylotrupes (zī-lō-trī'pēz), n. [NL. (Dejean, 1834, as Xylotrupes), < Gr. ξύλον, wood, + τρυπᾶν, bore.] A genus of very large lamellicorn beetles, related to Dynastes, as X. gideon of Malacca, which attacks the cocoanut. The cephalic horn of the males is always forked and the thoracic horn sometimes bifid. About a dozen species are known, belonging only to the Australasian fauna.

Xyrichthys (zī-rik'this), n. [NL. (Cuvier and Valenciennes, 1839), also Xyrichthys, Zyrichthys; < Gr. ξυρεύς, a razor, + ἰχθύς, a fish.] In ichth., a genus of brightly colored labroid fishes, of tropical seas, known as razor-fishes. X. novacula is West Indian, and differs little from the European type of the genus. X. lineatus of the West Indies, and occasional on the southern coast of the United States, is covered with a large blotch on each side below the pectorals.

Xyridaceæ (zir-i-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Xyris (-id-) + -aceæ.] Same as Xyrideæ.

xyridaceous (zir-i-dā'shius), a. Characterized like Xyris, belonging to the Xyrideæ (Xyridaceæ).

Xyrideæ (zi-rid'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Kunth, 1815), < Xyris (Xyrid- + -eæ.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Coronariæ. It is characterized by slightly irregular bisexual flowers, sessile and solitary under imbricated bracts in a terminal head. The perianth consists of three equal broad-spreading delicate corolla-lobes, and a single large petaloid coriaceous sepal which wraps around the corolla, or is in the tropical American genus Abolboda absent. There are perhaps 45 species, belonging mostly to the genus Xyris (the type), the others to Abolboda. They are usually perennials, growing in tufts in wet places, chiefly in warm countries. They resemble the sedges and rushes in habit, the Restiaceæ in the structure of their seeds, and the spiderworts in that of their ovules.

Xyris (zī'ris), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737; earlier in Lobel, 1581), so called from the sharp-edged leaves; < Gr. ξυρίς, a species of Iris, perhaps I. fœtidissima, < ξύειν, a razor, < ξύειν, scrape.] A genus of plants, type of the order Xyrideæ. It is characterized by flowers with a broad petaloid sepal which is very caducous and a style without any appendage. About 40 species have been described, but not all are now thought distinct. They are tufted herbs, the stems usually flattish and two-edged, with linear rigid or grass-like leaves, and small globose or ovoid flower-heads with very closely imbricated rigid bracts. They are known as yellow-eyed grass, from the yellow petals. 17 species occur in the southern United States, mostly in sands and pine-barrens, 4 extend northward, of which X. flexuosa, with a twisted, and X. Caroliniana, with a flattish scape, occur from Massachusetts to Florida, X. montana and A. torta occur in pine barrens from New Jersey southward. The leaves and roots of X. Indica are used as a remedy against leprosy and the itch in India, as are also those of X. Americana in Guiana and of X. capensis in Brazil.

xyst (zist), n. [< L. xystus, also xystum, < Gr. ξυστός, a covered portico (so called from its polished floor), < ξυστός, scraped, smoothed, polished, < ξύειν, scrape, plane, smooth, polish.] In anc. arch., a covered portico or open court, of great length in proportion to its width, in which athletes performed their exercises; or, in Roman villas, sometimes, a garden walk planted with trees. Also xystus, xystus.

Xysta (zis'tą), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1824), < Gr. ξυστός: see xyst.] 1. A genus of dipterous insects, belonging to the Muscidæ calyptratæ and subfamily Phasiinæ. They are medium-sized or small somewhat hairy flies of black or gray color, whose metamorphoses are not known. Few species have been described, of which but one is North American.

2. A genus of tenebrionid beetles, synonymous with Edrodes (Eschscholtz, 1829).

xystarch (zis'tārk), n. [< LL. xystarches, < Gr. ξυστάρχης, the director of a xyst, < ξυστός, a covered portico, xyst, + ἄρχειν, rule.] An Athenian officer who presided over the gymnastic exercises of the xyst.

xyster (zis'tėr), n. [< Gr. ξυστήρ, a scraping-tool, < ξύειν, scrape: see xyst.] 1. A surgeons' instrument for scraping bones. — 2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of fishes. Lacépède.

Xysticus (zis'ti-kus), n. [NL. (Koch, 1835), < Gr. ξυστικός, of or for scraping, < ξυστός, scraped: see xyst.] A large genus of laterigrade spiders, of the family Thomisidæ. About 30 species are described from North America.

xystos (zis'tos), n. [NL. or L.: see xyst.] Same as xyst.

Xystrocera (zis-tros'ē-rą), n. [NL. (Serville, 1834), < Gr. ξυστρόν, a scraper, + κέρας, horn.] In entom., a genus of tropical longicorn beetles of large size, and usually of a reddish-yellow color variegated with metallic green. About 30 species are known, nearly all from African and Australasian faunas.

Xystroplites (zis-trop-lī'tēz), n. [NL. (Jordan MSS., Cope, 1877), < Gr. ξυστρόν, a scraper (< ξύειν, scrape), + ὅπλον, armor.] A genus of centrarchoid fishes, distinguished from Lepomus by the blunt pharyngeal teeth. A species is found in Texas, usually called Lepomus heros.

xystus (zis'tus), n. 1. Same as xyst. — 2. [cap.] [NL.] A generic name variously applied to certain hymenopterous, coleopterous, and lepidopterous insects.

1. The twenty-fifth letter in the English alphabet. It has both a vowel and a consonant value. The character (as was pointed out under I) is the finally established Greek form of the sign added by the Greeks next after T (which had been the last Phenician letter) to express the u(v) sound. U and V are other forms of it, which have kept more nearly their original place and value. As a Greek vowel, Y underwent a phonetic change which made of it the equivalent of the present French u, German ü, a rounded i, or a blending of the i- and u sounds, and in the first century B. C. it was added by the Romans to their alphabet (which had till then ended with x) to express this sound in the Greek words borrowed into their language. With the same value it passed also into Anglo-Saxon use, but its sound gradually changed to that of a pure or unrounded i; and then its further development into a sign for both vowel and consonant is analogous with the partial differentiation of U or V and W (see W). It differs from w, the other character having the double value of vowel and consonant, in being not only exchanged with i in diphthongs and vowel digraphs — as ai-ay, ei-ey, oi-oy — but also commonly used by itself as the vowel of a syllable, as in by, dewy, sylph, lyceum, taking the place of i both at the end of a word (since no proper English word except the pronoun I is allowed to end with i) and elsewhere, and constantly exchanging with i and e in the different inflectional forms of the same words: as, pony, ponies; pretty, prettier, driny, denies, denied, denier; and soon. In Anglo-Saxon y properly expressed the mixed sound ü, but it early began to interchange with i, and in Middle English the two became convertible, y being often substituted for i as being more legible, and as affording, especially at the end of a word, an opportunity for a calligraphic flourish. Hence its present prevalence at the end of words, while in the inflected forms the older i is retained, families, the plural of familie, remaining beside family, the flourished spelling, without the original final e, of familie. As a vowel-sign, y is a superfluity in our alphabet, signifying nothing which would not be just as well signified by i. The consonant y is really a different letter, representing the Middle English ȝ, the Anglo-Saxon g. The value is that of a semivowel, related to the i sounds (ī and e) precisely as w is related to the u sounds (ū and o or o); if at all dwelt on or prolonged, it becomes an i or e. With this value it stands always before another vowel, as in yam, ye, yacht, yon, Yule. In very many words it is a matter of comparative indifference, and subject to constant variation in practice, whether an i before a vowel shall be pronounced as a vowel, making a separate syllable, or as y, combining into one syllable with its successor. In the respellings for pronunciation of this dictionary, such cases are often written with an i in the same syllable with the following vowel; examples are con-dui, to-bo, fa-shient, e-vas'tion. The semivowel y sound is not only thus written with y and with i (sometimes also with e, as in sounding ocean), but it is sounded without being written in a large class of words as the first element of what is called "long u" (that is, yoo - see U), as in use, union, and then, even when the oo (o) part of the combination is reduced by slighting even to the neutral vowel sound (ŭ or u or ə), the y remains: hence, hy'dyr, not hy'ər, for hydr (hī'drər). In all these varieties of designation, the semivowel y sound is a much rarer element than the w sound in English utterance, making but ½ of one per cent. of the latter, while the w is 2½ per cent. The character y in the archaic forms or abbreviations ye, yat, ys, yt, etc. is neither the Greek y nor the Anglo-Saxon y (ȝ), but a form of the Anglo-Saxon and Middle English þ, now written th, and is to be pronounced, of course, as th.

2. As a symbol: (a) In chem., the symbol of yttrium. (b) In ornith., in myological formulas the symbol of the accessory semitendinosus. A. H. Garrod. (c) In math.: (1) [l. c.] In algebra, the second of the variables or unknown quantities. (2) [l. c.] In analytical geometry, the symbol of the ordinate or other rectilinear point-coördinate. (3) In mechanics, the component of a force in the direction of the axis of y. (d) As a medieval Roman numeral, the symbol for 150, and with a line drawn above it (Ȳ), 150,000. –3. [l. c.] An abbreviation of year. Y-n function. See function.

Y² (wī), n. [From the letter Y.] Something resembling the letter Y in shape. Specifically — (a) A forked clasp for holding drills or other tools. (b) One of the forked supports in the angle of which is placed either a telescope or one of the extremities of the axis about which a telescope or other instrument or apparatus turns. (c) Same as Y level. (d) A two-way pipe or coupling used to unite a hot- and cold-water pipe in one discharge, as in a bath-tub. (e) In gunn., a Y-moth.

Y³. An old mode of writing the pronoun I.

> For the hy sory nicht and day,
> Y may say, hay wayleway!
> Y luf the mar than ini lif. Rel. Antiq., I. 168.

y-. See *i-*¹. For Middle English words with this prefix, see i-, or the form without the prefix.

-y¹. [Early mod. E. also -ie, -ye; < ME. -y, -ie, -ye, -i, -ig, < AS. -ig = D. -ig = OHG. -ig, -ic, MHG. -ic, -ec, G. -ig = Icel. -igr, -ugr = Sw. Dan. -ig = Goth. -ags (cf. L. -ic-us = Gr. -ικ-ός), an adj. suffix, as in AS. stānig, stony, īsig, icy, dēawig, dewy, etc. This suffix is often spelled -ey, especially when attached to a word ending in -y, as in clayey, skyey.] A very common suffix used to form adjectives from nouns, and sometimes from verbs, such adjectives denoting 'having,' 'covered with,' 'full of,' etc., the thing expressed by the noun, as in stony, rocky, icy, watery, rainy, dewy, meaty, juicy, mealy, salty, peppery, powdery, flowery, spotty, speckly, etc. It may be used with almost any noun, but is found chiefly with monosyllables, while examples of its use with trisyllables are rare.

-y². [Also -ie (rarely -ey); < ME. -ye, -ie (rare); a dim. suffix, prob. due to a merging of the familiar adj. suffix *-y*¹, *-ie*¹, with the orig. fem. suffix *-ie*³, *-y*³, and perhaps in some cases with the D. dim. suffix -je, which is short for -jen, a later var. of -ken (see -kin).] A diminutive suffix, appearing chiefly in childish names of animals, etc., as kitty, doggy, piggy, birdy, froggy, mousy, and similar names, or familiar forms of personal names, as Katy or Kitty (diminutive of Kate), Jenny, Hetty, Fanny, Willy, Johnny, Tommy, etc., such names being often spelled with -ie, as Willie, Davie, etc., a spelling common in Scotch use, and also in general use in names of girls, as Katie, Jennie, Hettie, Carrie, Lizzie, Nellie, Annie, etc. Such names coincide in terminal form with some feminine names not actually diminutive, as Mary, Lucy, Lily, formerly and sometimes still written Marie, Lucie, Lillie, etc. The diminutive termination is not used, except as above, in English literary speech, but it is common in Scotch, as in bourne, mannie, lassie, sometimes with a second diminutive suffix, as in lassockie, etc.

-y³. [Early mod. E. also -ye, -ie; < ME. -ie, -ye, < OF. -ie, F. -ie = Sp. -ia, in some words of Gr. origin -ία = Pg. It. -ia, < L. -ia = Gr. -ία, a common term. of fem. abstract (and concrete) nouns, as in L. familia, family, mania (< Gr. μανία), madness, etc. See def. Cf. -cy, -ency, -ce, -ence, etc.] A termination of nouns from the Latin or Greek, or of modern formation on the Latin or Greek model. Such nouns are or were originally abstract, but many are now concrete. Examples are family, innocency, homily, theory, geography, philosophy, philosophy, philosophy, etc., the list is innumerable. Besides words from the Latin and Greek, many other words have the termination y, either after the analogy of the Latin and Greek termination, or from some other source. As the termination in such cases usually has no significance, and is therefore not used as formative within the meaning assigned to that word, such words, which are very numerous and intractable to classification, are here ignored.

ya¹. An old spelling of yea.

ya² (yä), pron. A dialectal form of you.

yacare (yak'ä-re), n. [Braz.] Same as jacare.

yacca (yak'ä), n. [W. Ind.] Either of two West Indian evergreens, Podocarpus Purdieana and P. coriacea, trees becoming respectively 100 feet and 50 feet high, and affording timber suitable for cabinet and plain purposes.

yacca-tree (yak'ä-trē), n. Same as yucca.

yacca-wood (yak'ä-wud), n. The wood of the yacca-tree.

yacht (yot), n. [Formerly also yatcht, yatch (cf. F. yacht, < E.); = G. jacht, < MD. jacht, D. jagt, a yacht, lit. a chase, hunting (= OHG. jagōt*, MHG. jagāt, G. jagd, chase, hunting), < jagen = OHG. jagōn, MHG. G. jagen, hunt.] A vessel propelled either by sails or by steam, most often light or comparatively small, but sometimes of large size, used for pleasure-trips or for racing, or as a vessel of state to convey persons of distinction by water. There are two distinct types of sailing yacht: the racer with large spars and sails and fine lines, but sacrificing comfort to speed, and the commodious well-proportioned cruising-yacht. Sailing yachts are seldom or never of a more elaborate rig than that of the schooner; but steam-vessels of every class from launches up are common as yachts.

> I sailed this morning with his Majesty in one of his yachts (or pleasure-boats), vessels not known among us till the Dutch East India Company presented that curious piece to the king. Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 1, 1662.
>
> Yatcht, a Dutch Vessel or Pleasure boat about the bigness of our Barge. Blount, Glossographia (1670).
>
> Yacht, a small sort of a Ship, built rather for Swiftness and Pleasure than for Merchandize or Warlike Service. E. Phillips, 1706.

yacht (yot), v. i. [< yacht, n.] To sail or cruise in a yacht.

> The young English . . . seek for travels as dangerous as war, diving into Maelstroms, . . . yachting among the icebergs of Lancaster Sound. Emerson, Fortune.

yacht-built (yot'bilt), a. Constructed on the model of a yacht.

> On the coast of Florida, there are the skimming-dish, the pumpkin-seed, and the flat-iron models, all half-rounded yacht built boats, broad and beamy, cat-rigged or sloop-rigged, they all pound and spank in a sea-way, and are very wet. J. A. Henshall, Forest and Stream, XIII. 488.

yacht-club (yot'klub), n. A club or union of yacht-owners for racing purposes, the promotion of yachting, etc., usually presided over by a commodore.

yachter (yot'ėr), n. [< yacht + *-er*¹.] One who commands a yacht; also, one who sails in a yacht; a yachtsman.

yachting (yot'ing), n. [Verbal n. of yacht, v.] The art of navigating a yacht; the sport of sailing or traveling in a yacht. Also used attributively: as, a yachting voyage; a yachting suit.

yachtsman (yots'man), n.; pl. yachtsmen (-men). One who keeps or sails a yacht.

> The men . . . were hauling up the mainsail, Claud and Freddy lending superfluous aid, and making themselves very hot over it, as the manner of yachtsmen is. W. E. Norris, Matrimony, v.

yachtsmanship (yots'man-ship), n. [< yachtsman + -ship.] The art or science of sailing or managing a yacht. Also yachtmanship.

> The partisans of English yachtsmanship need not be disconcerted. St James's Gazette, Sept. 8, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.) yaft. A Middle English form of gave, preterit of give.

yaff (yaf), v. i. [Imitative; cf. *yap*¹ and *waff*².] To bark like an angry dog; yelp; hence, to talk pertly. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

> This said, up came a yaffing cur.
> A. Scott, The Hare's Complaint. (Jamieson.)

yaffil (yaf'il), n. Same as *yaffle*¹.

yaffingale (yaf'ing-gāl), n. [Appar. altered from *yaffle*¹, with term. conformed to that of nightingale.] Same as *yaffle*¹. Also yappingale. [Prov. Eng.]

> I am woodman of the woods,
> And hear the garnet-headed yaffingale
> Mock them. Tennyson, Last Tournament.

yaffle¹ (yaf'l), n. [Imitative; cf. yaff.] The green woodpecker, Gecinus viridis: from its loud laughing notes. Also yaffil, yaffler, yaffingale. See cut under popinjay. [Prov. Eng.]

> The Green Woodpecker, Gecinus or Picus viridis, though almost unknown in Scotland or Ireland, is the commonest; frequenting wooded districts, and more often heard than seen, its laughing cry (whence the name "Yaffil" or "Yaffle," by which it is in many parts known) and undulating flight afford equally good means of recognition. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 466.

yaffle² (yaf'l), n. [Also yaffel; origin obscure.] 1. An armful. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A pile of cod-fish to be carried from the flakes to the store-house. [Local, Massachusetts.]

yaffle³ (yaf'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. yaffled, ppr. yaffling. [< *yaffle*², n.] To transport yaffles of fish: as, "now, boys, go to yaffling." [Provincetown, Massachusetts.]

yaffler (yaf'lėr), n. Same as *yaffle*¹. [Prov. Eng.]

yager (yā'gėr), n. [< G. Jäger (= D. jager), a huntsman, < jagen, hunt: see yacht. Cf. Jäger.] 1. Formerly, a member of various bodies of light infantry in the armies of different German recruited largely from foresters, etc.; also, a member of certain special battalions or corps of infantry or cavalry, generally organized as riflemen.—2. Same as jäger.

jagger (jag'ėr), n. [< D. jager, a huntsman, < jagen, hunt: see yacht.] A ranger about the country; a traveling peddler. [Shetland Islands.]

I would take the lad for a jagger, but he has rather over good hantage, and he has no pack. Scott, Pirate, v.

jaguarundi (jag-wa-run'di), n. [Also jaguarondi, jaguarondi; S. Amer.: see jaguar.] A wild cat of Mexico and Central and South America, Felis jaguarundi. This cat is nearly as large as the ocelot, but entirely without spots, in which respect, as well as in its slender form, it resembles the eyra, and has there a musteline rather than a feline aspect. The tail is as long as the body exclusive of the head and neck. The general color is a uniform grizzled brownish-gray, the individual hairs being annulated and tipped with blackish; kittens are more rufous brown. The jaguarundi ranges northward nearly or quite through Mexico, and of late years has generally been included among the mammals of the United States.

yah (yä), interj. An interjection of disgust.

Yahoo (yä-hö'), n. [A made name, prob. meant to suggest disgust; cf. yah, an interj. of disgust.] 1. A name given by Swift, in "Gulliver's Travels," to a feigned race of brutes having the form of man and all his degrading passions. They are placed in contrast with the Houyhnhnms, or horses endowed with reason, the whole being designed as a satire on the human race.

He [the Houyhnhnm] was extremely curious to know "from what part of the country I came, and how I was taught to imitate a rational creature; because the Yahoos (whom he saw I exactly resembled in my head, hands, and face, that were only visible), with some appearance of cunning, and the strongest disposition to mischief, were observed to be the most untractable of all brutes."

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iv. 3.

Hence—2. [l. c.] A rough, brutal, uncouth character.

A yahoo of a stable-boy.

Greene, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 10. (Davies.)

"What sort of fellow is he? . . . A Yahoo, I suppose." "Not at all. He is a capital fellow, a perfect gentleman." H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, iv.

3. [l. c.] A greenhorn; a back-country lout. Bartlett. [Southwestern U. S.]

Yahveh (yä-vā'), n. Same as Jehovah.

Yahvist (yä'vist), n. Same as Jehovist.

Yahvistic (yä-vis'tik), a. Same as Jehovistic.

yaip, v. i. Same as yasp[2].

yak (yak), n. [< Tibetan gyak.] The wild ox of Tibet, Poephagus grunniens, or any of its domesticated varieties; the grunting ox. The yak is a remarkable instance of the development of the pelage under climatic influences. The modification is like that seen in the musk-ox of arctic regions, Ovibos moschatus, though altitude has done for the yak what has resulted from latitude in the case of the musk-ox. The body is covered with very long hair hanging from the shoulders, sides, and hips nearly to the ground, and the tail bears a bushy brush of long hairs. The wild animal, which inhabits the mountains of Tibet about the snow-line and descends into the valleys in winter, is of a blackish color, the back is humped; and the general form is not unlike that of the bison, though the long hair gives the animal a different appearance. The actual relationships of the yak are with the humped Asiatic cattle of which the zebu is the best-known domesticated stock. The yak is of great economic importance to the Tibetans, and has been domesticated. In this state it sports in many color-variations, like other cattle. It is used as a beast of burden, makes excellent beef, and yields rich milk and butter; the long silky hair is spun and woven for many fabrics. The tails when mounted furnish the fly-whippers or chowries much used in India, and they are also dyed in various colors as decorations and ceremonial insignia. The elephant-headed god Ganesa is usually represented as flourishing the cheery with his trunk over the heads of various personages of the Hindu pantheon. Yaks have often been taken to Europe, where they are kept in menageries, and have repeatedly been bred in confinement. The yak crosses easily with some other cattle, producing various mixed breeds. See also cut under Artiodactyla.—Yak lace, a heavy and rather coarse lace made from the silky hair of the yak: at one time much used for trimming other garments.

Yak (Poephagus grunniens).

yakin (yä'kin), n. A large Himalayan antelope, Budorcas taxicolor, inhabiting high mountain-ranges. The relationships of the yakin are with the rupicaprine and nemorhedine antelopes, as the European chamois, the Asiatic gorals, and the American Rocky Mountain goat.

yakopu (yak'ō-pö), n. A weapon like the kuttar, used by the people of Java and Sumatra.

yaksha (yak'shä), n. [Skt.] In Hindu myth., one of a class of demigods who attend Kuvera, the god of riches, and guard his treasures.

Yakut (ya-köt'), n. A member of a people of Turkish or mixed Turkish origin, dwelling in Siberia in the neighborhood of the Lena.

yald[1] (yäld), a. Same as geld[1].

yald[2], yauld (yäld), a. [Prob. var. of yald*, < Icel. gildr = Sw. Dan. gild, stout, brawny, of full size.] Supple; active; athletic. [Scotch.]

Bein' yald and stout, he wherlit about,
And kluve his beid in-twaine.
Rigg, Mountain Bard, p. 43. (Jamieson.)

Yale lock. See lock[1].

yallow (yal'ō), a. A dialectal variant of yellow. George Eliot, Silas Marner, xi.

yam (yam), n. [= F. igname, < Sp. ignama, iguame, iname, ñame = Pg. inhame (NL. inhame), < African (in Pg. rendering) inhame, yam. The Malay name is ubi, Javanese uwi, E. Ind. oedis (Müller), whence G. ubse-wurzel, yam.] 1. A tuberous root of a plant of the genus Dioscorea, particularly if belonging to one of numerous species cultivated for their esculent roots; also, such a plant itself. The plant is commonly a slender twining high-climbing vine, in some species prickly, the root is fleshy, often very large, sometimes a shapeless mass sometimes long and cylindraceous, varying in color from white through purple to nearly black. The yam is propagated by cuttings from the root, or also in some species by axillary bulblets. The root contains a large amount of starch, sometimes 25 per cent., is hence highly nutritious, and in tropical lands largely takes the place of the potato of temperate climates. It lacks, however, the dry mealiness of the potato, and is on the whole rather coarse and not as a rule highly esteemed by people of European races. It is cooked by baking or boiling, and in the West Indies is sometimes converted into a meal used for making cakes and puddings. D. sativa is an ordinary species (the hoi of the Hawaiians) with unarmed stem and an acrid root which requires soaking before boiling, it is a profitable source of starch. D. alata the red or white yam, the uzi of the Fiji Islands, has a winged, not prickly stem supported in culture by reeds, its tubers attain sometimes a length of 8 feet and a weight of 100 pounds. D. aculeata, the karoo of the Fijis, has prickly stems not requiring support. D. Batatas, the Chinese or Japanese yam, is hardy in temperate climates, and excited considerable interest in Europe and America at the time of the potato-rot, as a possible substitute for that crop. The tuber is pure white within, of a flaky consistency, and of a taste agreeable to many. It grows 3 feet deep, however, enlarging somewhat toward the bottom, hence is very difficult to gather. D. sativa also is hardy in the southern United States, but the true yam is there little cultivated. (See def. 2.) These species present many varieties, and various other species are more or less cultivated.

Iron-bird (male Plant of Yam (Dioscorea alata).

The negro yams are a yearly crop, but the white yams will last in the ground for several years.

T. Roughley, Jamaica Planter's Guide (1823), p. 317.

2. By transference, a variety of the sweet-potato. [Southern U. S.]

De yams will grow, de cotton blow
We'll hab de rice an' corn.
Whittier, Song of the Negro Boatmen.

3. Any plant of the order Dioscoreaceæ. Lindley. Chinese yam See def. 1. Common or cultivated yam, Dioscorea sativa. Japanese yam. See def. 1, and cut under Dioscorea. Kawai yam. See def. 1. Ooyala yam, Dioscorea bonariensis of the East Indies. Port Moniz yam. See Tamus. Red yam. See def. 1. Tivoli yam, Dioscorea tamoidea, of India and the Malayan and Pacific Islands. Uvi yam. See def. 1. White yam. See def. 1. Wild yam, any native species of yam. Specifically (a) The wild yam root, Dioscorea villosa, of North America, a delicate and pretty climbing vine extending north to Canada. The root is esteemed as eclectic a cure for bilious colic, and is used by the southern negroes against rheumatism: hence called colic root and rheumatism root. (b) See Hypoxis. Winged yam, Dioscorea alata. Yam family, the plant-order Dioscoreaceæ.

Yama (yam'ä), n. [Skt. Yama, prob. lit. 'the twin.'] In early Hindu myth., the first mortal, son of the sun (Vivasvant) and progenitor of the human race, who went first to the other world, and ruled as king of those who followed him thither; later, the god of departed spirits and the appointed judge and punisher of the dead. He is in modern Hindu art generally represented as crowned and seated on a buffalo, which he guides by the horns. He is four-armed, and of austere countenance. In one hand he holds a noose, in another a mouse which is used to draw out of the bodies of men the souls which are doomed to appear before his judgment-seat. His garments are of the color of fire, his skin is of a bluish green.

yamadou (yam'a-dö), n. An oil obtained from the tallow-nutmeg. Myristica sebifera. See nutmeg, 2.

yama-mai (yam'ä-mi'), n. [NL. (Guérin-Méneville, 1861), < Jap. yama-mai, lit. 'worm of the mountains.'] A large bombycid moth, whose larva feeds on the oak Quercus serrata in Japan, and furnishes silk of excellent quality which has long been utilized in the manufacture of the heavier native silk fabrics. The worm has been reared in Europe and in the United States, but has not been commercially successful in those countries. See silkworm, 1.

yam-bean (yam'bēn), n. A leguminous plant, Pachyrrhizus tuberosus and P. angulatus, widely cultivated in the tropics for its pods, which are used as a vegetable, and for its tubers, which are edible cooked when young, and furnish in large quantity a starch said to be fully equal to arrow-root. The tubers are borne at intervals along the cord-like roots. P. tuberosus has often been included in P. angulatus, but is for cultural purposes at least distinct, having a much larger pod free from irritating hairs. In the Fiji Islands P. angulatus is called yaka or ea yaka; in English it has been distinguished from P. tuberosus as the short-podded yam-bean.

yammer (yam'ėr), v. i. [Also yaumer, yamer; < ME. yameren, yomeren, yemeren, < AS. geomeran (= OHG. jamaran, MHG. jämeren, G. jammern), lament, groan, < géomor, sad, mournful (= OS. gamar = OHG. jamar, sad, > OHG. jamar, MHG. jämer, G. jammer, lamentation, misery).] 1. To lament; wail; shriek; yell; cry aloud; whimper loudly; whine. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

As for the White Maiden of Avenel, she is seen to yammer and wail before any one 'em dies. Scott, Monastery, iv.

"The child is doing as well as possible," said Miss Grizzy, "To be sure it does yammer constantly—that can't be denied." Miss Ferrier, Marriage, xviii.

2. To yearn; desire. [Prov. Eng.]

I yammer to hear how things turned out.
Tim Bobbin, in Mackay's Lost Beauties of the English Language.

yammering (yam'ėr-ing), n. [Also yaumering; verbal n. of yammer, v.] A crying, whining, or grumbling. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

They ill thrawn folk . . . would beat the congregation to pieces wi' their bickerings and yammerings.
W. Black, In Far Lochaber, ix.

yammerly (yam'ėr-li), adv. [< ME. yamerly, yomerly, < AS. geomorlice*, < geomorlic, lamentable, < geomor, sad: see yammer, v.] Piteously. Gawayne.

yamp (yamp), n. [N. Amer. Ind.] An umbelliferous plant, Carum Gairdneri, found from California to Wyoming and Washington; doubtless, also, C. Kellogii, of central California. These plants have fascicled tuberous roots, which are an important food of the Indians.

yamph (yamf), v. i. [Cf. yaff, yaup.] To bark continuously. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

yamun (ya'mun), n. [Chinese, < ya, the marquee of a general, + mun, a two-leaved door, a gate.] The official and private residence of a Chinese mandarin who holds a seal; the place where a mandarin transacts the business of the region or department under his care, and where he lives; a mandarin's office, court, residence, etc.

The three yamuns at our feet with their quaint towers, grand old trees, flags, and the broad Pearl River on the other side of the city, are the only elements of positive beauty in the landscape.
Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, II. xxii.

Tsung li yamun, the bureau or department of the Chinese government which attends to foreign affairs; the Chinese "Foreign Office." It was established in 1861, is composed of eleven members, and forms the channel of communication between the foreign ministers and the throne. Giles.

yang (yang), v. i. [Imitative.] To cry as the wild geese; honk.

yang[2] (yang), n. [< yang, v.] The cry of the wild geese; a honk.

yang-kin (yang'kin'), n. [Chinese.] A Chinese dulcimer.

yank[1] (yangk), v. [Perhaps a nasalized form of yark, found in sense of 'talk fast', prob. orig. move quickly, < Sw. dial. jakka, rove about, a secondary form of Icel. jaga, move about, or Sw. jaga = Dan. jage, hunt, chase, hurry, = D.

jagen = G. jagen, hunt: see yacht. The Sw. Dan. sense 'hunt' appears to be due to G., and the word does not seem to be old in Scand., or to exist in AS., etc. Yank has prob. been confused in part, as to meaning, with yark, yerk; and the whole series to which it belongs is dialectal, and without early record.] I. intrans. 1. To be in active motion; move or work quickly; bustle. Imp. Dict.—2. To talk fast or constantly; scold; nag. Imp. Dict.

II. trans. To move, carry, bring, take, etc., with a sudden jerk or jerking motion: usually with along, over, or out: as, to yank a fish out of the water. [Colloq.]

I don't see the fun of being yanked all over the United States in the middle of August.
C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 201.

When the butt of a room goes on the drink, or takes to moping by himself, measures are necessary to yank him out of himself. R. Kipling, Only a Subaltern.

I guess th' best thing we can do is t' yank our traps out of that cave an' get started again.
T. A. Janvier, Aztec Treasure-house, x.

yank[1] (yangk), n. [< yank[1], v.] 1. A quick, sharp stroke; a buffet. [Scotch.]

I took up my nelve an' gae him a yank on the haffat tell I gart his bit brass cap rattle against the wa'.
Hogg, Browdie of Badnock, xiv.

2. A jerk or twitch. [Colloq., U. S.]—3. pl. Leggings or long gaiters worn in England by agricultural laborers. Halliwell.

Yank[2] (yangk), n. [An abbr. of Yankee.] A Yankee. [Colloq. or vulgar.]

"The Yank" or the equally grovelling "nigger," one or the other, which we do not know, has corrupted "Pollard of Richmond." The Nation, IV. 280.

[The word acquired during the war of the rebellion wide currency as a nickname of contemptuous epithet among the Confederates for a Union soldier, the Confederates themselves being in like spirit dubbed Johnnies or Rebs by the Union soldiers.]

yankee[1]† (yang'kē), a. [A dubious word, in spelling prob. conformed to Yankee[2], being, if a genuine word, prob. for yankie* or yanky*, smart, active (as a noun, Sc. yankie, a sharp, clever, forward woman), < yank[1] + -ee[1] or -y[1], equiv. to yanking, active: see yanking. Cf. Yankee[2].] Spanking; excellent. Also used adverbially.

You may wish to know the origin of the term Yankee. Take the best account of it which your friend can procure. It was a cant, favorite word with farmer Jonathan Hastings, of Cambridge, about 1713. Two aged ministers, who were at the college in that town have told me they remembered it to have been then in use among the students, but had no recollection of it before that period. The inventor used it to express excellency. A Yankee good horse, or Yankee cider and the like, were an excellent good horse and excellent cider.
Dr. W. Gordon Hist. Amer. War (ed. 1789), I. 324.

Yankee[2] (yang'kē), n. and a. [Formerly also Yanky and Yanky* (in pl. Yankies); origin uncertain. (a) According to a common statement, Yankee, as used in the plural Yankees, is a var. of Yengees or Yenghees, a name said to have been given by the Massachusetts Indians to the English colonists, being, it is supposed, an Indian corruption of the E. word English, or, as some think, of the F. Anglais, English (in the latter case the statement must refer to the Indians of Canada, the only ones in contact with the French). The word is said to have been adopted by the Dutch on the Hudson, who applied it to the people of New England (it is said, "in contempt," but prob. not more in contempt than any other designation of them). (b) In another view, the name Yankee was derived from the adj. yankee as given under yankee[1]. Some connect yankee[1] with the preceding theory by assuming it to be a corruption of the Indian Yengees or Yenkees or Yankees as applied to the English, as if 'English' articles meant necessarily 'excellent' articles. Others identify Yankee[2] with yankee[1], 'excellent, smart'; but this sense does not seem to have been common, if existent, in New England use; and the theory is otherwise untenable.] I. n. 1. A citizen of New England.

From meanness first this Portsmouth Yankey rose,
And still to meanness all his conduct flows.
Impression, A Poem by an American (Boston, 1776).
[(Webster)]

When Yankees, skill'd in martial rule,
First put the British troops to school.
Trumbull, McFingal, i.

Yankies . . . a term, formerly of derision, but now merely of distinction, given to the people of the four eastern States. Trumbull's W. Vocal [with Eng. ed.], Boston's Gloss.

For ourselves, now, we do not entertain a doubt that the sobriquet of Yankee, which is in every man's mouth, and of which the derivation appears to us, also all our philologists, is nothing but a slight corruption of the word "Vengeese," the term applied to the "English" by the tribes of whom they first became known. We have no other authority for this derivation than conjecture, and no assertions that are purely our own; but it is no very plausible as almost to carry conviction of itself.
J. F. Cooper, Oak Openings, p. 28.

Yankee, in the American use, does not mean a citizen of the United States as opposed to a foreigner, but a citizen of the Northern New England States (Massachusetts, Connecticut, &c.), opposed to a Virginian, a Kentuckian, &c.
De Quincey, Style, Note 1.

We have the present Yankee, full of expedients, half-master of all trades, inventive in all but the beautiful, full of shifts, not yet capable of comfort.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser., Int.

2. By extension, a native of the United States. [Chiefly a European use.]—3. A soldier of the Federal armies: so called by the Confederates during the war of secession. See Yank[2].—4. A glass of whisky sweetened with molasses. Bartlett. [New Eng.] [Colloq. in all uses.]

II. a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the Yankees: as, Yankee smartness or invention; Yankee notions.

Codfish, tinware, apple-brandy, Weathersfield onions, wooden bowls, and other articles of Yankee barter.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 276.

Examine him outside and in, I'd thank ye, Morals, Parisian manners, perfect Yankee.
Lord Houghton, A Knock at the Door (quoted in [N. and Q., 7th ser., XI. 106).

Ez of we could measure stupendjous events
By the low Yankee stan'ard o' dollars and cents.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., iv.

Yankee nation, the United States. [Humorous.] — Yankee notions. See notion.

Yankeedom (yang'kē-dum), n. [< Yankee[2] + -dom.] 1. The region inhabited by Yankees, in any sense of that word.

Located as it is on the confines of Egypt and of Yankeedom in this State [Illinois], it has done a good work in both sections. The Independent, quoted in Bartlett's [Americanisms, p. 768.

2. Yankees collectively considered.

Up the turning via Gallica they climb, to the Basilica at the top, . . . hackneyed as only Yankeedom and Cockneydom, rushing hand in hand through all earth's sacred nesses, can hackney. Rhoda Broughton, Alas, viii.

Yankee-Doodle† (yang'kē-dō'dl), n. A Yankee: a humorous use, from a popular air so named. [Rare.]

I might have withheld these political noodles
From knocking their heads against hot Yankee Doodles.
Moore, Parody of a Celebrated Letter.

Yankeefied (yang'kē-fid), a. [< Yankee[2] + -fy + -ed[2].] Having the appearance or manner of a Yankee; characteristic of a Yankee. [Colloq.]

The Colonel whittled away at a bit of stick in the most Yankeefied way possible.
A Stray Yankee in Texas, p. 113. (Bartlett.)

Yankee-gang (yang'kē-gang), n. An arrangement in a sawmill (in Canada) adapted for logs of 21 inches or less in diameter. It consists of two sets of gang saws, having parallel ways in the immediate vicinity of each other. One is the slabbing-gang, which reduces the log to a balk and slab boards. The balk is then shifted to the stock gang, which rips it into lumber. E. H. Knight.

Yankeeism (yang'kē-izm), n. [< Yankee[2] + -ism.] 1. Yankee ways or characteristics.

"I confess I had feared that Lily's impetuous ways — her love of 'Flamboyant Yankeeism,' Mr Gore Thompson called it," suggested Mrs. Clay. "We are from the South west originally," rather stiffly answered Mrs Floyd-Curtis, who took Yankeeism to cover the reproach of a New England birthplace.
Mrs. Burton Harrison, The Anglomaniacs, i.

2. A location or a practice characteristic of Yankees, specifically of the inhabitants of New England.

Cussedness . . . and cuss, . . . in such phrases as "He done it out o' pure cussedness," and "He is a natural cuss," have been commonly thought Yankeeisms. . . . But neither is our own. Lowell Biglow Papers 2d ser., Int.

yanker (yang'kėr), n. [< yank[1] + -er[1], in def. 3 cf. D. janker, a bawler, brawler, lit. yelper, < janken, yelp, bark.] 1. A smart blow.—2. A great falsehood; a plumper. [Scotch.]

"Ay, billy, that is a yanker," said Tam aside. "When ane is gaun to tell a lie, there's nae thing like telling a plumper at ance."
Hogg, Three Perils of Man, I. 330. (Jamieson.)

3. Same as yanker, 2. Imp. Dict.

yankie (yang'ki), n. [< yank[1] + -ie[1], -y[1]. Cf. yanker, 1.] 1. A sharp, forward, clever woman. [Scotch.]—2. One who speaks or scolds incessantly. Imp. Dict.

yanking (yang'king), p. a. [Ppr. of yank[1], v.] 1. Active; pushing; thoroughgoing. [Scotch.]

"Ye'll be the Captain, then, after a'?" "No," said the traveller, . . . "Well, I canna say but I am glad o' that. . . . He is the most yanking way of enquiring English at every word." Scott, St. Ronan's Well, ii.

2. Jerking; pulling. [U. S.]

That pony Emery Ann had had a yanking old horse and a most friendly uncomfortable saddle, . . . the wonder was that she had stayed on at all.
Mrs. Whitney, Sights and Insights, xxix.

yanky† (yang'ki), n.; pl. yankies (-kiz). A Dutch craft of a kind not definitely known.

Proceed with thy story in a direct course, without sailing like a Dutch yanky.
Smollett, Sir L. Greaves, iii. (Davies.)

yanolite (yan'ō-lit), n. Same as cancrinite.

yao-pien (yäō'pyen'), n. [Chinese, lit. 'changed in the kiln'; yao, kiln, furnace, + pien, change, transform.] In ceram., a Chinese vessel which, from accident, intentional over-firing, or the like, has lost the appearance it would have had under ordinary circumstances, the colors being changed, fused together, etc., by too great heat, or unequally fused on the different faces. Many of the most esteemed pieces of porcelain owe their unusual color, or their clouding, mottling, or the like, to accidents or irregularities of manufacture of this nature.

yaourt (yourt), n. [< Turk. yoghurt.] A kind of thickened fermented liquor made by the Turks of milk curdled in a special way.

yap[1] (yap), v. i.; pret. and pp. yapped, ppr. yapping. [Prob. imitative. Cf. yaff, yaff[2], and yaup[1].] To yelp or bark. [Prov. Eng.]

Mr. Transome appeared with a face of feeble delight, playing horse to little Harry, who roared and flogged behind him, while Moro yapped in a puppy voice at their heels. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xiii.

Presently he [the dog] yapped, as if in hot chase of a rabbit. R. D. Blackmore, Kit and Kitty, xxiv.

yap[1] (yap), n. [< yap[1], v.] 1. A yelp, as of a dog.—2. A cur. [Prov. Eng.]

yap[2] (yap), a. A dialectal form of yep. Halliwell.

yap[3], v. i. See yaup[2].

yape (yāp), v. i. See yaup[2].

yaply (yap'li), adv. A dialectal form of yeply.

yapok, yapock (yap'ok), n. [Also yapack, oyapock; so named from the river Oyapok, between French Guiana and Brazil.] The South American water-opossum, Chironectes variegatus. It is one of the smaller opossums, rather larger than the hog-rat, with large naked ears, long scaly tail, and handsomely variegated fur. It is a good swimmer, resembles the otter in habits, and feeds on fish and other aquatic animals.

Yapok (Arctopeta variegata).

yapon (yā'pon), n. [Also yaupon, yupon; prob. of Amer. Ind. origin.] An evergreen shrub or small tree of the holly kind, Ilex vomitoria, better known as I. Cassine, found from Virginia around the coast to Texas, thence to Arkansas. It is generally a tall shrub sending up shoots from the ground, and forming dense thickets, but in Texas sometimes assumes a tree-like habit. It bears an abundance of scarlet berries of the size of a pea, and branches covered with these are sent north for winter decoration. Its leaves have an emetic and purgative property, and a decoction of them was the famous black drink of the southern Indians. Its use was both ceremonial and medicinal, and to partake of it large numbers of them went down to the coast every spring. Also called cassena, and Appalachian Carolina, and South Sea tea.

Yapon (Ilex vomitoria).
1, branch with fruits. 2, branch with male flowers.

yappingale, n. Same as yaffingale.

yardage (yär'dāj), n. [< yard[2] + -age.] A dog. Taylor's Glossary of Thirteen Jargons (1709).

yar[1] (yär), v.; pret. and pp. yarred, ppr. yarring. [Also yarr, Sc. yirr; < ME. yarren*, yurren, yurrun, yeorren, < AS. georren, gyrran, gyrrian (= MHG. girren), roar, cry, rattle, chatter.] To snarl; snarl.

Thenne wate itt vpon hit to lythen the houndes, . . . Lende he [the fox] wate garned [hallooed] with yarrande mouthe.

Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1724.

All the dogs were flocking about her, yarring at the retardment of their access to her.

Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, II. xxii. (Davies.)

yar[2], yare[2] (yär, yār). a. [Origin not ascertained.] Sour; brackish. [Prov. Eng.]

yarage (yär'āj), n. [< yare[1] + -age.] Naut., the power of moving or capability of being managed at sea; used with reference to a ship.

To the end that he might, with his light ships, well manned with water-men, turn and environ the galleys of the enemies, the which were heavy of yarage, both for their bigness, as also for lack of water-men to row them.

North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 777.

yarb (yärb), n. A dialectal form of herb.

Her qualifications as white witch were boundless cunning, . . . [and] some skill in yarbs, as she called her simples.

Kingsley, Westward Ho, iv.

yard[1] (yärd), n. [Early mod. E. also yeard; < ME. yerd, gerd, < AS. gyrd, gird, geard, a rod, = OS. gerda = D. garde, a rod, twig, = OHG. gartja, gerta, MHG. G. gerte, a rod, switch; from the more primitive noun, OHG. MHG. gart, a rod, yard, = Goth. gazds, a goad, = Icel. gaddr = AS. gād, E. goad (the AS. gād, if = Goth. gazds, involves an irregular contraction, and may be a diff. word); cf. L. hasta, a spear: see goad, gad[1], and hastate.] 1†. A rod; a stick; a wand; a branch or twig.

The yerd of a tre that is haled adown by mighty strength the bowith redyly the crop adoun.

Chaucer, Boethius, iii. meter 2.

The cros I kalle the heordys [shepherd's] yerde;
Therwith the deuyl a dont he gaf.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 204.

Ther-fore on his yerde skore shalle he [the marshal] Alle messys in halle that seruet be.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 312.

Whan Joseph offeryd his yerde that day,
Anon ryth florth in present
The dad styk do floure ful gay.

Coventry Mysteries, p. 6.

Hence—2†. Rule; direction; correction.

"Hoste," quod he, "I am under your yerde; Ye han of us as now the governance."

Chaucer, Prol. to Clerk's Tale, l. 22.

3. A measuring-rod or -stick of the exact length of 3 feet or 36 imperial inches; a yardstick.

You would not, sir: had I the yeard in hand,
Ide measure your pate for this delusion.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, ed. 1874, II. 40).

4. The fundamental unit of English long measure. The prototype of the British imperial yard (to which the United States Office of Weights and Measures conforms, though without express authority) was legalized in 1855. It is a bar made of a kind of bronze or gun-metal known as Baily's metal. It has a square section of 1 inch on the sides, and is 38 inches long. But at 1 inch from each end a well is drilled into one of its surfaces so that the bottom is in the central plane of the bar, and into the bottom of the well is sunk a gold plug, upon whose flat surface is engraved one of the two defining lines. The yard is defined as the distance between these lines at 62° F., with the understanding that the bar is to be supported in a particular manner, and that the thermometers are to be constructed according to certain rules. The lines are designed to be looked at with the microscopes of a comparator; but they are not so free from blur that their middles can be determined more nearly than to a millionth part of the distance between them. This standard was made after the practical destruction of the previous legal prototype, that of 1760, in the burning of the Houses of Parliament, October 16th, 1834, and was legalized as a new prototype because its length agreed with what had been recognized in 1819 by the Standards Commission as the scientific standard yard—namely, with a certain scale, or rather with Captain Kater's measures of that scale, known as Shuckburgh's scale having been made in 1794 by Troughton for Sir George Shuckburgh, who in his comparisons of it first introduced the comparator with microscopes. This scale was a copy of another which had been made for the Royal Society in 1742, from which the standard of 1760 was copied. This was a bar having upon one side two gold studs, each with a dot pricked upon it; and it was used by bringing the points of a beam-compass into these dots, which had thus soon become badly worn. Older standards still extant are those of Queen Elizabeth and of Henry VII. The latter is shorter than the present yard by one thousandth part of its length, or about $\frac{1}{25}$ of an inch. It is said that the yard was made to be of the length of Henry I.'s arm—doubtless a fable, even if believed by that monarch himself. Customary units are not changed so easily. Yet it is true that there appear to be no traces in the measures of buildings earlier than the twelfth century of the use of a yard equal to ours, nor of its subdivisions; while in the later Norman and Gothic structures a foot equal to the third of our yard has often clearly been used. But the Gothic architects of England more usually employed a foot of 13½ modern inches, a unit probably derived from France; and the oldest works show a foot of 12½ modern inches, no doubt the old Saxon foot, agreeing very nearly with the Rhineland foot of modern Germany. Some British remains, as Stonehenge, were evidently constructed with Roman measures. The Standards Commission of 1819 reported that 37 inches of cloth were frequently given for each yard, which is almost precisely Rhenish measure. They also found local yards of 38 and 40 inches. As a cloth measure, the yard is divided into 4 quarters = 16 nails (See cloth-measure, under measure.) A square yard contains 9 square feet, and a cubic yard 27 cubic feet. Contracted yd.

A good oke staffe, a yard and a halfe,
Each one had in his hande.

Robin Hood and the Poddlers (Child's Ballads, V. 244).

That there might be no Abuse in Measures, he [Henry I.] ordained a Measure made by the Length of his own Arm, which is called a Yard.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 38.

5. Naut., a long cylindrical spar having a rounded taper toward each end, slung crosswise to a mast and used for suspending certain of the sails called either square or lateen sails according as the yard is suspended at right angles or obliquely. Yards have sheave holes near their extremities for the sheets reeving through. Either end of a yard, or rather that part of it which is outside the sheave hole, is called the yard arm; the quarter of a yard is about half-way between the sheave hole and the slings. Going upward from the deck, the yards are known as the lower yards, topsail, topgallant-, and royal yards, except where double topsails are used, when the topsail-yard is replaced by the lower and upper topsail-yards. Lower yards and topsail yards are sometimes made of iron, and hollow. See cuts at sloop, schooner, cockscomb, and ship.

I boarded the king's ship; . . . on the topmast,
The yards, and bowsprit would I flame.

Mak., Tempest, I. 2. 200.

Three new topsails, . . . with steps and trapping lines, were bent to the yards, close-reefed, sheeted home, and hoisted.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 200.

6. A long piece of timber, as a rafter. Oxford Glossary.—7. In her., a bearing representing a staff or wand divided into equal parts, as if for a measure. —8. The virile member; the penis.

After-yards (naut.), the yards on the mainmast and mizzenmast. Golden Yard or Yard and Ell, a popular name of the three stars in the belt of Orion. Slings of a yard. See sling[1]. To man the yards, to place men on the yards of a ship: a form of saluting a distinguished person visiting the vessel. They stand on the yards, each with his inner arm over the life line, and the other arm outstretched to the shoulder of the man next him. To point the yards of a vessel. See point. To sling the yards, to traverse a yard, to trim the yards. See the verbs. With spur and yard†. See spur. Yard of ale, beer, or wine. (a) A slender glass, a yard in length, and capable of holding a pint. Hence (b) A pint of ale, beer, or wine served in a yard glass and usually drunk for amusement or on a wager on account of the likelihood of spilling or choking. Compare ale-yard. [Prov. Eng.]

At the annual Vinis, or feast, of the ancient corporation of Hanley (Staffordshire), the initiation of each member, in 1785, consisted in his swearing fealty to the body, and drinking a yard of ale—i. e., a pint of port or sherry out of a glass one yard in length.

N. and Q., 4th ser., X. 49.

Yard of flannel. Same as cop top. Yard of land. Same as yard land.

yard[1] (yärd), v. t. [< yard[1], n.; with ref. to the yard-staves of office carried by the coroner.] To summon for hiring: a process formerly used in the Isle of Man, and executed by the coroner of the shieading or district on behalf of the deemsters and others entitled to a priority of choice of the servants at a fair or market.

An instruction to the Farmers, Innkeepers, and other officers who should have the Benefit of yarded Servants.

Statute (1657), quoted in Kilt to Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 4.6.

yard[2] (yärd), n. [Also dial. (Sc.) yaird, < ME. yerd, yerd, < AS. geard, an inclosure, court, yard, = D. gaard, a garden, = OHG. gart, a circle, ring, = Icel. garthr, an inclosure, yard (> E. garth), = Dan. gaard, a yard, court, farm, = Norw. gaard, a yard, farm, = Sw. gård, a yard; also in a weak form, OS. gardo = OFries. garda = OHG. garto, MHG. garte, G. garten, garden, = Goth. gards, inclosure, stall, = L. hortus, a garden, = Gr. χόρτος, a yard, court, = Boss. gorodu, a town (as in Novgorod, etc.); orig. 'an inclosure,' from the verb represented by gird: see gird[2]. Cf. cohort, court. The word exists disguised in orchard. From the G. or LG. forms, through OF., comes also E. guard, and from the Scand., E. garth.] 1. A piece of inclosed ground of small or moderate size; particularly, a piece of ground inclosing or adjoining a house or other building, or inclosed by it: as, a front yard; a court-yard, a dooryard, a churchyard; an inn-yard, a barn-yard; a vineyard.

A col-fox . . . thurghout the hegges breast
Into the yerd ther Chauntecleer the faire
Was wont, and eek hise wyves, to repaire.

Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 269.

I found her seated in a little back parlor, the window of which looked out upon a yard about eight feet square, laid out as a flower-garden.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 147.

In the precincts of the chapel-yard,
Among the knightly brasses of the graves,

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

Most of the houses [at Concord, Mass.], especially the newer ones, stand in their own well kept grounds or yards, facing the road, with no fence or hedge to sever them from the highway.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 673.

2. An inclosure within which any work or business is carried on: as, a brick-yard; a wood-yard; a tan-yard; a dock-yard, a stock-yard; a navy-yard.

The yards, great fenced in portions of the place opening into one another, the largest covering a few acres, conveying into smaller and smaller pens which finally permit only one sheep abreast to pass up the narrow lane, at the top of which stands a swing gate and two series of pens distinct from one another.

Percy Clarke, The New Chum in Australia, p. 174.

3. In railway usage, the space or tract adjacent to a railway station or terminus, which is used for the switching or making up of trains, the accommodation of rolling-stock, and similar purposes. It includes all sidings and roundhouses, etc., and, at way-stations, extends from the most distant switch or signal post in one direction of the line to the most distant signals in the opposite direction.

4. A garden; now, chiefly, a kitchen- or cottage-garden; as, a kale-yard. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Vnto auc pleasand ground cumin ar they, . . .
The lusty orcharis and the haleasm yardis
Of happy saulis and wele fortunate.

Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 187.

He [Christ] said himself, quhen he was in the yaird afore he was takin, Tibitia est animam meu usque mortis.

Abp. Hamilton, Catechism (1552), fol. 102 b. (Jamieson.)

Lang syne, in Eden's bonnie yard,
When youthfu' lovers first were pair'd.

Burns, Address to the Deil.

5. The winter pasture or browsing-ground of moose and deer; a moose-yard. [U. S. and Canada.]—6. A measure of land in England, varying locally: in Buckinghamshire, formerly, 28 to 40 acres; in Wiltshire, a quarter of an acre. Compare yard-land.

yard[2] (yärd), v. [< yard[2], n.] I. trans. To put into or inclose in a yard; shut up in a yard, as cattle: as, to yard cows.

II. intrans. 1. To resort to winter pastures: said of moose and deer. [U. S.]

If [the caribou] never yards in winter as do the deer and moose, it does it show the same fondness for a given locality.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 603.

2. To shoot deer in their winter yards. [Local, U. S.]

'Pot hunters' have other methods of shooting the Adirondack deer, such as jacking and establishing salt licks. In the former case, the deer are traced to their winter breeding grounds and are then shot down.

Tribune Book of Sports, p. 492.

yardage (yär'dāj), n. [< yard[2] + -age.] 1. The use or convenience of a yard or inclosure, as in receiving, hiding, or unloading cattle, etc., from railroad-cars.—2. The charge made for such use or convenience.—3. In coal mining, cutting coal at so much per yard or fathom.

yard-arm (yärd'ärm), n. See yard[1], n., 5.—Yard-arm and yard-arm, the situation of two ships lying alongside of each other so near that their yard-arms cross or touch. Compare block and block, under block.

The Sailing engaged the Prince yard arm and yard-arm three glasses and a half, but was obliged to sheer off for want of powder.

Johnson, Idler, No. 7.

yardel (yär'del), n. [< yard[1].] A yard measure. [Provincial.]

I am glad you . . . disdain measuring lines like linen by a yardel.

W. Taylor, 1804 (Robberds's Memoir, I. 493). (Davies.)

yard-grass (yärd'gras), n. Same as witch-grass, 2.

yardkeep (yärd'kēp), n. Same as yarekeep.

yard-land (yärd'land), n. The area of land held by a tenant in villeinage in early English manors, consisting usually of an aggregate of some 30 strips in the open fields with a messuage in the village. In some counties it was 15 acres, in others 20 or 24, and even 40 acres. See holding, 3 (a). Also yard of land.

Now I am come to my living which is ten yard land and a house, and there is never a yard land in our field but is as well worth ten pounds a year as a thief is worth a halter.

Steele, Spectator, No. 488.

The number of farmers had much diminished, and some had as much as three yard lands (a yard land is thirty acres).

Nineteenth Century, XII. 888.

A very simple man . . . obtained the reversion of a messuage in Alston Sutton, Somersetshire, containing [illegible] acres of land, 30 acres of arable, 1 yard-land, and a meadow.

H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, 46.

yard-limit (yärd'lim'it), n. On a railway, the extreme end of the yard-space occupied by sidings and switches: usually indicated by a sign beside the track.

yardman (yärd'man), n.; pl. yardmen (-men). 1. The laborer who has the special care of a farm-yard. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. One who is employed in a railway-yard under the yard-master, to assist in switching cars and making up trains. Also yardsman.

Laborers (including yardmen and stokers). Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXV. 432.

yard-master (yärd'mas'tėr), n. A man employed under the manager of a railway to superintend a terminal yard, whose duty it is to see to the proper switching and distribution of cars coming into the yard, and to the proper making up of trains to be sent out of the yard.

yard-measure (yärd'mezh'ūr), n. A measure 3 feet in length, made of either rigid or flexible material.

yard-rope (yärd'rōp), n. Naut., a rope leading through a block or sheave at the masthead to send a topgallant- or royal-yard up or down.

yard-slings (yärd'slingz), n. pl. Short lengths of chain extending from the middle of a lower yard to the lower masthead, to aid in supporting the weight of the yard.

yardsman (yärdz'man), n. Same as yardman, 2.

yardstick (yärd'stik), n. 1. A stick or rod exactly 3 feet long, generally marked with subdivisions, as quarters and eighths of the yard on the one side, and inches, or perhaps feet and inches, on the other. See yard[1], n., 3, 4.

The yardstick is divided in its practical use into halves, quarters, eighths, etc., by successive bisections. Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 423.

Let the yardstick dispute heraldic honors with the sword G. W. Curtis, Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 147

Hence—2. Figuratively, a standard of measurement in general.

Senator Thurman was content to measure the Bland bill with the yard stick of the constitutional lawyer, and, finding full measure by that standard, to give it his approval. N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 507 yard-tackle (yärd'tak'l), n. A large tackle used on the lower yards, in connection with the stay-tackles, for getting the boom boats in and out, purchasing anchors, etc. Luce, Seamanship, p. 77.

yard-wand (yärd'wond), n. 1. A yardstick.

The smooth-faced snub-nosed rogue would leap from his counter and till,
And strike, if he could, were it but with his cheating yardwand, home. Tennyson, Maud, I. 12

2. [cap.] See Orion, 1.

yare[1] (yär), a. [< ME. gare, yare, < AS. gearu, geara (gearw-), ready, quick, prompt, = OS. garu = D. gaar, done, dressed (as meat), = OHG. garo (garaw-), MHG. gare (garw-), G. gar, ready, complete, = Icel. görr, gerr, perfect (Goth. not recorded); cf. AS. earu = OS. aru, ready, forms appar. related to the preceding, which must then contain a prefix, namely AS. gearu, < ge-, a collective or generalizing prefix, + earu, ready. For another supposed instance of this prefix absorbed with the following vowel, see go. The prefix is contained also in yeo[2].] 1. Ready; prepared.

Which schip was garest,
To fare forth at that fled.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2720.

This Tereus let make his shippes sare
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2370

But afore ye ha'e your bow weel bent,
And a' your arrows yare,
I will flee till auither tree,
Where I can better fare.
Lord Randal (Child's Ballads, II. 24)

The gunner held his linstock ware,
For welcome shot prepared.
Scott, Marmion, I. 9.

2. Prompt; active; brisk; sprightly.

To offyr loke that ye be yare York Plays, p. 36

I do desire to learn, sir, and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare. Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 61.

The Spaniard was as yare in slipping his chained Grapnalls as Merham was in cutting the tackling. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 53.

3. Easily wrought; answering quickly to the helm; manageable; swift; said of a ship.

The lesser [ship] will come and go, leave and take, and is yare, whereas the other is slow. Raleigh.

Their ships are yare, yours, heavy. Shak., A. and C., iii. 7. 39.

Like a new-trigg'd ship, both tight and yare.
Massinger, Maid of Honour, ii. 2

[Now provincial in all uses.]

yare[1] (yär), adv. [< ME. yare, gare, < AS. gearwe, readily, quickly (= D. gaar = OHG. garo, garawo, MHG. gare, gar, G. gar = Icel. görr-, ger-, görv-, wholly, quite). < gearu, ready: see yare[1], a.] Briskly; dexterously; yarely. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

Oure old lawes as now thei hatte [hate],
And his kepis [keep] yare.
York Plays, p. 213.

Give me my robe, put on my crown: . . .
Yare, yare, good Iras; quick.
Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 286.

yare[2], a. See yar[2].

yarely (yär'li), adv. [< yare[1] + -ly[2].] Readily; dexterously; skilfully.

Speak to the mariners; fall to't, yarely, or we run ourselves aground; bestir, bestir. Shak., Tempest, I. 1. 4.

yark[1] (yärk), v. t. [< ME. yarken, yerken, < AS. gearcian, make ready, prepare, < gearc, ready.] 1. To make ready; prepare. [Prov. Eng.]

But gif we loue hym trewe,
Houre peynys ben in helle,
Yarkyd enere newe
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 151

For wite ze neuere who is worthi, ac god wote who hath nede,
In hym that taketh is the treccherye, if any tresoun wawe,
For he that giueth, ȝeldeth, and yarketh hym to reste.
Piers Plowman (B), vii. 80.

In a night and a day would he haue yarkt vp a Pamphlet as well as in seauen yeare.
Nashe, Strange Newes, quoted in Greene's Works ((ed. Dyce), p. xxxix.

2†. To dispose.

That kepyn the cloyse of this clene burgh,
With ȝup men at the yatis yarkit full thik
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11264.

3†. To set open; open.

They ȝolden hym the brode gate, yarked vp wyde,
& he hem raysed rekenly, & rod ouer the brygge.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 890.

yark[2] (yärk), v. and n. A variant of yerk[2].

Still yarking never leaves until himself he fling
Above the streamful top of the surrounded heap Drayton, Polyolbion, vi. 24.

yarké (yär'ke), n. The black white-headed saki, Pithecia leucocephala, or other member of the same genus.

yarly (yär'li), adv. An obsolete or dialectal form of yarely.

What, is he styrryngе so yarly this mornynge whiche dranke so moche yesterynghte?
Palsgrave, Acolastus (1540). (Halliwell.)

yarm (yärm), n. [< ME. yarm, an outcry: see yarm, v.] An outcry; a noise. [Prov. Eng.]

Such a gomerly yarm of gellyng ther rysed,
Thet-of clatered the cloudes that kryst myȝt haf rawthe Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 971.

yarm (yärm), v. i. [< ME. yarmen, yermen, < AS. gyrman, make a noise, cry out.] 1. To cry out; make a loud unpleasant noise. [Prov. Eng.]

The fend began to crie and yarm.
MS. Lincoln. (Halliwell.)

2. To scold; grumble. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

yarn[1] (yärn), n. [< ME. yarn, garn, gern, < AS. gearn, thread, yarn, = D. garen = OHG. MHG. G. garn = Sw. Dan. garn, thread, net; akin to Icel. gorn, pl. garnir, gut, G. garn, one of the stomachs of a ruminant, Gr. χορδή, a cord, chord: see chord, cord[1], haruspex, etc.] 1. Originally, thread of any kind spun from natural fibers, vegetable or animal, or even mineral; now, more usually, thread prepared for weaving, as distinguished from sewing-thread of any sort. The term is also applied to stout woolen thread used for knitting, etc.

All the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths Shak., Cor., i. 3. 38.

With here and there a tuft of crimson yarn,
Or scarlet crewel, in the cushion fix'd.
Cowper, Task, i. 53.

2. Rope-yarn.—3. A story; a tale: often implying the marvelous or untrue: applied to a long story, with allusion to spinning yarn: as, do you expect us to believe such a yarn as that? a sailors' yarn. [Colloq.]

It is n't everybody that likes those sea-yarns as you do, Eve. No, I'll belay, and let my betters get a word in now. C. Reade, Love Me Little, iii.

Connaught yarn, a soft and elastic yarn produced in Connaught, Ireland. - Cop-yarn, the technical name for yarn as removed from the spindle.—Half-worsted yarn. Same as sweet-, 2. - Haul of yarn. See haul.—Lamb's-wool yarn. See lamb's wool. - Mixed yarn, a yarn in which two or more fibers are combined, as in a poplin, cassinette, tweed, etc. - Norwegian yarn, lamb's-wool yarn from the Scandinavian peninsula. It comes in the natural colors, both black and gray.—Random yarn. See random. - Rogue's yarn. See rogue.—Saxony yarn, a variety of Berlin wool. - Spun yarn, to spin a yarn, to spin street-yarn. See spun.—Turkey yarn. See Angora goat under goat[1].—Worsted yarn, yarn made from long-haired or combed wool, and consisting either entirely of wool, or of wool combined with mohair and alpaca, cotton wool and cotton, or of wool and silk. Fine worsted yarns are called fancy yarns, and are used in the manufacture of fine merino, etc.—Yarn-asserter, a weighing-scale for adjusting the fineness of yarn by the weight of a skein; a yarn-scale.—Yarn-doubling machine, a machine for twisting foreign materials, as feathers, into yarn, to produce unique effects.—Yarn-washing rollers, an apparatus for washing yarn by the agency of a pair of pressure-rollers.

yarn[1] (yärn), v. i. [< yarn[1], n.] To tell stories; spin yarns. [Colloq., and originally nautical.]

The time was the second dog-watch, and all the crew would be forward on the forecastle, yarning and smoking and taking sailors' pleasure. W. C. Russell, Jack's Courtship, xxx.

The first lieutenant is yarning with me under the lee of the bulwarks. Scribner's Mag., VIII. 466.

yarn[2] (yärn), v. t. Same as yearn[3]; a dialectal variant of earn[1].

When rain is a let to thy doonigs abrode,
Set threshers a threshing to late on good lode:
Thresh cleane ye must bid them, though leaser they yarn,
And looking to thrive haue an eie to thy barne.
Tusser, Husbandry, p. 87. (Davies.)

yarn-beam (yärn'bēm), n. In weaving, the beam on which the warp-threads are wound. Also called yarn-roll.

yarn-clearer (yärn'klēr'ėr), n. A fork or pair of blades, set nearly touching, so as to remove burls or unevenness from yarn passing between them. E. H. Knight.

yarn-dresser (yärn'dres'ėr), n. A machine for sizing, drying, and polishing yarns.

yarnent (yär'nen), a. [< yarn[1] + -en[2].] Made of yarn; consisting of yarn.

A paire of yarnen stocks to keepe the colde away,
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 393.

yarn-meter (yärn'mē'tėr), n. In spinning, an attachment to a slubber, fly-frame, spinning-frame, or mule, for measuring the yarns as they are made. It indicates the amount in hanks and decimal parts of a hank.

yarn-printer (yärn'prin'tėr), n. An apparatus for applying color to yarns designed to be used in certain styles of carpets and in tapestry; a yarn-printing machine for distributing the color at regular intervals on the yarn, for the purpose of producing certain decorative patterns in weaving.

yarn-reel (yärn'rēl), n. A reel which winds the yarn from the cop or bobbin.

yarn-roll (yärn'rōl), n. Same as yarn-beam.

yarn-scale (yärn'skāl), n. A scale for weighing certain lengths of yarn.

yarn-spooler (yärn'spō'lėr), n. A winding-machine for filling spools or bobbins for shuttles or other purposes. E. H. Knight.

yarn-tester (yärn'tes'tėr), n. 1. An apparatus for testing the strength of yarns and finding their elastic limit or stretch. The yarn to be tested is placed on two hooks, that are slowly drawn apart by means of a screw till the yarn breaks. A dial indicates the breaking-strain of the yarn in pounds, and another dial records the elastic limit.

2. A device for reeling yarn on a blackened cylinder, to throw it into sharp contrast, for the purpose of examining it for quality, evenness, etc.

yarnut, n. See yernut.

yarn-winder (yärn'win'dėr), n. A yarn-reel or a yarn-spooler.

yarpha (yär'fä), n. A kind of peaty soil; a soil in which peat predominates. [Orkney and Shetland.]

We turn pasture to tillage, and barley into ale, and heather into grosswards, and the poor yarphe, as the benighted creatures here call their peat-bogs, into bonnie grass land. Scott, Pirate, xxiv.

yarr[1] (yär), n. [Perhaps connected with yarrow.] The corn-spurry, Spergula arvensis. See spurry.

yarr[2], v. i. See yar[1].

yarringle (yar'ing-gl), n. [Also yarwiggle; < ME. yarwyngyll*, garwyngyll, garwyndyl, garwyndyl, yarwecyndel; < yarn + windle.] An old-fashioned instrument for winding yarn by hand into balls. Also called a pair of yarringles. Prompt. Parv., pp. 188 and 536. (Halliwell.) [Prov. Eng.]

yarrish (yär'ish), a. [< yar[2] + -ish[1].] Having a rough, dry taste. Bailey. [Prov. Eng.]

yarrow (yar'ō), n. [< ME. yarowe, garowe, yarwe, garce, < AS. gearwe, gearuwe, gearwe, yarrow, = D. gerw = OHG. garawa, garba, MHG. garwe, G. garbe, yarrow; origin unknown. Connection with AS. gearwian, make ready (< gearu, ready, yare), is improbable, on account of the difference of meaning.] The milfoil, Achillea Millefolium. See milfoil, and cut on following page.

a b c

The Upper Part of the Stem with the Heads of Yarrow (Achillea Millefolium). a, head; b, disk flower; c, ray-flower.

yarwhelp (yär'hwelp), n. [Also yarchip, yardkeep: ape quot.] A godwit—either the black-tailed, Limosa agocephala, or the bar-tailed, L. lapponica. [Prov. Eng.]

A yarwhelp, so thought to be named from its note Browne, Birds of Norfolk.

yarwhip (yär'hwip), n. Same as yarwhelp.

yashmak (yush'mak), n. [Ar.] The veil worn by Moslem women in public—that is, when not in their own apartments.

The yashmak is a sort of double veil. The first brought round the forehead and gathered neatly up behind and on the head; the second, pinned on behind to the first, falls sufficiently in front to uncover the eyes.
E. Sartorius, In the Soudan, p. 19.

A bevy of Turkish women, who, in their white yashmaks, shone like a bed of lilies. Scribner's Mag., IV. 276.

yat (yat), n. An obsolete form of gate[1].

yataghan (yat'a-gan), n. [Also ataghan, and formerly attaghan; < Turk. yatagân.] The sword of Mohammedan nations, peculiar in having no guard and no crosspiece, but usually a large and often decorative pommel. A common form has a straight back and the edge carving, first concavely, then convexly, and again backward to the point; another form follows the same general shape, but has the back slightly curved to correspond to the edge; and a third is curved in one direction only, with the edge on the convex side.

Yataghan, North African type.

The pistol and yataghan worn in the belt, a general costume essentially the same as that of the Montenegrin.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 198.

yate (yät), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of gate[1].

And if he chaunce come when I am abroade, Sperre the yate fast, for feare of fraude. Spenser, Shep. Cal., May.

yate-stoop (yät'stöp), n. A gate-post. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

yate-tree (yät'trē), n. A gum-tree, Eucalyptus cornuta, of southwestern Australia, yielding a tough elastic wood considered equal to ash and used for similar purposes. The flat-topped yate-tree, E. occidentalis, is an allied and equally valuable tree of the same region. Von Mueller, Select Extra-trop. Plants.

yaud (yâd), n. A Scotch form of jade[1].

The Murray, on the auld gray yaud,
Wi' winged spurs did ride.
Burns, Election Ballads, iv.

I will contend me with . . . the haunch and the nombles [of venison], and e'en heave up the rest on the old oak-tree yaudes, and come back for it with one of the yaudes. Scott, Monastery, xvii.

yaul, n. See yawl[2].

yauld, a. See yauld[2].

yaumering, n. See yammering.

yaup[1] (yâp), v. and n. 1. A dialectal form of yelp.—2. The blue titmouse, Parus cæruleus, more fully called blue yaup. [Prov. Eng.]

yaup[2] (yâp), v. i. [Also yap, yape, yaip; prob. a particular use of yaje for gape.] To be hungry. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

yaup[3] (yâp), a. [Perhaps for "agaup, var. of agape.] Hungry. [Scotch.] yaupon (yâ'pon), n. Same as yapon.

yave. A Middle English form of gave, preterit of give[1].

yaw[1] (yâ), v. [Cf. Norw. gaga, bend backward, < gagr (= Icel. gagr, bent back); G. dial. gagen, rock, move unsteadily.] I. intrans. To go unsteadily; bend or deviate from a straight course: chiefly nautical.

To divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and yet but yaw neither, in respect of his quick sail. Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 124.

She steered wild, yawed, and decreased in her rate of sailing. Marryat, Frank Mildmay, xx. (Davies.)

The language [German] has such a fatal genius for going stern foremost, for yawing, and for not minding the helm without some ten minutes' notice in advance, that he must be a great sailor indeed who can safely make it the vehicle for anything but imperishable commodities.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 203.

The sun flashed on her streaming ebony black sides as she yawed to the great ocean swell that chased her.
W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, v.

II. trans. To move aside; move from one side to the other. [Rare.]

My eyes' how she [a mare] did pitch! . . .
And yaw'd her head about all sorts of ways.
Hood, Sailor's Apology for Bow-legs.

yaw[1] (yâ), n. [< yaw[1], v.] Naut., a temporary deviation of a ship or vessel from the direct line of her course.

O, the yaws that she will make!
Fletcher and Massinger, A Very Woman, iii. 6.

He did not see a light just before us, which had been hid by the studding-sails from the man at the helm, but by an accidental yaw of the ship was discovered.
B. Franklin, Autobiography, p. 264.

A very red faced, thick lipped countryman, . . . as soon as the Prince hailed him, jovially, if somewhat thickly, answered. At the same time he gave a heavy yaw in the saddle. R. L. Stevenson, Prince Otto, i. 4.

yaw[2] (yâ), n. [Said to be from African yaw, a raspberry.] 1. One of the tubercles characteristic of the disease known as yaws.

In some cases a few yaws will show themselves long after the primary attack is over, these are called "mentu yaws" (from "remember"). Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 735.

2. A thin or defective place in cloth.

yaw[2] (yâ), v. i. [< yaw[2], n.] To rise in blisters, breaking in white froth, as cane-juice in the sugar-works.

yawd (yâd), n. A Scotch form of jade[1].

yawey (yâ'i), a. [< yaw[2] + ey.] Pertaining to or characteristic of the yaws.

That yaws is a communicable disease is beyond question; but that it has always arisen by conveyance of yawey matter from a previous case is neither proved nor probable. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 735.

yawl[1] (yâl), v. i. [Also yowl; formerly also yole and gowl; < ME. goulen, < Icel. gaula = LG. gaulen = G. jaulen, howl, yell; an imitative word, like howl; it may be regarded as a more sonorous form of yell[1].] To cry out; howl; yell.

He hurtez of the hounde3 & thay
Fut 3omerly ..aule & 3elle
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1461.

My little legs still crossing
His either bi king this way, that way sprawling,
Or, if hee but remov'd me, straitwaies yawling.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 201).

Then yelp'd the cur, and yawl'd the cat Tennyson, The Goose.

yawl[2] (yâl), n. [Sometimes also yaul; < MD. jolle (in dim. jolleken), D. jol, a yawl, skiff, = Dan. jolle = Sw. julle, a yawl, jolly-boat. Cf. jolly-boat.] 1. A ship's small boat, usually rowed by four or six oars; a jolly-boat.—2. The smallest boat used by fishermen. See cut under rowlock.—3. A sail-boat or small yacht of the cutter class, with a jigger and short main-boom.

yawn (yân), v. [Early mod. E. yane, dial. gaun, goan; < ME. yanen, yonen, ganen, gonen, < AS. gánan = Lg. janen = OHG. ginân, MHG. genen, yawn; a secondary form, parallel to AS. ginan = OHG. ginen, MHG. genen, genen, G. gähnen, yawn; both being derived from a strong verb, AS. ginan (pret. "gan), in comp. to-ginan, gape apart, = Icel. gina, gape: see further under began. The form yaren, < AS. geanian, instead of "yone (cons. irreg., but is parallel with broad (brād), < AS. brād. The initial y for g is also irregular; it is prob. due to an AS. var. "gedniau, or to conformation with yare for gare, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To gape; open; stand wide.

Then from the yawning wound with fury tore
The spear, pursued by gushing streams of gore.
Pope, Iliad, xii. 479.

Crowds that stream from yawning doors.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxx.

The cracks and rents that had fissured their [the kiln] walls, from the fierce heat that once blazed within, were yawning hideously. Gosse, Gosd. Sketches, iii.

Specifically — 2. To open the mouth wide, (a) Voluntarily.

The crocodiles not only know the voice of the priest when they call unto them, and endure to be handled and stroked by them, but also yawn and offer their teeth unto them to be picked and cleansed with their hands.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 71

(b) Involuntarily, as through drowsiness or dullness; gape; oscitate. Compare yawning.

When a man yawneth he cannot hear so well.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 9

At every line they stretch, they yawn, they doze.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 3

And, leaning back, he yawned and fell asleep,
Lulled by the chant monotonous and deep.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, The Sicilian's Ta

3. To gape, as in hunger or thirst for some thing; hence, to be eager; long.

The chiefest thing which lay-reformers yawn for is th the clergy may through conformity in state and condit be apostolical, poor as the Apostles of Christ were poor
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., iv. 9

4. To be open-mouthed with surprise, bewilde ment, etc.; be agape.

To yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war. Shak., Cor., iii. 2.

II. trans. 1. To open; form by openin [Rare.]

The groaning Earth began to reel and shake,
A horrid Thunder in her bowels rumbles, . . .
Tearing her Rocks, Until she Yawn'd a way
To let it out, and to let in the Day.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Law

2. To express or utter with a yawn.

"Heigho," yawned one day King Francis,
"Distance all value enhances!"
Browning, The Glo

yawn (yân), n. [< yawn, v.] 1. The act of ga ing or opening wide.

Sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead.
Addison, tr. from Silius Italicus's Punicorum,

2. An involuntary opening of the mouth fro drowsiness; oscitation. See yawning.

From every side they hurried in,
Rubbing their sleepy eyes with lazy wrists,
And doubling over head their little fists
In backward yawns. Keats, Endymion,

The family is astir; and member after member appe with the morning yawn
C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p.

3. An opening; a chasm. Marston.

But June is full of invitations sweet,
Forth from the chimney's yawn and thrice-read tomes.
Lowell, Under the Willow

Through the yawns of the back-door, and sundry ro in the legs of the horse, filter in, unweariedly, fine p ticles of snow. S. Judd, Margaret, i.

yawner (yâ'nėr), n. One who yawns.

yawning (yâ'ning), n. [Verbal n. of yawn, v Gaping; oscitation; the taking of a deep t spiration, followed by a slight pause, and the a prolonged expiration, the mouth being mo or less widely open. The act is reflex and involunta in character, though it can often be partially repressed a strong effort of the will. It is the physiological expr sion of fatigue and of a desire to sleep, but is also exci by insufficient oxygenation of the blood, and occurs the fore in conditions of lowered vitality, in the prodrom stage of many diseases, and after profuse losses of blo The sight of another person yawning is also provocati of the act.

yawningly (yâ'ning-li), adv. In a yawnin manner; with yawns or gapes

Ye . . . that leaning upon your idle elbow yawning patter out those prayers
Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite, Sermon on 2 Tim. iii.

Many were merely attracted by a new face, and, fa ing stared me full in the little maze, walked off with saying a word, while others lingered yawningly throu the preface, and having gratified their short-lived cu osity, soon dropped off one by one.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 3

yawp (yâp), v. and n. A dialectal form of yel

yaws (yâz), n. pl. [Cf. of yaw[2].] A cont gious disease of the skin, endemic in mar tropical regions; same as framboesia.

yaw-weed (yâ'wēd), n. A shrubby West India plant, Morinda Royoc, used as a remedy for th yaws or framboesia.

Yb. In chem., the symbol for ytterbium.

Y. B. An abbreviation of year-book.

Y-branch (wī'branch), n. See branch, 2 (a).

Y-cartilage (wī'kär'ti-laj), n. The ypsiliform cartilage uniting the ilium, ischium, and pub at the acetabulum, ossified about the age puberty.

ychonet, ychoonet. Middle English forms each one.

With myrthe and with mynstrasye that pleasaun ychoone Piers Plowman (A) yclad†. An obsolete form of clad, a preterit and past participle of clothe.

Yclad in costly garments fit for tragicke Stage.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 8.

Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 1. 33.

yclept, ycleped. Forms of the preterit and past participle of clepe.

Y-cross (wī'krôs), n. 1. A Y-shaped cross, suggesting the position of Christ as crucified with the arms raised: often an ornament on chasubles.—2. A Y-branch or Y; a three-way joint or connection.

yd. A contraction of yard[1].

ydlet, a. An obsolete spelling of idle.

ydrad†. A form of drad, obsolete past participle of dread.

Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 2.

ye[1], you (yē, yē), pron. pl. (used also instead of sing.); poss. your or yours, obj. you, sometimes ye. [Two forms of the same word, representing historically the nom. and obj. respectively of the personal pronoun used as the plural of thou (see thou): (a) Nom. (and voc.) ye, early mod. E. also yee, < ME. ye, ge, < AS. ge, gē = OS. gi, gī = OFries. gī, ī = MD. ghy, D. gij = LG. ji = OHG. MHG. ër, G. ihr = Icel. ër, iðr = Sw. Dan. i = Goth. jus, ye, = (with additional suffix) Gr. ὑμεῖς, ὑμμες = Skt. yūyam, ye; a pron. used as the pl. of thou, with which it is not etymologically related. (b) Nom. you, orig. obj. (dat. and acc.), taking the place of the nom. ye, because of the much greater frequency of the dat. and acc., and the tendency to make the three cases ye, your, you, conform to one base, a tendency assisted also by the fact that ye and you are usually unaccented, and therefore have the vowel more or less obscurely pronounced; < ME. you, iou, iow, < AS. ēow, dat., ēów (poet. ēówic), acc., = OS. iu = OFries. iuwe, iwe = D. u = OHG. iu = Sw. Dan. i (prop. nom.) = Goth. izwis, you; cf. Gr. ὑμεῖς, dat., ὑμας, acc. The confusion of the two forms, and the use of you as nom., began in early mod. E., and is conspicuous in the Elizabethan dramas. In the authorized version of the Bible (1611), in which many usages already regarded as archaisms were purposely retained, the distinction between ye, nom., and you, obj., is carefully preserved. Ye still survives in religious and poetical use, while in ordinary colloquial and literary use you has superseded it. In provincial use, as in Irish, ye occurs for you both in nom. and obj., but in the obj. it is to be regarded rather as a shortening of the enclitic you: thus, I tell you, I tell ye. The ye may be further reduced, as in thank you > thank ye > thankee or thanky; how do you do > how do ye do > how d'ye do > howdy do > howdy, etc.] The personal pronoun of the second person, in the plural number: now commonly applied also (originally with some notion of distinction or compliment, as in the case of the royal we) to a single individual, in place of the singular forms thee and thou—a use resulting in the partial degradation of thou to a term of familiarity or of contempt. Ye is archaic, and little used except in exalted address and poetry. (a) As carefully discriminated, especially in the older English, the nominative and vocative being ye and the dative and accusative you.

He swor formest [first]
That ye schuld haue no harm but heuidely for gode
He praide yow com spoke with him.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 250.

He zaue yow fyue wittes
For to wurshepen hym ther-with while ye lyuen here Piers Plowman (C), ii. 1.

And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you. Ex. xxiv. 14.

Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report. Ac. vi. 3.

Ye Mantuans, arme your selues, for feare of after claps.
Hakluyt's Voyages I. 16.

Speed, Pegasus! ye strains of great and small,
Ode, epic, elegy, have at you all!
Byron, Eng. Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

(b) As used without discrimination of case form between nominative and objective.

Ye a great master are in your degree.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 646.

Fou lie, ye rogue Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 2. 59

The more shame for ye, holy men I thought ye Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 102.

You meaner beauties of the night, . . .
What are you when the moon shall rise?
Sir H. Wotton, To the Queen of Bohemia.

They have, like good sumpters, laid ye down their horse load of citations and fathers at your dore.
Milton, Church-Government, ii., Int.

(c) As used for a single subject.

Tho ye count me still the child,
Sweet mother, do ye love the child?
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

To you. See tu quoque. — You're another, a familiar form of the tu quoque argument. See tu quoque.

I find little to interest and less to edify me in these international bandyings of "You're another."
Lowell, Democracy.

You-uns (literally, you ones), you. Compare we-uns, under we. [Dialectal, southern U. S.]

"Mirandy Jane," the old woman interrupted, . . . "'pears like I hev had the trouble o' raisin' a idjit in you-uns."
M. N. Murfree, Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, i.

But I'll tell the yarn to youuns.
John Hay, Mystery of Olligal.

ye[2]†, adv. A Middle English form of yea.

ye[3]†, n. An obsolete variant of eye[1].

yea (yā), adv. [< ME. ye, ze, yai, yo, < AS. ġeá = OS. ja = OFries. ie, iē = D. ja = LG. ja = OHG. MHG. jā, G. ja = Icel. jā = Dan. Sw. ja = Goth. ja, yea, jau, truly, verily; perhaps = Lith. ja in ja sakyti, say yea, and Gr. ἦ, truly. Connection with AS. ge = Goth. jah, also, and, and with L. jam, now, Skt. ya, who, is uncertain. Hence ult. yea.] 1. Yes; ay: a word that expresses affirmation or assent: the opposite of nay: as, Will you go? Yea.

Swear not at all . . . but let your communication be Yea, yea; Nay, nay. Mat. v. 37.

You promise to bear Faith and Loyalty to him: Say Yea. And King Edward said Yea, and kissed the King of France on the Mouth, as Lord of the Fee.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 117.

2. Indeed; verily; truly; it is so, or is it so? used to introduce a subject.

Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? Gen. iii. 1.

Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?
Shak., Pericles, ii. 5. 73.

Him I loved not. Why?
I deem'd him fool? yea, so?
Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

3. Used to intimate that something is to be added by way of intensiveness or amplification: Not this alone; not only so but also; what is more. Compare the similar use of nay.

Confess Christ and his truth, not only in heart, but also in tongue, yea, in very deed, which few gospellers do.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 202.

I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. Phil. i. 18.

One that composed your beauties, yea, and one
To whom you are but as a form in wax.
Shak., M. N. D., i. 1. 48.

Many of you, yea most,
Return no more. Tennyson, Holy Grail.

4. In the authorized version of the Bible, so; thus; true; real; consistent.

All the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen. 2 Cor. i. 20.

Yea is now used only in the sacred, solemn, or formal style. Yea, being mainly a word of assent, was formerly used chiefly in answer to questions framed affirmatively. yea, a stronger term, was chiefly used in answer to questions containing a negative or otherwise implying a doubt. But the distinction does not appear to have been rigidly maintained, and the assertions of the following quotations about yea and yea, like those about nay and no (see no[1]), must be taken with some allowance.

I wonde not here note by the way that Tyndall here translateth no for nay, for it is but a trifle and mistaking of the englishe worde, saying that ye shoulde see that he, whych in two so plain englishe wordes, and so common as is nay and no, cannot tell when he should take the tone, and when the tother, is not, for translating into englishe, a man very mete. For the vse of those two wordes in answering to a question is this. No (read nay) answereth the question framed by the affirmative. As, for ensample if a manne should aske Tindall hymselfe: "vs an heretike mete to translate holy scripture into englishe?" Lo, to thys question, if he will answere trew englishe, he muste answere nay, and not no. But and if the question be asked hym thus, lo, "is not an heretique mete to translate holy scripture into englishe?" To this question, lo, if he wil answere true englishe, he must answere no, & not nay. And a lyke difference is there betweene these two adiectes, ye and nea. For if the question bee framed vnto Tindall by (affirmatiue in thys fashion: If an heretique falsely translate the newe testament into englishe, to make hys false herezyes seeme the worde of God, be hys bookes worthy to be burned?" To thys question asked in thys wyse, wy he wyl answere true englishe, he must answere ye and not nea. But nowe if the question be asked hym thus, lo, by the negatiue: If an heretike falsely translate the newe testament in to englishe, to make hys false herezyes seme the word of God be not his bokes well worthy to be burned?" To thys question in thys fashion framed, if he wyll answere trew englyshe, he maye not answere ye, but he must answere nea, and say "nea, mary, be they, bothe the translacion and the translatour, and al that wyll holde wyth the.' And thys thing, lo, though it be no great matter, yet I haue thought it good to giue Tindall warning of, because I would haue him write true one way or other, that though I can not make him by no meane to write true matter, I would haue him yet at the lest wise write true englishe.
Sir T. More, The Confutacion of Tyndales Answere, made [Anno 1532, book III., Works, p. 443.

There is an example of the reputation of a question-word in the case of our affirmative particles, yea and nea, yea and no, which were formerly distinguished, as the two affirmatives still are in our sister-tongues, the Danish and Swedish. The distinction was that yea and nay were answers to questions framed in the affirmative, as, Will he go? Yea or Nay. But if the question was framed in the negative, Will he not go? the answer was Yea or No.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xxiii.

"What? some," sede the cowherde, "seidesteer I was here?"
"ȝa, sire, sertes," sede the childe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3333.

"Whi carestow," sede the quene, "knew thow nought the sothe . . . ?"
"ȝis, madame," sede the maide.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3338.

Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord. Mat. xiii. 51.

yea (yā), n. [< yea, adv.] 1. An affirmation.—2. An affirmative vote; hence, one who votes in the affirmative: as, to call the yeas and nays.—To call for the yeas and nays, in parliamentary usage, to demand that a vote be taken on any measure by the calling of the roll, each member's answer being recorded.

yead[1]†, v. t. See yede[2].

yead[2] (yed), n. A dialectal form of head. Halliwell.

yea-forsooth (yā'fôr-sōth'), a. Noting one saying to anything yea and forsooth, which latter was not a phrase of genteel society.

A rascally yea forsooth knave.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 2. 41.

yeaghet, n. A yacht.

We saw there a barke which was of Dronton, & three or foure Norway yeaghes. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 204.

yean (yēn), v. t. and i. [< ME. yenen*, ȝe-enen*, < AS. ge-eánian*, ge-edenian, bring forth, become pregnant, < eáden, ge-edcen, gravid, teeming: see ean.] To bring forth young, as a goat or sheep; lamb.

That wherein the courteous man takes most saviour is . . . to sell his wine deare, . . . his ewes to haue good yeaning, not to raine in April, and to haue much wheate in Maie. Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 254.

So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI. (ed. Knight), ii. 5. 36.

Yon's one hath yean'd a fearful prodigy,
Some monstrous misshapen halladry.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, vi. 39.

Weak as a lamb the hour that it is yeaned.
Wordsworth, Hart-Leap Well.

Trenchant time behoves to hurry
All to yean and all to bury.
Emerson, Wood-notes, ii.

yeanling (yēn'ling), n. [< yean + -ling[1]. Cf. eanling.] The young of sheep or goats; a lamb; a kid; an eanling: sometimes used attributively.

To their store
They add the poor man's yeanling, and dare sell
Both fleece and carcass, not gi'ing him the fell!
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2.

Lambs, or yeanling kids. Milton, P. L., iii. 434.

year (yer), n. [< ME. yeer, yer, ȝer, < AS. ġeár ġer (pl. ġeár) = OS. jār, gēr = OFries. jār, jēr = MD. jaer, D. jaar, jare = LG. jaar = OHG. MHG. jār, G. jahr = Icel. ár = Sw. år = Dan. aar = Goth. jēr, year; prob. orig. 'spring,' the opening of the year, = OBulg. jarŭ, spring, = Gr. ὥρα, a season, year, ὥρα, season, spring, year, hour, = Zend yāre, a year. From the Gr. ὥρα comes ult. E. hour, which is thus a doublet of year: see hour. Hence ult. yore.] 1. A full round of the seasons; the period of the earth's revolution round the sun; more accurately, the interval between one vernal equinox and the next, or one complete mean apparent circuit of the ecliptic by the sun, or mean motion through 360° of longitude. This is specifically the tropical year, which determines the sequence of the seasons (sometimes also called the astronomical or solar year). Its length is about 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds, owing to the precession of the equinoxes, this is less than the length of the sidereal year, the true period of the sun's revolution, or his return to the same place in relation to the fixed stars, which is 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, 9.3 seconds. See also style[1], n., 3. Abbreviated y, yr.

Hence—2. The time in which any planet completes a revolution round the sun: as, the year of Jupiter or of Saturn.—3. A space of about 365 days, used in the civil or religious reckoning of time; especially, the usual period of 365 or 366 days, divided into twelve calendar months, now reckoned as beginning with the 1st of January and ending with the 31st of December; as, the year 1801 (see legal year, below); also, a period of approximately the same length in other calendars. Compare calendar.—4. A space of twelve calendar months without regard to the point from which they are reckoned: as, he sailed on June 1st, and was absent just [illegible]

At the dawn, and their names anon, and founden the same Letters and figures, the whiche that holden writen the law before, without any defaute.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 17.

That shulde not returne with-inne two yere, leese than thei myghte fynde the selde childe.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 29.

5. pl. Period of life; age: as, he is very vigorous for his years: often used specifically to note old age. See in years, below.

He is made as strong as Oram, is of brave years too,
And doughty of complexion.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, ii. 1.

He [Essex] . . . profess'd he would not contend with the Queen, nor excuse the Faults of his young Years either in whole or in part.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 389.

He himselfe affected ease and quiet, now growing into yeares.
Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 18, 1673.

What is there quite so profoundly human as an old man's memory of a mother who died in his earlier years?
O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

The older plural year still remains in popular language: as, the horse is ten year old.

And thyngspore year would make the world away.
Skak., Sonnets, xi.

Then you know a boy is an ass,
Then you know the worth of a lass.
Once you have come to forty year,
Thackeray, Age of Wisdom.

Anomalistic year. See anomalistic. — Astral year. Same as sidereal year. — Astronomical year. See def. 1. — A year and a day, the lapse of a year with a day added to it: in law constituting a period which in some cases determines a right or liability: as, where one is fatally wounded with murderous intent, the killing is murder if death ensues within a year and a day. See day[1].

I swere to you be the oth that I made to you when ye made me knyght that I shall seche hym a yere and a day, but with-ynne that space I may knowe trewe tidinges.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 652.

A year's mind. See mind[1]. — Bird of the year. See bird. — Bissextile year, leap-year. See bissextile. — Canicular year. See canicular. — Civil year, the year in use in the ordinary affairs of life; the year recognized by the law; a year according to the calendar. It is either solar, like the civil year of Christian countries, or lunar, like the Mohammedan year, or lunisolar, like the Hebrew year. — Climacteric years. See climacteric. — Common year, a year of 365 days, as distinguished from a leap-year. — Cynic year. Same as Sothic year. — Ecclesiastical year, the year as arranged in the ecclesiastical calendar. For details of it, see Sunday. — Eighty years' war. See war[1]. — Embolismic year, a year of thirteen months, occurring in a lunisolar calendar, like that of the Jews. — Emergent year. See emergent. — Enneatical years. See enneatic. — Estate for years. See estate. — Fiscal year. See fiscal. — Four years' limitation law. See limitation. — Gregorian year. See Gregorian. — Hebrew year, a lunisolar year, composed of 12 or 13 months of 29 or 30 days. In every cycle of nineteen years, the 3d, 6th, 8th, 11th, 14th, 17th, and 19th are embolismic years and have 13 months, while the rest are ordinary years and have 12 months. Both the embolismic and the ordinary years are further distinguished as regular, defective, and abundant. — Hundred years' war. See war[1]. — In years, advanced in age.

I am honest in my Inclinations,
And would not, wer't not to avoid Offence, make a Lady a little in Years believe I think her young.
Etherege, Man of Mode, ii. 2.

Men in Years more calmly Wrongs resent.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

The lady, who was a little in years, having parted with her fortune to her dearest life, he left her.
Goldsmith, Register of Scotch Marriages.

Julian year. (a) A period of 365¼ days. (b) Incorrectly, a year of the Julian calendar. — Leap year. See leap-year. — Legal year, the year by which dates were reckoned, which until 1752 began March 25th: hence it was usual between January 1st and March 25th to date the year both ways, as February 10th, 1745–6 (that is, 1746 according to present reckoning). — Lunar year, a period consisting of 12 lunar months. The lunar astronomical year consists of 12 lunar synodical months, or 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, 38 seconds. The common lunar year consists of 12 lunar civil months, or 354 days. — Lunisolar year. See lunisolar. — Mohammedan year, a purely lunar year of 12 months, having alternately 29 and 30 days, except that in certain years the last month has 30 days instead of 29. These years are the 2d, 5th, 7th, 10th, 13th, 16th, 18th, 21st, 24th, 26th, and 29th of each cycle of thirty years. The years are reckoned from the hejira, A. D. 622, July 15th. — Natural year. Same as tropical year. — Planetary years. See planetary. — Platonic year, a great cycle of years at the end of which it was supposed that the celestial bodies will be found in the same places they were in at the creation. Also called great or perfect year. — Regnal, sabbatical, sidereal year. See the adjectives. — Seven years' war. See Silesian wars, under Silesian. — Solar year. See def. 1. — Sothic year. See Sothic. — Tenancy from year to year. See tenancy. — Term of years, lease for years. See term, 6 (c). — Theban year. See Theban. — Thirty years' war. See thirty. — To be struck or stricken in years. See strike. — Tropical year. See def. 1. — Vague year, an Egyptian year of 365 days. Called vague — that is, wandering — because in the course of 1507 years it begins at all seasons. — Year by year, from one year to another; with each succeeding year.

Disease, encounting year by year,
Show'd the grim king by gradual steps brought near.
Crabbe, Works, I. 192.

Year, day, and waste, part of the sovereign's prerogative in England, whereby he was entitled to the profits for a year and a day of the land held by persons attainted of petty treason or felony, together with the right of wasting them, afterward restoring them to the lord of the fee. It was abolished by the Felony Act, 1870. — Year in, year out, always; from one year to another.

Sunbeams never came, never gleamed, year in, year out, across the clear darkness of the broad water floor.
C. F. Woolson, East Angels, xxvii.

Year of confusion, the 707th year of the Roman era, ending with 47 B. C., being the year before the first introduction of the Julian calendar. It had 445 days. — Year of grace, year of the Christian era. — Year of jubilee. See jubilee, 1. — Year of our Lord, year of the Christian era. — Years of discretion. See discretion. — Young of the year. See young.

yeara, n. See possum-oak.

year-bird (yēr'bėrd), n. The djolan: said to have been so called from a notion that it annually added a wrinkle to the plicated skin at the base of the beak.

year-book (yēr'bůk), n. 1. A book giving facts about the year, its chief seasons, festivals, dates, etc., or other kindred subjects: as, Hone's Year-Book. — 2. A book published every year, every annual issue containing new or additional information; a work published annually and intended to supply fresh information on matters in regard to which changes are continually taking place: as, a parish year-book.

A new year book, specially prepared for business-men, will be issued . . . under the title of The Year Book of Commerce.
The Academy, June 1, 1889, p. 376.

3. One of a number of books containing chronological reports of early cases adjudged or argued in the courts of England. The series first printed and long known as The Year Books contains cases from the beginning of the reign of Edward II down to the end of Edward III., and from the beginning of Henry IV. down to near the end of Henry VIII. Others later published are Maynard's Edward I. and II., and Horwood a translation from MS. which presents cases in various years of Edward I. from 13 to 35 inclusive.

yeard, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of yard and of earth.

year-day† (yēr'dā), n. [< ME. yeresday (cf. AS. geardagas, pl., days of yore); < year + day[1].] An anniversary day; a day on which prayers were said for the dead. Halliwell.

We have ordeyned . . . to kepe the yeresday of Jon lyster of Cambryge yerely, on mydelenten sonday . . . because he gafe vs iij Mare, in the begynnyng and to the forthermare of our gylde.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 381.

yeard-fast†, a. Fast in the earth or ground.

O about the midst o' Clyde's water
There was a yeard fast stane.
Bard Ellen (Child's Ballads, III. 214).

yeared (yērd), a. [< year + -ed[2].] Numbering years; aged.

Both were of best feature, of high race,
Yeared but to thirty.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, I. 1.

yearlily (yēr'li-li), adv. [< yearly + -ly[2].] Yearly. [Rare.]

The great quaking grass sowen yearlily in many of the London gardens.
T. Johnson, Herball.

yearling (yēr'ling), n. and a. [= G. jährling; as year + -ling[1]. Cf. L. vitulus, a calf, lit. a 'yearling': see veal.] I. n. 1. A young beast one year old or in the second year of its age. — 2. Under racing and trotting rules, a horse one year old, dating from January 1st of the year of foaling.

He was buying yearlings, too, and seemed keen about racing, but as yet not a feather had been plucked from the pheasant's wing.
White Melville, White Rose, II. vi.

II. a. A year old; of a year's age, duration, or date: as, a yearling heifer.

As yearling brides provide lace caps, and work rich clothes for the expected darling.
Thackeray, Newcomes, I.

yearlong (yēr'lông), a. Lasting or continuing a year.

"They," I said,
"From yearlong poring on the printed eyes,
Are seen I loved."
Tennyson, Princess, vii.

Accepting year-long exile from his home.
The Atlantic, LIX. 361.

yearly (yēr'li), a. [< ME. yeerly, < AS. geárlic (= G. jährlich); as year + -ly[1].] 1. Annual; happening, accruing, or coming every year: as, a yearly rent or income.

Five hundred pond I have in yearly pay
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 1. 215.

These two last [Euphrates and Tigris] are famous for their yearely overflowings.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 56.

2. Lasting or continuing for a year: as, a yearly plant; a yearly tenant or tenancy. — 3. Comprehending a year; accomplished in a year: as, the yearly circuit or revolution of the earth.

The yearly course that brings this day about Shall never see it but a holiday.
Shak., K. John, iii. 1. 61.

Whose cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 162.

yearly (yēr'li), adv. [< ME. yeerly; < yearly, a.] Annually; once a year: as, blessings yearly bestowed.

Also there shalbe allowed to him tower Vshers, yeerly of them being yeerly allowed for the same 20*li*.
Book of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 2.

Yearly will I do this rite.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 3. 20.

yearn[1] (yėrn), v. i. [< ME. yernen, yrnen, < AS. giernan, gyrnan, geornan, yearn, desire, = Icel. girna = Goth. gaurnjan, desire, long for; from an adj., AS. georn, ME. yern = OS. gern = OHG. MHG. gern = Icel. gjarn = Sw. gerna = Dan. gjerne = Goth. gairns* (in comp. faihu-gairns), desirous, eager (see yern[1]); with formative -n, from the root seen in OHG. MHG. ger, eager, OHG. geron, MHG. geren, G. begehren, long for.] 1. To long for something; desire eagerly; feel desire or longing.

Angels ouer seye and ouer thay yerne for to see.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

Drede delitable drynke, and thow shalt do the bettere; Mesure is medcyne, thouȝ thow muche yerne.
Piers Plowman (B), i. 86.

O, Juvenal, lorde, trewe is thy sentence,
That litel witen folk what is to yerne.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 199.

Joseph made haste, for his bowels did yearn upon his brother.
Gen. xliii. 30.

All men have a yearning curiosity to behold a man of heroic worth.
Steele, Spectator, No. 340.

But my heart would still yearn for the sound of the waves
That sang as they flow by my forefathers' graves.
O. W. Holmes, The Hudson.

2†. To cry out eagerly; give tongue, as a dog.

When Foxes and Badgerds haue yong cubbes, take all your olde Terryers and put them into the grounde; and when they beginne to haye (which in the earth is called yearnynge), you muste holde your yong Terryers, . . . that they may hetken and heare theyr fathers yeerne.
Turberville, Booke of Hunting (ed. 1575), p. 161.

yearn[2]† (yėrn), v. [Also earn; prob. an altered form, due to confusion with yearn[1], with which it is generally merged, of ærn*, < ME. ernen, grieve, vex, < AS. yrnan, also ge-yrnan (whence perhaps yearn, as distinguished from earn, like yean as distinguished from ean), grieve, vex, < earm = D. G. arm = Icel. armr = Dan. Sw. arm = Goth. arms, poor, miserable.] I. intrans. To grieve; mourn; sorrow.

Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 3. 6.

Some of those French . . .
Away the English carriages to burn,
Which to defend them scarcely had a man. . . .
Thus yearning cries, that from the carriage came,
His blood yet hot, more highly doth inflame.
Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 226.

II. trans. To grieve; trouble; vex.

It yearns my heart to hear the wench misconstrued.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, v. 3.

Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not if men my garments wear.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 3. 60.

Alas, poor wretch! how it yearns my heart for him!
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iv. 6.

yearn[3] (yėrn), v. t. [A form of earn[1], simulating yearn[1], yearn[2], etc.] Same as earn[1]. [Provincial or vulgar.]

My due reward, the which right well I deeme
I yearned have.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. viii. 15.

She couldn't afford to pay for schooling, and told me I must look out and yearn my own living while I was a mere chick.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 397.

yearn[4] (yėrn), v. t. [A var. of earn[2], or < ME. gernen, < AS. gyrnan, run together: see earn[4], run.] Same as earn[2].

His Honour the Duke will accept one of our Dunlop cheeses, and it will be my fault if a better was ever yearned in London.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxix.

yearn[5] (yėrn), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of earn[3].

Ye cliffs, the haunts of sailing yearns!
Burns, On Capt. Matthew Henderson.

yearnful† (yėrn'ful), a. [Also yernful, ernful; < yearn[2] + -ful.] Mournful; distressing.

Ala, Ala, was their yernfull note, their foode was the peoples almes.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 625.

But oh, coradie, as in joyfull tunes, thy merry notes I did borrow,
So now lend mee thy wernfull tunes, to utter my sorrow.
Jonson and Fitz, Old Plays, I. 193. (Nares.)

yearning[1] (yėr'ning), n. [< ME. gerninge; verbal n. of yearn[1], v.] The feeling of one who yearns; a strong feeling of tenderness, pity, or longing desire.

All the herte fastenede in the gerninge of Jhesu, & turned in to the fyre of love.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

The reveries of youth, in which so much energy is wasted, are the yearnings of a spirit made for what it has not found but must forever seek as an Ideal.
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 176.

yearning[2] (yėr'ning), n. [Var. of earning[2].] Rennet. [Scotch.]

yearningly (yėr'ning-li), adv. In a yearning manner; with yearning.

yeast (yēst), n. [Formerly also yest; also dial. east; < ME. gest, < AS. gust, gyst = D. gest, gist = MHG. gest, jest, G. gischt, giescht = Icel. jast, jastr = Sw. jäst (cf. Dan. gjær), yeast; from a verb seen in OHG. jesan, MHG. jesen, gesen, gern, G. gähren, ferment, = Sw. jäsa, ferment, froth; akin to Gr. ζέειν, boil, seethe, (> ζεστός, boiled, boiling); Skt. √ yas, boil, froth.] 1. A yellowish substance, having an acid reaction, produced during the alcoholic fermentation of saccharine fluids, rising partly to the surface in the form of a frothy, flocculent, viscid matter (top or surface yeast), and partly falling to the bottom (bottom or sediment yeast). Yeast consists of aggregations of minute cells, each cell constituting a distinct plant, Saccharomyces cerevisiæ. The yeast-plant is a saprophytic fungus of uncertain systematic position, being regarded by some as a degenerate ascomycete, by others as representing a distinct class. It exists under two conditions. In the first it is in the form of transparent round or oval cells, averaging .008 mm. (.0003 inch) in diameter, which increase in countless numbers by budding — that is, by the formation of a small daughter-cell by the side of the mother-cell, from which it sooner or later separates. The other form consists of larger cells, which, by a division of their protoplasm, form four new cells within the parent-cell. These endogenously formed cells have been likened to the sacrospores of the Ascomycetes, with which, as stated above, they are frequently classed. The former notion that the yeast-plant was only the immature condition of a mold has been effectually exploded by Brefeld's elaborate researches. Fermentation takes place sooner and goes on more rapidly when yeast is added than when the fluid is merely exposed to the atmosphere, beer-yeast possessing the property of setting up fermentation in the highest degree. Surface yeast is formed at from 65° to 77° F., and its action is rapid and irregular, whereas sediment yeast is formed at from 32° to 45°, and its action is slow and quiet. Sediment yeast is reproduced by spores, and not by buds. In their chemical relations the two do not appear to differ. Yeast varies in quality according to the nature of the liquid in which it is generated, and yeast-merchants distinguish several varieties, which are employed for different purposes according to their energy and activity. Yeast is employed to induce fermentation in the manufacture of beer and ale, and of distilled spirits, and is also the agent in producing the panary fermentation, whereby bread is rendered light, porous, and spongy. Beer-yeast is employed medicinally as a stimulant in low fevers, and is of great service in cases where, from inflammatory symptoms, wine is inadmissible. See barm[2], Saccharomyces, fermentation.

Yeast
a, yeast plant (Saccharomyces cerevisiæ), showing increase by budding; b, a cell, showing the formation of the spores; c, a cell, containing four mature spores; d, the spores; e, germinating spores.

She consented that the village maiden should manufacture yeast, both liquid and in cakes.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

2. Spume or foam of water; froth.

Now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast, and anon swallowed with yest and froth.
Shak., W. T., III. 3. 94.

They melt into thy yeast of waves, which near Alike the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 181.

Artificial yeast, a dough of flour and a small quantity of common yeast, made into small cakes and dried. Kept free from moisture, it long retains its fermentative property. — Beer-yeast, the common yeast, Saccharomyces cerevisiæ, which is added to the wort of beer for the purpose of exciting fermentation. See def. 1. — Bottom or sediment yeast. See def. 1. — German yeast, common yeast collected, drained, and pressed till nearly dry. It can be so kept for several months, and is much used by bakers. — Patent yeast, yeast collected from a wort of malt and hop, and treated similarly to German yeast. — Press-yeast, yeast freed from water and other impurities, mixed with about 15 per cent of starch, and pressed in bags as a preparation for storing. — Surface or top yeast. See def. 1.

yeast (yēst), v. i. [< yeast, n.] To ferment.

Yeasting youth
Will clear itself and crystal turn again.
Keats, Otho the Great, iii. 2. (Davies.) yeast-beer (yēst'bēr), n. See beer[1].

yeast-bitten (yēst'bit'n), a. In brewing, too much affected by yeast.

When the progress of the attenuation becomes so slack as not to exceed half a pound in the day, it is prudent to cleanse, otherwise the top-barm might re-enter the body of the beer, and it would become yeast-bitten.
Ure, Dict., I. 317.

yeast-cell (yēst'sel), n. The single cell which constitutes a yeast-plant, Saccharomyces cerevisiæ.

yeast-fungus (yēst'fung'gus), n. See fungus.

yeastiness (yēs'ti-nes), n. The state or property of being yeasty.

yeast-plant (yēst'plant), n. The Saccharomyces cerevisiæ, a minute plant producing alcoholic fermentation in saccharine liquids; also, any one of several other species of the genus Saccharomyces. See yeast, 1 (with cut).

yeast-powder (yēst'pou'dėr), n. A substitute for yeast used for leavening bread, consisting of a preparation of soda, phosphates, and other substances, in the form of a powder; a baking-powder.

yeasty (yēs'ti), a. [Formerly also yesty; < yeast + -y[1].] 1. Consisting of or resembling yeast.

We have then [in June] another dun, called the Barm-Fly from its yeasty color.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 201.

2. Foamy; frothy; spumy.

Though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 53.

The sands and yeasty surges mix
In caves about the dreary bay.
Tennyson, Sailor Boy.

3. Light; unsubstantial; trifling; worthless.

Thus has he — and many more of the same breed that I know the drossy age dotes on — only got the tune of the time and outward habit of encounter: a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnowed opinions.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 199.

Knowledge with him is idle, if it strain
Above the compass of his yesty brain.
Drayton, Moon-Calf.

yeat†, n. Same as yate, gate[1].

And, or the porter was at the yeat,
The boy was in the ha'.
Lady Maisry (Child's Ballads, II. 84).

yeddt, v. i. [ME. gedden, geddien, < AS. geddian, gyddian, giddian, speak, sing, < gedd, gidd, a song.] To speak; sing. Piers Plowman (A), i. 138.

yedding†, n. [ME., also yeddynge, < AS. geddyng, giddung; verbal n. of geddian, sing: see yedd, v.] A popular tale or romance, or a song embodying a popular tale or romance.

Of yeddinges he bar utterly the prys.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 237.

yede[1]†, yode†. [ME. yede, gede, gode, < AS. eode (= Goth. iddja), pret. of gān, go: see go.] Obsolete irregular preterits of go.

Sethen yede to sitte same to solas & to piele
At a wid windowe that was in the chaunnber.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3672.

Two or three of his messages yeden
For Pandarus.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 936.

To mete hir yode mani baroun, with grete and fairе processioun.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 115.

His army dry-foot through them yod.
Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 53.

One while this little boy he yode,
Another while he ran.
Child's Maurice (Child's Ballads, II. 314).

Along the bankes of many silver streames
Thou with him yodest.
L. Bryskett, Pastorall Aeglogue.

In other pace than forth he yode, Return'd Lord Marmion.
Scott, Marmion, iii. 31.

yede[2]†, v. t. [Also yead; a false pres. tense and inf. formed from the pret. yede, yode: see yede[1].] To go; proceed. [Rare and erroneous.]

Then badd the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herselfe withdraw awhile.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 5.

Years yead away, and faces fair deflower. Drant.

yedert, a. [ME. gedir; cf. AS. ædre, edre, quickly.] Quick. Wars of Alexander, l. 5042.

yederlyt, adv. [ME. gederly, gederli; < yeder + -ly[2].] Quickly; at once.

For I schrewe me gederly, & gege after grace,
A that is the best, be my dome, for me by-houes nede.
Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1215.

yeel (yēl), n. A dialectal form of eel.

yeeldt, v. A Middle English spelling of yield.

yeep, a. Same as yep.

yefellt, adv. An obsolete dialectal form of evil.

Yet, "Fetys, gret shame!" quoth Robyn,
"Y lofe yefell thee to mende."
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 84).

yeftt, n. A Middle English form of gift.

Thanne to the Sowdan furth he went anon,
Of whom he hadde his thank right specialliche,
And grete yeftes as he was wele worthy.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 8264.

yeld[1] (yeld), a. [Also yeald, yauld, yell; var. of geld[1].] Barren; not giving milk; same as geld[1], 2. [Scotch.]

Thence country wives, wi' toil and pain,
May plunge and plunge the kirn in vain; . . .
And dawtit [petted] twal-pint hawkie [cow]'s gane
As yell's the bill [bull].
Burns, Address to the Deil.

A wild farm in Northumberland, well stocked with milk-cows, yeald beasts, and sheep.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxix.

Few owners of deer forests will adopt the author's suggestion of themselves beginning to shoot the yeld hinds on the 15th of October, instead of leaving it to their keepers.
Athenæum, No. 2870, p. 560.

yeld[2]†, n. A Middle English form of gild[2].

Thys statute is made by the comyne assent of all the bretherne and sisterne of alhallowe yelde.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 381.

At Worcester as late as 1467 we find the citizens in their "yeld merchant" making for the craft guilds regulations which imply that they had full authority over them.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 486.

yeldet, v. A Middle English form of yield.

yeldhallet, n. A Middle English form of gildhall.

To sitten in a yeldhalle on a deys.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 370.

yeldring (yel'dring), n. [Also yeldrin, yoldring, yoldrin, yorling, etc., in numerous variant forms based on yellow.] Same as yowley. [Scotch.]

yeldrock (yel'drok), n. Same as yowley. [Prov. Eng.]

yelk (yelk), n. A variant of yolk.

yell[1] (yel), v. [< ME. yellen, gellen, gullen, gollen, < AS. gellan, giellan, gyllan, cry out, yell, resound, = D. gillen, shriek, scream, = G. gellen, resound, = Icel. gella, also gjalla = Sw. gälla = Dan. gjælle, gjalde, resound, ring; prob. akin to AS. galan, sing: see gale[1]. Cf. yawl[1], yowl.]

I. intrans. To cry out with a sharp, loud noise; shriek; cry or scream as with agony, horror, or ferocity.

Thay yelleden as feendes doon in helle.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 568.

The cow the deuel yeldyn a norh, [and] loude he gan grede
Alas non is my mygte ido euermo he sede.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 44.

The night raven that still deadly yells.
Spenser.

The dogs did yell.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3. 160.

The throng'd arena shakes with shouts for more;
Yells the mad crowd o'er entrails freshly torn.
Byron, Childe Harold, i. 83.

All the men and women in the hall
Rose, when they saw the dead man rise, and fled Yelling as from a spectre.
Tennyson, Geraint.

II. trans. To utter with a yell.

As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllable of dolour.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 7.

Some boy, galloping for life upon the road, yells to him the sudden news, and is gone.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 256.

Again the Apaches were summoned to surrender, . . . and again they yelled their defiant refusal.
The Century, XLI. 469.

yell[1] (yel), n. [< yell[1], v.] 1. A sharp, loud outcry; a scream or cry suggestive of horror, distress, agony, or ferocity.

Rod. I'll call aloud.
Iago. Do, with like timorous accent and dire yell
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.
Shak., Othello, i. 1. 75.

A loud hallooing of vindictive triumph, above which, however, . . . the yell of mortal agony was distinctly heard.
Scott, Rob Roy, xxii.

A yell the dead might wake to hear Swell'd on the night sky, far and clear,—
Then smote the Indian tomahawk
On crashing door and shattering lock.
Whittier, Pentucket.

Specifically — 2. A call or cry peculiar to a special body of persons: as, a class yell; the yell of Columbia '91.

The young men, in brilliant tennis-blazers and negligée costumes, are giving the mountain calls or yells — tribal — adopted according to the well-known college customs, and uttered with more energy than music.
St. Nicholas, XVII. 837.

yell[2] (yel), a. Same as yeld[1].

yell[3], yell-house. Dialectal forms of eel, eel-house.

yelling (yel'ing), n. [< ME. gellynge; verbal n. of yell[1], v.] The act or the noise of one who or that which yells; a yell, or yells collectively.

Fellings loud and deep. Drayton.

Pain speedeth grin around me,
And stun me with the yellings of damnation. Johnson.

yelloch (yel'och), v. i. [A var. of yell[1], with a guttural termination.] To scream; yell; shriek. [Scotch.]

But as said useless carline . . . flung herself right in my visitor's gate, and yellached and skirled, that you would have thought her a whole generation of hounds.
Scott, Pirate, xxx.

yelloch (yel'och), n. [< yellach, v.] A shrill cry; a yell. [Scotch.]

yellow (yel'ō), a. and n. [Also dial. yullow, yallow, yeller, etc.; < ME. yelow, yelowe, yelwe, yolwe, yelu, etc., also gelow, gelu, etc., < AS. geolu, geolo (geolw-) = OS. gelo = MD. ghelu, D. geel = OHG. gelo (gelw-), MHG. gel (gelw-), G. gelb = Icel. gulr = Sw. Dan. gul, yellow, = L. helvus, light-yellow; akin to Gr. χλόη, verdure, χλωρός, yellowish-green, OBulg. zelenŭ, yellow, green, Lith. zalias, green, Skt. hari, yellow: see chlor-, gold. Perhaps also akin to Gr. χολή = L. fel, bile, gall, = E. gall: see gall[1].]

I. a. Of a color resembling that of gold, butter, etc. See II. Yellow is sometimes used in the sense of 'jaundiced,' 'jealous,' etc., the color being regarded as a token or symbol of jealousy, envy, melancholy, etc.: a usage no doubt connected with the figurative notions attaching to jaundice, the skin having a yellow hue in that disease.

His Nekke is ralowe, aftre colour of an Orielle, that is a Sterr well schynynge. Mandeville, Travels, p. 48.

His here, that was gele and bright,
Bine it bicome anourright.
Gy of Warwike, p. 220. (Halliwell.)

She gave it Cassio, but thereat
Why roll your yellow eye?
Tragedie of Othello the Moor, quoted in Furness's [Variorum Othello, p. 398 (App.)

A primrose by a river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more.
Wordsworth, Peter Bell, i. 12.

Acute yellow atrophy of the liver, a disease characterized by a granular fatty degeneration of various tissues of the body, particularly of the glands and muscles, the changes being usually most evident in the liver.—Blue-winged yellow warbler. See warbler.—Imperial yellow porcelain. See imperial. King's yellow worm. See redia.—Order of the Yellow String. See order. Spotted yellow flycatcher[1], same as African warbler. See warbler.—Spotted yellow warbler. See warbler, and cut under spotted.—To wear yellow hose or stockings[1], to be jealous.

Jealous men are either knaves or coxcombs; be you neither; you wear yellow hose without cause.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

Yellow adder's-tongue, admiral, antimony. See the nouns.—Yellow ant, a species of ant, Lasius flavus, common to Europe and North America.—Yellow arsenic[1]. See arsenic, 1.—Yellow ash, asphodel, avens. See the nouns.—Yellow baboon, the wood baboon.—Yellow bachelor's-buttons. See bachelor's buttons. Yellow balsam. (a) The touch-me-not, Impatiens Noli-tangere. (b) See balsam. Yellow bark. Same as Bahian bark (which see, under bark[2]).—Yellow bass, the brass-bass.—Yellow bear, the larva of a common bombycid moth, Spilosoma virginica, commonly called the Virginia tiger-moth. [U. S.]—Yellow bedstraw. See bedstraw, 2 (a).—Yellow belle, a rare British geometrid moth, Apolasia silvaria.—Yellow berries. Same as Persian berries (which see, under Persian). Yellow birch. See birch.—Yellow bird's-nest, Hypopitys multiflora (Monotropa Hypopitys). See bird's-nest, 1 (b).—Yellow boa, the yellow snake (see below).—Yellow box, Eucalyptus melliodora, of New South Wales and Victoria, a large tree with a thick trunk and spreading top. The wood is prized for various kinds of artizans' work, for ship building, fuel, etc. The name is also ascribed to the blood-wood, E. corymbosa, of New South Wales and Queensland, of which the wood is very hard when dry, and durable underground.—Yellow boy. (a) A gold coin. (Slang.)

John did not starve his cause: there wanted not yellow boys to fee counsel. Arbuthnot, Hist. John Bull, i. 6.

(b) A mulatto or a dark quadroon: used (as also yellow girl) both by whites and by negroes. [Southern U. S.]—Yellow broom. See broom[1], 1.—Yellow broom. See broom[1].—Yellow bugle. Same as ground-pine, 1.—Yellow bunting, the yellow hammer.—Yellow butterwort. See Pinguicula.—Yellow camomile, candle. See the nouns.—Yellow canker-worm, the larva of a common geometrid moth, Hybernia tiliaria, commonly called the lime-tree winter-moth. [U. S.]—Yellow carmine, a pigment of variable composition. It is generally a lake formed from Persian berries or quercitron-bark.—Yellow cartilage, elastic or reticular cartilage; fibro-cartilage containing yellow elastic fibers. See cartilage and reticular.—Yellow cat, a certain catfish, Leptops olivaris, one of the mud-cats. See Leptops.—Yellow cedar. Same as yellow cypress.—Yellow cells, in Sertularia, sarcoblasts; peculiar saccated structures in the Radiolaria, containing yellow protoplasm (possibly parasites). Pearce.—Yellow centaury. (a) Same as yellow-wort. (b) The yellow star-thistle, Centaurea solstitialis.—Yellow chestnut, the yellow chestnut-oak, Quercus prinoides (Q. Castanea). See chestnut-oak, under oak.—Yellow cinchona bark. See Cinchona.—Yellow clover. See clover, 1.—Yellow colors. See II., 3.—Yellow copper. Same as yellow ore. See below.—Yellow copperas. Same as copperas.—Yellow cornelline, an orange-colored dye formed from picric acid, or picra, which latter is produced by the joint action of oxalic and sulphuric acids on carbolic acid.—Yellow crake, the yellow rail.—Yellow cranberry-worm, the larva of a tortricid moth, Teras vacciniivorana, injurious to the cranberry in the United States. Also called yellow-headed cranberry-worm, in contradistinction to the black-headed cranberry-worm, which latter, also called fire-worm, is the larva of Rhopobota vacciniana.—Yellow cress, the winter-cress, Barbarea; also, either of two yellow-flowered species of water-cress, Nasturtium palustre and N. amphibium.—Yellow cypress, a tree, Chamæcyparis Nutkaensis, of northwestern North America, the most valuable timber-tree of Alaska. Its wood is light, hard, and close-grained, easily worked, and very durable in contact with the soil; it receives a beautiful satiny polish, and is probably not surpassed as a cabinet-wood among North American trees. It is somewhat used in boat- and ship-building, and for furniture, inside finish, etc. Also Nuka cypress, yellow cedar.—Yellow dead-nettle. See dead nettle, and weasel-snout.—Yellow deal. See Scotch pine, under pine[1].—Yellow dock. See dock[1], 1.—Yellow dog's-tooth violet. See violet.—Yellow dyes. See II., 1.—Yellow dye-tree, Xylopia (Cadamba) polycarpa, of tropical Africa, a tree whose bark is bitter and contains berberine. It affords the natives a much-used yellow dye, and in Sierra Leone is used topically in the treatment of obstinate ulcers.—Yellow ebony. See ebony, n.—Yellow eglantine. See yellow rose, under rose[1].—Yellow elastic cartilage. Same as yellow cartilage (see above).—Yellow fever. See fever[1].—Yellow fibrous tissue, a kind of tissue distinguished by its yellow color and its great elasticity. It is seen in the ligamentum nuchæ of many quadrupeds, in the walls of the arteries, to which it gives its peculiar elasticity, in the vocal cords of the larynx, and elsewhere.—Yellow fiddlewood. Same as sparrow-tree.—Yellow finch. See finch[1].—Yellow fir. See Oregon pine, under pine[1].—Yellow flag. (a) See flag[2]. (b) See flag[2] and Iris.—Yellow flower-de-luce, the yellow flag or iris, Iris Pseudacorus.—Yellow foxglove, Digitalis lutea, of continental Europe; also Gerardia flava, the downy false foxglove of North America.—Yellow gentian, the common gentian or bitterwort, Gentiana lutea.—Yellow girl. See yellow bug (b).—Yellow goat. Same as dzeren.—Yellow goat's-beard, the common goat's-beard, Tragopogon pratensis.

Yellow gowan, a name of various yellow-flowered plants, chiefly Ranunculus acris and other buttercups, and Caltha palustris, the marsh-marigold. [Scotch.]

Yellow gum. (a) Same as accaroid gum (which see, under gum[1]). (b) See yellow gums.—Yellow gurnard, hawk. See the nouns.—Yellow Hercules. Same as prickly yellow-wood (see yellow-wood).—Yellow honeysuckle, one of the trumpet honeysuckles, Lonicera flava, a rare plant of high lands in South Carolina and Georgia, somewhat in cultivation. The flowers are bright orange-red in terminal capitate clusters. The yellow Italian honeysuckle is a variety of Lonicera Caprifolium.—Yellow iris, Jack, jasmine, lady's-slipper, lake, lily, locust, lupine. See the nouns.—Yellow lead ore. Same as wulfenite.—Yellow lemur, macaco[1], or macaucо[1]. Same as kinkajou.—Yellow locustrife, Lysimachia vulgaris.—Yellow mackerel, Caranx pinguior.—Yellow mastwood. See Xanthoxylum.—Yellow mellilot. See Melilotus.—Yellow metal, milk, oak. See the nouns.—Yellow mite, Tetranychus sexpunctatus, the common six-spotted mite, which damages the orange in Florida. Also called California spider. [Florida.]—Yellow ocher, the ordinary ocher of commerce, which is usually yellow, as distinguished from certain special ochers which are red and brown. See ocher.—Yellow ore, yellow ore of copper, copper pyrites, a sulphuret of copper and iron, the most generally distributed of all copper ores. [Cornwall (chiefly).]—Yellow oxeye. See oxeye.—Yellow-oxid-of-mercury ointment. See ointment.—Yellow perch. (a) See perch. (b) See Micropterus.—Yellow phlox, the western wallflower. See wallflower.—Yellow pickerel, pike, pine. See the nouns.—Yellow pimpernel. See Lysimachia.—Yellow pitch. Same as Burgundy pitch or white pitch (which see, under pitch[1]).—Yellow plover. See plover.—Yellow plum. See wild plum, under plum.—Yellow pond-lily. See pond-lily, 1.—Yellow poplar. Same as tulip-tree.—Yellow puccoon. See Hydrastis, Indian paint (under paint), and yellowroot.—Yellow quartz, false-topaz, or citrine. See quartz.—Yellow races, the Chinese, Mongolians, etc. See Xanthochroi.—Yellow rail, Porzana noveboracensis, a very small crake or short-billed rail of America of a general yellowish coloration.—Yellow rain. See rain[1], 2 (a).—Yellow rattle. See rattle[1], 6 (a).—Yellow redpoll. See redpoll[2], and warbler.—Yellow remittent fever. See fever[1].—Yellow robin, rose, sapphire. See the nouns.—Yellow sally. See sally[2], 2.—Yellow sculpin. See sculpin 1 and 4.—Yellow sickness. See sickness and hyacinth, 1.—Yellow snake, the West Indian Chilobothrus inornatus, a boa 8 or 10 feet long, of a dull-yellowish color varied with black, common in Jamaica.—Yellow snake-leaf, yellow snowdrop, old names of the yellow adder's-tongue, or dog-tooth violet, Erythronium Americanum.—Yellow soap. See soap, 1.—Yellow sponge. See bath sponge.—Yellow spot. (a) In anat. See macula lutea, under macula. (b) In entom., Peck's skipper, Pyrgus peckius, a small hesperian butterfly of America of a brownish color with a large yellow blotch on each hind wing.—Yellow starch. See starch[1], n., 2.—Yellow star-of-Bethlehem. See Gagea.—Yellow star-thistle, starwort, suckling, sweetwood. See the nouns.—Yellow sulphur springs water. See water.—Yellow sweet-sultan. See sultan, 4.—Yellow tamarind, tanager, thistle. See the nouns.—Yellow thrush[1]. Same as oriole 1.—Yellow tit, one of several species of Indian flycatcher birds of the genus Machlolophus, having the head crested and the plumage chiefly yellow or green.—Yellow toad-flax, the common toad-flax.—Yellow trout, ultramarine, underwing, wagtail. See the nouns.—Yellow viper, the fer-de-lance.—Yellow wall-lichen, a species of lichen, Parmelia parietaria, which grows on trees and walls. It yields a yellow coloring matter, and is used in intermittent fevers.—Yellow warbler, wash, water-cress, water-crowfoot, wolf's-bane, wood-sorrel, wren. See the nouns.—Yellow water-lily. See pond-lily, 1.—Yellow willow, the golden osier, a variety of the white willow (which see, under willow).—Yellow yeldring, yerling, or yowley, the European yellow-hammer.

II. n. 1. The color of gold, butter, the neutral chromates of lead, potassa, etc., and of light of wave-length about 0.581 micron. It has some remarkable properties, which are due to the fact that by far the greater part of the visible spectrum consists of two regions, in either of which any three colors being taken a suitable mixture of the extreme ones will match the middle one, and that the yellow is about the middle of one of these regions which contains four fifths of all the visible light of the solar spectrum. This region is bounded by the scarlet and the emerald green; the other by the emerald-green and the violet-blue. These three colors are thus the only ones which cannot be matched by mixtures of others. They are also more chromatic or high-colored than those which fall between them in the spectrum; for which reasons physicists regard these three colors as the elementary ones. (See color.) A remarkable property of yellow is that an increase of light merely intensifies the sensation with a slight heightening of the color, without changing the hue; while blue, on the other hand, is rendered pale by increased illumination, and all other colors are rendered yellowish. The name yellow is restricted to highly chromatic and luminous colors. When reduced in chroma, it becomes buff; when reduced in luminosity, a seal brown. Mixed with red, yellow goes over into orange, mixed with green, into yellow-green. Lemon-yellow and canary yellow may be taken as pure yellows, the latter being a little greener. Sulphur-yellow is a little greenish; primrose is a little greenish and pale; gamboge is a very slightly orange yellow. By chrome-yellow is usually meant a little more orange and most intensely chromatic color. Indian, cadmium, and saffron yellows are orange-yellows; Naples yellow and maize-yellow are pale orange-yellows. Ocher-yellow, clay-yellow, and wax-yellow are of somewhat diminished chroma, the first a little orange, and the last a little green. It is impossible to describe the yellows more precisely, as the slightest causes — for example, a little thicker layer of paint, or illumination from another part of the sky — change their hues decidedly.

The cercles of his eyen in his head
They gloweden bitwixe yelow and reed.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1274.

Your French crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.
Shak., M. N. D., i. 2. 98.

2. The yolk of an egg; the vitellus: opposed to the white, or the surrounding albumen.—3. pl. Jaundice, especially jaundice in cattle (see jaundice); hence, figuratively, jealousy.

His horse, . . . spod with spavins, rayed with the yellows. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2, 54.

Thy blood is yet uncorrupted, yellows has not tainted it.
The Lancashire Lovers (1640), p. 27. (Halliwell.)

4. pl. Dyer's weed. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—5. Same as peach-yellows.

The yellows is its [the peach's] most fatal disease.
New Amer. Farm Book, p. 222.

6. One of certain geometrid moths: an English collectors' name: as, the speckled yellow.—7. Any one of the group of small yellow butterflies; a sulphur. See sulphur, n., 3.—Antimony yellow, yellow antimony. See antimony.—Cassel yellow. Same as mineral yellow. Chinese yellow. Same as king's yellow. Cobalt yellow, a pigment used by artists, composed of the double nitrite of potassium and cobalt. It is permanent, and more closely resembles the yellow of the spectrum than any other pigment.—Fast yellow, same as acid yellow. Fol's yellow, a color formerly used in dyeing, made by heating carbolic acid and arsenic in a pot. It dyes wool and silk yellow, and gives red shades with lime.—Imperial yellow, in ceram., a variety of Chinese porcelain having a uniform yellow glaze, said to be reserved for the use of the imperial family or court; also, by extension, porcelain of any make supposed to resemble this in color. Indian yellow, a bright yellow pigment obtained in India. It is supposed to be the earth dug up from the stables where cows have been housed during the winter and fed on mango-leaves. In the crude form it comes in commerce in balls of from 3 to 6 inches, having an offensive urinous odor. It is an impure magnesium salt of euxanthic acid. For artistic purposes it is washed and levigated, the foreign material being carefully separated. Thus purified it gives an orange yellow of great depth and beauty. It is quite permanent, and is used both as an oil and as a water color.—King's yellow, a pigment formed by subliming a mixture of arsenious acid and sulphur. It consists of arsenious acid and arsenic trisulphid, or orpiment. Also Chinese yellow. Madder-yellow, a lake prepared from madder-root. It is bright in tone, somewhat similar to Indian yellow, but more transparent.—Manchester yellow, a coal tar color used in dyeing, being the sodium or calcium salt of dinitronaphtholsulphonic acid. It is applicable to silk and wool, producing shades from pale lemon to deep orange. It is not fast to light. It is also known as Martius's yellow, naphthol yellow, golden yellow, saffron yellow, naphthalene yellow.—Mars yellow, an artificially prepared oxid of iron, resembling the natural yellow ocher. It is used by artists as a pigment.—Martius's yellow. Same as Manchester yellow.—Mineral yellow. See mineral. Montpellier yellow. Same as mineral yellow.—Naples yellow, a light-yellow pigment of various shades and of varying composition. The true pigment is a basic antimoniate of lead, but it is imitated by mixtures, as of cadmium yellow and zinc white, or of white lead and chrome yellow. It has a good body, and is quite permanent.—Paris yellow. Same as chrome-yellow.—Patent yellow. Same as mineral yellow.—Perfect yellow, chromate of zinc, used as a pigment by artists. It is a light, bright yellow, and is quite permanent.—Rasanal yellow. Same as turpentine. Speckled yellow. See speckled. Strontian yellow. See strontian.—Turner's yellow, an oxychlorid of lead employed as a yellow pigment; same as mineral yellow.

yellow (yel'ō), v. [< yellow, a.] I. trans. To render yellow.

So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd. Shak., Sonnets, xvii.

While the morning light
Was yellowing the hill-tops.
Wordsworth, Prelude, v.

II. intrans. To become yellow; grow yellow.

The noisy flock of thievish birds at work
Among the yellowing vineyards.
Browning, Sordello, i.

yellowammer (yel'ō-am'ėr), n. Same as yellowhammer, 1.

yellow-backed (yel'ō-bakt), a. Having the back yellow, or having yellow on the back: specific in some phrase-names of animals: as, the blue yellow-backed warbler, Parula americana (which see, under Parula).

yellow-barred (yel'ō-bärd), a. Barred with yellow: as, the yellow-barred brindle, Lobophora sinotata, a British geometrid moth whose larva feeds on privet.

yellow-beak (yel'ō-bēk), n. Same as bepat. — Abbot of yellow-beaks. See abbot.

yellow-bellied (yel'ō-bel'id), a. Having the belly yellow, or having yellow on the abdomen: specific in phrase-names of many different animals; as, the yellow-bellied flycatcher, Empidonax flaviventris; the yellow-bellied woodpecker, Sphyropicus varius. See cut under sap-sucker.

yellowbelly (yel'ō-bel'i), n. A sole-like flounder, Rhombosolea leporina. Science, XV. 141.

yellowbill (yel'ō-bil), n. The American black scoter, Œdemia americana: from the yellow lump on the bill. Also called, for the same reason, butter-bill, butter-nose, copper-nose, and pumpkin-blossom coot. [New Eng.]

yellow-billed (yel'ō-bild), a. Having the bill or beak more or less yellow: specific in phrase-names of various birds. Yellow-billed cuckoo, Coccyzus americanus, the common rain-crow of the United States. See cut under Coccyzus. Yellow-billed loon, Colymbus (or Urinator) adamsi, a very large loon of arctic North America, having the bill mostly dull horn-yellow, and of a different shape from the black bill of the common loon. Yellow-billed magpie, Pica nuttalli, or Nuttall's magpie, the common magpie of California, whose bill is bright-yellow, instead of black as in most other magpies. Yellow-billed tropic-bird, Phaëthon flavirostris.

yellowbird (yel'ō-bėrd), n. One of several different birds of a yellow or golden color. (a) In Great Britain, the golden oriole, Oriolus galbula. Montagu. See first cut under oriole. (b) In the United States, the summer warbler, or summer yellowbird, Dendræca æstiva, a small dentirostral insectivorous bird of the family Mniotiltidæ, of a bright yellow color, obscured on the back, the male streaked on the under parts with reddish. It is one of the most abundant and familiar birds of the country, inhabiting nearly the entire continent in summer, and much of Central America in winter. See cut under warbler. (c) In the United States, the American goldfinch or thistle-bird, Chrysomitris, Astragalinus, or Spinus tristis, a conirostral granivorous bird of the family Fringillidæ. The male in summer is clear yellow, with black on the head, wings, and tail; in winter the yellow is exchanged for pale flaxen-brown. It is very abundant in the eastern United States and Canada. See cut under goldfinch.

yellow-breasted (yel'ō-bres'ted), a. Having the breast wholly or partly yellow; specific in phrase-names of various animals, especially birds: as, the yellow-breasted chat (see cut under chat[2]).

yellow-browed (yel'ō-broud), a. In ornith., having a yellow superciliary line: as, the yellow-browed warbler, Phylloscopus superciliosus. See cut under Phylloscopus. Yellow-browed shrike. See shrike[2].

yellow-covered (yel'ō-kuv'ėrd), a. Covered with yellow; especially, covered or bound in yellow paper. Yellow-covered literature, trashy or sensational fiction, periodicals, etc., in allusion to the form in which such matter was formerly commonly issued. [Colloq.] yellowcrown (yel'ō-kroun), n. The yellow-rump or myrtle-bird, Dendræca coronata.

yellow-crowned (yel'ō-kround), a. Having the top of the head yellow, or yellow on the crown, as various birds; yellow-polled: as, the yellow-crowned night-heron. See night-heron. — Yellow-crowned thrush. See Trichopsomus. — Yellow-crowned warbler. See warbler. Yellow-crowned weaver. See sconce-bird.

yellow-duckwing (yel'ō-duk wing), n. Noting a variety of duckwing game-fowls whose distinguishing color mark on the wing of the cock is golden or yellow. The back of the cock is orange or crimson. Compare silver-duckwing.

yellow-eyed (yel'ō-id), a. Having yellow eyes, or a yellow eye, in any sense; also, yellow around the eyes. — Yellow-eyed grass. See Xyris.

yellowfin (yel'ō-fin), n. Same as redfin, 2.

yellowfish (yel'ō-fish), n. A chiroid fish of the coast of Alaska, Hexagrammus (Pleurogrammus) monopterygius. This is one of the rock-trouts, and a food-fish of some importance, locally known as Atka mackerel. It is dark-olive above and yellowish below, cross-barred on the sides with the color of the back; the fins are nearly plain dusky, the pectorals with blackish margin, and the dorsal fin is continuous or but slightly emarginate.

yellow-footed (yel'ō-fūt'ed), a. Having yellow feet: as, the yellow-footed armadillo, the poyou; the yellow-footed rock-kangaroo, Petrogale xanthopus: specific in phrase-names of various animals.

yellow-fronted (yel'ō-frun'ted), a. In ornith., having the front (of the head) yellow, or having yellow there: as, the yellow-fronted warbler. — Yellow-fronted warbler. See warbler.

yellow-golds (yel'ō-göldz'), n. A golden-flowered plant, probably the marigold, Calendula officinalis. See gold, 6.

yellow-gum (yel'ō-gum), n. 1. The jaundice of infants (icterus infantum). — 2. Same as blackgum.

yellowham (yel'ō-ham), n. The European yellowhammer.

Yellow hammer, with its abbreviation yellow Ham. Farrell, Brit. Birds (4th ed.), II. 43, note. (Encyc. Dict.) yellowhammer (yel'ō-ham'ėr), n. [Cf. dial. yellowcombe, yellowomber; < yellow + hammer[3], prop. ammer: see hammer[3].] 1. The yellow bunting, Emberiza citrinella, one of the commonest birds of the western Palearctic region. It is about 7 inches long, the head, cheeks, front of the neck, belly, and lower tail coverts are of a bright yellow; the upper surface is partly yellow, but chiefly brown, the feathers on the top of the back being blackish in the middle, and the tail-feathers also blackish. The yellowhammer is a resident in Great Britain, and generally throughout Europe. In summer the well-known notes of the male are almost incessantly heard from the roadside hedge. Also called goldhammer, yellowammer, yellowham, yellow-

Yellow-bunting (Emberiza citrinella).

ombre, yellow-gold, -ite, yellow-gorlan, yellow-gorlen (and with variants yeldrock, yeldrock), also scribbling-lark and writing-lark (from the scratchy markings of its eggs), and by various other local or provincial names, as yite.

2. In the United States, a local misnomer of the flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker, Colaptes auratus (see cut under flicker[2]). No bird much like or congeneric with the true yellowhammer exists in North America, but popular ignorance would have it otherwise and pitched upon this woodpecker as a subject for the name, or perhaps the name was given because the bird is extensively yellow and "hammers" trees. The European yellowhammer resembles and is congeneric with the ortolan of that country, Emberiza hortulana; and the United States bird which really looks something like the yellowhammer is the bobolink in the fall, when it is called reed-bird, rice-bird, and ortolan.

3†. A gold coin, a yellow boy. [Old slang.]

Is that he that has gold enough? would I had some of his yell-o-hammers! Shirley, Bird in a Cage, ii. 1.

yellow-headed (yel'ō-hed'ed), a. Having the head yellow, or yellow on the head: as, the yellow-headed blackbird. See cut under Xanthocephalus. — Yellow-headed tit or titmouse, the gold tit, Auriparus flaviceps.

yellow-horned (yel'ō-hôrnd), a. Having yellow antennæ: as, the yellow-horned moth, Cymatophora flavicornis, a British noctuid.

yellowing (yel'ō-ing'), n. [Verbal n. of yellow, v.] In pin-manuf., the operation of boiling the pins in an acid solution preparatory to purling or tinning.

yellowish (yel'ō-ish), a. [< yellow + -ish[1].] Tending to be yellow; somewhat yellow: yellowish, the yellowish monitor, Varanus flavescens.

In his youth he was unhealthy, and of an ill complexion (yellowish). Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Hobbes).

yellowishness (yel'ō-ish-nes), n. The state or property of being yellowish. Boyle.

yellow-jack (yel'ō-jak), n. See yellow Jack, under jack[1].

yellow-jacket (yel'ō-jak'et), n. Any one of several species of true social wasps or hornets of the genus Vespa, which have the body more or less marked with yellow; any hornet, as V. crabro. See cut under hornet. Vespa vulgaris, an importation from Europe, is the common yellow-jacket of the United States.

The mellow, perfumed apples dropped heavily on the grass and the busy yellow-jackets rioted among them. The Atlantic, LXVI. 778.

yellowleg, yellowlegs (yel'ō-leg, -legz), n. A tattler of the family Scolopacidæ and genus Totanus (section Gambetta); the T. or G. flavipes: so called from the color of its legs. The form yellowlegs is the more common. It inhabits the greater part of North America, migrating in winter into Central and South America and is an abundant and well-known game bird, especially during the autumnal migration, when it is found in flocks about the marshes, feeding upon fish fry, mollusks, crustaceans, etc., and becoming fat and highly prized for the table. It is about 11 inches long, the bill 1½ inches, the tarsus about 2 inches. The name extends to a similar but larger species, the T. or G. melanoleucus, the two being distinguished as the lesser and greater yellowlegs. The latter is decidedly larger, beyond dimensions ever reached by the former, as length 13 to 14 inches, bill 2 or more, tarsus 2½, etc. These birds are also called lesser and greater yellowshanks and by various other names. See tattler and Totanus.

Greater Yellowlegs (Totanus melanoleucus).

yellow-legged (yel'ō-leg'ed or -legd), a. Having yellow legs: as, the yellow-legged clearwing, a British hawk-moth, Sesia cynipiformis or Trochilium cynipiforme. The yellow-legged herring-gull is Larus cachinnans of Pallas. The so-called yellow-legged plover of the United States is the lesser yellowlegs, Totanus flavipes. — Yellow-legged goose. See goose. — Yellow-legged sandpiper. See sandpiper, and cut under ruff.

yellow-legger (yel'ō-leg'ėr), n. 1. The yellowlegs. — 2. A fisherman from Eastham. [Provincetown, Massachusetts.]

yellow-line (yel'ō-lin), a. Having yellow lines or streaks: as, the yellow-line quaker, Orthosia macilenta, a British noctuid moth.

yellowly (yel'ō-li), adv. [< yellow + -ly[2].] In a yellow manner; with an appearance of yellowness.

The town of Asterabad, with its picturesque towers and ramparts gleaming yellowly in the noonday sun. O'Donovan, Merv, v.

yellow-necked (yel'ō-nekt), a. Having the neck yellow: as, the yellow-necked caterpillar, the larva of a common North American bombycid moth, Datana ministra, which feeds in communities on the foliage of apple, hickory, and walnut in the United States.

yellowness (yel'ō-nes), n. 1. The state or property of being yellow.

The Purifying Pills, which kept you alive, if they did not remove the yellowness. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xlv.

2†. Jealousy. See yellow, a.

I will incense Page to deal with poison: I will possess him with yellowness. Shak., M. W. of W., I. 3. 111.

yellowomber (yel'ō-om'bėr), n. Same as yellowhammer, 1.

yellowpoll (yel'ō-pōl), n. The male widgeon or goldenhead, Mareca penelope. [Ireland.] — Yellowpoll warbler. Same as yellow-polled warbler.

yellow-polled (yel'ō-pōld), a. In ornith., yellow-crowned: as, the yellow-polled warbler. See warbler.

yellow-ringed (yel'ō-ringd), a. Ringed with yellow: as, the yellow-ringed carpet, Larentia flavicinctata, a British geometrid moth.

yellow-rocket (yel'ō-rok'et), n. The common winter-cress, Barbarea vulgaris. Also called bitter winter-cress and winter rocket.

yellowroot (yel'ō-rōt), n. 1. Same as shrub-yellowroot.—2. An American herb, Hydrastis Canadensis, named also orange-root, yellow puccoon, Indian paint, turmeric-root, and especially (in medicine) goldenseal. Its rootstock contains hydrastine and berberine, and is an official remedy of an unquestioned tonic property and with various powers less established, applied in dyspepsia, in jaundice and other disorders of the liver, as a laxative, alterative, etc. See Hydrastis and hydrastine.—Shrub yellowroot. See Xanthorrhiza and shrub-yellowroot.

yellowrump (yel'ō-rump), n. The yellow-rumped warbler, Dendroica coronata, the yellow-crowned warbler, or myrtle-bird. See warbler and myrtle-bird.—Western yellowrump, Audubon's warbler, Dendroica auduboni. See warbler.

yellow-rumped (yel'ō-rumpt), a. Having the rump (or upper tail-coverts in some cases) yellow, as various birds. (See yellowrump.) The yellow-rumped seed-eater is a certain finch, Crithagra chrysopygia.

yellow-sally (yel'ō-sal'i), n. See yellow sally, under sally[2], 2.

yellowseed (yel'ō-sēd), n. A species of peppergrass, Lepidium campestre, native in the Old World, introduced in North America; mithridate pepperwort.

yellow-shafted (yel'ō-shaft'ed), a. Having the shafts of certain feathers yellow: as, the yellow-shafted flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker, Colaptes auratus. See cut under flicker[2], and compare red-shafted.

yellowshank, yellowshanks (yel'ō-shangk, -shangks), n. Same as yellowlegs. Compare greenshank, redshank.

yellowshell (yel'ō-shel), n. A British geometrid moth, Camptogramma bilineata, whose yellow wings are marked with white lines.

yellowshins (yel'ō-shinz), n. Same as yellowlegs.

yellow-shouldered (yel'ō-shol'dėrd), a. In ornith., having the bend of the wing yellow, or having yellow on the carpal angle of the wing: as, the yellow-shouldered amazon, a South American parrakeet, Chrysotis ochroptera.

yellow-spotted (yel'ō-spot'ed), a. Spotted with yellow: as, the yellow-spotted tortoise of the Ganges. Yellow-spotted willow-slug. See willow-slug.

Yellowstone trout. See trout[1].

yellowtail (yel'ō-tāl), n. and a. I, n. 1. An earthworm yellow about the tail. Topsell, Serpents, p. 307. (Halliwell.)—2. One of various fishes. (a) A carangoid fish of the genus Seriola as S. dorsalis. See cut under amber fish. [U. S.] (b) A carangoid fish, Elagatis pinnulatus. [Florida.] (c) A certain goid fish, Caranx georgianus. [Auckland, New Zealand.] (d) A scienoid fish, Bairdiella chrysura, the silver perch. [U. S.] (e) A sparoid fish, Lagodon rhomboides, the pinfish. See cut under Lagodon. [U. S.] (f) A scorpænoid fish, Sebastichthys flavidus, one of the rockfishes. [California.] (g) A clupeoid fish, Brevoortia tyrannus, the menhaden. See cut under Brevoortia. [U. S.] (h) A cirrhitoid fish, Lovettia hecatea, the trumpeter. (i) A gadoid fish, Lotella bacchus. [New Zealand.]

II, a. Yellow-tailed. Yellowtail moth, Liparis auriflua, a British species. Yellowtail warbler. See warbler.

yellow-tailed (yel'ō-tāld), a. Having the tail more or less yellow: specific in many phrase-names of animals.

yellowthroat (yel'ō-thrōt), n. Any bird of the old genus Trichas (of Swainson), now Geothlypis: as, the Maryland yellowthroat. See cut under Geothlypis.

yellow-throated (yel'ō-thrō'ted), a. Having the throat more or less yellow: specific in many phrase-names of animals: as, the yellow-throated finch, warbler, etc.—Yellow-throated greenlet or vireo, Vireo flavifrons, a common greenlet of eastern North America, of rather large size and stout billed, having the whole throat and breast bright-yellow, the other under parts white, the upper parts yellowish-green.

yellow-top (yel'ō-top), n. A variety of turnip: so called from the color of the skin on the upper part of the bulb.

yellow-vented (yel'ō-ven'ted), a. Having the vent-feathers yellow, or being yellow on the crissum: as, the yellow-vented bulbul Pycnonotus xanthorrhous.

yellow-weed (yel'ō-wēd), n. 1. Same as wechl.—2. A common name of coarse species of goldenrod. See Solidago.

yellow-winged (yel'ō-wingd), a. Marked with yellow on the wing, as various birds, etc.—Blue yellow-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera. See cut under Helminthophaga.—Yellow-winged locust, a North American locust, or short-horned grasshopper, Pezomastax sulphureus; so called from its yellow hind wings. F. W. Harris.—Yellow-winged sparrow, a grasshopper-sparrow, Coturniculus passerinus. See cut under Coturniculus.—Yellow-winged sugar-bird, a common guiraca, Guiraca cærulea. See cut under Coereba.—Yellow-winged woodpecker, the yellow-shafted flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker. See cut under flicker.

yellow-wood (yel'ō-wud), n. 1. Same as fustic.—2. Cladrastis tinctoria, the American or Kentucky yellow-wood, in cultivation commonly known as Virgilia lutea, also called gopher-wood and yellow ash. In the wild state it is a rare tree, found locally in Kentucky, Tennessee, and

Yellow-wood (Cladrastis tinctoria). a, pod

North Carolina. It grows from 30 to 40 feet high, and bears pinnate leaves with seven to ten leaflets, and ample racemes of white pea-like flowers drooping from the ends of the branches. It is highly ornamental for both flowers and foliage. It has a hard yellow wood, which is used for fuel and to some extent for gun-stocks, and yields a clear yellow dye. For another American yellow-wood, see Schaefferia. The Osage orange, Maclura aurantiaca, of the same genus as the fustic, is sometimes so named, as is also the shrub yellowroot, Xanthorrhiza apiifolia.

3. Same as white teak. See teak.—Australian yellow-wood. See light yellow wood and Queensland yellow-wood. Acronychia laevis, of the Rutaceæ, found at Moreton Bay, is also called yellow-wood, as are Homalium racemosum, a tall leguminous shrub, and Xanthostemon psychrospermum of the Myrtaceæ.—Cape yellow-wood, Podocarpus Thunbergii, a small tree with bright-yellow fine-grained wood, very handsome when polished. Compare Natal yellow-wood.—East Indian yellow-wood, the satin wood Chloroxylon Swietenia, also, Podocarpus latifolia, an evergreen 80 feet high, with aromatic wood.—Light yellow-wood, a tree, Rhus rhodanthema, of New South Wales, growing 70 or 80 feet high, peculiar in its genus in bearing large red flowers. The wood is of a light yellow color, sound and durable, close-grained, and taking a fine polish; it is one of the best cabinet-woods of its locality. The Queensland yellow-wood has also been called by this name.—Natal yellow-wood, Podocarpus elongata, a tree from 30 to 50 feet high, with a close-grained wood extensively used in building and for furniture, though not bearing exposure. The bastard yellow wood of the Natal region is Ptaeroxylon, with the wood pale yellow, tough, and durable, extensively used for building.—Prickly yellow-wood, the West Indian Xanthoxylum Caribæum (X. Clava Herculis of some authors), a tree from 20 to 30 feet high: the wood is used for making furniture and inlaying, the prickly young stems are made into walking-sticks. Also called prickly yellow. Other West Indian xanthoxylums are also called yellow wood.—Queensland yellow-wood, Flindersia Oxleyana (Oxleya xanthoxyla), also called teak (which see, under teak) and light yellow wood.—Scholtzia of the same region, is a valuable shade tree of the same name.

yellow-wort (yel'ō-wėrt), n. A European annual plant, Chlora perfoliata, of the gentian family. It is a very glaucous plant, about a foot high, the stem leaves in pairs and connate-perfoliate, the flowers bright-yellow in loose terminal cymes. Also called yellow centaury.

yellow-wrack (yel'ō-rak), n. A seaweed, Ascophyllum nodosum (Fucus nodosus of Linnæus).

yellowy (yel'ō-i), a. [< yellow + y[1].] Somewhat yellow; yellowish; flavescent.

A little kerchief of colored muslin and ancient yellowy lace . . . over her decent shoulders drawn.
R. Broughton, Joan and Z.

yelm (yelm), n. [< ME. yelm, < AS. gelm, gilm, a handful. Cf. gleam.] A handful; a sheaf of straw or grain. [Prov. Eng.]

yelm (yelm), v. t. and i. [< yelm, n.] To lay straws in order to fit for use by a thatcher. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

A woman yelming 14 days, 1s. 9d.
H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App. II.

yelp (yelp), v. [Also dial. yaup, yawp; < ME. yelpen, yolpen, boast, < AS. gilpan, gelpan, gylpan (pret. gealp) (MHG. gelfen), boast, exult, = Icel. gulpa, yelp; perhaps akin to yell. The mod. sense (yelp as a dog is prob. due to Sense 1).] 1†. To boast; cry up a thing; exult; brag.

This . . . is yonder no thing but this: that he is more mouth than yelph either of his wife, either of his land, either of his works. Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 7.

I hope to-night to cause Sir Andrew to yelp.
Congreve, Knight's Tale, i. 1.

2. To give a sharp, shrill, quick cry. Specifically, to bark sharply and shrilly, yawp: said of dogs, and also of some other creatures, especially a wild turkey in gobbling.

The . . . wolf . . . stirred the house by . . . howling, . . . and at the least flourish of a broom-stick or ladle he would fly to the door with yelping precipitation.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 45.

Let the wild
Lean-headed Eagles yelp alone.
Tennyson, Princess, vii.

Now a hen yelps on the other side, and he [a turkey-cock] passes between the two calls, then struts and gobbles again.
Sport with Rod and Gun, II. 702.

yelp (yelp), n. [< ME. yelp, yolp, < AS. gilp, gylp, boast; from the verb.] 1†. A boast; boasting.—2. An eager bark or cry; a sharp, quick bark or cry caused by fear or pain.

The dog
With inward yelp and restless forefoot plies
His function of the woodland. Tennyson, Lucretius.

He put the dog's nose in and patted him, and Spike gave a yelp, as if a rat were in prospect.
R. D. Blackmore, Kit and Kitty, xxiv.

yelper (yel'pėr), n. [< ME. yelpere; < yelp + -er[1].] 1. One who boasts; a boaster.

The yelpere is the cookou, thet ne kan uegt alugte bote of him-selue. Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 22.

2. One who or that which yelps. Specifically—(a) A young dog; a whelp. Halliwell. (b) In ornith.: (1) The avocet, Recurvirostra avocetta, so called from its cry. [Local, Eng.] (2) The greater yellowlegs, Totanus melanoleucus. Shore Birds, p. 37. (c) A whistle or call used by sportsmen to imitate the cry of the wild turkey-hen.

We now take our yelper, and give a few sharp yelps; he [a wild turkey] hears the call.
Sport with Rod and Gun, II. 702.

yelping (yel'ping), n. [< ME. yelping, yulpenge; verbal n. of yelp, v.] 1†. Boasting.

The worthe [fourth] . . . whereby the proude seeawith prede of his herte is yelpinggne. Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 22.

2. The act of giving a short, sharp cry or bark; specifically, the cry of a wild turkey-hen, or an imitation of it.

yelt† (yelt), A contraction of yieldeth, third person singular present indicative of yield.

yelting (yel'ting), n. The glass-eyed snapper, Lutjanus calles. Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 399.

yemant, yemanry†. Obsolete variants of yeoman, yeomanry.

yemet, n. [ME. yeme, yeme, yome, yome, < AS. geóme*, OS. góma = MD. goom = MLG. göm = OHG. gouma, gauma, MHG. goume, goum = Icel. gaumr, also gaum, heed, care, observance. Cf. gaum[1], gawm, a var. of yeme, due to the Scand. forms.] Notice; care; heed; attention.

ge trowkle take yeme
In wordde with me to dwell,
There shall ge artte be demo
XII kyndis of Israell. York Plays, p. 230.

This was the fifte treuly, I take ful gode yeme.
Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 12.

yemet, v. [ME. yemen, yemen, < AS. géman, gíeman, gýman = OS. gómean = OHG. goumjan, goumon, goumen, MHG. goumen = Goth. gaumjan, take care of, observe; from the noun.] I, trans. To care for; guard; take care of; protect.

Two gentlimen ther were that yemede the place.
Tale of Gamelyn, l. 267.

The cheyfteyns chief that ge chesse euere
Weren all to yonge of yeris to yeme swyche a rewme.
Richard the Redeless, i. 60.

II, intrans. To take care; be careful.

Enmanple of me take ge schall,
Rues for to yeme in goothe and elde,
To be buxsome in boure and hall,
Ilkone for to bode othir belde. York Plays, p. 225.

yemert, n. [ME. yemere; < yeme + -er[1].] A guardian.

Be kynge and quene and alle the comune after zyue the alle that thei may zliue on for the best yemere,
And so thou dauest wil thei do alle here dayes after.
Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 170.

yemola (ye-mō'lä), n. [Japanese.] An oil expressed from the seeds of Perilla arguta. See Perilla.

yen[1] (yen), adv. A dialectal form of yon.

yen[2], n. pl. A variant of eyen, plural of eye[1].

yen[3] (yen), n. [Jap., < Chinese yuen, round, a round thing, a dollar.] The monetary unit of Japan since 1871, represented (a) by a gold coin weighing 1.666 grams, .900 fine, and thus practically equal in value to the United States gold dollar, and (b) by a silver coin weighing 26.956 grams (416 grains), .900 fine, and thus about equal to the silver dollar of the United States. The yen is divided into hundredths called sen, and into mills called rin. One, two, five, ten, and twenty-yen pieces are coined, and the fractional silver currency consists of five-, ten-, twenty-, and fifty-sen pieces. See cut following page.

yender (yen'dėr), adv. A dialectal form of yonder.

yenet, v. An obsolete form of yearn.

yeni (yen'i), n. [S. Amer.] A South American tanager, Calliste yeni.

Yenisean, Yeniseian (yen-i-se'an, -yan), a. Of or pertaining to the Yenisei, a large river in Siberia.

yenite (yen'īt), n. [Also jenite; < Jena, a town in Germany, + *-ite*².] In mineral., same as ilvaite.

Obverse.

Reverse.

Silver Yen. (Size of original.)

yeoman (yō'man), n.; pl. yeomen (-men). [Early mod. E. yoman; < ME. yoman, yomon, gheman, yeman, geman, gheman; not found in AS., but prob. existent as gāman*, geaman, gēman* (= OFries. gāman, gāmon, a villager (cf. gafolk, people of a village), = MD. goymannen, arbitrators, = Icel. gæmaðr, a franklin – rare, and prob. < AS.); < AS. gā*, gea*, gē*, a district or village, as in comp. æl-gē, 'province of eels,' Ohtga-ga, Noxga-gē (= OFries. ga, go (pl. ge), a district village, = MD. gouwe (in comp. goo-, goy-, go-), a village, field, D. gouw, gouwe, a province, = MHG. gō, LG. gou, gouwe, in comp. gō-, a district, = OHG. gouwi, gouwe, gewi, MHG. gou, gouw, G. gau, a province, G. dial. gäu, the country, = Goth. gawi, a district), + man, man. The word has been erroneously explained otherwise: (a) A contraction of a supposed ME. yeme-man*, 'a person in charge,' < yeme, care, + man. (b) < AS. ieman, a forefather, ancient, < ie, of yore, + man. (c) < AS. iung man, geong man, young man. (d) < AS. guma, man. (e) < AS. gemēne, common. These attempts are all wrong. That which refers to AS. iung man, geong man, finds some color in the use of iung men as a quasi-technical name for a body-guard; but while the sense might seem to suit, it is impossible to derive ME. yo- or ye- from AS. geong, iung. The proper modern spelling is yoman, the eo being appar. due to an attempt to represent in one spelling the two variants yeman and yoman; the eo has no etymological justification, as it has to some extent in people.]

1†. A retainer; a guard.

Yomen than dede the ȝates schette,
& wiȝtlili than went the walles forto fende.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3549.

A yeman hadde he and servaunts nome
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 101.

2†. A gentleman attendant in a royal or noble household, ranking between a sergeant and a groom: as, yeoman for the mouth, a butler; yeoman of the crown; yeoman usher: applied also to attendants of lower grade: as, yeoman featherer (see featherer); yeoman of the chamber; yeoman of the wardrobe. See also phrase yeoman of the guard, below.

Yeomen of Chambre, IIII, to make beddes, to here or hold torches, to sette boordes, . . . and suche other servyce as the . . . ushers of chambre commaund or assigne.
Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 313, note.

Now of marschalle of halle wylle I spelle, . . .
Yomen vshere and grome also Vndur hym ar thes two.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 311.

Timochares, whose sonne was yeoman for the mouthe with the kynge, promysed to Fabricius, thanne beinge consull, to ale kynge Pyrrus.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 5.

The lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 45.

Four persons, who had been yeomen of the crown to Edward IV., were taken in Southwark and hanged at Tyburn.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., iv.

Hence—3†. One holding a subordinate position, as an attendant or assistant, journeyman, etc.

Master Fang, have you entered the action? . . . Where's your yeoman? Is't a lusty yeoman? will a' stand to't?
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 4.

Enter Master Tonterhook, Sergeant Ambush, and Yeoman Clutch.

Ten. Come, Sergeant Ambush, come, Yeoman Clutch, yon's the tavern; the gentlemen will come out presently.
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, iii. 2.

The reason for calling the journeymen of the craft yeomen and bachelors, was probably that they were at that time in England, as was the case in Germany, not allowed to marry before they were masters.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. cxivi., note.

4. In old Eng. law, one having free land of forty shillings by the year (previously five nobles), who was thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act for which the law required one who was "probus et legalis homo" (Blackstone, Com., I. xii.); hence, in recent English use, one owning (and usually himself cultivating) a small landed property; a freeholder.

I prese me none but good householders, yeomen's sons.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 2. 16.

Now do I smell th' astrologer's trick he'll steep me
In soldiers blood, or boil me in a caldron
Of barbarous law French; or anoint me over
With supple oil of great men's services;
For these three means raise yeomen to the gentry.
Tomkis (?), Albumazar, ii. 2.

The yeomen or Common People, . . . who have some Lands of their own to live upon, For a Carn of Land, or a Plough Land, was in ancient Time of the yearly Value of five Nobles, and this was the Living of a Stokeman or Yeoman; And in our Law they are called Legales Homines, a Word familiar to Writs and Inquests.
Coulton, Display of Heraldry (ed. 1724), II. 274.

After the economical changes which marked the early years of the fifteenth century, the yeoman class was strengthened by the addition of the body of tenant farmers, whose interests were very much the same as those of the smaller freeholders, and who shared with them the common name of yeoman. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 480.

5. In the United States navy, an appointed petty officer who has charge of the stores in his department. The ship's yeoman has charge of the boatswains, carpenters, sailmakers' stores, etc., and the engineer's yeoman has charge of all stores in the engineer's department, while the paymaster's yeoman takes care of provisions, clothing, and small stores, and issues them as directed.

6. A member of the yeomanry cavalry. See yeomanry, 4. Ayloun. Yeoman bedel. See bedel. Yeoman of the guard, in England, a member of the body guard of the sovereign. See beef-eater, 2.

There came a country gentleman (a sufficient yeoman) up to towne, who had severall sonnes but one an extraordinary proper handsome fellowe whom he did hope to have preferred to be a yeoman of the guard.
Aubrey, Lives (Walter Raleigh).

Yeoman's service, powerful or efficient aid, support, or help; in allusion to the strength and bravery of the yeomen in the English armies of early times.

I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning. But, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service. Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 36.

yeomanly (yō'man li), a. [< yeoman + *-ly*¹.] Of yeoman's rank; hence, plain; homely; simple; humble.

It would make him melancholy to see his yeomanly father cut his neighbours' throats to make his son a gentleman. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 1.

The simplicity and plainness of Christianity, which to the gorgeous solemnities of Paganisme and the sense of the Worlds Children seem'd but a homely and Yeomanly Religion. Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

yeomanly (yō'man li), adv. [< yeoman + *-ly*².] Bravely; as with the strength of a yeoman.

"Saint George strike for us!" exclaimed the Knight; "do the false yeomen give way?" "No!" exclaimed Rebecca, "they bear themselves right yeomanly."
Scott, Ivanhoe, xxix.

yeomanry (yō'man-ri), n. [Early mod. E. also yeomandrie; < ME. yemanry, yemanrye; < yeoman + -ry (see -ery).] 1. The collective estate or body of yeomen; yeomen collectively.

Gentylles and yemanry of goodly lyff lad.
Coventry Mysteries, p. 1.

God helpe me mercy on Robyn Hodys solle,
And saffe all good yemanrye!
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 32).

Next after the gentry in respect of that political weight which depends on the ownership of land, was ranked the great body of freeholders, the yeomanry of the middle ages. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 483.

2†. Service, retainers; those doing a vassal's service.

Then Robin Hood took those brethren good
To be of his yeomandrie.
Robin Hood and the Beggar (Child's Ballads, V. 287).

3†. That which befits a yeoman.

"By mee troweth, thow seys soyt," seyde Roben,
"Thow seys god yemanrye."
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 29).

4. A volunteer cavalry force originally embodied in Great Britain during the wars of the French revolution, and consisting to a great extent of gentlemen or wealthy farmers. They undergo six days of training, and must attend a certain number of drills yearly, for which they receive a nominal allowance. They must furnish their own horses, but have a small allowance for clothing—the government also supplying arms and ammunition. Unlike the ordinary volunteer force, the yeomanry cavalry may be called out in aid of the civil power, in addition to being liable for service on invasion of the country by a foreign enemy.—Yeomanry Act, an English statute of 1804 (44 Geo. III., c. 54) consolidating and amending the laws relating to the corps of yeomanry and volunteers and regulating them.

yep (yep), a. [Also yap; Sc. yap, yarp (E. dial. yepper); < ME. yepe, ȝepe, ȝep, ȝiep, ȝap, shrewd, prudent, fresh, brisk, eager, < AS. ġeap (ġeapp-), ġeap, crafty, cunning, shrewd, subtle, bent, curved, open, spread out.] Fresh; brisk; lively; vigorous. [Obsolete or provincial.]

For hit is ȝol & nwe ȝer [Yule and New Year], & here ar ȝep mony.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 996.

Whil thow art ȝong and ȝep.
Piers Ploweman (C), xi. 287.

yeplyt, adv. [= Sc. yaply; < ME. ȝeply, ȝaplich, ȝepliche, < AS. ġeapliċe, shrewdly, < ġeap, ġeap, shrewd.] Promptly; quickly; at once.

Thou knowes the couenauntes kest vus by-twene,
At this tyme tweimonyth thou toke that the falled,
& I schalde at this nwe ȝere ȝeply the ȝyfte.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2344.

We muste yapply wende in at this yate,
For he that comes to courte to curteys muste vse hym.
York Plays, p. 270.

yer (yē or yū), adv. A dialectal variant of here. [Southern U. S.]

Blinchy, fus' news you know, yer come Brer Rabbit.
J. C. Harris, Uncle Remus, xviii.

-yer. [(a) A var. of *-er*¹, < ME. -ier, -yer, -iere (see *-er*¹). (b) Formerly also -ier; < ME. -yer, -yere, -ȝere, being the suffix -er with ȝ, orig. g, belonging to the root (see bowyer, etc.).] A termination of nouns of agent, as in bowyer, lawyer, sawyer, and formerly in lowyer, etc. See *-er*¹ and bowyer, etc.

yerba (yer'bä), n. [Sp., lit. herb, < L. herba, herb: see herb.] The Paraguay tea, or maté. See *maté*¹. Abbreviated from yerba de maté or yerba-maté. Yerba buena. See Micromeria. Yerba de culebra. See Herpestis. Yerba del oso, a shrub, Rhamnus Californicus. See Rhamnus. Yerba de maté. See def. above. Yerba mansa, a Californian herb, Anemopsis Californica, of the Piperaceæ. The flowers are small and numerous on a conical receptacle surrounded by a whitish involucre, the whole having the aspect of an anemone. The rootstock has a pungent, aromatic, and astringent taste. Yerba reuma, a weed, Frankenia grandifolia, of Texas, California, etc., whose leaves are used as an astringent stimulant application for catarrhs. Yerba santa. Same as bear's-weed.

yerba-mate (yer'bä-mā'te), n. [< Sp. yerba, herb (see yerba), + mate, a cup: see *maté*¹.] Same as yerba.

yerbua, n. Same as jerboa.

yercum (yėr'kum), n. [E. Ind. (Madras): Tamil erukku, errukam.] 1. An East Indian shrub or small tree, Calotropis gigantea. The fiber of its inner bark is extremely tough and durable, and is made into bow-strings, fish-lines, and nets. The name belongs also to C. procera, which, in common with this species, has a medicinal root-bark. Also called madar.

2. The fiber obtained from this plant.

yercum-fiber (yėr'kum-fī'bėr), n. Same as yercum, 2.

yerdt, yerdet, n. Middle English forms of *yard*¹, *yard*².

yere¹†, n. An old spelling of year.

yere²† (yėr), adv. A dialectal variant of here. [Southern U. S.]

yerga (yėr'gä), n. [Cf. Russ. (Cossack) ergaki, skin of a horse or camel.] A woolen material made for horse-blankets.

yerk¹†, v. A Middle English form of *yark*¹.

yerk² (yėrk), v. [Also yark; a var. of *jerk*¹.] I. trans. 1. To lash; strike smartly; beat; hence, to rouse; excite. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Yerk him soundly;
'Twas Rhadamanth's sentence; do your office, Furies.
Massinger, A Very Woman, ii. 3.

Stripes justly given yerk us with their fall,
But causeless whipping smarts the most of all.
Herrick, Smart.

Just now I've ta'en the fit o' rhyme,
My barmie noddle's working prime,
My fancy yerk'd up sublime
Wi' hasty summon. Burns, To James Smith.

2. To throw, thrust, or pull sharply or suddenly; jerk; move with a jerk. [Obsolete or provincial.]

He yerked up his trousers. S. Judd, Margaret, I. 3.

3. To bind or tie tightly or with a jerk. [Scotch.]

But he is my sister's son—my own nephew—our flesh and blood—and his hands and feet are yerkened tightly as cords can be drawn. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, iii.

II. intrans. 1. To kick out, as a horse; kick. [Obsolete or provincial.]

I holde him with hir a good beast that when they lade him will stand stock still, and when they unlade him will yerke out behinde.

Gascoigne, Letters (tr. by Rathbone, 1573), p. 81.

His horse, being mad withal, yerked out behind.

North.

2. To move with sudden jerks; jerk. [Obsolete or provincial.]

Shall from the lashes of my yerking rime.

Marston, Scourge of Villanie, i., Prol.

yerk[2] (yėrk), n. [< yerk[2], v.] A sudden or quick thrust or motion; a kick; a smart stroke; a blow. Also yark. [Obsolete or provincial.]

A yerke of a whip.

Florio, p. 98.

Imagine twenty thousand of them . . . battering the warriors' faces into mummy by terrible yerks from their binder hoofs.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iv. 12.

yerl (yėrl), n. A Scotch form of earl.

yerm[1], v. i. An old spelling of yearn[1].

yerm[2], a. [ME., < AS. georn, eager: see yearn[1], v.] Brisk; lively; sprightly; eager.

But of hir song it was as loud and yerme
As any swalwe sittynge on a berme.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 71.

yerm[2], v. i. [ME. yirnen, yernen, < AS. geyrnan, gearnan, run, tr. run for, gain by running, < ge- + yrnan, arnan, run: see run[1], rem[1], and cf. earn[2], yearn[3].] To run; pass swiftly.

Thus yirnez the yere in yisteredayes mony, & wynter wyndes agayn

Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 529.

yerm[3], n. and a. An old form of iron.

yernet, adv. [ME., < AS. georne, eagerly, < georn, eager: see yarn[1], yern[1], a.] 1. Soon; early.

If I late or yerne
Wold it hiwreye, or dorst, or shodde, or konne.

Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 376.

2. Quickly; promptly.

What nede were it this preyere for to werne,
Syne ye shul both han folk and toun as yerne.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 112.

yerneyt, a. An obsolete form of irony[1].

Thou didste beholde it vntil there came a stone anyten out without handis, which smitte the image vpon his yerney & erthen feete, breking them al to powhder.

Joye, Expos. of Daniel, ii.

yernful, a. A spelling of yearnful.

yernut, yarnut (yėr'nut, yär'nut), n. [See arnot, earthnut.] The earthnut or hawknut, Conopodium denudatum (Bunium flexuosum).

yes (yes), adv. [Also dial. yse; < ME. yis, yus, < AS. gise, gese, yes; perhaps reduced, by reason of its frequent use and its essentially unitary meaning, from ged si, 'yea, be it (so)': ged, yea; si, sy (= G. sei = L. sit, etc.), 3d pers. pl. subj. of beón, be: see be[1]. It is possible that the second element is a reduced form of swa, so; cf. F. Sp. Pg. It. si, yes, < L. sic, so.] A word which expresses affirmation or consent; opposed to no. It is also used, like yea, to enforce by repetition or addition something which precedes.

Host. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.
L. Bard. Yes, if this present quality of war,
Indeed the instant action, a cause on foot
Lives so in hope as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 3. 80.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd.

Pope, Moral Essays, i. 1

Man. See, see! what 's he walks yonder? is he mad?
Fad. That 's a musician; yes, he 's besides himself.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iv. 4.

Will spring return? . . .
Yes, gentlemen, yes. The daisy's flower
Again shall paint your summer bower.

Scott, Marmion, i., Int.

[For distinction between yes and yea, no and nay, see yea.]

yesk (yesk), v. i. A variant of yex. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

I yesk, I grow a noyse out of my stomacke. . . . Whan he yeskith next, tell hym soop straunge newes, and he shall leave it.

Palsgrave, p. 706.

yeste, n. An obsolete form of yeast.

yester- (yes'tėr). [< ME. yester-, yister-, yuster-, yuster-, yustur-, yhistre-, yersten-, yursten- (only in comp.), < AS. geostran-, giestran-, gystran-, gyrstan- (only in comp., geostran-dæg, etc.) = D. gisteren (dag van gister) = OHG. gestaron, gestre, MHG. gestern, gester, G. gestern, adv., yesterday (OHG. ô-gestern, day after to-morrow, day before yesterday) = Goth. gistra (in gistradagis, to-morrow) = L. hesternus, of yesterday; with orig. comparative suffix -ra-, from a base (Teut. ye-) seen in Icel. gær, gör = Dan. gaar (in comp. gaarsdages, gaar) = Sw. går = L. heri = Gr. χθές = Skt. hyas, yesterday. Yester- prop. occurs only in comp., yesterday, -eve, -night, etc., where it represents an orig. adj. in the abl. or acc., agreeing with its noun.] Belonging to the day preceding the present; next before the present: used in the compounds given below, and rarely, by license, as a quasi-adjective.

To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester sun beheld Mustering her charms.

Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 1.

yesterday (yes'tėr-dā), adv. [Also dial. yisterday; < ME. yesterday, gisterdai, yusterdai, yhistredai, yurstendai, < AS. geostrandæg, giestrandæg, gystrandæg, gystrandæg = D. gisteren dag, dag van gister, yesterday, = Goth. gistradagis (found only once, in the alternative sense 'to-morrow'); = L. hesterno die, yesterday: as yester- + day[1].] On the day preceding this day; on the day last past.

Thei seiden to hym For [Fro] yisterdai in the seuenthe out the fouer lefte him

Wyclif, John iv. 52.

I saw him yesterday, or t'other day

Shak., Hamlet, ii. 1. 56.

yesterday (yes'tėr-dā), n. [< yesterday, adv.] The day last past; the day next before the present: often used figuratively for time not long gone by; time in the immediate past.

We are but of yesterday, and know nothing. Job viii. 9.

To morrow, and to-morrow, and to morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time.
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 22.

I love to watch how the day tired as it is, lags away reluctantly, and hates to be called yesterday so soon.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xiv.

yestereve (yes'tėr-ēv), adv. and n. [< ME. yesterneve, a later form of yesterevesn.] Same as yesterevesn.

In hope that you would come here
Yester eve.

B. Jonson, The Satyr

yestereven (yes'tėr-ē'vn), adv. [< ME. yesterevesn, yesterevyn; < yester- + evesn[2].] On the evening of the day preceding the present.

yesterevesn (yes'tėr-ē'vn), n. [< yesterevesn, adv.] The evening last past.

And dim grows Atli's roof-sun
O'er yesterevesn's feast

William Morris, Sigurd, iv

yesterevening (yes'tėr-ēv'ning), n. [< yester- + evening.] Same as yesterevesn.

The Village . . . had been seized and fired
Late on the yester-evening.

Coleridge, Destiny of Nations.

yesterfang† (yes'tėr-fang), n. [< yester- + fang.] That which was taken, captured, or caught on the previous day or former occasion.

Although millions and infinite numbers of them [fish] be taken, yet on the next [day] their losse will be so supplied with new store that nothing shall be missing of the yesterfang.

Buchan. Descrip. of Scotland (trans.), ix. (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

yestermorn (yes'tėr-môrn), n. [< yester- + morn.] The morn or morning before the present; the morning last past. Rowe.

And a dozen segars are lingering yet
Of the thousand of yestermorn.

Halleck, Epistles, etc.

yestermorning (yes'tėr-môr'ning), n. [< yester- + morning.] Same as yestermorn.

yesternight (yes'tėr-nīt), adv. [< ME. yesternyt, yesternyght, yusternyt, yesternight, < yester- + night.] On the night last past.

My lord, I think I saw him yesternight

Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 180.

I was invited vesternight to a solemn supper.

Howell, Letters, ii. 13

yesternight (yes'tėr-nīt), n. [< yesternight, adv.] The night last past.

I saw their boats with many a light,
Floating the harbour yesternight

Scott, L. of the L., iv. 9.

Coast not as thou camest of late,
Pluging the gloom of yesternight
On the white day.

Tennyson, Oriole to Memory.

yester-year (yes'tėr-yēr), n. Last year. [Rare.]

But where are the snows of yester year?

D. G. Rossetti, Ballad of Dead Ladies.

yestreen (yes-trēn'), adv. [Contracted from yesterevesn.] Last evening; last night: yesternight. [Scotch.]

The bridegroom may forget the bride,
Was made his wedded wife yestreen.

Burns, Lament for Glencairn.

yesty†, a. An obsolete form of yeasty.

yet[1] (yet), adv. and conj. [Also dial. yit; < ME. yet, yet, yit, < AS. git, get, giet, gyt, yitt, yett = OFries. iete, eta, ita, Fries. jette = MHG. ieze, ieze, G. iez, now jetzt, archaic jetzo; also MHG. iezuot, G. jetzund, now; origin uncertain; the MHG. iezuo is appar. < ie, ever (or a form cognate with AS. ge, and), + zuo, to; but it may merely simulate zuo. For a similar case in which an orig. significant terminal syllable or independent word has probably been reduced, see yes.] I. adv. 1. At or in the present time or juncture; before something else; at present; now: as, shall the deed be done yet? is it time yet?

You have often Begun to tell me what I am, but stopp'd, . . .
Concluding, "Stay: not yet."

Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 32.

He [Thales] was reputed one of the wise men that made answer to the question when a man should marry — "A young man, not yet; an elder man, not at all."

Bacon, Marriage and Single Life (ed. 1887).

2. In addition; over and above; in repetition; further; besides; still; even: used especially with comparatives.

Yet more quarrelling with occasion!

Shak., M. of V., iii. 5. 60.

Yet once more, O ye laurels, . . .
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude.

Milton, Lycidas, l. 1.

3. Still, in continuance of a former state; at this or at that time, as formerly; now or then, as at a previous period.

And it [Jaffa] was one of the first Cities of the world flounde by Japheth, Noes sonne, and yett hys name.

Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 24.

While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Rom. v. 8.

I see him yet, the princely boy!

Scott, L. of the L., ii. 22.

4. At or before some future time; before all is done.

Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him. Ps. xlii. 11.

He'll be hanged yet,
Though every drop of water
. . . gape . . . to glut him.

Shak., Tempest, i. 1. 61.

5. Up to the present time; thus far; hitherto; already: usually with a negative.

The Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified. John vii. 39.

Let me remember thee what thou hast promised,
Which is not yet performed me.

Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 244.

Opportunity hath baulked them yet.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1.

The Land, not yet Britain but Albion, was in a manner desert and inhospitable.

Milton, Hist. Eng., i.

Yet is often accompanied by as in this sense: as, I have not met him as yet.

Circumcised as yet to heaven.

Shak., Othello, v. 2. 72.

6. Though the case be such; at least; at any rate.

Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love.

Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 131.

An unhappy François who, after passing eighteen years in prison, yet won the grace and love of Joan of Naples by his charms.

J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 330.

Yet is sometimes used with adjectives or participles (with or without a hyphen) to denote continuance of the action or state, or as equivalent to still.

He rose, and saw the field deform'd with blood,
An empty space where late the conquerors stood,
The yet warm Thracians panting on the coast.

Pope, Iliad, x. 612.

Lavaine
Returning brought the yet-undragon'd shield.

Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

II. conj. 1. Nevertheless; notwithstanding.

He restored the chief butler unto his butlership again; . . . yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgat him. Gen. xl. 23.

Blasted, and burnt, and blinded as I was, . . .
O, yet methought I saw the Holy Graal.

Tennyson, Holy Grail.

2. Though.

I cannot speak to her, yet she urged conference.

Shak., As you Like it, i. 2. 270.

3. But.

"No, no," quoth she, "sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet, pardon me, I felt a kind of fear"

Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 466.

Many perished raving mad, leaving themselves swimming in boundless seas, yet unable to assuage their thirst.

Irving, Granada, p. 45.

yet[2] (yet), v. t. [Sc. also yit; < ME. yeten, geten, < AS. geótan, pour: see gush.] To [illegible] found; cast, as metal. [Obsolete or provincial.]

To yett, fundere, fusare.

Cath. Ang.

casynge of metelle, as bellys, pannys, gettys, and [illegible] like.

Prompt. Parv.

Perfumed with sauours of the metalles by him yotes.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, I. 8.

yet[2] (yet), n. [< yet[2], v.] A metal pan or boiler. See yetling, 2. [Obsolete or provincial.]

A yete [in the brewhouse] and twoo shovelles iiij[s].
H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App., I

yet[3] (yet), n. [African.] A West African volute of the genus Cymbium; a boat-shell. See cut under Cymbium.

Called yet by Adanson, who tells us that the high winds sometimes drive shoals of them on shore.
P. P. Carpenter, Lectures on Mollusca (1861).

yetapa (yet'a-pä), n. [S. Amer.] 1. A South American tyrant-flycatcher of the genus Cyberantes or Gubernetes (which see, with cut), having a deeply forficate tail longer than the body. Also called yiperu.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus including these birds. Lesson, 1831.

yetet, v. and n. Same as yet[2].

yetent. A Middle English form of yet[4].

yetling, yetlin (yet'ling, -lin), n. [< yet[2] + -ling[1].] 1. Cast-iron. [Scotch.] —2. A small iron pan with a bow-handle and three feet. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

yett (yet), n. Another form of yate. [Scotch.]

And whan he came till the castell yett,
His mither she stood and leant thereat.
Sir Olaf and the Elf-King's Daughter (Child's Ballads, II. 300).

But warlly tent, when ye come to court me,
An' come na unless the back yett be a-jee.
Burns, Whistle an' I'll Come to You.

yevet, yevent. Middle English forms of give[1], given.

yew[1] (yö), n. [Early mod. E. also yewe, yeugh, ewe, eugh, ewgh, yowe, < ME. ew, u, < AS. iw (in an early gloss, íuu), also eow = D. ijf = OHG. iwa, MHG. îwe, G. eibe = Icel. ýr, yew (MHG. and Icel. also a bow of yew); also, in another form, AS. éoh = OLG. ëh = OHG. îhu, G. dial. (Swiss) iche, ige; cf. F. if, Sp. iva, Mlt. eras, yew (< OHG.); Olr. eo (mod. Ir. iubhar, Gael. iubhar, iughar) = W. yw, ywen = Corn. iwin = Bret. ivin, ernen, yew; the Celtic forms being possibly original.] 1. A tree of the genus Taxus, the common yew being T. baccata of temperate Europe and Asia. This is a slow-growing and long-lived evergreen of moderate height and spreading habit, with a thick irregular trunk and dark thick foliage. In Europe the yew has long been planted in graveyards. There are several dwarf, weeping, and variegated varieties. The golden yew has the edge of the leaves in spring of a bright-golden yellow. The Irish yew (var. fastigiata) has erect branches, and is more hardy than the typical form, which will not endure the winter in the northern United States. The wood of the yew is heavy, fine grained, and elastic, and was formerly much used for bows, the supply being protected by government. It is considered a very choice cabinet wood, the heart being of a fine orange red or deep brown, and the sap-wood white. The leaves of the tree are poisonous.

Yew (Taxus baccata).

The shelter ew, the asp for shaftes pleyne.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 180.

The twigs and leaves of yew, though eaten in a very small quantity, are certain death to horses and cows, and that in a few minutes.
Gilbert White, Antiquities of Selborne, v

2. The wood of the yew-tree.

A bow made of the best foreign yew, six shillings and eightpence. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 121.

3. A shooting-bow made of the wood of the yew.

Tubal (with his Yew
And ready quiver) did a Boar pursue.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Works, II., The Handy-Crafts

Wing'd arrows from the twanging yew.
Gay, The Fan, I.

American yew, specifically, Taxus Canadensis, or, as often classified, T. baccata, var. Canadensis, a prostrate shrub with straggling branches common in dark woods around hemlock. There are three other American yews, for which see short-leaved yew and Taxus. California yew, the short-leaved yew. Golden yew, Irish yew. See def. 1. Japan yew, a tree of the genus Cephalotaxus. There is also a true yew in Japan. See Taxus. Mexican yew, Taxus Lindleyi. Short-leaved yew, Taxus brevifolia, of Pacific North America, a not abundant tree of its west from 50 to 75 feet high. Its wood is hard, heavy, and very fine-grained, susceptible of a beautiful polish and very durable in contact with the soil. It is used for bows, canes, and by the Indians for paddles, bows, etc. See bow[1]. Stinking yew, see stinking. Western yew, the short-leaved yew. Yew family, the suborder Taxaceæ of the Coniferæ.

yew[2] (yö), v. [Origin obscure.] A jug or jar having a handle extending over the mouth.

yew[3] (yö), v. i. [Origin obscure.] To rise as scum on brine in boiling, yaw.

yewen (yö'en), a. [Early mod. E. also eughen; < ME. ewen*, < AS. íwen, < íw, yew: see yew[1].] Made of yew.

Or his stiffe armes to stretch with Eughen bowe.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 747.

yew-pine (yö'pin), n. The black spruce, Picea nigra. See spruce. [West Virginia.]

yew-tree (yö'trē), n. [< ME. ewtre*, utree, uvtre; < yew[1] + tree.] Same as yew[1], 1.

In it throve an ancient evergreen,
A yew tree. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

yex (yeks), v. i. [Also yesk, q. v.; < ME. zexen, 3yxen, 3oxen, yesken, hiccup, < AS. gicsian (= MLG. gyschen), sob, sigh.] To hiccup. [Obsolete or provincial.]

He yexeth [var. yoxeth], and he speketh thurgh the nose.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 231.

yex (yeks), n. [< ME. zeoxe, zoxe, < AS. geocsa, gicsa, a sobbing; from the verb.] A hiccup. Holland. [Obsolete or provincial.]

His prayer, a rhapsody of holy hiccoughs, sanctified barkings, illuminated goggles, sighs, sobs, yexes, gasps, and groans.
Character of a Fanatic (Harl. Misc., VII. 687). (Nares.)

yexing (yek'sing), n. [< ME. zyxynge, zoxing, < AS. gicsung, gicsung, verbal n. of gicsian, sob: see yex, v.] Same as yex.

The juyce of the roote [of skirret] helpeth the hicket, or yeoxing. Johnson's Gerard, p. 1027. (Nares.)

Singultus — the hicket, or yexing.
Alo. Piem. Nomenclator, 182 b. (Nares.)

Yezidi, Yezidee (yez'i-de), n. [< Yezid, their reputed founder.] A member of a sect or people dwelling in Mesopotamia, in Asiatic Turkey, allied to the Kurds. They hold beliefs derived from Mohammedan and various other sources, and are commonly called devil-worshipers.

yfere[1]†, n. Same as fere[1].

Horn com bituore the kinges,
Mid his twelf yfere.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), l. 497.

yfere[2]†, adv. Same as ifere, in fere. See fere[1].

Yggdrasil (ig'dra-sil), n. [Also Ygdrasil, Igdrasil, Iggdrasill; Icel. Yggdrs Syll (not in Cleasby); cf. Yggr, Uggr, a name of Odin (see ug); syll, sill.] In Scand. myth., the ash-tree which binds together heaven, earth, and hell. Its branches spread over the whole world and reach above the heavens. Its roots run in three directions: one to the Asa gods in heaven, one to the frost giants, and the third to the under world. Under each root is a fountain of wonderful virtues. In the tree, which drops honey, sit an eagle, a squirrel, and four stags. At the root lies the serpent Nithhoggr gnawing it, while the squirrel Ratatoskr runs up and down to sow strife between the eagle at the top and the serpent at the root. Also called Tree of the Universe.

ygot. An obsolete past participle of go.

The fayrest floure our gyrlond all emong
Is faded quite, and hath his prime ygone.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., November.

ygravet. A Middle English past participle of grave[1].

yherdt, a. A Middle English form of haired.

yholdet. A Middle English past participle of hold[1].

Yid, Yiddisher (yid, yid'ish-ėr), n. [< G. jüdisch, jüdischer, Jewish.] A Jew. Leland. [Slang, London.]

Yiddish (yid'ish), a. and n. [< G. jüdisch, Jewish.] I. a. Jewish. Athenæum, No. 3303, p. 212. [Slang, London.]

II. n. A dialect or jargon spoken by the Jews in various localities.

yield (yēld), v. [Early mod. E. also yeeld; < ME. gelden, zelden (pret. yald, yalde, pp. golden, yolden), < AS. geldan, gildan, gyldan, guldan (pret. geald, pl. guldon, pp. golden), give up, pay, yield, restore, = OS. geldan = OFries. jelda = D. gelden = OHG. geltan, MHG. G. gelten = Icel. gialda = Sw. gälla = Dan. gielde, be worth, be of consequence, avail, = Goth. gildan*, in comp. fragildan (= AS. forgeldan), pay back, usgildan (= AS. ágeldan), pay back. Cf. Lith. galù, be able, have power; W. gallu, be able. Hence ult. guild[2], guilt.] I. trans. 1† To give in payment; pay; repay; reward; requite; recompense.

Lord, what may I for that quite the?
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 195.

God yelde the, frend. Chaucer, Troilus, i. 1055.

Be lef lady, with goode will and grameroy of youre servise, and that graunte me power that I may your this guerdon yelde.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 227.

Yong. How do you, pretty lady?
Oph. Well, God 'dild you!
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 41.

The good mother holds me still a child;
Good mother is bad mother unto me!
A worse were better; yet no worse would yield
Heaven yield her for it.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

2. To give in return, or by way of recompense; produce, as a reward or return for labor performed, capital invested, or some similar output.

Re-membreynge him that love to wyde yllowe
Yelt bitter fruyt, though sweete seede be sowe.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 368.

When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.

It was never made, sir,
For threescore pound, I assure you; 'twill yield thirty.'
The plush, sir, cost three pound ten shillings a yard.
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, i. 2.

Strabo tells us that the Mines at Carthagena yielded the Romans per diem to the value of twenty-five thousand Drachmas. Arbuthnot, Ancient Coins, p. 194.

The only fruit which even much living yields seems to be often only some trivial success.
Thoreau, Letters, p. 19.

3. To produce generally; bring forth; give out; emit; bear; furnish.

Many things doth Asia yeeld not elsewhere to be had.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 51.

No one Clergie in the whole Christian world yeelds so many eminent scholiers, learned preachers, grave, holy, and accomplish'd Divines as this Church of England doth at this day. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

Ammoniated alum yields a reddish yellow precipitate.
Ure, Dict., III. 365.

Air swept lindens yield
Their scent. M. Arnold, The Scholar Gipsy.

4. To afford; confer; grant; give.

In hast thempraour hendely his gretyng hym yelded,
And a-non rightes after askes his name.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 235.

Nathelees Polipheme, wood for his blynde visage, yeld to Ulixes joy by his orwhyl lesynes.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. meter 7.

Doubtless Burgundy will yield him help,
And we shall have more wars before 't be long.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 6. 90.

Where the holy Trinity did first yelde it-selfe in sensible apparition to the world. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 104.

And slowly was my mother brought
To yield consent to my desire.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

5. To give up, as to a superior power or authority; quit possession of, as through compulsion, necessity, or duty; relinquish; resign; surrender: often followed by up.

To velde his lone hane y no myzte,
Ne I ne him le rtill therfore.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 11.

The people were so oversette with their enemies that manye of them were as yolden, and feable against their owne neighbours. Fabyan, Chron. (ed. 1559), I. 62.

The fierce Hon will hurt no yielden things.
Wyatt, To His Lady, Cruel over Her Yielding Lover.

Generals of armies, when they have finished their work, are wont to yield up such commissions as were given them for that purpose. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, viii. 4.

My life, I do confess, is hers;
She gives it, and let her take it back; I yield it.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, iv. 2.

6. To give up or render generally.

The thef . . . yelde hym creaunt to Cryst on the crosse.
Piers Plowman (B), xii. 103.

If it is bad to yield a blind submission to authority it is not less an error to deny to it its reasonable weight.
Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 248.

Life to yield,
To give it up to heal no city's shame
In hope of gaining long-endering fame.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 318.

7. To admit the force, justice, or truth of; allow; concede; grant.

Pensive I yeeld I am, and sad in mind,
Through great desire of glory and of fame.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ix. 38.

'Tis a grievous case this, I do yield, and yet not to be despaired. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 681.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit.
Milton, P. L., xi. 290.

This was the fourth man that we lost in this Land-Journey, for those two men that we left at the city before did not come to us till we were in the North Seas, so we yielded them also for lost. Dampier, Voyages, I. 17.

God yield (or 'ild) you. See God[1], and def. 1 above.—To yield (or yield up) the breath. Same as to yield up the ghost.

O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath!
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 24.

To yield up the ghost. See ghost, n., 3. To surrender. To answer.

II. intrans. 1. To produce; bear; give a return for labor: as, the tree yields abundantly; the mines yielded better last year.—2. To give way, as to superior physical force, to a con-quence, etc.; give up a contest; submit; succumb; surrender.

Sir knyghte, these ert lyke; yelde them to me, for ye bene doe I-wongh. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 461.

Then yields the cedar to the axe's edge.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 2. 11.

Sometimes I stand desperately to my arms, like the foot when deserted by their horse; not in hope to overcome, but only to yield on more honourable terms.
Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesy, Ded.

3. To give way, in a moral sense, as to entreaty, argument, or a request; cease opposing; comply; consent; assent.

No halde I er now, my swete herte deere,
Ben yelde, yvin I were now nought here.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1211.

But at last, vpon much intreatie, hee yeelded to let him go to the Generall. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. i. 287.

Gwendolen the Daughter [of Corineus] yeelds to marry.
Milton, Hist. Eng., i.

No more, dear love, for at a touch I yield
Ask me no more.
Tennyson, Princess, vi. (song).

4. To give place, as inferior in rank or excellence.

Their mutton yields to ours, but their beef is excellent.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, i. 6.

Tell me first, in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields.
Pope, Spring, l. 90.

yield (yēld), n. [Early mod. E. also yeeld; < ME. yeld, geld, geelde, gild, < AS. geld, gield, gild, payment, = OS. geld = OFries. jeld = OHG. MHG. gelt, payment, money, G. geld, money, = Icel. gjald, payment, etc.; from the verb: see yield, v., and cf. gild[2], gelt[2].] 1†. Payment; tribute.

That euery manne wiet, after the deth of hur husbond, beyng a tailior, shall kepe as many servaunts as they wille, to worke wt her to hur use durying hur widowhode, so she here scotte and lotte, yeve and yeld, wt the occupacion Ordinance of Hen. VIII. (1531), in English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), [p. 329.

2. That which is yielded; the product or return of growth, cultivation, or care; also, that which is obtained by labor, as in mines or manufactories.

He shall be like the fruitful tree, . . .
Which in due season constantly
A goodly yield of fruit doth bring. Bacon, Ps. i.

Some surprising information about the yield of beet-root-sugar in France.
E. C. Grenville Murray, Round about France, p. 25.

The yield of the machine is the quantity of electricity put in motion in each unit of time.
Athenæum, tr. of Mascart and Joubert, I. 185.

3. The act of yielding or giving way, as under pressure. [Rare.]

After pointing out that the permanent elongation of a bar under longitudinal stress consists of a sliding combined with an increase of volume, the author showed that the yield is caused by the limit of elastic resistance (p) parallel to one particular direction in the bar (generally at 45° to the axis) being less than along any other direction.
Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXV. 707.

yieldable (yēl'da-bl), a. [< yield + -able.] 1. That may or can be yielded. — 2. That may or can yield; inclined to yield; complying.

yieldableness† (yēl'da-bl-nes), n. A disposition to yield, comply, or give in.

The Second Private Way of Peace: The Composing ourselves to a Fit Disposition for Peace; and therein, . . . (6.) A Yieldableness upon Sight of Clearer Truths.
Bp. Hall, Peace-Maker, ii. § 2.

yieldance† (yēl'dans), n. [< yield + -ance.] The act of yielding, producing, submitting, or conceding; submission; surrender.

He . . . vses, not so much for the prophet's yieldance as for his own life. Bp. Hall, Ahaziah Sick yieldent, p. a. Same as yolden.

yielder (yēl'dėr), n. [< ME. yeldere; < yield + -er[1].] 1†. One who pays; a debtor. — 2. One who yields, permits, or suffers; one who surrenders, submits, or gives in.

Dumy. Yield thee as my prisoner.
Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 11.

yielding (yēl'ding), n. [< ME. yeldinge; verbal n. of yield, v.] 1†. Payment. Prompt. Parv., p. 537. — 2. Compliance; assent; surrender.

Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forced; that never was incited
To accessary yieldings. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1656.

It lies in the bosom of a sweet wife to draw her husband from any loose imperfection . . . by her politic yielding.
Bailey and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

3. A giving away under physical pressure; a settling.

Faults in sleepers, irregular yieldings of bridges, . . . and other imperfections, were definitely marked.
Nature, XLIII. 154.

yielding (yēl'ding), p. a. Inclined or fit to yield, in any sense of the word; especially, soft; compliant; unresisting.

A yielding temper, which will be wrought or tilled.
Tattlewell.

By nature yielding, stubborn but for fame.
Pope, To Mrs Blount, with Voltaire's Works.

The footsteps of Simplicity, impress'd
Upon the yielding heritage.
Cowper, Task, iv. 321.

yieldingly (yēl'ding-li), adv. In a yielding manner; with compliance.

yieldingness (yēl'ding-nes), n. The state or property of being yielding; disposition to comply.

Bismarck wrote, there was only "one voice of regret on the subject in the Federal Assembly," which in the opinion of many "had given itself a death-blow by its yieldingness in the question of Holstein."
Lowe, Bismarck, I. 222.

yieldless† (yēld'les), a. [< yield + -less.] Unyielding.

Undaunted, yieldless, firm. Rowe, Ulysses, iii.

yift, conj. An obsolete form of if.

yill (yēl), n. A Scotch form of ale.

Her bread it's to bake,
Her yill is to brew.
Bonnie Earl o' Murry (Child's Ballads, VII. 122).

The clachan yill had made me canty.
Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

yin (yēn), n. A Scotch form of one.

yince (yēns), adv. A Scotch form of once[1].

yiperu (yip'e-rō), n. Same as yetapa, 1.

yird (yērd), n. A Scotch form of earth[1].

yirk†, v. An obsolete spelling of yerk.

yirr (yir), v. t. A Scotch form of yar[1].

yis, yisterday. Dialectal forms of yes, yesterday.

yit (yit), adv. and conj. A dialectal form of yet[1].

yite (yīt), n. [Also yott; said to be imitative.] The yellow bunting, Emberiza citrinella. See cut under yellowhammer. [Local, British.]

-yl. [< Gr. ὕλη, wood, matter.] In chem., a suffix commonly used with radicals, denoting the fundamental part, the origin: as, methyl, CH_3, is the fundamental radical of wood alcohol, CH_3OH, methylic ether, $(CH_3)_2O$, methyl amine, CH_3NH_2, etc.

ylang-ylang, n. A tall tree of the custard-apple family, Cananga odorata, native in Java and the Philippines, cultivated throughout India and the tropics. It bears drooping yellow flowers, 3 inches long, which furnish the ylang-ylang oil of perfumers. Ylang-ylang oil. See oil.

ylet, n. An obsolete form of inlet[1], aisle, eel, etc.

Y-level (wī'lev'el), n. The common engineers' spirit-level: so called formerly from the fact that the telescope rests on "Ys." In the Ys the telescope can be rotated at pleasure. The Y-level has been to a certain extent superseded by the so-called "dumpy-level," or Gravatt level, and by other improved instruments combining more or less completely the peculiarities of the Y-level and the dumpy-level. Also written wye-level.

The dumpy level differs from the wye level in being attached to the level bar by immovable upright pieces; in having the level tube firmly secured to the uprights of the level bar, in being provided with an inverting eye-piece (unless ordered otherwise); and in the absence of the tangent and slow-motion screws.
Buff and Berger, Hand-Book and Ill. Catalogue, 1881.

The most perfect form [of level] now in use being the improved Dumpy Level, resting on Ys, and named the Improved Dumpy Y Level. It appears to unite in itself all the good qualities of the others, retaining few of their imperfections.
Gen. Prime, Outline of Method of Conducting a Trigonometrical Survey, 4th ed. (1873), p. 83.

ylichet, yliket, a. and adv. Middle English forms of alike.

Y-ligament of Bigelow. The iliofemoral ligament, a fibrous band attached above to the anterior inferior spine of the ilium and below to the trochanter major and to a point just above the trochanter minor: it serves to strengthen the capsular ligament of the hip-joint.

ylket, n. An old spelling of ilk[1].

ymasked†, a. A Middle English form of meshed.

ymelt†, adv. Same as smelt.

Lo, whilk a complying is ymel hem alle.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 251.

Y-moth (wī'mōth), n. The gamma, Plusia gamma, a noctuid moth common in Europe, whose larva is a notable pest: so called from a shining silver Y-shaped mark on the upper wings. The name extends to others of the genus. Also Y. See cut under Plusia.

ympt, ympet, n. and v. Obsolete forms of imp.

ympnet, n. An old spelling of hymn. Chaucer.

ynambu (i-nam'bō), n. [S. Amer.] The large South American tinamou, Rhynchotus rufescens. See cut under Rhynchotus.

ynce, n. See ince.

ynogh, ynough, ynow†, n. and adv. Middle English forms of enough.

yo[1] (yō), interj. An exclamation noting effort: usually joined with ho or O.

Our anchor soon must change the lay of merry oraliasse here
For the yeo-heave-o, and the heave-away, and the sighing seamen's cheer. S. Ferguson, Forging of the Anchor.

yo[2] (yō), pron. A dialectal variant of you.

yoakt, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of yoke.

yoati, v. t. An obsolete spelling of yote.

yochel[1], yochle (yoch'l), n. Scotch spellings of yokel.

yochel[2], yockel (yo'kel, yok'l), n. Same as yokel, hickwall. [Prov. Eng.]

yodet. See yede[1].

yodel, yodle (yō'dl), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. yodeled, yodelled, yodled, ppr. yodeling, yodelling, yodling. [Also jodel; < G. dial. jodeln.] To sing with frequent changes from the ordinary voice to falsetto and back again, after the manner of the mountaineers of Switzerland and Tyrol.

A single voice at a great distance was heard yodling forth a ballad. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 3.

Mules braying, negroes yodling, axes ringing, teamsters singing. G. W. Cable, Dr. Sevier, iv.

yodel, yodle (yō'dl), n. [< yodel, v.] A song or refrain in which there are frequent changes from the ordinary voice to a falsetto. Also sometimes called warble.

yodeler, yodler (yō'del-ėr, -dlėr), n. One who sings yodels. Also yodeller.

yoft, conj. An obsolete dialectal variant of though.

My-selfe yoff I saye itt. York Plays, p. 272.

yoga (yō'gä), n. [Hind. yoga, < Skt. yoga, union, devotion, < √ yuj, join: see yoke[1].] One of the branches of the Hindu philosophy, which teaches the doctrines of the Supreme Being, and explains the means by which the human soul may obtain final emancipation from further migrations, and effect a junction with the universal spirit. Among the means of effecting this junction are comprehended a long continuance in various unnatural postures, withdrawal of the senses from external objects, concentration of the mind on some grand central truth, and the like, all of which imply the leading of an austere hermit life.

yogi (yō'gi), n. [Hind. yogi, < yoga: see yoga.] A Hindu ascetic and mendicant who practises the yoga system, and combines meditation with austerity, claiming thus to acquire a miraculous power over elementary matter. See yoga. Also yogee and jogi.

Then Rawanna, the giant, assuming the shape of a pilgrim Yogee rolling to the caves of Ellora with Gayatree the mystical text on his lips and the shadow of Siva's beard in his soul . . . rolls to Rama's door, and cries "Alms! alms!" J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 315.

yogism (yō'gizm), n. [< yoga + -ism.] The doctrine and practices of the yogis; yoga.

yogle (yō'gl), n. Same as ogle[2]. [Shetland Isles.]

yoh (yō), n. [Chinese.] An ancient Chinese reed, shaped like a flute but shorter, having three to seven holes, and played with one hand.

yo-ho (yō-hō'), interj. [Cf. yo[1].] A call or cry, usually given to attract attention.

yoick (yoik), v. t. [< yoick-a.] To urge or drive by the cry of "Yoicks."

Hounds were barely yoicked into it at one side when a fox was hallied away. Field, Jan 25, 1890. (Encyc. Dict.) yoicks (yoiks), interj. [Cf. hoicks.] An old fox-hunting cry.

Soho! hark forward! wind 'em and cross 'em! hark forward! yoicks! yoics! Colman, Jealous Wife, ii.

Enjoy the pleasures of the chase. . . . Bravo! . . . Or, if Yoicks would be in better keeping, consider that I said Yoicks. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iii. 10.

yoit (yoit), n. Same as yite. Montagu. [Local, British.]

yojana, yojan (yō'ja-nä, yō'jan), n. [Hind. yojan, < Skt. yojana, < √ yuj, join: see yoke[1].] In Hindustan, a measure of distance, varying in different places from four to ten miles, but generally valued at about five.

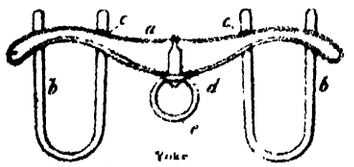
yoke[1] (yōk), n. [Formerly also yoak; < ME. yok, yok, yor, < AS. geoc, giog, iuc = OS. juc = D. juk, jok = MLG. jock, juck, LG. jok, jug = OHG. joh, MHG. G. joch = Icel. ok = Sw. ok = Dan. aag = L. jugum (> It. giogo = Sp. yugo = Pg. jugo = F. joug) = Gr. ζυγόν = W. iau = OBulg. igo = Bohem. jho = Russ. igo = Skt. yuga, yoke; from a root seen in L. jungere (√ jug), join (> E. join, junction, etc.), = Gr. ζεύγνυναι (√ ζυ), join, = Skt. √ yuj, join.] 1. A contrivance of great antiquity, by which a pair of draft-animals, particularly oxen, are fastened together, usually consisting of a piece



Yoke

a, body; b, bows of iron or wood; c, keys for fastening bows; d, clip; e, draft ring of timber, hollowed or made curving near each end, and fitted with bows for receiving the necks of the animals. From a ring or hook fitted to the body a chain extends to the thing to be drawn, or to the yoke of another pair of animals behind.

A red heifer . . . upon which never came yoke.
Num. xix. 2

In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.
Shak., Much Ado, i. 1. 263.

2. Hence, something resembling this apparatus in form or use. (a) A frame made to fit the shoulders and neck of a person, used for carrying a pair of buckets or panniers, one at each end of the frame.

She had seized and adjusted the wooden yoke across her shoulders, ready to bear the brimming milk pails to the dairy. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xv.

(b) A frame of wood attached to the neck of an animal to prevent it from creeping under a fence or gate, or from jumping over a fence. (c) A cross-bar or curved piece from which a large bell is suspended for ringing. (d) Naut., a bar attached to the rudder-head, and projecting in each direction sidewise. To the ends are attached the yoke-ropes or yoke-lines which are pulled by the steersman in rowboats, or pass to the drum on the axis of the steering-wheel in larger craft. (e) A kind of band or supporting piece to which are fastened the plaited, gathered, or otherwise falling and depending parts of a garment, and which by its shape causes these parts to hang in a certain way: as, the yoke of a shirt, which is a double piece of stuff carried around the neck and over the shoulders, and from which the whole body of the shirt hangs; the yoke of a skirt, which supports the fullness from the hips downward.

There was a yoke of mulberry colored velvet, which was applied also at the tops of the sleeves.
The Spectator (St. Louis), XI. 327.

(f) A branch pipe, or a two-way coupling for pipes, particularly twin hot- and cold-water pipes that unite in their discharge. (g) In a grain-elevator, the head-frame or top of the elevator, where the elevator-belt or lifter passes over the upper drum, and where the cups discharge into the shoot. (h) A carriage-clip for uniting two parts of the running gear. (i) A double journal-bearing having two journals united by bars or rods, that pass on each side of the pulley, the shafting being supported by both journals: used in some forms of dynamos to carry the armature; a yoke-arbor. (j) A pair of iron clamps of semicircular shape, with a cross-screw and nut at each end for tightening them around heavy pipes or other objects, for attaching the ropes when hoisting or lowering into position by power. J. S. Phillips, Explorers' Companion. (k) In wheelwrighting, the cover-plate or tire-bolt washer used at the joints of the felloes. E. H. Knight. (l) In an electromagnet consisting of two parallel cores joined across one pair of ends to form a U- or horseshoe-shaped magnet, the cross-bar joining the ends is called the yoke of the magnet.

3. An emblem, token, or mark of servitude, slavery, and sometimes of suffering generally. As a mark of humiliation and entire subjugation, the Romans caused their prisoners of war to pass under a yoke. This yoke was sometimes an actual ox-yoke, and was sometimes symbolized by a spear resting across two others fixed upright in the ground.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me. . . . For my yoke is easy and my burden is light. Mat. xi. 29, 30.

Like fooles, they doe submit their necke
Vnto the slauish yoke & proudest checke
Of Romes insulting tyrant.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 52.

4. Something which couples, connects, or binds together; a bond of connection; a link; a tie.

Companions . . .
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 4. 13.

You see I am tied a little to my yoke;
Pray, pardon me, would ye had both such loving wives!
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, ii. 2.

5. A chain or ridge of hills; also, a single hill in a chain: obsolete, but still retained in some place-names: as, Troutbeck Yoke. [Lake District, Eng.]—6. A pair; couple; brace: said of things united by some link, especially of draft-animals: very rarely of persons, in contempt.

Another a non ryght nede seyde he hadde
To folwen ffi yokes . . . and greithliche hem dryue.
Piers Plowman (C), viii. 295.

These that accuse him . . . are a yoke of his discarded men.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 1. 181.

7. As much land as may be plowed by a pair of oxen in a day; hence, as much work generally as is done at a stretch; also, a part of the working day, as from meal-time to meal-time, in which labor is carried on without interruption. Compare yokelet.

Ploughmen in this county have been in the habit of making two yokes a day in summer—that is, ploughing from morning until dinner-time, which is usually at twelve o'clock, then, when dinner is over, resuming their work, which is continued till half-past five or six.
N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 19.

Spring yoke, in a railroad-car, a wrought-iron bar shaped like an inverted U, placed on a journal-box as a support for a spring. Also called spring saddle. See cut under car-truck.—Syn. 6. Brace, etc. See pair.

yoke[1] (yōk), v.; pret. and pp. yoked, ppr. yoking. [Formerly also yoak; < ME. yoken, geoken (LG. jöken = G. jochen = L. jugare); from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To put a yoke on.

Away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1190.

The gentle Birds bow'd down their willing heads,
Not to be yoaked, but adorned by
The dainty harness. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 68.

2. To join or couple by means of a yoke.

For o Griffoun there will bere fleyngе to his Nest, a gret Hors, or 2 Oxen yoked to gidere, as thei gon at the Plowghe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 269.

3. To join; couple; link; unite.

O then . . . my name
Be yoked with his that did betray the Best!
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 419.

But, O Israel!
Alas! why yoakst thou God with Baal?
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Schisme.

Rather than to be yoked with this bridegroom is appointed me, I would take up any husband.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iv. 2.

4. To restrain; confine; oppress; enslave.

They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home than forever abroad discredited.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., ii.

Then were they yoak'd with Garrisons, and the places consecrate to thir bloodie superstitions destroi'd.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

As well be yoked by Despotism's hand
As dwell at large in Britain's charter'd land.
Cowper, Table Talk, l. 258.

5. To put horses or other draft-animals to. Compare the colloquial phrase to harness a wagon.

They han yoked carts and wains,
To ca' their dead away.
Auld Maitland (Child's Ballads, VI. 226).

Ye need na yoke the plough.
Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Yoked bottle, in ceram., a double bottle: so called from the band or bar of baked clay which connects the two vessels comprising it.

II. intrans. To be joined together; go along with.

The care
That yokes with empire.
Tennyson, To the Queen.

yoke[2] (yōk), v. and n. A dialectal variant of yox, yex. Also yolk.

Whose ugly locks and yolkinge voice
Did make all men afeard.
MS. Ashmole 208. (Halliwell.)

yokeage (yō'kāj), n. Same as rokeage.

yoke-arbor (yōk'är'bor), n. A form of double journal-box for pulley-spindles, having a curved arm extending from one bearing to the other on each side of the pulley, and serving to protect the belt from chafing. E. H. Knight.

yoke-bone (yōk'bōn), n. The jugal or malar bone, entering into the formation of the zygoma. See cut under skull.

yoke-devil (yōk'dev'l), n. A companion devil. [Rare.]

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2. 106.

yoke-elm (yōk'elm), n. See hornbeam.

yokefellow (yōk'fel'ō), n. One associated with another in labor, or in a task or undertaking; also, one connected with another by some tie or bond, as marriage; a partner; an associate; a mate.

I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel. Phil. iv. 3.

Your wife is your own flesh, the staff of your age, your yoke-fellow, with whose help you draw through the mire of this transitory world.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, iii. 5.

yokel[1] (yō'kl), n. [Sc. also yochel, yockle; origin obscure. Cf. gawk, gouk.] A rustic or countryman; especially, a country bumpkin.

Yokels looking up at the tinselled dancers and poor old rouged tumblers. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, Prol.

The coach was none of your steady-going, yokel coaches, but a swaggering, rakish, dissipated London coach; up all night, and lying by all day, and leading a devil of a life.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xxvi.

yokel[2], n. Same as kickwall.

yokelet (yōk'let), n. [< yoke + -let.] A small farm. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

yoke-line, yoke-rope (yōk'lin, -rōp), n. See yoke[1], n., 2 (d).

yokelish (yō'kl-ish), a. [< yokel + -ish.] Belonging to or characteristic of a yokel; rustic. [Rare.]

A very rural population, with somewhat yokelish notions. Jour. Anthrop. Inst., XVI. 320.

yoke-mate (yōk'māt), n. Same as yokefellow.

yoke-toed (yōk'tōd), a. In ornith., pair-toed; zygodactyl, as a woodpecker or cuckoo. See cut under pair-toed.

Such arrangement is called zygodactyle or zygodactylous; and birds exhibiting it are said to be yoke-toed.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 128.

yoking (yō'king), n. [Verbal n. of yoke[1], v.] 1. The act of putting a yoke on; the act of joining or coupling.—2. As much work as is done by draft-animals at one time; hence, generally, as much work as is done at a stretch.

At length we had a hearty yokin'
At sang about.
Burns, First Epistle to J. Lapraik.

I ne'er gat any guide by his doctrine, . . . but a sour fit o' the batts wi' sitting anang the wat moss-hags for four hours at a yoking. Scott, Old Mortality, viii.

Yokohama fowls. Same as Japanese long-tailed fowls (which see, under Japanese).

yoky (yō'ki), a. [< yoke[1] + -y[1].] 1. Yoked. [Rare.]

Seated in a chariot burning bright,
Drawn by the strength of yoky dragons' necks.
Marlowe, Dr. Faustus, vi., chorus, l. 6.

2. Pertaining to or consisting of a yoke. [Rare.]

So unremovéd stood these steeds; . . .
. . . their manes, that flourish'd with the fire
Of endless youth allotted them, fell through the yoky sphere.
Chapman, Iliad, xvii. 382.

Yolt, n. An obsolete variant of Yale.

yold[1]. An obsolete preterit and past participle of yield.

yolden, p. a. [Obs. pp. of yield.] Yielded; surrendered; submissive.

With loke doun cast and humble yolden chere.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 86.

In humble spirit is set the temple of the Lord, . . .
Whose church is built of love, and deckt with hot desire,
And simple faith; the golden ghost his mercy doth require.
Surrey, Paraphrase of part of Eccl. iv.

Yoldia (yol'di-ä), n. [NL. (Möller, 1842), named after Count Yoldi of Sweden.] A genus of bivalves, of the family Nuculidæ (or Ledidæ), related to the ark-shells. The several species are of boreal distribution: they resemble the members of the genus Leda, but have long slender siphons, a compressed long oval shell, beaked and slightly gaping behind, and covered with shining epidermis. Y. arctica, Y. lenatula, and Y. thraciæformis are examples; the latter is found in deep water off the New England coast.

yolding (yol'ding), n. Same as yoldring.—Yellow yolding. Same as yellowhammer, 1.

yoldring, yoldrin (yōl'dring, -drin), n. Same as yeldring, yowley. [Prov. Eng.]

But you heed me no more than a goss-hawk minds a yellow yoldring. Scott, Abbot, xvii.

yolet, v. t. An obsolete variant of yawl[1].

yolk[1] (yōk), n. [Also yelk; < ME. yolke, yelke, < AS. geolca, yolk, lit. 'the yellow part,' < geolu, yellow; see yellow.] 1. The yellow and principal substance of an egg, as distinguished from the white; that protoplasmic content of the ovum of any animal which forms the embryo in germination, with or without some additional substance which serves to nourish the embryo during its formation, as distinguished from a mass of albumen which may surround it, and from the egg-pod or shell which incloses the whole; the vitellus, whether formative wholly or in part. In holoblastic ova, which are usually of minute or microscopic size, the whole content of the cell-wall is yolk which undergoes complete segmentation, and is therefore formative or germinal vitellus, or morphovitellus. In large meroblastic eggs, however, such as those we eat of various birds and reptiles, the true germ-yolk forms only the nucleus and a relatively small part of the whole yolk ball, which then consists mainly of food-yolk or trophovitellus. This is the yolk of ordinary language, forming a relatively large ball of usually yellow and minutely granular substance which floats in a mass of white or colorless albumen, inclosed in a delicate pellicle, or vitelline membrane, and is steadied or stayed in position by certain strands of stringy albumen forming the chalazæ. The quantity of germ- and of food-yolk relatively to each other and also to the amount of white varies much in different eggs, as does also the relative position of the two kinds of yolk. (See alecithal, centrolecithal.) In the largest eggs, as of birds, the great bulk results from the coalescence of the white and of the food-yolk, and the germ-yolk appears only at a point on the surface of the latter, where it forms the so-called tread or cicatricula. Some eggs contain more than one yolk, but this is rare and anomalous. See egg, ovum, and vitellus; also segmentation of the vitellus (under segmentation), and cuts under gastrulation.

The white [part] was gulowere than the yelke of a nayre [an egg].
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2264.

2. The vitellus, a part of the seed of plants, so named from its supposed analogy with the yolk of an egg.—3. The greasy sebaceous secretion or unctuous substance from the skin of the sheep, which renders the fleece soft and pliable; wool-oil.

Is not the yolk, or natural oiliness of the wool in the animal, more efficacious?
Agric. Surv. of Galloway, p. 283. (Jamieson.)

Food-yolk, see food-yolk, meroblastic, and trophoblastikus.—Formative yolk, germinal yolk, which enters into the formation of the embryo, as distinguished from the food-yolk, which does not undergo segmentation; morphoblastic; vitellus germinativus. See holoblastic.—Glycerite of yolk of egg, a mixture of yolk of egg (45 parts) with glycerin (55 parts), used as a vehicle for medicinal oils and resins.

yolk[2], v. See yoke[2]. Halliwell.

yolk-bag (yōk'bag), n. Same as yolk-sac.

yolk-cleavage (yōk'klē'vāj), n. In embryol., segmentation of the vitellus (which see, under segmentation). See cut under gastrulation.

yolk-duct (yōk'dukt), n. In embryol., the ductus vitellinus, or vitelline duct, which conducts from the cavity of the umbilical vesicle to that of the intestine through a constriction, at and near the navel, of the original globular cavity of the yolk-sac. See cut under embryo.

yolked (yōkt), a. [< yolk + -ed[2].] Furnished with a yolk or vitellus: frequently used in composition: as, a double-yolked egg.

The effect of the loss of a large food-yolk . . . was shown to resemble a similar loss of food-yolk in the eggs of Micrometrus as compared with other large yolked oviparous fish eggs.
Amer. Nat., XXIII. 923.

yolk-gland (yōk'gland), n. Same as vitellarium.

yolk-sac (yōk'sak), n. The umbilical vesicle (which see, under vesicle). Also called yolk-bag. See cuts under embryo and uterus.

While the yolk in the latter is minute as compared with that of the former, the yolk-sack is just as large.
Amer. Nat., XXIII. 926.

yolk-segmentation (yōk'seg-men-tā'shon), n. Same as yolk-cleavage. See segmentation of the vitellus (under segmentation), and cut under gastrulation.

yolk-skin (yōk'skin), n. The vitelline membrane; the delicate pellicle which incloses the yolk of an egg, especially when this is large.

yolky (yō'ki), a. [< yolk + -y[1].] 1. Resembling or consisting of yolk; having the nature of yolk.

In addition to the minute yolk-spherules scattered through the protoplasm, there are a few larger bodies . . . probably of a yolky nature.
Micros. Sci., XXX. 5.

2. Greasy or sticky, as unwashed wool. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Because of the yolky fleece.
New York Semi-weekly Tribune, Aug. 16, 1887.

yolle, v. An obsolete variant of yell[1].

yolling (yol'ing), n. See yowley.

yon (yon), a. and pron. [Also dial. yen; < ME. yon, yone, yoone, < AS. geon (rare) = OHG. MHG. G. jener, that, = Icel. enn, inn, often written hinn, the, = Goth. jains, that; with adj. formative -na, from a pronominal base seen in Gr. ὅς, who, orig. that, Skt. ya, who. Cf. yond[1], yonder.] That or those, referring to an object at a distance; yonder: now chiefly poetic.

Lake ze affyre evenaunge be armyde at-ryghtes,
On blonker by yone baccayle, by yone blythe stremes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 895.

O what hills are yon, yon pleasant hills,
That the sun climes sweetly on?
'O yon are the hills of heaven,' he said.
The Demon Lover (Child's Ballads, I. 248).

Ye see yonder kirkie ca'd a lord.
Burns, For A' That.

Behold her, single in the field,
Yon solitary Highland Lass!
Wordsworth, The Solitary Reaper.

yon (yon), adv. [An altered form of yond, conformed to yon, a.] Same as yonder.

Him that yon soars on golden wing.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 57.

Hither and yon. See hither.

yond[1] (yond) adv. and prep. [< ME. yond, yonde, ȝond, as prep. also ȝonde, ȝende, < AS. geond = LG. giend = Goth. jaind, there; cf. yonder, beyond, and yon.] I. adv. In or at that (more or less distant) place; yonder.

And to the yonder hille I gan hire ryde,
Allas! and there I took of hire my leeve,
And yonde I saugh hire to hire fader ryde.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 812.

Say what thou seest yond.
Shak., Tempest, I. 2. 409.

II. prep. Through.

yond al the world.
Castell of Love, l. 1468.

yond[1] (yond), a. [< ME. yond, ȝond, ȝund, ȝond; a later form of yon, made to agree with the adv. yond.] Same as yon or yonder.

In yond your mistress?
Middleton (and others), The Widow, III. 3.

And see yond fading Myrtle.
Congreve, Death of Queen Mary.

yond[2] (yond), a. [Appar. one of Spenser's inventions, a forced use of yond[1], a.] Beside one's self; mad; furious; insane. [Rare.]

Then like a Lyon . . . wroth wood and yond.
Spenser, F. Q., II. viii. 40.

yonder (yon'dėr), adv. [Also dial. yender; < ME. yonder, ȝonder, ȝunder, ȝender, ȝender = MD. ghender, ghunder = Goth. jaindre, there; a compar. form of yon, with suffix -der as in hither, AS. hider, under AS. under, etc.] At or in that (more or less distant) place; at or in that place there.

The fellowshepe is yourer that yender ye see.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2959.

Hold, yonder is some fellow skulking
Sheridan, The Duenna, I. 4.

Chaucer uses the adverb frequently before the noun and preceded by that or the: a use indicating the transition to the adjective use:

In that yonder place
My lady first me took unto her grace.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 880.

yonder (yon'dėr), a. [< yonder, adv. Cf. yon.] Being at a distance within view, or as conceived within view; that or those, referring to persons or things at a distance.

Our pleasant labour to reform
Yon flowery arbours, yonder alleys green.
Milton, L. L., iv. 636.

Sweet Emma Moreland of yonder town
Met me walking on yonder way.
Tennyson, Edward Gray.

yongt, yonghede, yongthe, etc. Obsolete forms of young, etc.

yonkert, n. An obsolete spelling of younker.

yook (yōk), v. and n. Same as yuck.

yoop (yōp), n. [Imitative; cf. whoop[1], clump, etc.] A word imitative of a hiccuping or sobbing sound. [Rare.]

There was such a scuffling, and hugging, and kissing, and crying, with the hysterical yoops of Miss Swarts, . . . as no pen can depict Thackeray, Vanity Fair.

yopon (yō'pon), n. Same as yapon.

yore[1] (yōr), adv. [< ME. yore, ȝore, < AS. geāra, of yore, formerly an adverbial gen. of time, lit. 'of years,' gen. pl. of gear, year: see year.] In time past; long ago; in old time: now used only in the phrase of yore — that is, of old time; long ago.

A man may serven lef and more to pay
In half a yer, although it were no mo',
Than som man doth that lasteth fol yore
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 476.

Whan Adam had synned, thou seydest yore
That he sulde deye and go to helle
Coventry Mysteries, p. 107.

In Times of yore an ancient Baron liv'd
Prior, Henry and Emma.

Instead of the great tree that used to shelter the quiet little beech inn of yore, there now was reared a tall naked pole.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 68.

yore[2] (yōr), a. Same as yare[1]. Halliwell.

Yoredale rocks. In Eng. geol., the upper portion of the Carboniferous limestone series. In this — as in the Pendle area — the massive limestone (the Thick, Scaur, or Main limestone) is succeeded by a series of flaggy rocks, grits, shales, limestones, with a few seams of coal, the whole varying greatly in thickness in localities not far distant from each other. This series was named from Yoredale, in Yorkshire, where it has a development of from 200 to 1,500 feet. In its paleontological features it does not differ much from the Carboniferous limestone series generally. In the Yoredale rocks are the celebrated lead mines of Alston Moor and others. Also called Yoredale group and Yoredale series.

York-and-Lancaster rose. See rose[1].

Yorkish (yôr'kish), a. [< York (see def.) + -ish[1].] 1. Pertaining to the city of York or to the county of York, in England.—2. Adhering to the house of York. See Yorkist.

But if thy rule be not so spar
As kind it then may seem to be,
With every pale will bear his day,
And Yorkish turn again.
The White Rose.

Yorkist (yôr'kist), n. and a. [< York (see def.) + -ist.] I. n. An adherent of the house of York, or a supporter of their claims to the crown, especially in the Wars of the Roses.

The next Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, was restored by Edward IV. and became a Yorkist.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXVIII. 378.

II. a. In Eng. hist., pertaining to the dukes or the royal house of York. The Yorkist kings were Edward IV., Edward V., and Richard III. (1461–85), and their claims to the crown rested on their descent from Lionel, Duke of Clarence, and Edmund, Duke of York, respectively the third and fifth sons of Edward III. See Lancastrian, and Wars of the Roses (under rose[1]).

The grand episode or tragedy of Perkin (Warbeck) . . . connects the Yorkist intrigues with the social discontents in a way more striking than any of the previous outbursts.
Stubbs, Mediæval and Modern Hist., p. 366.

York pitch. See pitch of a plane, under pitch[1].

Yorkshire flannel. Flannel of superior quality, made of undyed wool.

Yorkshire pudding. A pudding made of batter without sweets of any kind, and baked under meat, so as to catch the drippings.

Yorkshire stone. Stone from the Millstone-grit series, extensively quarried in Yorkshire, England, for building and various other purposes.

Yorkshire terrier. See terrier[1].

yorling (yor'ling), n. Same as yelling. See yowley.

Half a paddock, half a toad,
Half a yellow yorling.
Scotch Ballad.

Yoshino lacquer. See lacquer.

yostregert, n. Same as oustringer.

On of ye yostregers unto . . . Henry the VIII.
Epitaph, quoted in S. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 108.

yot (yot), v. t.; pret. and pp. yotted, ppr. yotting. [Prob. a var. of yote, melt, hence weld: see yote.] To unite closely; fasten; rivet. [Prov. Eng.]

yote (yōt), v. t.; pret. and pp. yoted, ppr. yoting. [< ME. yoten, var. of yeten, ȝeten, geoten, < AS. geótan, pour: see yet[2].] To pour water on; steep. [Obsolete or provincial.]

My fowls, which well enough
I, as before, found feeding at their trough
Their yoted wheat.
Chapman, Odyssey, xix. 760.

you, pron. See ye[1].

yonk (youk), v. t. See yuck.

yoult, v. i. See yoult.

youlingt, n. A spelling of yowling.

young (yung), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also yong; < ME. yong, yung, gung, ȝong, ȝung, < AS. geong, giung, ung (in compar. also ging-, gyng-, geng-) = OFries. jung, jong = OS. jung = D. jong = MLG. junk, LG. jung = OHG. MHG. junc, G. jung = Icel. jungr, ungr = Sw. Dan. ung = Goth. juggs (compar. juhiza?); Teut. yungo*, contr. of yuwango* or yuwansho* = W. ieuanc = L. juvencus = Skt. yuvaçu, young; an extension or derivative, with adj. suffix (L. -cu-s), of a simpler form seen in L. juvenis = OIlulg. junŭ = Russ. junuĭ, etc., = Lith. jaunas = Lett. jauns = Skt. yuvan, young; cf. Skt. yuvaṭhu, young cat. From E. young is ult. E. youth. From the L. word are ult. E. juvenile, juvenal, juvenescent, rejuvenate, etc.] I. a. 1. Being in the first or early stage of life; not long born; not yet arrived at maturity or full age; not old: said of animals: as, a young child; a young man; a young horse.

Thow art, onge and ȝepe, and hast geres ynowe,
Forto lyue longe and lulyes to louye.
Piers Plowman (B), xi. 17.

Let the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound!
Wordsworth, Ode, Immortality.

2. Being in the first or early stage of growth: as, a young plant; a young tree.

He cropped off the top of his young twigs.
Ezek. xvii. 4.

I wished myself the fair young beech
That here beside me stands.
Tennyson, Talking Oak.

3. Being in the first or early part of existence generally; not yet far advanced, of long duration, or of full development, recent; newly come to pass or to be.

Boas In the day so young?
Ben. But new struck nine.
Shak., R. and J., I. 1. 108.

Th' impatient fever . . . threat'ning death
To his young hopes.
Cowper, Task, iii. 504.

4. Having the appearance and freshness or vigor of youth; youthful in look or feeling; fresh; vigorous.

Thei that dwellen there and drynken often of that Welle, thei shoven han ȝeke mouthes, and thei semen alle weys ȝonge.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 108.

He is only seven and thirty, very young for his age, and the most affectionate of creatures.
Thackeray, Lovel the Widower, vi.

5. Having little experience; ignorant; raw; green.

We are yet but young in deed.
Shak., Macbeth, III. 4. 144.

How to sell he knew not well,
For a butcher he was but young.
Robin Hood and the Butcher (Child's Ballads, V. 86).

6. Pertaining or relating to youth; spent or passed during youth; youthful: as, in his younger days he was very hot-headed.

God forbid I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Shak., Tit. And., iv. 3. 91.

King Edward the sixt, being of young yeres, but olde in wit. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 156.

7. Junior: applied to the younger of two persons, especially when they have the same name or title: as, young Mr. Thomas Ray called with a message from his father. [Colloq.] — 8. Newly or lately arrived. [Australia.]

So says I, "You're rather young there, a'n't you? I was by there a fortnight ago."
H. Kingsley, Geoffry Hamlyn, p. 33.

The Young Pretender. See pretender, 3. — Young America, the rising generation in the United States. [Colloq.] — Young beer. See schenk beer, under beer[1]. — Young blood. See blood. — Young England, a group of Tory politicians, chiefly recruited from the younger members of the aristocracy, who, about 1844, opposed free trade and radicalism, and advocated the restoration of the supposed former condition of things. Among their leaders were Disraeli and Lord John Manners. — Young flood, fustic, hyson, ice. See the nouns. — Young Ireland, a group of Irish politicians and agitators, active about 1840–50, who were at first adherents of O'Connell, but were separated from him through their advocacy of physical force, and took part in the rising of 1848. — Young Italy, an association of Italian republican agitators, active about 1834, under the lead of Mazzini. Analogous republican groups in other countries were called Young Germany, Young Poland, and Young France, and these republican associations collectively were known as Young Europe.

II. n. Offspring collectively.

The egg that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture forth disclosed
Their callow young. Milton, P. L., vii. 429.

The mother linnet in the brake Bewails her ravish'd young.
Burns, A Mother's Lament.

With young, pregnant; gravid.

So many days my ewes have been with young.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 35.

Young of the year, in ornith., specifically, birds which have left the nest and acquired their first plumage. Most birds hatch in summer, and, after putting off the down-feathers characteristic of the nestling, acquire a special first feathering; and as long as this is worn, or until the first true molt, they are young of the year, without regard to the length of time this plumage may be worn, as it is always replaced by the following spring.

younger† (yung'gėr), n. [< ME. yonger, yonger, gungre, gungre, etc., < AS. gyngra, gingra, gengra (= G. jünger, etc.), a follower, disciple, lit. a younger person (as distinguished from eldra, an elder), compar. of geong, giung, ung, young: see young.] A young person; a disciple. Shak., M. of V., ii. 6. 14 (quartos).

youngerly (yung'gėr-li), a. [< younger, compar. of young, + -ly[1], after elderly.] Somewhat young; below middle age. [Colloq., U. S.]

The life-blood of Christendom flows in the veins of her youngerly men. Church Union, Jan. 11, 1868.

young-eyed (yung'id), a. Having the fresh, bright eyes or look of youth.

Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 62.

youngheadt (yung'hed), n. [< ME. yonghede; < young + -head.] Youth.

Kide was paynted after this,
That shorter was a fote, I wys,
Than she was wont in hir yonghede.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 351.

Young-Helmholtz theory of color. See color.

youngling (yung'ling), n. and a. [< ME. yongling, gongling, gungling, < AS. geongling (= OHG. jungaling), a young man, < geong, young, + -ling, E. -ling[1].] I. n. 1. A young person; a youth or child.

Due privilege allow'd, we all should go
Before, and she, the youngling, come behind.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iv. 10.

2. Any young thing, as an animal, a plant, etc.; anything immature, undeveloped, or recent.

More dear unto their God then younglings to their dam.
Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 57.

Speak, whimp'ring younglings, and make known
The reason why
Ye droop and weep
Herrick, To Primroses Fill'd with Morning Dew.

3. A novice; a new-comer; a beginner.

This Naaman was but an youngling in God's religion
J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 338

II. a. Youthful; young.

The mountain raven's youngling brood
Have left the mother and the nest.
Wordsworth, Idle Shepherd-boys.

The frequent chequer of a younglling tree Keats, I Stood Tiptoe upon a Little Hill.

youngly (yung'li), a. [< ME. gongly, gunglich, < AS. geonglic, < geong, young, + -lic, E. -ly[1].] Youthful.

Sum men clepen it the Welle of Louthe: for thei that often drynken there of semen alle weys Iongly, and lyven with outen Sykenesse. Mandeville, Travels, p. 169.

youngly (yung'li), adv. [< young + -ly[2].] In youth; as a youth.

How youngly he began to serve his country.
Shak., Cor., ii. 3. 244.

youngness (yung'nes), n. [< young + -ness.] The condition of being young. Cudworth.

Young's modulus. See modulus.

youngster (yung'stėr), n. [< young + -ster.] 1. A young person; a lad: sometimes applied also to young animals, especially horses.

For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild.
Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, l. 120.

A youngster at school, more sedate than the rest.
Cowper, Pity for Poor Africans.

With the exception of her full sister, . . . this filly is considered the highest bred trotting youngster now on the American continent.
New York Evening Post, June 28, 1869.

2. A junior officer in a company, battery, or troop. [Familiar and colloq.]

youngth† (yungth), n. [Early mod. E. yongth; < ME. yongth, yongthe, gungthe; < young + -th[1]. Cf. youth, an older word of the same ult. elements.] Youth.

The lusty yongth of mans might.
Gower, Conf. Amant. (ed. 1554), p. clxviii.

The mornefull Muse in myrth now list me maske,
As shee was wont in youngth and sommer dayes.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., November.

youngthly† (yungth'li), a. [Formerly yongthly; < youngth + -ly[1].] Youthful.

He breathlesse did remaine,
And all his yongthly forces idly spent.
Spenser, Mutopotmos, l. 431.

younker (yung'kėr), n. [Formerly also yonker (= Sw. Dan. junker); < MD. joncker, D. jonker = MLG. junker, juncher, LG. junker = MHG. junker, junkher, junckher, jonker, G. junker, a young gentleman, a young man; contracted and reduced to the form of a derivative in -er, < D. jonkheer = LG. jungheer = MHG. junchêrre, juncherre, G. jungherr, junger Herr, young gentleman: see young and herre[1], herr. Cf. G. jungfer, similarly reduced from jungfrau.] 1†. A young man of condition; a young gentleman or knight.

Amongst the rest, there was a jolly knight: . . .
But that same younker scone was overthrowne.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. i. 11.

Ulysses slept there, and close by
The other younkers. Chapman, Odyssey, xiv.

2. A young person; a lad; a youngster.

Pagget, a school-boy, got a sword, and then
He vow'd destruction both to birch and men;
Who wo'd not think this younker fierce to fight?
Herrick, Upon Pagget.

It was a pleasure to see the sable younkers lick in the unctuous meat. Lamb, Chimney-Sweepers.

The juveniles and younkers in the town.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 6.

3†. A novice; a simpleton; a dupe.

What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn but I shall have my pocket picked?
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 3. 92.

Ang. Is he your brother, sir?
Rust. Yes. Would he were buried!
I fear he'll make an ass of me, a younker.
Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iii. 5.

4. Same as junker.

youpon (yö'pon), n. Same as yupon.

your (yör), pron. [(a) < ME. your, yor, youre, oure, our, ower, ouer, < AS. ôwer (= OS. iuwer = OHG. iuwer = Goth. izwara), gen. of gē (dat. acc. ēow), you: see ye[1], you. (b) < ME. your, yor, yore, yoore, oure, our, ore, oure, ouere, ouer, < AS. ôwer = OS. iuwer, iuwe = OFries. iuwe, etc., = Goth. izwar, poss. pron.: see (a) above.] A†. pers. pron. Of you: the original genitive of ye[1], you.

Sithen I am youre alre heed [i. e., head of you all],
Ich am youre alre hele [salvation].
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 372.

B, poss. pron. 1†. Of you; belonging to you: used predicatively: now replaced by yours.

I wolde permute [change] my penaunce with youres.
Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 110.

I . . . not ben youre whil that my lyf may dure.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 642.

And she answerde, "I am youere and the childe youres, therfore do with me and with hym youre will."
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 89.

2. Belonging to you: possessive and adjective in use, preceding the noun. While plural in form and original meaning, it is now commonly also used, like the nominative you, in addressing an individual.

"I have no kynde knowyng," quod I, "to conceyue alle youre wordes." Piers Plowman (B), viii. 57.

Promise unto the Lord your God, and keep it, all ye that are round about him.
Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. lxxvi. 11.

I leave it [the poem] to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, Ded. to the Earl of Southampton.

[Your was used formerly to denote a class or species well known. This use survives as an archaism, and now often adds a slurring or humorous significance.

Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun. Shak., A. and C., ii. 7. 26.

Your great Philosophers have been voluntarily poor.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 862.]

yourn (yörn), pron. Yours. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

yours (yörz), pron. [< ME. youres, youres, etc.; with added poss. suffix, as in ours, theirs, etc.: see your.] That which belongs or those which belong to you: the possessive used without a following noun. Preceded by of, it is equivalent to the personal pronoun you: as, a friend of yours. Compare the similar phrases made with the other possessives in the independent form.

Ye cruell one! what glory can be got
In slaying him that would live gladly yours!
Spenser, Sonnets, lviii.

What's mine is yours and what is yours is mine.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 542.

Yours is no love, Faith and Religion fly it.
Fletcher, Wife for a Month, i. 1.

If by Fate yours only must be Empire, then of necessitie ours among the rest must be subjection.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

[Yours is sometimes used in specific senses without reference to a noun previously mentioned: (a) Your property. (b) The persons belonging to you; your friends or relatives.

Bothe to me & to myne mykull vuright,
And to yow & also yours gomeryng [mourning] for euer.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1722.

O God, I fear thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours for this!
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 1. 132.

(c) Your letter: as, yours of the 16th inst. is at hand.

I have yours just now of the 19th.
Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, July 27, 1726.]

Abbreviated yrs.

Yours truly, yours to command, etc., phrases of conventional politeness immediately preceding the signature at the end of a letter: hence sometimes used playfully by a speaker in alluding to himself.

Yours truly, sir, has an eye for a fine woman and a fine horse. W. Collins, Armadale, II. 168. (Hoppe.) yourself, yourselves (yör-self', -selvz'), pron. [< ME. your selven, etc.: see your and self.] An emphatic or reflexive form of the second personal pronoun, ye, you. Yourself is used when a single person is addressed (compare ye, your), and yourselves when more than one. As nominatives, the words are used for emphasis, either in apposition with you or alone.

Ye se well your-selvyn the sothe at your ogh,
Hit is no bote here to bylde for baret with-outen.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12282.

I knowe yow alle as wele or beter than ye do yourself.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 141.

Conversation is but carving:
Carve for all, yourself is starving.
Swift, Verses on a Lady.

In the objective case yourself or yourselves is commonly reflexive: when emphatic it is usually in apposition with you. Compare himself, herself, etc.

Call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves. Shak., M. N. D., i. 2. 16.

"Stay then a little," answered Julian, "here,
And keep yourself, none knowing, to yourself."
Tennyson, Lover's Tale, Golden Supper.

yourta, yourte, n. French spellings of yurt.

youse (yöz), n. [E. Ind.] The cheetah or hunting-leopard, Guepardus jubatus. Also yous. See cut under cheetah.

youth (yöth), n. [< ME. youthe, youthhe, youthe, youthe, yhouthe, yeuethe, geuethe, geouthe, ieuethe, etc., < AS. geogoth, giogoth, iugoth = OS. jugoth, jugud = D. jeugd = OHG. jugund, MHG. jugent, G. jugend, youth; with abstract formative -th (-oth, etc.), < AS. geong, etc., young: see young. A "restored" form appears in youngth.] 1. The condition of being young; youthfulness; youngness; juvenility.

These opinions have youth in their countenance; antiquity knew them not; it never thought nor dreamed of them. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vi. 4.

In fact, there 's nothing that helps its youth,
So far as I know, but a tree and truth.
O. W. Holmes, The Deacon's Masterpiece.

2. The age from puberty up to the attainment of full growth. In a general sense, youth denotes the whole early part of life, from infancy to maturity; but it is not unusual to divide the stages of life into infancy, childhood, youth, and manhood. Thus limited, youth includes that early period of manhood or womanhood upon which one enters at puberty, with the establishment of the sexual functions, and in which one continues until the skeleton is completely ossified by the consolidation of the epiphyses of the long bones, so that there is no further increase in stature, and all the teeth are in permanent functional position.

Therfore take heede bothe nyght & day
How that youre youthe doeth aswage.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 79.

2. A young person; especially, a young man. In this sense it has a plural.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy. Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 161.

Seven youths from Athens yearly sent.
Dryden, Æneid, vi. 27.

For what in nature's dawn the child admired,
The youth endeavoured, and the man acquired.
Dryden, To Sir Godfrey Kneller, l. 144.

Shot at the age betwixt boy and youth,
When thought is speech, and speech is truth.
Scott, Marmion, ii., Int.

I had hardly ever seen a handsome youth; never in my life spoken to one. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

4. Young persons collectively.

Forget the present Flame, indulge a new,
Single the loveliest of the am'rous Youth.
Prior, Henry and Emma.

Even when our youth, leaving schools and universities, enter that most important period of life.
Burke, Rev. in France.

O ye! who teach the ingenuous youth of nations, . . .
I pray ye flog them upon all occasions.
Byron, Don Juan, ii. 1.

5†. Recentness; freshness; brief date. [Rare.]

Welcome hither:
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 2. 224.

youthedet, n. A Middle English form of youthhead.

youthful (yōth'fụl), a. [< youth + -ful.] 1. Possessing or characterized by youth; not yet aged; not yet arrived at mature years; being in the early stage of life; young; juvenile.

It was a youthful knight
Lov'd a gallant lady.
Constance of Cleveland (Child's Ballads, IV. 226).

As Clifford's young manhood had been lost, he was fond of feeling himself comparatively youthful, now, in opposition with the patriarchal age of Uncle Venner.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, x.

2. Pertaining or belonging or suitable to the early part of life: as, youthful days; youthful age.

His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 160.

Now no more shall these smooth brows be begirt
With youthful coronals, and lead the dance.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, i. 1.

The discrepancy . . . between her age, which was about seventy, and her dress, which would have been youthful for twenty-seven. Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxi.

Sometimes . . . the youthful spirit has come over me in such a rush of young blood that it has surprised me as much as the slaughtered Duncan's manifestation surprised Lady Macbeth.
O. W. Holmes, Over the Teacups, xii.

3. Fresh and vigorous, as in youth.

Perfect felicity, such as after millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing. Bentley.

4. Early in time.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises,
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 108.

Nor of the larger stature & cubits of men in those youthfull times and age of the world.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 39.

=Syn. 1-3. Youthful, Juvenile, Boyish, Puerile. Youthful is generally used in a good sense: as, youthful looks or sports; juvenile indifferently, but if in a bad sense not strongly so: as, the poem was a rather juvenile performance; boyish rather more often, but not necessarily, in some contempt: as, a boyish manner; boyish enthusiasm; puerile always in marked contempt, as a synonym par excellence.

youthfullity (yōth'fụl-i-ti), n. [< youthful + -ity.] Youthfulness. [Nonce-word.]

You see my impetuosity does not abate much; no, nor my youthfullity. Walpole, Letters (1765), II. 461. (Davies.)

youthfully (yōth'fụl-i), adv. In a youthful manner.

Your attire . . . not youthfully wanton.
Bp. Hall, Works, I. 314. (Richardson.)

youthfulness (yōth'fụl-nes), n. The state or character of being youthful.

Lusty youthfullness. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 764.

youthhead (yōth'hed), n. [< ME. youthede, youthede, etc.; < youth + -head. Cf. youthhood.] Youth. [Obsolete or archaic.]

In grot peril is set youthede,
Defiled so doth his bridill leede.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4981.

A sharp Adversitie,
Bannisht that Rage of youth-head furious.
Ramsay, Vertue and Vyce, st. 37.

In youthhead, happy season. Southey. (Imp. Dict.) youthhood (yōth'hụd), n. [< ME. "youthehod, youthehed, < AS. geoguthād (= OS. jugudhēd); as youth + -hood. Cf. youthhead.] Youth.

To rejuvenate them with the vigor of his own immortal youthhood. G. D. Boardman, Creative Week, p. 135.

The youthhood of Derry and Enniskillen determined to protect themselves.
W. S. Gregg, Irish Hist. for Eng. Readers, p. 16.

youthlike (yōth'lik), a. Having the characteristics of youth. [Rare.]

All such whom either youthful age or youthlike minds did fill with unlimited desires. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

youthly† (yōth'li), a. [< youth + *-ly*1.] Pertaining to youth; characteristic of youth; youthful.

The knight was fierce, and full of youthly heat.
Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 7.

That sooth'd you in your sins and youthly pomp.
Greene, James IV., v.

As touching my residence and abiding heere in Naples, my youthlye affections, my sportes and pleasures, . . . to me they bring more comfort and ioye than care and griefe. Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 42.

youthly† (yoth'li), adv. [< youth + *-ly*2.] Youthfully.

And deckt himselfe with feathers youthly gay.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 34.

youthnesst (yōth'nes), n. [< ME. youthnesse; < youth + -ness.] Youth; youthfulness.

Off his wickednesse don conseyngly,
And that he had don in his youthnesse soo,
With sore hert confessed him also.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5221.

youthsome (yōth'sum), a. [< youth + -some.] Having the vigor, freshness, feelings, tastes, or appearance of youth; youthful; young. [Rare.]

To my uncle Fenner's, where at the alchemic I found him drinking, and very jolly and youthsome.
Pepys, Diary, Oct. 31, 1661.

youthwort (yōth'wėrt), n. An old name of the sundew, Drosera rotundifolia.

youthy (yō'thi), a. [< youth + *-y*1.] Young; youthful. [Rare.]

Affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Steele, Spectator, No. 280.

When at college, Sterling had venerated and defended Shelley as a moralist as well as a poet, "being rather youthy." Caroline Fox, Journal, p. 132.

youze, n. See youse.

yovet. A Middle English form of gave, preterit of *give*1.

yow (you), n. A dialectal form of *ewe*1. See the quotation under sheathing.

yowet, n. An obsolete form of *yew*1.

yowl (youl), v. i. [Also youl; < ME. youlen, soulen, also gaulen, < Icel. gaula, howl; see *gaul*1. Cf. yell.] To give a long cry stressful or mournful cry, as a dog; howl; hence, of persons, to yell; bawl.

The grete four Resoundeth his youling and clamour.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 620.

The man (bellman) comes youling regularly at the stroke of seven. Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, I. iii.

yowl (youl), n. [< youl, v.] A long distressful or mournful cry, as that of a dog.

yowley (you'li), n. [One of numerous variant forms: see below), alt., < AS. geolu, yellow: see yellow.] The yellow bunting, Emberiza citrinella: more fully called, by reduplication, yellow yowley. Also yeldring, yeldrin, yeldrock, yoldring, yoldring, yoldrin, yolling, yorling; also pit, yoit. See cut under yellowhammer. [Scotland and North of Ireland.]

yowling (you'ling), n. [< ME. youlyng, verbal n. of youl, v.] A howling; crying.

And with a great youlyng he wepte.
Wyclif, Gen. xxvii. 38.

Then the wind set up a howling
And the poodle-dog a yowling.
Thackeray, White Squall.

yowp, v. i. A dialectal form of *yaup*2. Halliwell.

yox†, v. i. A Middle English form of yex.

Yphantes, n. See Hyphantes, 1. Vieillot, 1816.

yplight†. Same as pight, an obsolete past participle of *pitch*1.

yplikedt, a. Same as piked for *picked*1.

ypocritet, n. An old spelling of hypocrite.

ypointing (i-point'ing), a. [< y-, v.-, + pointing. Like Shakspere's yarrish, an infelicitous attempt at archaism, the prefix y- being confined to ME. use and there to words of AS. origin (or to verbs from early OF., some of which, in the pp., have y-): there may have been a ME. "ypointed, but there could be no ME. "ypointing. Milton herein, like Thomson later, was imitating Spenser, who archaized on principle but without knowledge.] Pointing. [Poetical.]

What needs my Shakspeare, for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Milton, Epitaph on William Shakespeare.

Yponomeuta (i-pon-ō-mū'tạ), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1796), prop. Hyponomeuta, < Gr. ὑπονομεύειν, undermine, < ὑπονομος, going underground, underground, as a noun an underground passage, < ὑπο, under, + νεμειν, drive.] A notable genus of tineid moths, typical of the family Yponomeutidæ, comprising a number of rather large slender-bodied species, usually white or gray, and often with many small black spots. The larvæ live gregariously in a light web, and feed upon the foliage of different plants. About a dozen species are found in Europe and 7 in North America. Y. cognatella is exceedingly destructive to apple-trees, depriving them of their leaves.

Yponomeutidæ (i-pon-ō-mū'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Stephens, 1829), < Yponomeuta + -idæ.] A family of tineid moths, based chiefly upon venational characters, but having a recognizable facies. The larvæ have 16 legs, and in general feed like those of the type genus. Those of Atteriodes, however, bore into buds and young twigs. Some 14 genera have been placed in this family by Staudinger, but the important genus Argyresthia and its allies are removed to a distinct family, Argyresthiidæ, by Heinemann and others. Also Hyponomeutidæ.

ypreised†, a. An obsolete form of the past participle of prize.

For the more a man may do by so that he do hit,
The more is he worth and worthi of wyse and goode ypreised. Piers Plowman (C), xi. 310.

Ypres lace. See lace.

ypsiliform (ip'si-li-fôrm), a. [< Gr. ὑ ψιλόν (see hypsiloid) + L. forma, form.] Shaped like the Greek capital letter Y; Y-shaped. The figure is also called arietiform, the symbol of the zodiacal sign Aries being the same.

The T-shaped [germinal spot] gradually passes into the ypsiliform figure, so called from its resemblance to the Greek Y. Knox, Brit., XX. 417.

ypsilo-. For words so beginning, see hypsilo-.

ypsiloid, a. Same as hypsiloid.

Ypsilophus (ip-sil'ō-fus), n. [NL. (Oken, 1816).] Same as Tpsolophus.

Ypsipotes (ip-sip'ē-tēz), n. [NL. (Stephens, 1829), prop. Hypsipetes, < Gr. ὑψιπέτης, fallen from heaven, < ὑψι, on high, + πίπτειν, fly.] A genus of geometrid moths, of the family Larentiidæ, of wide distribution, but having few species.

Ypsolophus (ip-sol'ō-fus), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1798), Tpsilophus (Oken, 1816), prop. Hypsilophus, < Gr. ὑψηλός, having a high crest, < ὑψι, on high, + λοφος, crest.] A prominent genus of tineid moths, of the family Gelechiidæ, having ocelli, and both fore and hind wings turned forward at tip. The larvæ are leaf-rollers. Nine species are known in Europe and thirteen in the United States.

yr. An abbreviation (a) of year; (b) of your; (c) of younger.

yravisht (i-rav'ish), v. t. A pseudo-archaic form of ravish. Compare yparting.

The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravished the regions round,
And every one with claps can sound,
"Our heir-apparent is a king!"
Shak., Pericles, iii., Prol., l. 35.

yrent, yront, n. and a. Old spellings of iron.

yrs. An abbreviation of years and of yours.

yset, n. An old spelling of ice.

ysenet, pp. A Middle English form of seen.

Ful longe were his legges and ful lene,
Ylik a staf, ther was no calf ysene.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 802.

yslakedt. An obsolete preterit and past participle of slake.

Now sleep yslaked hath the rout.
Shak., Pericles, iii., Prol., l. 1.

ystlet, n. See istle.

ythe1†, n. Same as ithe.

ythe2†, adv. Same as eath.

Y-track (wī'trak), n. A short track laid at right angles (or approximately so) to a line of railway, with which it is connected by two switches — the whole resembling the letter Y. It is used instead of a turn table for reversing engines or cars. In operating it, an engine or car advancing toward A (heading as shown by the arrow) is switched at A to the track B, and then backed up over the switch C to the main track again, heading now in the reverse direction.

Y track

ytterbite (it'ėr-bit), n. [< Ytterby, in Sweden, + *-ite*2.] Same as gadolinite.

ytterbium (i-tėr'bi-um), n. [NL., < Ytterby, in Sweden.] Chemical symbol, Yb; atomic weight, 173 (?). An element discovered by Marignac in gadolinite, in regard to which little is known. The spectrum of this metal is believed to be peculiar, and to justify its claim to be recognized as a distinct element.

yttria (it'ri-ą), n. [NL., < Ytter(by), in Sweden.] A metallic oxid or earth, having the appearance of a white powder, which is insipid, insoluble in water, and infusible. It dissolves in acids, forming sweetish salts, which have often an amethyst color. It has no action on vegetable colors. Yttria is the sesquioxid of yttrium, Y_2O_3. It occurs in certain rare minerals, and was first detected in gadolinite found at Ytterby, in Sweden.

yttrialite (it'ri-al-it), n. [< yttria + -lite.] A silicate of thorium and the yttrium earths, occurring in massive forms of a dark olive-green color. It is found with gadolinite and other rare species in Llano county, Texas.

yttric (it'rik), a. [< yttr-ium + -ic.] Related to or containing yttrium.

yttriferous (it-rif'e-rus), a. [< NL. yttrium, q. v., + L. ferre = E. *bear*1.] Containing or yielding yttrium.

yttrious (it'ri-us), a. [< yttria + -ous.] Pertaining to yttria; containing yttria: as, the yttrious oxid of columbium.

yttrium (it'ri-um), n. [NL., < Ytter(by), in Sweden.] Chemical symbol, Y; atomic weight, 89 (?). A metal, the base of the earth yttria. But little is known of this metal, and its atomic weight has never been satisfactorily determined. As obtained by Cleve, yttrium is a dark-gray powder exhibiting a metallic luster under the burnisher. It belongs, with various other rare metals, to the cerium group, in regard to most of which, from their scarcity and their resemblance to one another, but little has been definitely made out.

yttrium-garnet (it'ri-um gär'net), n. A variety of garnet containing a small amount of the yttrium earths.

yttrocerite (it-ro-se'rit), n. [< ytt(rium) + cer(ium) + *-ite*2.] A mineral occurring very sparingly at Finbo and Broddbo, near Falun, in Sweden, embedded in quartz. Its color is violet-blue, inclining to gray and white. It occurs crystallized and massive, and is a fluoride of yttrium, cerium, and calcium.

yttrocolumbite (it'ro-kō-lum'bit), n. [< yttrium + columb(ium) + *-ite*2.] Same as yttrotantalite.

yttrogummite (it-ro-gum'it), n. [< yttrium + gummite.] A mineral formed by the alteration of eleveite, and related to it as is ordinary gummite to uraninite.

yttrotantalite (it-rō-tan'ta-lit), n. [< yttrium + tantalite.] A rare mineral found at Ytterby, Sweden, of a black or brown color. It is a tantalate of yttrium, uranium, and iron, with calcium.

yttrotitanite (it-ro-ti'tan-it), n. [< yttrium + titanite.] Same as keilhauite.

> Experiments for its discovery are to be undertaken on rutiles, yttrotitanites, wohlerites, etc.
> Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXV. 338.

yu, yuh (yō), n. The Chinese name for nephrite or jade.

Yucatecan (yō-ka-tek'an), a. [< Sp. Yucateco (< Yucatan, Yucatan) + -an.] Pertaining or belonging to Yucatan, a region in southeastern Mexico.

> A fair sample of Yucatecan agriculture.
> U. S. Cons. Rep., 1881, No. lxvii. p. 405.

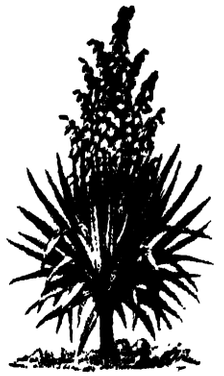
yucca (yuk'ą), n. [< Sp. yuca, now yuca (NL. yucca); from the Amer. Ind. name.] 1. A plant of the genus Yucca. —2. [cap.] [NL. (Dillenius, 1719).] A genus of liliaceous plants, of the tribe Dracæneæ. It is characterized by a distinct woody stem, numerous panicled roundish or bell-shaped flowers with nearly or quite separate perianth segments, small anthers sessile on a club-shaped filament, and an ovary with numerous ovules. There are about 20 species, natives of the United States, Mexico, and Central America. They are low upright perennials, sometimes trees, often with numerous branches. Their leaves are linear-lanceolate and thick, usually rigid and spiny-tipped, and crowded at the apex of the stem or branch. The handsome pendulous flowers are large and usually white or cream-colored, attaining a length of 3 inches in Y. baccata, and form a showy terminal inflorescence often several feet long seated among clustered leaves or raised on a branched peduncle. The fruit is either a dry loculicidal capsule or a pendulous berry which is fleshy or pulpy sometimes cylindrical and elongated, as Y. baccata it becomes dry and spongy. The rootstock is subarborescent, and in Y. treculeana and other species is much used by the Mexicans for soap being included with various similar products under the name amole. The leaves yield a coarse fiber; the taller species also produce a fibrous wood which is heavy, spongy and difficult to cut or work; it shows distinct concentric rings, unlike that of most monocotyledonous plants. Some species are said to reach the height of 50 feet and the thickness of 5 feet. The species are most numerous in the southern United States and northern Mexico; one, Y. angustifolia, extends from New Mexico to the Dakotas; three are Californian; three are well-known plants of the Southern States, Y. filamentosa, Y. aloifolia, Y. gloriosa (including Y. recurvifolia), all decorative plants, mostly stemless, thriving in poor soil, even in drifting sand of the coast: their flowers are white, tinged sometimes with green, yellow, or purple; they furnish a harsh, brittle, but very strong fiber, called dagger-fiber, used for packing and as a rude cordage. From their sharp-pointed leaves with threads hanging from their edges, Y. filamentosa and Y. aloifolia are known as Adam's needle and thread and as Eve's thread, the former is also called silk-grass (which see), and sometimes bear-grass, its young pulpy stems being eaten by bears. Y. aloifolia is also known in the Southern States and in the West Indies as Spanish dagger and dagger-plant. Y. gloriosa is the dwarf palmetto, or mound-lily. The preceding and several others are favorites in cultivation, chiefly under the name yucca, a species cultivated near Nice now begin to form a characteristic feature of some parts of the Mediterranean coast. Some species yield an edible fruit, as Y. baccata, the Spanish bayonet, or Mexican banana, a native of Mexico, extending into western Texas, New Mexico, and southern parts of Colorado and California; a strong coarse fiber, made into rope by the Mexicans, is procured from the leaves by macerating them in water. The name Spanish bayonet is also applied to other species, especially to Y. constricta (Y. elata), which occurs in Mexico and the United States from western Texas to Utah, grows from 9 to 15 feet high, and produces a light brown or yellowish wood, and to Y. treculeana (including Y. canaliculata), a long-leaved species of Texas and Mexico, sometimes 25 feet high and 2 feet thick, producing a bitter but sweetish fruit which is cooked and eaten by the Mexicans. It has its branches all near the top, produces great numbers of showy white flowers of a porcelain luster, followed by an edible berry. Y. brevifolia, known as Joshua-tree, native of Arizona and southern parts of Utah, Nevada, and California, a tree sometimes 40 feet high and about 3 feet in diameter, forms in the Mohave desert a straggling open forest; its light soft wood is sometimes made into paper pulp. Y. Whipplei of southern California is much admired for its beauty in cultivation. Y. Yucatana of Central America is branched from the base.



Yucca gloriosa

yucca-borer (yuk'ą-bor'ėr), n. 1. A large North American castnioid moth, Megathymus yuccæ, whose larva bores into the roots of plants of the genus Yucca. —2. A Californian weevil, Yuccaborus frontalis.

Yucca-fertilizer (Pronuba yuccasella)

f, male; g, female; h, chrysalis; i, cocoon; m, lateral view. Lower figure showing end of abdomen of male. Line shows natural size yucca-fertilizer (yuk'ą-fer'ti-li-zėr), n. A tineid moth, Pronuba yuccasella, which, by means of curious modified mouth-parts, is enabled to pollenize and thus fertilize the ovary of plants of the genus Yucca, causing a development of the seed-pod, in which its larva feeds. Also called yucca-pollenizer.

Yuccaborus (yu-kab'o-rus), n. [NL. (Leconte, 1876), < Yucca + Gr. βορός, devouring, gluttonous.] A genus of weevils, of the family Calandridæ, containing a single species, Y. frontalis, of California, the yucca-borer.

Yucca fertilizer (Pronuba yuccasella)

a, larva; b, moth with wings folded; c, female moth with wings expanded (all natural size); d, chrysalis; e, same, front view; f, head of larva from below; g, same from above; h, leg of larva; i, maxilla; k, mandible; l, labial palpi and spinneret; m, antenna (all enlarged) yuchten, n. Same as juft for juchten.

yuck (yuk), v. i. [Also yuk, yeuk, yeuck an unassibilated form (perhaps after D jeuken, jokken = LG. jucken = G. jucken) of itch, alt. AS. giecan, itch: see itch.] To itch. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

yuck (yuk), n. [< yuck, v.] The itch, mange, or scabies. [Prov. Eng.]

yuckel (yuk'el), n. Same as yuckel for hick-wall. Also yukkel. [Prov. Eng.]

> I feels sumhow as peert as a yukkel.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. xviii.

yucker (yuk'ėr), n. [Imitative, but prob. connected with yuckel.] The flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker, of eastern North America, Colaptes auratus. See cut under *flicker*3. [U. S.]

yuft, n. Same as juft for juchten.

yug, yuga (yúg, yō'gą), n. [Hind. yug, < Skt. yuga, an age, < √ yuj, join: see *yoke*1.] One of the ages into which the Hindus divide the duration or existence of the world.

yuh, n. See yu.

Yuhina, n. [NL. (Hodgson, 1836), from a native name.] A genus of timeliine birds, also called by Hodgson Polyodon, and by Cabanis Odontorus. Four species occur in the Himalayan region and western China. Y. gularis, Y. diademata, Y. occipitalis, and Y. nigrimentum.

Yuhina gularis.

yuke, v. and n. Same as yuck.

yukkel, n. Another spelling of yuckel for hick-wall.

yulan (yō'lan), n. [Chinese, < yu, yuh, a gem (jade), + lan, plant.] A Chinese magnolia, Magnolia conspicua, with abundant large white flowers, appearing in spring before the leaves. It is a fine ornamental tree, in China 30 or 40 feet high, but in Europe and America smaller; in the United States it is only half-hardy at the north. A kindred hardy species, also from China, is M. obovata (M. purpurea), with flowers pink purple on the outside and white within, beginning to appear before the leaves.

Yule (yōl), n. [Also dial., in comp., yu- (yu-batch, yu-block, etc.); more prop., according to the ME. form, spelled yool*: early mod. E. sometimes eele; < ME. yol, yole, gol, December, < AS. geol, gehhol, gehhel (ML. Giulus), December (se ærra geóla, December, se æftera geóla, January, the months beginning respectively before and after the winter solstice), = Icel. jol = Sw. Dan. jul (> MLG. jul), Yule, the Christmas feast; = Goth. judeus in fruma judeis (appar. 'first Yule'), applied, in a fragment of a calendar, appar. to November. The mod. E. use seems to be due to Scand. rather than to the AS. Origin unknown; according to a common view, the word is identified with Icel. hjól, wheel, with the explanation that it refers to the sun's 'wheeling' or turning at the winter solstice. This notion, absurd with regard to the alleged connection of thought, is also phonetically impossible; the AS. word for wheel was hweol, and could have no connection with geól. Another explanation connects the word with gaul, gaol, howl, cry; as if yule was orig. the 'noise' of revelry. This is also untenable. The Goth. judeus implies an AS. iúle*, an unstable form variable to geóle* or geól (= Icel. jól); the forms gehhol, gehhel, are rare, and may be mere blunders.] The season or feast of Christmas.

> I crane in this court a crystemas gomen [sport],
> For hit is yol & nwe yer.
> Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 504.

> He made me gomane at yule, and gafe me gret gyftes.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3620.

> At eule we wonten gambols dasnce,
> To carrole, and to sing,
> To haue gud spiced eewe, androsste,
> And plum-pies for a king.
> Warner, Albion's England, v. 113.

> They bring me sorrow touch'd with joy.
> The merry merry bells of Yule.
> Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxviii.

Yule block, clog, or log. Same as Christmas log, under Christmas.

> A small portion of the yule-block was always preserved till the joyful season came again, when it was used for lighting the new Christmas block.
> Hone, Yule-book, col. 1119.

> The burning of the Yule log is an ancient Christmas ceremony, transmitted to us from our Scandinavian ancestors, who, at their feast of Juul, at the winter solstice, used to kindle huge bonfires in honour of their god Thor.
> Chambers's Book of Days, II. 778.

An enormous log glowing and blazing, and sending forth a vast volume of light and heat, . . . was the Yule clog, which the squire was particular in having brought in and illumined on a Christmas eve, according to ancient custom. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 287.

Yule cake, Same as Yule dough. Hone, Every-Day Book, I. 1826.—Yule candle, a large candle used for light during the festivities of Christmas eve. In many places the consumption of the candle before the end of the evening was believed to portend ill luck, and any piece remaining was carefully preserved to be burnt out at the owner's likewake.

As an accompaniment to the Yule log, a candle of monstrous size, called the Yule candle, or Christmas candle, shed its light on the festive board during the evening.
Chambers's Book of Days, II. 725.

Yule dough (dialectal doo, dew), a cake made especially for Christmas time. Also called Setegande (because representing in shape a baby, probably the infant Christ) and Yule cake.

The Yule-Dough (or Dow), a Kind of Baby or little Image of Paste, which our Bakers used formerly to bake at this Season, and present to their Customers, in the same Manner as the Chandlers gave Christmas Candles.
Bourne's Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 103.

In the north of England the common people still make a sort of little images at Christmas, which they call Yule Dows. The Listener (1886), I. 62 (quoted in N. and Q., [7th ser., XI. 6).

Yule (yōl), v. i.; pret. and pp. Yuled, ppr. Yuling. [< Yule, n.] To celebrate Yule or Christmas. Halliwell; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Yule-tide (yōl'tīd), n. The time or season of Yule or Christmas.

In the old clog almanacs, a wheel is the device employed for marking the season of Yule-tide.
Chambers's Book of Days, II. 746.

Yuncinæ (yun-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., prop. Iynginæ, < Yunx, prop. Iynx (Iyng-), + -inæ.] Same as Iynginæ. G. R. Gray, 1840.

yungan (yung'gan), n. [Native name.] The dugong. A. P. Wright.

Yungidæ, Yunginæ, n. pl. Same as Iyngidæ, Iynginæ.

Yunx (yungks), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1766 or earlier), also Iynx and Iynx, < Gr. ἴυγξ, the wryneck.] 1. Same as Iynx.—2. [l. c.] The wryneck, Iynx torquilla. See cut under wryneck.

The Yunx, a genuine Woodpecker, hath a tail as long in proportion to his body, and marked with cross-bars too. John Ray, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 200 yupon (yū'pon), n. Same as yapon. Sportsman's Gazetteer.

yure (yūr), n. See ewer[3]. [Prov. Eng.]

yurt (yūrt), n. [Siberian.] One of the houses or huts, whether permanent or movable, of the natives of northern and central Asia. Also yourta, yourte, jurt.

It [the lake] is ten miles in circumference, and here and there are yourtes inhabited by the Mongols.
Ides, Travels (trans. 1853), I. 204.

yutu (yō'tū), n. [Peruv.] A species of tinamou, found in Peru.

A partridge called yutu frequents the long grass.
Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 672.

yuxi, v. and n. An obsolete variant of yex.

yvet, n. An old spelling of eryl.

yveli, a., n., and adv. An old spelling of evil.

yvoiret, yvoryt. Old spellings of ivory.

ywist, adv. and n. See iwis.

ywraket. An obsolete preterit of wreak.

ywriet. An obsolete past participle of wry[2].

ywroket. An obsolete preterit of wreak.

yye, n. A Middle English form of eye.

1. The twenty-sixth character in the English alphabet, and the last, as in that of the later Romans. In the Phœnician system, from which ours comes through the Latin and Greck, it was the seventh sign. The comparison of ancient forms including the Egyptian as perhaps the original (compare A), is as follows:

Egyptian Hieroglyph. | Hieratic | Phœnician | Early Greek and Latin.

The same character has a corresponding place as zeta in the Greek series, and went over in that place to the Italian alphabets; but, about the third century B. C., it was dropped out by the Romans as not needed, and the newly devised G (see G) was put in its place. Then finally, some two centuries later, it was taken back (together with or soon after Y: see F) to express in borrowed Greek words the peculiar double sound (ds or dz) which it had won in Greek usage, and so appeared anew in its old company, but with greatly altered position. It was not used in the oldest English, but came gradually in out of the French in the fifteenth century and later. With us, as in French, it has lost its value of a compound consonant, and expresses the sonant or voiced sibilant sound corresponding to s as sharp or breathed sibilant. The proper z-sound is also, and even much oftener, written by s, as in rose, and in a few words (as peasant, disolve) by double s, and yet more rarely (for example, sacrifice) by c. The sound is a common one in our English pronunciation—not much less than 3 per cent. (the sharp s being 4¼ per cent.). As initial, the character z is written mostly in words of Greek origin, but as final (almost always with silent e added) it is found in many Germanic words, as freeze, graze. It occurs sometimes double, as in buzz, buzzard. The corresponding sonant to our other sibilant (written in this work with sh, after the example of sh) is spelled with either s or z, as in pleasure, azure. It is the rarest of our consonant sounds, counting for only a fiftieth of 1 per cent. of our utterance. In certain Scotch words and names, as cuparesaizie, Dalziel, z is written for the y-sound. In the United States the character is generally called zee, in England, generally zed (from zeta), izzard (which see) is an old name for it.

2. As a symbol, in math.: (a) [l. c.] In algebra, the third variable or unknown quantity. (b) [l. c.] In analytical geometry, one of the system of point-coördinates in space. (c) In mechanics, the component of a force in the direction of the axis of z.

za! (zä), int. [An arbitrary syllable.] In solmization, a syllable once used for B♭.

za-. [< Gr. ζα-, inseparable prefix, intensive and augmentative.] An intensive or augmentative prefix sometimes used in forming modern scientific words to emphasize the character or quality noted by the element to which it is prefixed (like E. very, a.), as in zalambdodont, having teeth with a very V-shaped ridge, Zalophus, Zamiaceæ, Zapus, etc.

Zabaism, Zabism (zā'bā-izm, za'bizm), n. Same as Sabaism.

zabra (zā'brā), n. [Sp. and Pg.] A small vessel used on the coasts of Spain.

> Portugal furnished and set foorth . . . ten Galeons, two Zabraes, 1300. Mariners. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 582.
>
> Of the tenders and zabres seventeen were lost and eighteen returned. Motley, Hist. Netherlands, II. 507.

Zabrida (zab'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Hope, 1838), < Zabrus + -idæ.] A family of caraboid beetles, named from the genus Zabrus.

Zabrus (zā'brus), n. [NL. (Clairville, 1806), < Gr. ζαβρός, gluttonous.] An extensive genus of caraboid beetles. They are of medium or large size, black with metallic reflections, and remarkable in that many of them are rather phytophagous than carnivorous, particularly in the larval state. Z. gibbus of Europe is a noted enemy to cereal crops, its larva feeding on the stems just above the ground, and the beetle devouring the grain. Over 60 species are known, each occupying a narrowly restricted region in the Mediterranean fauna, except Z. gibbus, which extends into northern Europe.

zac (zak), n. Same as zebuder.

zacatilla (zä-kä-tē'lyä), n. See cochineal, 1.

zaffer, zaffre (zaf'ėr), n. [Also saffar, zaffir, saffera, zaphara, and saphera; < F. zaffre, saffre, saffre = Sp. zafre = It. zaffera; of Ar. origin; cf. saffron.] The residuum of cobalt-producing ores after the sulphur, arsenic, and other volatile matters have been more or less completely expelled by roasting. As the result of this process a grayish oxid of cobalt is left behind, which is mingled with various impurities, and usually with some sand. Zaffer is used in the manufacture of smalt, and in various other ways, as in furnishing the beautiful color known as cobalt blue, which is still of importance, although much less so since the discovery of a method of making artificial ultramarine.

zaffer-blue (zaf'ėr-blō), n. Same as cobalt blue (which see, under blue).

Zaglossus (za-glos'us), n. [NL. (Gill, 1877), < Gr. ζᾰ- intensive + γλῶσσα, tongue.] The proper name of that genus of prickly ant-eaters which is better known by its synonym Acanthoglossus (which see).

Zaitha (zā'thä), n. [NL. (Amyot and Serville, 1843), < Heb. zaith.] A genus of waterbugs, of the family Belostomatidæ, peculiar to America. They somewhat resemble the species of Belostoma, but have a prolonged tapering head and long rostrum. Z. flumínea is a very common and wide-spread insect, of a yellowish color found in the mud or among the weeds of ponds and streams from Maine to Texas.

zalambdodont (za-lam'dō-dont), a. [< Gr. ζα- intensive + λαμβδοῦς, the letter λ, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-), = E. tooth.] Having short molar teeth with one V-shaped ridge; specifically, noting the Zalambdodonta: as, a zalambdodont dentition; a zalambdodont mammal: opposed to dilambdodont.

> The insectivores with zalambdodont dentition are the most primitive, or at least are generally so considered.
> Stand. Nat. Hist., V. 130.

Zalambdodonta (za-lam-dō-don'tä), n. pl. [NL.: see zalambdodont.] A group or series of insectivorous mammals; a division of the suborder Bestiæ, or Insectivora vera, having short molars whose crowns present one V-shaped transverse ridge, a formation characteristic of the insectivores of tropical regions, which are thus contrasted with temperate and northerly forms (Dilambdodonta). The Madagascar tenrecs, the African golden moles, and the West Indian solenodons are examples. See cuts under ajouta, Chrysochloris, solenodon, and tenrec.

Zalophus (zal'ō-fus), n. [NL. (Gill, 1867), < Gr. ζα- intensive + λοφος, crest.] A genus of otaries, or eared seals; so named from the high parietal crest or ridge of the skull. The common sea lion of California is Z. californianus (formerly Z. gillespiei), and another inhabits Australia and New Zealand.

California Sea-lion (Zalophus californianus).

zamang (za-mang'), n. [S. Amer.] Same as rain-tree.

zambo, n. See sambo.

zambomba (Sp. pron. thäm-bom'bä), n. [Sp.] A rude Spanish musical instrument, consisting of an earthen jar the top of which is covered with parchment, through which a stick is inserted. It is sounded by rubbing the stick with the finger, so as to set the air within the jar into sympathetic vibration.

Zamelodia (zam-e-lō'di-ä), n. [NL. (Cones, 1880), < Gr. ζα- intensive + μελῳδία, a singing, melody: see melody.] A genus of American song-grosbeaks. Two species occurring in the United States are the rose-breasted and the black-headed, Z. ludoviciana and Z. melanocephala. (See cut under rose-breasted.) The latter inhabits the western United States from the plains to the Pacific, where the former is not found, and extends into Mexico. The adult male has the crown and sides of the head, the back, the wings, and the tail black, the wings and tail much varied with white, and the neck all around and the under parts rich orange-brown, shelling to pure yellow on the belly and the lining of the wings. The bill and feet are grayish-blue. The length is about 8½ inches, the extent 12½. The female differs much from the male, but has the same rich yellow under wing-coverts. Also called Habia.

Zamia (zā'mi-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1767), < L. zamia, assumed to mean 'a fir-cone.'] 1. A genus of gymnospermous plants, of the order Cycadaceæ, type of the tribe Zamieæ. It is characterized by a naked trunk partly or wholly above the Female Plant of Zamia integrifolia (the waved line indicates the surface of the ground).

a, a scale with one seed; b, the young female flower.

soil, pinnate leaves, and naked truncate strobile-scales, both the male and female cones being oblong and cylindrical and their scales similar. There are about 30 species, natives of tropical and subtropical North America. They produce a simple, lobed or branching caudex, sometimes a low trunk, often covered with scars. The stems increase in height by the yearly development of a crown of stiff fern-like leaves with firm rigid segments which are entire or serrate, parallel-nerved, and jointed at the broad base. Z. integrifolia (Z. pumila), with a short globular or oblong chiefly subterranean stem, occurs in low grounds in southern Florida, and is the only cycad found within the United States; it yields a starch known as Florida arrowroot; the plant is called coontie (which see). Z. furfuracea and the preceding are known as wild sago in Jamaica. From these and other dwarf species an excellent arrowroot is made in the Bahamas and elsewhere in the West Indies. Many species cultivated under glass as zamia are now classed as Encephalartos, and Z. spiralis as Macrozamia.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Zamieæ (zā-mī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Miquel, 1843), < Zamia + -eæ.] A tribe of gymnospermous plants, of the order Cycadaceæ. It is characterized by a deciduous fertile strobile with peltate uniovulate scales; and by leaf-segments straight in the bud, not circinate as in Cycas and in ferns. It includes 60 species, of 9 genera, or all the plants of the order except the genus Cycas. They are singular plants, usually with a thick woody trunk and pinnate leaves; the principal genera are Zamia (the type), Macrozamia, Ceratozamia, Dioon, and Stangeria. They are chiefly tropical, and occur mostly in North America, South Africa, and Australia.

zamindar (zam'in-där), n. Same as zemindar.

zamindari (zam'in-dä-ri), n. Same as zemindary, 2.

Zamiostrobus (zā-mi-os'trō-bus), n. [NL., < L. zamia, assumed to mean 'a fir-cone,' + Gr. στρόβος, a top, cone: see strobile.] The generic name given by Endlicher to certain fossil cones which resemble the fruit of the living genus Zamia. They have been found in the Lower Lias, the Coralline limestone, the Wealden, and the Miocene.

Zamites (zam-ī'tēz), n. [NL., < L. zamia, assumed to mean 'a fir-cone.'] The name given by Brongniart to certain fossil plants bearing to the cycads, and considered to be more or less closely allied to the living Zamiæ. The genus Zamites first appears in the Trias, but is especially well developed in the Jurassic; it continued through the Cretaceous, and finally disappeared in the Miocene. There have been about 30 species described. The cycadaceous flora played an important part in the vegetation of Greenland and Spitzbergen during the Jurassic epoch, giving an almost tropical aspect to the forests of that region and epoch. Various other genera of cycads allied to Zamites have been established, chiefly, if not entirely, based on the forms of the leaves and their segments. Among these are Glossozamites, a genus with long elliptical leaves, found in the Lower Cretaceous; and Otozamites, with small elliptic-lanceolate leaves, divided into several groups in accordance with the very varying form of the segments of the leaf. The latter genus runs through the whole of the Jurassic, as far as the lower division of the Upper or White Jura, when it gives way to the genus Zamites. It has not been observed in the Jurassic rocks of the arctic regions. Pelopteris, Cteniopteris, Pterophyllum, Pollozamites, Pterozamites, Anomozamites, and Sphenozamites are other genera of cycads more or less allied to Zamites and to one another.

zamouse (za-mōs'), n. [W. African.] A West African buffalo, or bush-ox, found in Sierra Leone, Bos brachyceros, the short-horned buffalo, having the ears fringed with hair, short horns depressed at base, and no dewlap.

zampogna (tsämo-pō'nyä), n. [It.] 1. Same as bagpipe.—2. Same as shawm.

zamana (za-nā'nä), n. Same as zemana.

Zanclodon (zang'klō-don), n. [NL. (Plein), < Gr. ζάγκλον, sickle, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] A genus of dinosaurs, typical of the family Zanclodontidæ, having both fore and hind feet five-toed, no ascending astragalar process, broad and long pubes, and biconcave vertebræ.

Zanclodontidæ (zang-klo-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zanclodont(-) + -idæ.] A family of carnivorous theropod dinosaurs, typified by the genus Zanclodon, from the Trias of Europe.

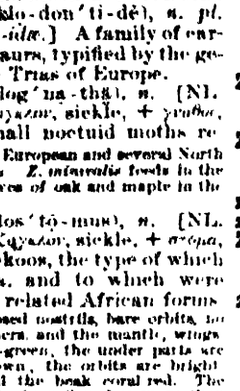
Zanclognatha (zang-klog'na-thä), n. [NL. (Lederer, 1857), < Gr. ζάγκλον, sickle, + γνάθος, jaw.] A genus of small noctuid moths resembling pyralids. Ten European and several North American species are known. Z. infantalis feeds in the larval state on the dead leaves of oak and maple in the United States.

Zanclostomus (zang-klos'tō-mus), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1837), < Gr. ζάγκλον, sickle, + στόμα, mouth.] A genus of cuckoos, the type of which is Z. javanicus of Java, and to which were formerly referred some related African forms. The species named has exposed nostrils, bare orbits, no crest, white-tipped tail feathers, and the mantle, wings, and tail glossed with bluish-green, the under parts are gray, buff, and chestnut brown, the orbits are bright blue, the eyes blackish, and the beak coral red. The length is 16 inches, of which the tail makes more than half. This handsome cuckoo ranges from Tenasserim down the Malay peninsula, and also occurs in Sumatra, Borneo, and Java.

Zanclus (zang'klus), n. [NL. (Cuvier and Valenciennes, 1831), < Gr. ζάγκλον, sickle.] A genus of carangoid fishes based on a Pacific species, Z. cornutus, a small fish of striking form and color.



Zanclus cornutus.

sander (zan'dėr), n. [G.] The European pike-perch, Stizostedion lucioperca (formerly Lucioperca sandra). It inhabits fresh waters of central Europe. Also sander and sant.

sand-mole (sand'mōl), n. [< D. zandmol; < zand, sand, + mol, mole.] Same as sand-mole. See cuts under Bathyergus and Georychus.

zanella (zä-nel'ä), n. A twilled fabric used for covering umbrellas. Draper's Dict.

Zannichellia (zan-i-kel'i-ä), n. [NL. (Micheli, 1729), named after Zannichelli (1662–1729), author of a flora of Venice.] A genus of plants, of the order Naiadaceæ, type of the tribe Zannichelliæ. It is characterized by the absence of a perianth, by a single stamen, with slender filament, and slightly curved carpels. The only species (by some considered as forming 9 species), Z. palustris, is a native of brackish ditches and salt water throughout the world. It is a submerged slender aquatic with a filiform creeping stem, the capillary branches becoming twisted into matted floating masses. The leaves are chiefly opposite, linear or filiform; the flowers are minute, at first terminal, but becoming axillary. See horned pondweed, under pondweed.

Zannichelliaceæ (zan-i-ke-li-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Zannichellia + -aceæ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Naiadaceæ. It is characterized by axillary unisexual flowers, the male with a single stamen and globose pollen, the female with its two to nine carpels each containing a single pendulous orthotropous ovule. It includes 3 genera, of which Zannichellia is the type; the others, salt-water plants with a perianth of three hyaline segments, occur in the Mediterranean region (Althenia) and in Australia (Lepilaena). All are slender submerged aquatics growing from a filiform nodose creeping root-stock, and producing thread-like leaves and minute flowers.

Zanonia (zä-nō'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), by transfer from an endogen so named by Plumier (1703) from Giacomo Zanoni (1615–82), author of a flora of Bologna, and director there of the botanic garden.] A genus of plants, of the order Cucurbitaceæ, type of the tribe Zanonieæ. It is characterized by entire leaves, and flowers with three calyx-lobes, five stamens, and three two-cleft styles. The 2 species are natives of India and the Malayan archipelago. They are shrubby climbers with petioled ovate or oblong entire leaves and unbranched tendrils. The small flowers are borne in loose pendulous panicles. The fruit is cylindrical, club-shaped, or hemispherical, with a broadly three-valved apex, and containing large pendulous broadly winged seeds, that of Z. Indica is known as tandalee-creed (which see).

Zanonieæ (zan-ō-ni'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Blume, 1825), < Zanonia + -eæ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Cucurbitaceæ. It is characterized by flowers with five stamens, free filaments, oblong one-celled anthers opening by a longitudinal slit, and an ovary with three thick placentæ on which the ovules are irregularly inserted. It includes 17 species, of 3 genera, of which Zanonia is the type, the others are also tropical climbing shrubs—one, Gerrardanthus, occurring in Africa, the other, Alsomitra, including most of the species, extending through Asia, America, and Australia.

Zanora palm. See *palm*².

zant (zant), n. Same as zander.

Zante (zan'te), n. A contraction of Zante-currant.

Zantedeschia (zan-te-des'ki-ä), n. [NL. (Sprengel, 1826), named from Francesco Zantedeschi, who wrote on the plants of Brescia and Bergamo in 1824.] A plant genus now known by the earlier name Richardia (which see).

Zante fustic. Same as young fustic (which see, under fustic). See also cut under smoke-tree.

Zante-wood (zan'te-wud), n. 1. Same as Zante fustic.—2. Same as satinwood, Chloroxylon Swietenia.

zanthin, n. An erroneous form of xanthin.

zantho-. For words so beginning, see xantho-.

Zantiote (zan'ti-ōt), n. [< Zante (see def.) + -ote.] A native of Zante (ancient Zacynthus), one of the Ionian Islands.

zany (zā'ni), n.; pl. zanies (-niz). [< F. zani, < It. zani, zane, a zany or clown; aldr. of Giovanni, John: see John, and cf. E. Jack in similar use.] 1. A comic performer, originating on the Italian stage, whose function it is to make awkward attempts at mimicking the tricks of the professional clown, or the acts of other performers; hence, an unskilful buffoon in general, a merry-andrew; an amusing fool.

> Be a like a zany to a tumbler,
> Host tries tricks after him to make men laugh.
> B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 1.
>
> He teach thee, thou shalt like my Zany be,
> And feignt to do my cunning after me.
> Heywood, Four Prentices of London (Works, ed. 1874, II. [265].
>
> The English apes and very zanies be
> Of everything that they do hear and see.
> Inaction. To Benj. Reynolds.
>
> Preacher at once, and zany of thy age!
> Pope, Dunciad, iii. 200.
>
> He Granvelle had been wont in the days of his greatest insolence, to speak of the most eminent nobles as zanies, lunatics, and buffoons. Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 466.

2†. An attendant.

> Lady, Imperia the courtesan's zany hath brought you this letter from the poor gentleman in the deep dungeon: but would not stay till he had an answer.
> Middleton, Blurt Master-Constable, iii. 1.

Syn. 1. Clown, Fool, Buffoon, Mimic, Zany. "The zany in Shakespeare's day was not so much a buffoon and mimic as the obsequious follower of a buffoon and the attenuated mime of a mimic. He was the vice servant, or attendant of the professional clown or fool, who, dressed like his master, accompanied him on the stage or in the ring following his movements, imitating his tricks and adding to the general merriment by his ludicrous failures and comic imbecilities. The professional clown or fool might be clever and accomplished in his loathsome, a skilful tumbler and monster-lamb, doing what he undertook to do fairly and well; but this was never the case with the zany. He was always slight and thin, well meaning, but comparatively helpless, full of readiness, grimace, and alacrity, but also of incompetance, eagerly trying to imitate his superior, but ending in failure and absurdity. . . . We have sometimes seen the clown and the zany in the ring together: the clown doing clever tricks, the zany provoking immense laughter by his ludicrous failures in attempting to imitate them. Where there is only a single clown he often combines both the characters, doing skilful tumbling on his own account, and playing the zany to the riders." (Edinburgh Rev., July, 1880, art. 4.)

zany (zā'ni), v. t.; pret. and pp. zanied, ppr. zanying. [< zany, n.] To play the zany to; mimic; imitate apishly.

> All excellence
> In other mankind do but zany hers.
> Fletcher (and another ?), Queen of Corinth, i. 2.
>
> Laughs them to scorne, as man doth brute apes
> When they will zanie men.
> Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II., iv. 1.

zanyism (zā'ni-izm), n. [< zany + -ism.] 1. The act or practice of imitation or mimicry.—2. The condition or habits of a buffoon or a low clown: often used contemptuously.

Zanzalian (zan-zā'li-an), n. [< Zanzalus (see def.) + -an.] A Jacobite of the East: so called occasionally from Zanzalus, a surname of Jacobus Baradæus. See Jacobite, 2.

zanze, n. [African.] An African musical instrument consisting of a wooden box in which a number of sonorous tongues of wood or metal are fixed. These are sounded by the finger or a stick.

Zanzibari (zan-zi-bä'ri), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to Zanzibar, a sultanate of eastern Africa. It was in 1890 made a British protectorate, confined chiefly to the island of Zanzibar, while the coast of the neighboring mainland was ceded to Germany.

> The country is practically in the hands of Arabs and Zanzibari slavers and traders.
> Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1890, p. 372.

II. n. An inhabitant of Zanzibar.

zapateado (Sp. pron. thä-pä-te-ä'do), n. [Sp.] A Spanish dance in which the rhythm is marked by blows of the foot on the ground.

zaphara (zaf'a-rä), n. Same as saffer.

Zaphrentinæ (zaf-ren-tī'nē), n. pl. [NL. (Edwards and Haime, 1850), < Zaphrentis + -inæ.] A subfamily of Paleozoic rugose stone-corals, of the family Cyathophyllidæ, typified by the genus Zaphrentis. They have a free and simple corallum, and a well-developed septal fossula formed by a tubular infection of the tabulæ on one side, or replaced by a cristiform process. The tabulæ are complete but the septa are deficient or irregular, and there is usually no columella.

Zaphrentis (zaf-ren'tis), n. [NL. (Rafinesque and Clifford, 1820), prob. < Gr. ζα- intensive + φρήν, brain.] 1. The typical genus of Zaphrentinæ. The species are deeply cupped, with many septa and a peculiar pit on one side of the interior. Z. cuneatus is an example. They lived in the Silurian and Carboniferous periods.

2. [l. c.] A species of this genus. Webster's Intel., 1890.

Zapodidæ (za-pod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zapus (pod-) + -idæ.] A family of rodent mammals, of the myomorphic series of the order Rodentia, framed by Coues for the reception of the jumping mouse of North America, Zapus hudsonius, a small mouse-like quadruped intermediate in some respects between the Muridæ, or mice proper, and the Dipodidæ, or jerboas of the Old World. By some the family is considered as a subfamily of Dipodidæ, under the names Zapodinæ and Jaculinæ. See Zapus, and cut under deer-mouse.

Zapodinæ (za-po-dī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zapus (pod-) + -inæ.] The Zapodidæ as a subfamily of Dipodidæ.

zapotilla (zap-o-til'ä), n. Same as sapodilla.

zaptieh (zäp'ti-e), n. [Turk.] A policeman.

Zapus (zā'pus), n. [NL. (Coues, 1876), < Gr. ζα- intensive + πούς = E. foot.] The only genus of Zapodidæ. Z. hudsonius is the common jumping mouse, or deer-mouse, of North America. See cut under deer-mouse.

Zaragoza mangrove. See mangrove.

zarape (zä-rä'pe), n. [Sp. Amer.] Same as serape.

> Men wearing vermilion zarapes about their shoulders.
> The Nation, XLVIII. 314.

Zarathustrian (zar-a-thos'tri-an), a. and n. [< Zarathustra + -an.] Same as Zoroastrian.

Zarathustrianism (zar-a-thos'tri-an-izm), n. [< Zarathustrian + -ism.] The religion of Zarathustra; Zoroastrianism.

Zarathustric (zar-a-thos'trik), a. Same as Zoroastric.

> It cannot be denied that the Zarathustric dogmas are pure old Aryan mythology in a new shape.
> Encyc. Brit., XX. 861.

Zarathustrism (zar-a-thos'trizm), n. [< Zarathustra (see Zarathustrian) + -ism.] Same as Zarathustrianism.

> Modern Brahmanism, Zarathustrism, and Buddhism.
> E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 49.

zaratite (zar'a-tit), n. [After Señor Zarate, a Spaniard.] A hydrous carbonate of nickel, occurring as an emerald-green incrustation on chromite. Also called emerald nickel.

zareba (za-rē'bä), n. In Sudan and adjoining parts of Africa, an inclosure against enemies or wild animals, as by a thorn-hedge; a fortified camp in general. Also written zareeba, zareba, zariba, etc.

We employed ourselves until the camels should arrive in cutting thorn branches and constructing a zareeba or fenced camp, to protect our animals during the night.
Sir S. W. Baker, Heart of Africa, p. 85.

zarf (zärf), n. [Also zurf; < Ar. zarf, a vessel, a case.] A holder for a coffee-cup; a term used throughout the Levant. These holders are usually of metal and of ornamental design in openwork. Their immediate object is to prevent the hot cup from burning the fingers.

a, the Zarf; b, the Cup.

Some zarfs are of plain or gilt silver filigree.
E. W. Lane, Mod. Egyptians, I. 169, note.

zarnich (zär'nik), n. [Also zarnec, etc.; < Ar. zernikh, azzernikh, arsenic, < Gr. ἀρσενικόν, arsenic: see arsenic.] 1. In alchemy, orpiment. — 2. An old term embracing the native sulphids of arsenic, sandarac (or realgar) and orpiment.

zarzuela (Sp. pron. thär-thō-a'lä), n. [Sp.] A short drama with mediental music, like a vaudeville. It is said to have been first introduced into Spain at Zarzuela in the seventeenth century.

zastruga (zas-trö'gä), n. [Russ.] One of a series of ridges, with corresponding depressions, rising in wave like succession above the general level of the snow when this has been blown across by a long continued wind.

zataint, n. An old spelling of satin.

zati (zä'ti), n. [E. Ind.] The capped macaque of India and Ceylon, Macacus pileolatus.

Zauschneria (zâsh-ne'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Presl, 1830), named for Zauschner, a German botanist.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Onagrariew. It is characterized by flowers with four petals, eight stamens, and a four-celled ovary with numerous ovules, and, distinguishing it from the similar genus Epilobium, by a calyx with the tube suddenly expanding above the ovary into a funnel-shaped limb globose at the base. The only species, Z. Californica, a handsome plant of California, is cultivated under the names of Californian fuchsia and humming-bird's trumpet. It is a low branching shrub with sessile entire or minutely toothed leaves, and bright-crimson flowers which are solitary and sessile in the axils.

sax (saks), n. [Perhaps a var. of sax (< AS. seax, etc.), a knife.] An instrument used by slaters for cutting and dressing slates; a kind of hatchet with a sharp point on the pole for perforating the slate to receive the nail or pin.

Z-crank (zē'- or zed'krangk), n. A peculiarly shaped crank in the cylinder of some marine steam-engines: so named from its zigzag form. Simmonds.

Flowering Plant of Maize (Zea Mays).
a, male flower; b, female flower.

Zea (zē'ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737; used earlier by Brunfels, 1530), < Gr. ζέα, ζειά, a sort of grain used as fodder for horses.] A genus of grasses, type of the tribe Maydeæ. It is characterized by monœcious flowers, the male forming a terminal panicle, the female a large axillary sessile spike wrapped in numerous leaf-like bracts or husks, and consisting of pistillate flowers densely aggregated in many rows upon a thick unjointed rachis. The only species, Z. Mays, the well-known Indian corn or maize, long cultivated throughout many warm and temperate regions, is supposed to be a native of America, but is not now known in a wild state. It is a tall plant with unbranched robust stems, large light-green leaves, a handsome long-stalked terminal panicle (known as the tassel), and very thick fertile spikes from the husks of which project long green slender styles known as the silk. The fruit is a hard roundish caryopsis (known as the kernel) partly inclosed by the chaffy remains of the four glumes and broad palet — the kernels and their rachis (the cob) forming the spike or ear of corn. The seeds furnish an invaluable food to man and to domestic animals, the stalks and leaves are used for fodder, and the husks are much used for filling mattresses and horse-collars, and for making door-mats; a coarse textile fabric, also, and paper of excellent quality, have been experimentally made from them. The cob, and sometimes the whole ear, is used as fuel. The chief value lies of course in the kernel. See maize, cut in preceding column, and cut under husk. Compare *corn*1.

zeal (zel), n. [Early mod. E. zele; < OF. zele, F. zèle = Sp. Pg. It. zelo, < L. zelus, < Gr. ζῆλος, zeal (for ζεσλος), < ζέω (√ ζεσ), boil, akin to E. yeast: see yeast.] Passionate ardor in the pursuit of anything; intense interest or endeavor; eagerness to accomplish or obtain some object.

They have a zeal of [for, R. V.] God, but not according to knowledge. Rom. x. 2.

Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal.
Shak., Rich. II., I. 1. 47.

Controversial zeal soon turns its thoughts on force.
Burke, Rev. in France.

His fervent zeal for the interests of the state.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

= Syn. Earnestness, Enthusiasm, etc. (see eagerness), warmth, fervor, heartiness, energy.

zeal† (zel), v. i. [< zeal, n.] To entertain zeal; be zealous.

Stiff followers, and such as zeal marvellously for those whom they have chosen for their masters.
Bacon, Controversies of Church of Eng.

zealant†, n. See zelant.

zealed† (zeld), a. [< zeal + *-ed*2.] Filled with zeal; characterized by zeal.

Zealed religion
Fletcher (and another), Love's Pilgrimage, iv. 2.

zealful (zel'ful), a. [< zeal + -ful.] Full of zeal; zealous.

These dayes of Ours may shine
In Zeal-full Knowledge of the Truth divine.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., The Decay.

zealless (zel'les), a. [< zeal + -less.] Lacking zeal. Bp. Hall.

zealot (zel'ot), n. [< OF. zelote, < LL. zelotes, < Gr. ζηλωτής, a zealot, < ζῆλος, zeal: see zeal.] 1. One who is zealous or full of zeal; one carried away by excess of zeal; an immoderate partizan: generally in a disparaging sense.

He was one of those furious zealots who blow the bellows of faction until the whole furnace of politics is red-hot with sparks and cinders.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 299.

Like all neutrals he is liable to attack from the zealots of both parties. Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 62.

2. [cap.] One of a fanatical sect or party (the Zelotæ) among the Jews of Palestine under Roman dominion, who on account of their excesses in behalf of the Mosaic law were also called Sicarii or Assassins. The Zealots gained the ascendancy in a civil war, and withstood the Romans so fiercely as to bring about the total destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70. Zealots are also mentioned (perhaps by confusion) as a sect of the Essenes, similarly characterized by fanatical zeal for their ascetic practices.

That desperate Faction of the Zealots, who, like so many Firebrands scattered up and down among them [the Jews], soon put the whole Nation into Flames.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

zealotical (zē-lot'i-kal), a. [< zealot + -ic-al.] Having the character of a zealot; belonging to a body of zealots.

One Leviston a zealotical Scotsman, a tailor, came with a gray suit of apparel [for a disguise] under his cloak.
Court and Times of Charles I., II. 80.

zealotism (zel'ot-izm), n. [< zealot + -ism.] The character or conduct of a zealot. Gray.

zealotist (zel'ot-ist), n. [< zealot + -ist.] A zealous partizan; one of a body of zealots. Hucell.

zealotry (zel'ot-ri), n. [< zealot + -ry (see -ery).] Behavior as a zealot; excessive or undue zeal; fanaticism.

Inquisitorial cruelty and party zealotry.
Coleridge. (Imp. Dict.)

Herod is outheroded, Sternhold is out-sternholded, with a zealotry of extravagance that really seems like wilful burlesque.
De Quincey, Style, i.

zealous (zel'us), a. [< L. ML. zelosus, full of zeal, < zelus, zeal: see zeal. Cf. jealous, an older form of the same word.] 1. Full of or incited by zeal; jealous for the good or the promotion of some person or object; ardent; eager; fervent; devoted.

That man loves not who is not zealous too.
Herrick, Zeal Required in Love.

The learned and pious Bishop of Alexandria, Dionysius, wrote to the zealous and factious Presbyter Novatus.
Jer. Taylor, Sermon at Golden, Tears of the Church, p. 100. (Davies.)

The clergy of New England were, for the most part, zealous promoters of the revolution.
Emerson, Hist. Disc. at Concord.

2. Caused by or manifesting zeal; due to earnest devotion; of an ardent character or quality.

So sweet is zealous contemplation.
Shak., Rich. III., III. 7. 94.

I will study
Service and friendship, with a zealous sorrow
For my past incivility towards ye.
Ford, Broken Heart, v. 1.

= Syn. 1. Forward, enthusiastic, fervid, keen. See zeal.

zealously (zel'us-li), adv. In a zealous manner; with passionate ardor; fervently; earnestly.

It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing.
Gal. iv. 18.

Sir, I will amply extend myself to your use, and am very zealously afflicted, as not one of your least friends, for your crooked fate. Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 2.

zealousness (zel'us-nes), n. The quality of being zealous; ardor; zeal.

zealousy† (zel'us-i), n. [Early mod. E. zelousie; < zealous + *-y*1. Cf. jealousy.] 1. Zealousness.

His hand eternity his arm his force,
His armour zeale-ous, his breast plate heaven.
Middleton, Solomon Paraphrased, v.

2. An old form of jealousy.

The zelouse and the eagre feerssenes of Olimpias.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 200, note.

zebec, zebeck, n. Same as xebec.

zebra (zē'brä), n. and a. [= F. zèbre, < African zebra.] I. n. An African solidungulate mammal, related to the horse and ass, of the genus Equus and subgenus Hippotigris, having the body more or less completely striped. There are at least 3 well-marked species. One of these is the quagga. The second is the bonte-quagga, or Burchell's zebra. (See cut under dauw.) The third is the true zebra, E. (H.) zebra, of southern Africa, of a whitish color, very fully and regularly striped with black: it is specifically called the mountain zebra. This zebra stands about 4½ feet high at the shoulder, the head is light, the ears are moderately large, the limbs slender; the mane is short, and the tail tufted. The general form is light and symmetrical, like that of most wild asses, and seems to indicate speed rather than bottom. The zebra is one of the most beautiful of animals, as it is also one of the wildest and least tractable. It has often been kept in confinement, and occasionally tamed, but generally retains its indomitable temper. It inhabits in herds the hilly and mountainous countries of South Africa, seeking the most secluded places, so that from the nature of its haunts, as well as its watchfulness, swiftness, and the acuteness of its senses, it is difficult to capture. It is, however, much hunted, and seems destined to extermination.

Zebra (Equus or Hippotigris zebra).

II. a. Resembling the stripes of a zebra; having stripes running along the sides: as, the zebra markings on certain spiders. Stanley.

zebra-caterpillar (zē'brä-kat'ėr-pil-ėr), n. The larva of Mamestra picta, a North American noctuid moth: so called from the longitudinal black and yellow stripes. It feeds on clover, peas, beans, cabbages, turnips, and various other cultivated plants. See cut on following page.

zebra-opossum (zē'brä-ō-pos'um), n. The zebra-wolf. See cut under thylacine.

Zebra-caterpillar and Moth (Mamestra fratella)

zebra-parrakeet (zē'brȧ-par'a-kēt), n. A kind of grass-parrakeet, Melopsittacus undulatus, much of whose plumage is barred. It is a common cage-bird. See cut under Melopsittacus.

Zebrapicus (zē-brȧ-pī'kus), n. [NL. (Malherbe, 1849), also Zebripicus (Bonaparte, 1854), < zebra, q. v., + NL. Picus.] A genus of woodpeckers: so called from the extensive striping of the plumage. It has covered a number of American forms, but was based on the common red-bellied woodpecker of the United States, and is thus a synonym of Centurus (itself often merged in Melanerpes). See cut under Centurus.

zebra-plant (zē'brȧ-plant), n. A striped-leafed plant, Maranta zebrina. See Maranta.

zebra-poison (zē'brȧ-poi'zn), n. A succulent tree, Euphorbia arborea, of South Africa. The milky juice is so poisonous as to kill zebras which drink water in which the branches have been placed and it is sometimes used as an arrow poison. J. Smith, Dict. of Economic Plants.

zebra-shark (zē'brȧ-shärk), n. The tiger-shark.

zebra-spider (zē'brȧ-spī'dėr), n. A hunting-spider or wolf-spider. See Lycosidæ, and cuts under tarantula and wolf-spider.

zebra-swallowtail (zē'brȧ-swol'ō-tal), n. The ajax, Papilio (or Iphiclides) ajax, a large swallow-tailed butterfly of North America, having yellowish-white wings barred with black. It is a handsome species, and occurs from Pennsylvania southward. The larva feeds on the papaw.

zebra-wolf (zē'brȧ-wulf), n. The ponched dog or thylacine dasyure of Tasmania, Dasyurus thylacinus or Thylacinus cynocephalus, a large predaceous and caruivorous marsupial quadruped somewhat resembling a wolf, having the back and rump transversely striped (whence the name). See cut under thylacine.

zebra-wood (zē'brȧ-wud), n. 1. The wood of Connarus Guianensis (Omphalobium Lamberti), of the Connaraceæ, a tall tree of Guiana; also, the tree itself. The wood is hard and beautifully marked, and is much sought for use in making furniture.—2. The wood of a small evergreen, Guettarda speciosa, of the Rubiaceæ, found on tropical shores in both hemispheres.—3. In the West Indies, a shrub or small tree, Myrtus (Eugenia) fragrans, var. cuneata.

zebra-woodpecker (zē'brȧ-wud'pek-ėr), n. Any one of the striped woodpeckers of Malherbe's genus Zebrapicus—that is, of Centurus in a usual sense. See cut under Centurus.

zebrine (zē'brin), a. [< zebra + *-ine*¹.] Resembling or related to the zebra; striped like a zebra; pertaining to the subgenus Hippotigris correlated with equine and asinine. Darwin.

Zebra (Equus burchellii, var.).

zebu (zē'bū), n. [< F. zébu, a name accepted by Buffon from the exhibitors of the animal at a French fair, and supposed by him to be an African word. If not invented, it is prob. intended to represent the E. Ind. zebo, q. v.] The Indian bull, ox, or cow; any individual or breed of Bos indicus, having a hump on the withers. The zebu has been domesticated from time immemorial, and is now known only in its artificial breeds. These are numerous, and very various in size, shape, and color, the processes of artificial selection having modified the original stock in almost every particular. The characteristic hump is sometimes double. The flesh is considered a delicacy. The size of different breeds of zebus varies much. Some are as large as ordinary cattle, others no larger than a common calf a month or two old. The color is usually light gray, varying to pure white. The bulls of the latter color are consecrated to Siva, and become Brahminy bulls, exempt from labor or molestation. Zebus are bred particularly in India, but also in China, Japan, and some parts of Africa. They are used as beasts of burden and of draft, and as riding-animals, as well as for beef. The stock from which they have descended is by some naturalists supposed to represent only a variety of Bos taurus, the original of the ordinary domestic ox. See cut in preceding column.

zebub (zē'bub), n. [< Ar. zubāb, dhubāb, Heb. zebub, fly. Cf. Beelzebub.] A large Abyssinian fly noxious to cattle, like the tsetse and the zimb.

zebu-cattle (zē'bū-kat'l), n. The cattle of the eastern hemisphere which have a hump, like the zebu. Darwin.

zebuder, n. The Caucasian ibex. Also called zac.

zecchino (tsek-kē'nō), n. [It.: see sequin.] A gold coin of the Venetian republic, worth Obverse. Reverse.

Zecchino of Paolo Renier, Doge of Venice, 1779. British Museum. (Size of original.)

rather more than 9*s.* English, or about $2.25: same as sequin.

zechin, n. A variant of sequin.

Zechstein (zek'stīn), n. [G., < zeche, a mine, + stein, stone.] In geol., the uppermost of the two divisions of the Permian the lower being the so-called "Rothliegende." This twofold character of the Permian as a well marked feature of the system in Germany, especially in the central part of that country, hence it is not infrequently called the Dyas, a word coined in imitation of the name Trias. At the bottom of the Zechstein is the "Kupferschiefer," a thin bed of dark-colored, bituminous, and cupriferous shale. The Zechstein proper is a calcareous rock, becoming dolomitic in its upper section, and containing, especially in Prussia, masses of rock-salt of extraordinary thickness. The Permian covers an extensive area in Russia, where, however, its dual character is much less distinctly marked than it is in Germany. In the east of England this feature of the Permian is clearly exhibited, and the so-called "Magnesian Limestone group" is the equivalent of the German Zechstein. No separation of the Permian into divisions has been satisfactorily made out in North America, where the break between that formation and the Carboniferous is far less distinct than it is in the regions of its typical development in Germany.

zed (zed), n. [= F. zède, < L. zeta, < Gr. ζῆτα, the name of the letter Z.] 1. The letter Z, also called zee and sometimes izzard.

> Zed, thou unnecessary letter! Shak., Lear, ii. 2, 69.

2. A metal bar rolled so as to have a cross-section resembling the letter Z.

> Angles, Zeds, Channels, Beams, Bars.
> The Engineer, LXXI. p. xxxviii. of advts.

Zedland (zed'land), n. [zed + land.] A designation of the western part of England, from the dialectal use there of the sound of z for that of s. Halliwell.

zedoary (zed'ō-ā-ri), n. [< F. zédoaire = Sp. Pg. zedoaria = It. zedoaria; < Ar. zadwār: see setwall.] An East Indian drug, known in two varieties as long and round zedoary. A coating to some authorities these are both the product of Curcuma Zedoaria (the C. Zerumbet of Roxburgh, according to others only the long zedoary belongs to this species, the round to C. aromatica (the C. Zedoaria of Roxburgh); both varieties are aromatic, with a strong camphoraceous flavor and the taste of ginger. In medicine zedoary acts like ginger, but is less effective. It is used in India in various alterative decoctions and in preparing kinds of incense. The rhizome of C. aromatica, like the related turmeric, is used in dyeing. Its chief application is Zeidæ (zē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Swainson, 1839), < Zeus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, so named from the genus Zeus, but usually called Zeniidæ. See cut under dory, 1.

zein (zē'in), n. [< Zea + *-in*².] A principle obtained from maize, said to be allied to gluten. It has a yellowish color, and is soft, insipid, and elastic. It differs essentially from the gluten of wheat. Also zeine.

zeitgeist (tsīt'gīst), n. [G., < zeit, time (= E. tide), + geist, spirit (= E. ghost).] The spirit or genius of the time; that general drift of thought or feeling which particularly characterizes any period of time: a German word occasionally used in English.

zel (zel), n. [< Turk. Pers. zil, a bell, cymbal.] An Oriental form of cymbal.

> Where, some hours since, was heard the swell
> Of trumpet and the clash of zel
> Bidding the bright eyed sun farewell.
> Moore, Lalla Rookh, The Fire-Worshippers.

Zelanian (zē-lā'ni-an), a. [< NL. Zelania (Nova Zelania, New Zealand) + -an.] In zoögeog., of or pertaining to New Zealand: more fully Novo-Zelanian. See New Zealand subregion, under subregion.

zelant, n. [Also zealant; < L. zelant(-)s, ppr. of zelare, have zeal for, < L. zelus, zeal: see zeal.] A zealot. Also zealant.

> To certain zelants all speech of pacification is odious.
> Bacon, Unity in Religion (ed. Spedding, Ellis, and Heath).

> Advertisement touching an Holy War written (by Bacon) in the form of a Dialogue, in which the interlocutors represent a Moderate Divine, a Protestant Zelant, a Romish Catholic Zelant . . . E. A. Abbott, Bacon, p. 426.

zelator (zel'ā-tor), n. [< LL. zelator, < zelare, have zeal for: see zelant.] A zealous partisan or promoter; a zealot.

> Many zelatores or favourers of the publyke weale haue benne discouraged. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 27.

Zele (zē'lē), n. [NL. (Curtis, 1831), said to be < Gr. ζῆλη, a female rival.] A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the family Braconidæ, distinguished from Macrocentrus principally by having the abdomen inserted between the posterior coxæ. Ten North American and three European species have been described. They are parasitic upon small lepidopterous larvæ.

Zelkova (zel-kō'vȧ), n. [NL. (Spach, 1841), from the Cretan name zelkova.] A genus of apetalous trees, of the order Urticaceæ and tribe Celtideæ. It is characterized by monœcious or polygamous flowers, the male with a short-lobed perianth, the female with an eccentric two-parted style and unilocular ovary, in fruit somewhat ventricose and drupaceous, smooth or veiny on the surface, and often keeled on the back, containing a compressed concave seed with broad cotyledons. There are 4 species natives respectively of Crete, the Caucasian and Caspian region, Japan, and China. They are trees bearing alternate serrate or crenate feather-veined leaves, with narrow slender stipules. The flowers are sessile or short-pedicelled, the male in small clusters, the female solitary in the upper axils. Z. crenata (formerly known as Planera Richardi), the zelkova or keikona tree of the Caucasus, reaches a considerable size, sometimes 80 feet high and 4 feet in diameter; in its scaly bark it resembles the planetree, in its leaves the elm, the small greenish-brown flowers have the odor of the elder, and are followed by roundish fruits of the size of a pea. Its timber is much prized, the sap-wood is light-colored and elastic, the hard heavy reddish heart-wood takes a good polish and is valued for furniture. For Z. acuminata see keyaki.

zeloso (dzē-lō'sō), a. [It.: see zealous.] Zealous: in music, marking passages to be rendered with zeal, enthusiasm, or energy.

zelotypia (zel-ō-tip'i-ȧ), n. [NL., < Gr. ζηλοτυπία, jealousy, rivalry, < ζηλότυπος, jealous, < ζῆλος, zeal, + τύπτειν, strike: see type.] The exercise of morbid perseverance and energy in the prosecution of a project, especially one of a political or religious nature; a form of monomania sometimes manifesting itself in overzeal in attempts to gain supporters to any public cause.

zelotypic (zel-ō-tip'ik), a. [< zelotypia + -ic.] Pertaining to, characterized by, or exhibiting zelotypia.

zelousie, n. See zelosy.

zemindar (zem'in-där), n. [Also zamindar; < Pers. zemindar, a landholder, < zemin, land, + -dar, holding.] Originally, one of a class of farmers of the revenue from land held in common by its cultivators, established by the Mogul government of India, every one in a specially assigned tract or district; now, in many provinces a native landlord, regarded as a successor of the preceding, and similarly responsible for the land tax, who under British regulations has become the actual proprietor of the soil under his jurisdiction, often with right of primogeniture.

> The Zemindars of Lower Bengal, the landed proprietary established by Lord Cornwallis, have the worst reputation as landlords and appear to have frequently deserved it.
> Maine, Village Communities, p. 168.

zemindary (zem'in-dā-ri), n.; pl. zemindaries (-riz). [< Pers. zemindari, < zemindar, zemindar.] 1. The office or jurisdiction of a zemindar.—2. The tract of territory administered or controlled by a zemindar; also, the system of landholding and revenue-collection under zemindars. Also written zamindari, zemindari, zemindarce, zemindarry, etc.

Lord Cornwallis, with the best intentions, stereotyped the zemindary system in Bengal by giving to the middlemen or farmers of the revenue permanent rights of possession, subject to a quit rent to the Government.

Contemporary Rev., L. 61.

zemmi, zemni (zem'i, -ni), n. The blind mole-rat, Spalax typhlus. See cut under mole rat.

zemstvo (zems'tvo), n. [Russ.] In Russia, a local elective assembly, of recent institution, for the oversight and regulation of affairs within its territory. There are zemstvos for the districts into which the governments are divided, and also for the governments themselves, with nominal jurisdiction of local taxation, schools, roads, public sanitation etc., but subject to arbitrary interference by the provincial governors.

Zenaida (zē-na'i-dā), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1838), < Zénaïde, daughter of Joseph Bonaparte, and wife of Charles Lucien Bonaparte.] A genus of American ground-doves, typical of the subfamily Zenaidinæ, containing such species as the West Indian Z. amabilis.

zenaide (zē'na'id), n. A dove of the genus Zenaida.

Zenaidinæ (zē-nā-i-di'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zenaida + -inæ.] A subfamily of pigeons or doves, of the family Columbidæ; the ground-pigeons of America, distinguished from the more arboreal pigeons, or Columbinæ proper, by the greater size of the feet and the denudation of the scutellate tarsi. Numerous genera and species inhabit the warmer parts of America; 6 are found in the United States, of which the Carolina dove, Zenaidura carolinensis, is the best known and most widely distributed. Zenaida amabilis is a West Indian species, found also in Florida. The group embraces the smallest birds of the family, as the diminutive ground-dove of the Southern States, Chamæpelia (or Columbigallina) passerina. See cuts under dove, ground dove, Melopelia, and Scardafella.

zenaidine (zē'na-i-din), a. [< Zenaidinæ.] Pertaining to or resembling the genus Zenaida. Coues.

Zenaidura (zē'na-i-dū'rā), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1851), < Zenaida, q. v., + Gr. οὐρά, tail.] That genus of Columbidæ which contains the Carolina dove, or mourning-dove, Z. carolinensis; so called from the peculiarity of the tail, which has fourteen instead of twelve feathers. The long cuneate tail gives this genus the aspect of Ectopistes (which belongs to a different subfamily). See cut under dove, and compare that under passenger-pigeon. Also, incorrectly, Zenædura.

zenana (ze-nä'nä), n. [Also zanana; < Pers. zenana, belonging to women, < zen, a woman, = Gr. γυνή, a woman: see queen.] In India, that part of the house in which the females of a family are secluded; an East Indian harem.

I wandered through a zenana which was full of women's clothes, fans, slippers, musical instruments, flowers, gilt chairs, and damask curtains.

W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 338.

Zenana missions, Protestant Christian missions to the women of India, conducted by female missionaries from Great Britain and the United States.

Zend (zend), n. [See Zend-Avesta.] The name commonly given to the language of the Avesta, an ancient form of Iranian or Persian. It was deciphered in the present century, largely by means of its resemblance to Sanskrit. See Zend Avesta.

zendal silk. Same as sendal.

Zend-Avesta (zen-dā-ves'tā), n. [More properly Avesta, since Zendavesta is literally the Avesta with its Zend or commentary.] The sacred scriptures of the Zoroastrian religion, ascribed to Zoroaster, and consisting of the Vendidad, the Yasna (including the Gathas), the Yashts, and a few other pieces. Compare Zend.

zendel (zen'del), n. Same as sendal.

zendik (zen'dik), n. [Ar. zendiq.] A name given in the East not only to disbelievers in revealed religion, but also to such persons as are accused of magical heresy.

zenick, zenik (zē'nik), n. [African.] The African suricate, Rhyzæna tetradactyla or Suricata zenick. See cut under suricate.

Zenidæ (zen'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zeus (Zen-) + -idæ.] A family of physoclistous acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Zeus; the dories. The body is short, high and deep, and much compressed; the large mouth is terminal, with protractile upper jaw and small teeth in narrow bands or single file; the dorsal fin is emarginate or divided, with strong spines anteriorly; the anal is spined or spinulous; the ventrals are thoracic, and have one spine and five to eight rays; the caudal is usually not forked; the lateral line is obscure and unarmed; pyloric cæca are extremely numerous, and the vertebræ are about thirty-two. These are fishes of warm seas, of singular appearance, represented by 5 genera and about 10 species. Also called Cyttidæ, and formerly Cyttina. The name is also written Zeidæ. See Zeus, 2, and cut under dory.

Zenopsis ocellatus, of the family Zenidæ.

Zeninæ (zē-ni'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zeus (Zen-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Zenidæ, without palatine teeth, with scales minute if present, and very strong anal spines. See Zeus, 2.

zenith (zē'nith), n. [ME. senyth, < OF. cenith, zenith, F. zénith (> G. zenith = D. Sw. zenit = Russ. zenitu), < Sp. zenit, OSp. zenith = Pg. zenith, zenit, a corruption (prob. due to a misreading of m as ni) of zemt*, < Ar. semt, samt, in semt er-ras, samt ur-ras, the zenith, vertical point of the heavens, lit. 'way of the head': semt, samt, way, road, path, tract, quarter; al, the; ras, head. Cf. azimuth.] 1. The vertical point of the heavens at any place, or the point directly above an observer's head; the upper pole of the celestial horizon. The opposed pole is the nadir.—2. Figuratively, the highest point, or summit, as of one's fortune; the culmination.

By my prescience
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star

Shak., Tempest, I. 2. 181.

Dead! In that crowning grace of time,
That triumph of life's zenith hour!

Whittier, Rantoul.

Reflex zenith-tube. See reflex.

zenithal (zē'nith-al), a. [< zenith + -al.] Of or pertaining to the zenith.

The deep zenithal blue Tyndall, Glaciers of the Alps, v.

Zenithal map-projection. See projection.

zenith-collimator (zē'nith-kol'i-mā-tor), n. A collimator arranged so that its optical axis is vertical, instead of horizontal as usually is the case. In Kater's vertical collimator the telescope is carried by an annular iron float, floating upon mercury. Other forms are also used in which the adjustment to verticality is made by means of spirit-levels. Also called vertical collimator.

zenith-distance (zē'nith-dis'tans), n. The arc intercepted between any body and the zenith, being the same as the co-altitude of the body.

zenith-sector (zē'nith-sek'tor), n. An astronomical instrument for measuring with great accuracy the zenith-distances of stars which pass near the zenith. It is specially used for this purpose in English trigonometrical surveys in determining latitudes. It consists essentially, as its name implies, of an arc of a divided circle, with appliances for determining accurately its zenith reading. See sector.

zenith-telescope (zē'nith-tel'e-skōp), n. An important geodetical instrument for measuring the difference of zenith-distances of pairs of stars north and south of the zenith. It consists of a somewhat large telescope pointing nearly to the zenith, but having a moderate range of motion in altitude regulated by a fine tangent screw. The instrument also carries a vertical setting-circle with a very delicate level, having its tube perpendicular to the horizontal axis of the telescope. There is at the eyepiece a thread micrometer, working vertically. The telescope, with its horizontal axis, is mounted upon a very long vertical axis arranged with two stops, so that the telescope can be carried round from the north to the south part of the meridian. The difference of zenith-distances of a pair of stars, one north and the other south, having been observed, the latitude of the station is equal to the mean of their declinations added to half the excess of the southern over the northern zenith-distance. The instrument is the invention of Captain A. Talcott, U. S. A., but it is said the principle is due to the early astronomer Horrocks.

Zenker's degeneration. Same as waxy degeneration (b). See waxy[1].

zenoid (zē'noid), a. and n. [< Zeus (Zen-) + -oid.] I. a. Of or relating to the Zenidæ.

II. n. One of the Zenidæ.

Zenonian (zē-nō'ni-an), a. and n. [< L. Zeno (n-), < Gr. Ζήνων, Zeno (see def.), + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to any one of the name of Zeno. Specifically—(a) Pertaining to the doctrines and arguments of Zeno of Elea, a philosopher of the fifth century B. C. Zeno's four arguments against motion, which are celebrated, are as follows: First, a body passing over any space must first pass the middle point, and before it can do that it must pass the point midway between that and the starting-place, and so on ad infinitum. This supposition of infinitudes was regarded as in some way absurd. The second argument is called the Achilles, or Achilles and the tortoise. Achilles cannot overtake the tortoise, because it will take him a certain time to reach the starting-point of the tortoise, and when he has reached it the tortoise will still have the start, and so on ad infinitum; and thus he will be the sum of an infinite series of times in reaching the tortoise, which will be an infinite time. The third argument is that a flying arrow at any time occupies a space no larger than itself, and in this space it has no room for motion, and therefore at no time has it any motion. The fourth argument is quite obscure, but it coincides from the consideration of relative motions that the whole of a time is equal to its half. Zeno may have come upon the difficulty that half an infinite number is equal to the number itself. Aristotle calls Zeno the inventor of dialectic—that is, of abstract logical reasoning reposing upon the principle of contradiction, as opposed to mere inference by vague association with some general experience. The Zenonian arguments are in point of fact attempts at such reasoning, but they are gross logical fallacies, arising from the fact that the reasoning is not carried out abstractly, but contents itself with reaching contradictions with ordinary inexact experience. They have been considered wonderful by those students who have come to philosophy by the way of theology or natural history without proper training in mathematics and logic; and fallacies of the same nature are committed every day, even in mathematical works. Zenonian minds find some difficulty in reasoning either about discrete or about continuous infinity, because these characters are neither of them directly presented to us in experience, and therefore elude associational reasoning. With finite quantity they find no such difficulty. But in really logical reasoning, since finite quantity is distinguished from infinite quantity in being subject to a certain general and complicated condition to which the latter is not subject, the latter is more simple than the former, and from a similar cause continuous infinity is more easily reasoned about, with logical accuracy, than discrete infinity.

Gorgias's sceptical development of the Zenonian logic. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 779.

(b) Pertaining to Zeno of Citium, the founder of the Stoic school of philosophy, who lived between 350 and 250 B. C. He committed suicide at an advanced age.

II. n. A Stoic.

Zenonic (zē-non'ik), a. [< Zenon(n-) + -ic.] Same as Zenonian.

Heraclitus's system was the polar antithesis to this Zenonic position. The Academy, April 21, 1888, p. 278.

Zenopsis (zē-nop'sis), n. [NL. (Gill, 1862), < Zeus (Zen-) + Gr. ὄψις, aspect.] A genus of dories, of the subfamily Zeninæ, differing from Zeus mainly in having only three instead of four anal spines. The type is Z. nebulosus of Japan; another species is Z. ocellatus of the New England coast, of a nearly plain silvery color, but with a black lateral ocellus. See cut under Zenidæ.

zenu (zē'nū), n. The goitered antelope, or yellow goat, Procapra gutturosa. See dzeren.

zeolite (zē'ō-līt), n. [So called by Cronstedt from boiling and swelling when heated by the blowpipe; < Gr. ζέειν, boil, foam, + λίθος, stone.] A generic name of a group of hydrated double silicates in which the principal bases are aluminium and calcium or sodium. They are closely allied to the feldspars among anhydrous silicates. They are decomposed by acids, often with gelatinization; and most of them intumesce before the blowpipe. Among them are analcite, chabazite, harmotome, stilbite, etc. They occur most commonly in cavities and veins in basic igneous rocks, as basalt or diabase, as at Bergen Hill, New Jersey, they thus often fill the cavities in amygdaloid.

zeolitic (zē-ō-lit'ik), a. [< zeolite + -ic.] Pertaining to zeolite; consisting of zeolite or resembling it.

zeolitiform (zē-ō-lit'i-fôrm), a. [< zeolite + L. forma, form.] Having the form of zeolite.

zeolitization (zē-ō-lit-i-zā'shọn), n. [< zeolite + -ize + -ation.] The process by which a mineral is converted into a zeolite by alteration—for example, nepheline into thomsonite.

zeorine (zē'ō-rin), a. [< Zeora, a genus of lichens, + -ine[1].] In bot., noting, in lichens, an apothecium in which a proper exciple is inclosed in the thalline exciple.

Zephiroth (zef'i-roth), n. pl. Same as Sephiroth.

Zephronia (zef-rō'ni-ạ), n. [N'a. (J. E. Gray, 1842).] Same as Sphærotherium.

Zephroniidæ (zef-rō-ni'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zephronia + -idæ.] Same as Sphærotheriidæ. J. E. Gray.

zephyr (zef'ėr), n. [< F. zéphire = Sp. céfiro = Pg. cephyro = It. zeffiro, zefiro, < L. zephyrus, < Gr. Ζέφυρος, the west wind; cf. ζόφος, darkness, gloom, the west.] 1. The west wind; poetically, any soft, mild, gentle breeze.

As gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head.

Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2. 178.

2. In entom., a butterfly of the genus Zephyrus.—3. A trade-name for a textile fabric of cotton, very fine and light of its kind, and for some other things of similar qualities: chiefly in attributive use: as, zephyr worsted; zephyr crackers (that is, biscuits).

Hemmpuns, Flannels, Zephyrs, Challies.
Newspaper Advertisement.

Zephyr cloth, a thin, finely spun woolen cloth made in Belgium, thinner than tweed, and employed for women's garments. Dict. of Needlework. — Zephyr flannel. See flannel.

Zephyranthes (zef-i-ran'thēz), n. [NL. (Herbert, 1821), so called in allusion to the slender, easily agitated stalks; < Gr. ζέφυρος, the west wind, + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Amaryllidaceæ and tribe Amaryllieæ. It is characterized by one-flowered scapes, and flowers with a short or rather long perianth-tube, sometimes with small scales around the stamens, slender separate filaments, oblong or linear versatile anthers, and numerous biseriate ovules in the three ovary-cells. There are about 30 species, natives of America from Texas to the Argentine Republic, with one in western tropical Africa, the latter formerly known as Habranthus. They are bulbous plants with a few linear or ensiform-ciliped leaves, and an elongated scape bearing a handsome erect or slightly declined solitary flower, either pink, white, purple, or yellowish. They are known in general as swamp-lily. Z. Atamasco, found from Mexico to Pennsylvania, with rose-colored flowers, is cultivated under the name of fairy-lily or atamasco-lily; and Z. candida, of Lima and Buenos Ayres, with white flowers and small rush-like leaves, under the name of Peruvian swamp-lily.

Zephyrus (zef'i-rus), n. [< L. Zephyrus, < Gr. Ζέφυρος, a personification of ζέφυρος, the west wind.] 1. In classical myth., a personification of the west wind, poetically regarded as the mildest and gentlest of all the sylvan deities.

When Zephirus eek with his sweete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt and heeth
The tendre croppes.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 5.

Courteous Zephyrus
On his dewy wings carries perfumes to cheer us.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, ii. 1

2. [NL. (Dalman, 1816).] In entom., a genus of butterflies, of the family Lycænidæ, chiefly of Europe and Asia, characterized by peculiarities of the wing-venation; the zephyrs.

serda (sėr'dą), n. A small African fox; a fennec. The name is applied to two very different animals: (a) Vulpes or Fennecus serda, a small true fox. See fennec, and cut under fennec. (b) Otocyon or Megalotis lalandi. See Megalotinæ.

sereba, seriba, n. See zareba.

Serene (sę-rē'nē), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816; Treitschke, 1825), prop. Xerena, < Gr. ξηραίνω, dry up.] A notable genus of geometrid moths, typical of a family Zerenidæ or subfamily Zerenieæ. They have broad, entire, and slightly hyaline wings, the body is slender, and the male antennæ are plumose, with the branches long, slender, and slightly frizzled. The most noted species is Z. catocalaria of the northern United States, a white moth, often with blackish dots, whose greenish-yellow black-spotted larva feeds on a variety of forest-plants.

Zerenidæ (sę-ren'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Guenée, 1844), < Zerene + -idæ.] A family of geometrid moths, comprising many beautiful forms, usually white or yellow, spotted with black. It includes 20 genera, of which Abraxas is the most important. From their maculation they are known as panther, jaguar, or magpie-moths, and one genus is called Pantherades.

Zerenieæ (zer-ę-ni'ę-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Zerene + -ieæ.] The Zerenidæ as a subfamily of Geometridæ.

zero (zē'rō), n. [< F. zéro, < It., Sp. zero, contr. of zefro*, zifro, < Ar. ṣifr, cipher: see cipher, of which zero is a doublet.] 1. Cipher; the figure 0, which stands for naught in the Arabic notation for numbers.

As to number, they [the teeth of fishes] range from zero to countless quantities.
Owen, Anat. § 70

2. The defect of all quantity considered as quantity; the origin of measurement stated as at a distance from itself; nothing, quantitatively regarded. Upon a thermometer or any similar scale zero is the line from which all the divisions are measured in the positive and negative directions. Upon the centigrade and Réaumur's thermometers, it is the point at which the mercury stands when the thermometer is plunged into a mass of melting ice coarsely pulverized, from which some makers allow the water to drain off, but it is better not to do so. For some years after a thermometer is made the zero is said to rise — that is, the melting point of ice stands higher and higher upon the scale. Upon the Fahrenheit thermometer the distance on the glass stem between the melting-point of ice and the temperature of steam at one English atmosphere of tension is divided into 180 degrees, and 32 such degrees below the melting-point of ice is marked as zero.

If the directions of all the external forces pass through the origin, their moments are zero, and the angular momentum of the system will remain constant.
Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, art. lxxi.

Hence — 3. Figuratively, the bottom of the scale; the lowest point or ebb; a state of nullity or inanition.

The diplomatic circle [in Constantinople] was at zero.
Stratford Canning, in Dict. Nat. Biog., VIII. 432.

Absolute zero of temperature. See absolute. — Displacement of zero. See displacement. — Zero magnet, a magnet used for adjusting the zero reading of a galvanometer or similar instrument. — Zero potential, in elect. See potential.

zeroaxial (zē-rō-ak'si-al), a. [< zero + axial.] Having an axis composed of zeros. — Zeroaxial determinant. See determinant.

zerumbet (zē'rum-bet), n. An East Indian drug — according to some, the same as cassumunar. It has sometimes been confounded with the round zedoary.

zest (zest), n. [< OF. zeste, one of the partitions which divide the kernel of a walnut, also the peel of an orange or lemon, < L. schistus, < Gr. σχιστός, divided, cleft: see schist.] 1. The dry woody membrane covering or forming the partitions of a walnut or other nut or fruit, as an orange or a lemon. [Obsolete, or only French.] — 2. A piece of the outer rind of an orange or lemon used as a flavoring or for preserving; also, oil squeezed from such a rind to flavor liquor, etc. Imp. Dict. — 3. Relish imparted or afforded by anything; piquant nature or quality; agreeableness; charm; piquancy.

The zest
Of some wild tale or brutal jest
Hath to loud laughter stirred the rest.
Scott, Rokeby, iii. 15.

4. Keen relish or enjoyment of anything; stimulated taste or interest; hearty satisfaction; gusto.

Some forms of hypochondria, in which this extreme somatic insensibility and absence of zest leave the intellect and memory unaffected. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 84.

zest (zest), v. t. [< zest, n.] 1. To add a zest or relish to; make piquant, literally or figuratively.

My Lord, when my wine's right I never care it should be zested.
Osborn, Careless Husband, iii. (Davies.)

Hundreds sunk to the bottom by one broadside furnish out the topic of the day and zest his coffee.
Goldsmith, Abuse of our Enemies.

2. To cut, as the peel of an orange or a lemon from top to bottom into thin slips, or to squeeze, as orange-peel, over the surface of anything. Imp. Dict.

zeta[1] (zē'tą), n. [Gr. ζῆτα, the letter z, ζ: see Z, zed.] The sixth letter of the Greek alphabet, corresponding to the English Z. — Zeta function, one of a series of functions connected with elliptic integrals of the second kind, and derived from Jacobi's zeta function Zu, which differs only by a multiple of u from $\frac{d \log \theta u}{du}$, so that

$$Zu = \frac{\theta' u}{\theta u} \quad Z(u+v) = k^2 \operatorname{sn} u \operatorname{sn} v \operatorname{sn}(u+v)$$

zeta[2] (zē'tą), n. [< LL. zeta for diæta, a chamber, dwelling, < Gr. δίαιτα, way of living, mode of life, dwelling: see diet.] A little closet or chamber; applied by some writers to the room over the porch of a Christian church where the porter or sexton lived and kept the church documents. Britton.

zetetic (zę-tet'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. ζητητικός, < ζητεῖν, seek, inquire.] I. a. Proceeding by inquiry; seeking. The zetetic method, in math., the analytical method used in endeavoring to discover the value of unknown quantities or to find the solution of a problem. [Rare.]

II. n. A seeker: a name adopted by some of the Pyrrhonists.

zetetics (zę-tet'iks), n. [Pl. of zetetic (see -ics).] That part of algebra which consists in the direct search after unknown quantities. [Rare.]

Zeuctocœlomata (zūk'tō-sę-lō'ma-tą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζευκτός, joined, + κοίλωμα, a hollow, cavity: see cœloma.] Animals having a primitive archenteron in the embryo, with paired or yoked cœlomatic sacs or diverticula, as mollusks, worms, crustaceans, insects, and vertebrates: more fully called Metazoa zeuctocœlomata. A. Hyatt.

zeuctocœlomatic (zūk-tō-sē-lō-mat'ik), a. [< Zeuctocœlomata + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Zeuctocœlomata.

zeuctocœlomic (zūk'tō-sę-lom'ik), a. Same as zeuctocœlomatic.

zeugite (zū'gīt), n. See zygite.

Zeuglodon (zūg'lō-don), n. [NL. (Owen), < Gr. ζεύγλη, the strap or loop of a yoke (< ζευγνύναι, yoke, join), + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. The typical genus of the family Zeuglodontidæ. Several species have been described from the Eocene of the United States and of England, as Z. cetoides of the former country said to have attained a length of 70 feet. The genus had before been named Basilosaurus by Harlan, on the supposition that these fossils were reptiles and has also been called Hydrarchos (by Koch), Polyptychodon (by Emmons), Phocodon, and Zygodon. See cut under Zeuglodontidæ.

2. [l. c.] A member of this genus; a zeuglodont.

zeuglodont (zūg'lō-dont), a. and n. [As Zeuglodon(t-).] I. a. Having teeth (apparently) yoked in pairs; having the characters of, or pertaining to, the Zeuglodontia.

II. n. A fossil cetacean of the suborder Zeuglodontia, a zeuglodon.

Zeuglodontia (zūg-lō-don'shi-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see Zeuglodon.] A suborder of Cete or Cetacea, represented by the zeuglodonts: sometimes made to consist of two families, the Basilosauridæ (or Zeuglodontidæ) and Cynocetidæ. The intermaxillaries were expanded forward, normally interposed between the maxillaries, forming the terminal as well as anterior margin of the upper jaw; and the nasal apertures were produced forward, with freely projecting nasal bones. The teeth of the intermaxillaries were conic and those of the maxillaries were two- or three-rooted. Also called Phocodontia and Archæoceti. Also Zeuglodontes.

Posterior Tooth of one of the Zeuglodontia.

Zeuglodontidæ (zūg-lō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zeuglodon(t-) + -idæ.] A family of fossil toothed cetaceans, typified by the genus Zeuglodon, and representative of the Zeuglodontia. These primitive cetaceans in some respects approached the seals, or pinniped mammals, and some of the characters of the fragmentary remains first discovered caused them to be mistaken for reptiles. Also called Basilosauridæ. See cut under Zeuglodontia.

zeuglodontoid (zūg-lō-don'toid), a. and n. [As Zeuglodon(t-) + -oid.] Same as zeuglodont.

zeugma (zūg'mą), n. [< Gr. ζεῦγμα, lit. a yoking, < ζευγνύναι, yoke, join: see yoke[1], join.] 1. A figure in grammar in which two nouns are joined to a verb suitable to only one of them, but suggesting another verb suitable to the other noun; or in which an adjective is similarly used with two nouns. — 2. [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of hemipterous insects. Westwood.

zeugmatic (zūg-mat'ik), a. [< zeugmat(t-) + -ic.] Pertaining to, or of the nature of, zeugma.

Zeugobranchia (zū-gō-brang'ki-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζεῦγος, yoke, + βράγχια, gills.] Same as Zygobranchiata.

Zeugophora (zū-gof'ō-rą), n. [NL. (Kunze, 1818), < Gr. ζεῦγος, a yoke, + -φορος, < φέρειν = E. bear[1].] A genus of leaf-beetles, of the family Chrysomelidæ, having a lateral prothoracic tubercle and emarginate eyes. The geographical distribution of this genus is remarkable, for of the 20 or more species known two are found in Ceylon and Farther India, while the rest are North European and North American.

zeunerite (zī'nėr-īt), n. [Named after Director Zeuner, of Freiberg.] A hydrous arsenate of copper and uranium, occurring in bright-green tetragonal crystals, isomorphous with torbernite.

Zeus (zūs), n. [< Gr. Ζεύς (gen. Διός, also Ζηνός) as L. Jovis (gen.), Jupiter, etc.: see Jove, Jupiter, deity.] 1. In Gr. myth., the chief and master of the gods, the supreme deity, omnipresent and all-powerful, generally looked upon as the son of Kronos and Rhea, and held to have dethroned and succeeded his father. In a narrower sense, he was the god of the heavens, and controlled all celestial phenomena, as rains, snows, and tempests, heat and cold, and the lightning. His consort was Hera. Zeus was worshiped universally; but the most renowned of his sanctuaries were those of Olympia in Elis and Dodona in Epirus. In art Zeus was represented as a majestic and powerful figure, with full beard and flowing hair, in early works sometimes fully draped, but in later art, in general, only lightly draped in the himation. The type fixed by Phidias in the second half of the fifth century B. C., in his great chryselephantine statue for the temple at Olympia, influenced all artists who came after him. The usual attributes of the god are a long staff or scepter, the thunderbolt, the eagle, and sometimes a figure of Victory borne on one hand. The head is generally encircled by a fillet or a wreath; in later sculptures the hair rises from the brow in luxuriant locks like a crown, and falls in masses on either side of the face. Compare Jupiter. See cut on preceding page, and cut under thunderbolt.

Zeus. — The "Jupiter of Otricoli," in the Vatican Museum.

2. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758).] In ichth., a genus of acanthopterygian fishes, typical of the family Zeniidæ. It includes several fishes of remarkable appearance, as the John-dory, Z. faber, well known in classic times. See cut under dory, 1.

Zeuzera (zū-zē'rạ), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1805); a corrupt form of unascertained origin.] A genus of bombycid moths, of the family Cossidæ, or typical of a family Zeuzeridæ, having the antennæ of the male unequally pectinate and bare at the tips. The genus has a wide distribution, and comprises about 30 species. Z. pyrina, the wood-leopard, is common in Europe and the United States. Its larva bores into the branches of the elm, maple, linden, ash, and many other trees.

zeuzerian (zū-zē'ri-an), a. and n. [< Zeuzera + -an.] I. a. Resembling or related to a moth of the genus Zeuzera; of or pertaining to the Zeuzeridæ.

II. n. A moth of this genus or family.

Zeuzeridæ (zū-zer'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Newman, 1833), < Zeuzera + -idæ.] A family of bombycoid moths, founded on the genus Zeuzera; synonymous with Cossidæ. Also Zeuzerades and Zeuzerids.

zeylanite (zē'lan-īt), n. Same as ceylonite.

zibeline (zib'e-lin), n. and a. [F., < It. zibellino, < ML. sabellinus, < sabellum, sable: see sable.] I.† n. A fur, generally thought to be the same as sable.

II. a. Of, pertaining to, or related to the sable, Mustela zibellina. See sable.

In 1188 or thereabout no person was allowed to wear garments of vair, gray, zibeline, or scarlet color.
W. A. Hammond, in Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVII. 34.

zibet (zib'et), n. [See civet.] A digitigrade carnivorous quadruped, of the family Viverridæ, Viverra zibetha, a kind of civet found in India and some of the adjacent islands; the Asiatic or Indian civet. It secretes an odoriferous substance like that of other civets, and when tamed in the countries where it is found it lives in the houses like a domestic cat. The zibet is upward of 2 feet long, the tail about 10 inches. The form resembles that of other civets; and the fur is similarly marked in spots and lines of black and white, with rings of the same on the tail. It is sometimes reared for its civet in establishments conducted for that purpose. Also zibeth.

zibetum (zib'e-tum), n. [NL., < zibet.] The odoriferous substance of the zibet; a sort of civet.

ziczac, n. See zuzuc.

ziega (zē'gạ), n. Curd produced from milk by adding acetic acid after rennet has ceased to cause coagulation. Brande and Cox.

Zieria (zēr'i-ạ), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1798), named after J. Zier, member of the Linnean Society of London.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Rutaceæ and tribe Boronieæ. It is characterized by opposite leaves usually of three leaflets, and flowers with four spreading free petals, and four stamens inserted on the glands of the disk. They are shrubs and trees, sometimes warty or covered with woolly or stellate hairs, bearing petioled glandular-dotted leaves, which are sessile or the upper ones sometimes undivided. The small white flowers are usually grouped in axillary or terminal panicles. There are 7 species, perhaps 10, all Australian. Z. Smithii (Z. lanceolata), a shrub or small tree found also in Tasmania, is known as stinkwood-bush and, from the fetid wood, as stinkwood.

Ziervogel's process. See process.

zietrisikite (zē-trī-sē'kit), n. [< Zietrisika (see def.) + *-ite*².] In mineral., a mineral resembling ozocerite, found at Zietrisika in Moldavia.

Zif (zif), n. [< Heb. Zif.] A Hebrew month: same as Iyar. 1 Ki. vi. 1 (Zic, R. V.).

Ziffusit (zif'i-us), n. A misspelling of Xiphias.

Hugg Xiphias, whom Mariners eschew Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 34.

ziganka (zi-gaṅ'kọ), n. [Russ.] 1. A Russian country-dance. — 2. Music for such a dance, which is quick in pace and usually founded on a drone-bass.

zigzack†, n. See zigzag.

zigzag (zig'zag), n. and a. [Formerly also zigzack; < F. zigzag, < G. zickzack, zigzag, a varied redupl. of zacke, a sharp point, prong, tooth, dentil: see *tack*¹. Cf. G. zickzack werden, 'nail zigzag,' tack.] I. n. 1. A sharp turning back and forth or in and out; an irregular, abrupt angulation; one of a series of sharp turns in a linear or curvilinear course: nearly always in the plural.

Cracks and zigzags of the head. Pope, Dunciad, I. 124.

I looked wistfully, as we rattled into dreary Andermatt, at the great white zigzags of the Oberalp road climbing away to the left. H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 245.

2. A formation with a succession of sharp turnings or angles; something that has a number of abrupt angulations, like those of chain-lightning.

A zigzag . . . will be seen to be simply a twill worked backwards and forwards. A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 99.

Long brown kaftans, upon the breasts of which had been sewn zigzags of red cloth.
G. Kennan, The Century, XXXVIII. 69.

specifically — (a) A winding path with sharp turns, as up the side of a steep mountain.

How proudly he talks
Of zigzags and walks!
Swift, My Lady's Lamentation.

(b) In fort., a trench of approach against a fortress, so constructed that the line of trench may not be enfiladed by the defenders: same as boyau. (c) In arch., same as chevron, 2. (d) In the fisheries, a salmon stair or fish-way.

3. In entom., a British moth, Bombyx dispar. — Billet and zigzag. See *billet*².

II. a. Having sharp and quick turns or flexures; turning frequently back and forth; in bot., angularly bent from side to side.

The road is steep and runs on zigzag terraces.
Longfellow, Hyperion, III. 2.

I went through the zigzag passages [of a sap].
J. K. Hosmer, The Color-Guard, xiv.

Zigzag molding, in arch. See chevron 2, dancette, 2.

zigzag (zig'zag), adv. [< zigzag, a.] In a zigzag manner; with frequent sharp turns.

We patrolled about, zig zag, as we could; the crowd . . . having no chief or regulator.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary and Letters, IV. 235.

What you, Reader, and I Would call going zig zag.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 173.

zigzag (zig'zag), v.; pret. and pp. zigzagged, ppr. zigzagging. [< zigzag, n.] I. intrans. To move or advance in a zigzag fashion; form zigzags in a course; turn sharply back and forth.

It was only by zigzagging in the most cautious manner . . . that we avoided getting floated altogether.
O'Donovan, Merv, xv.

Dread, uncanny thing,
With furry breast and leathern wing,
In mad, zigzagging flight.
J. W. Riley, The Bat.

II. trans. To form in zigzags, or with short turns or angles. F. Barton.

zigzaggery (zig'zag-ėr-i), n. [< zigzag + -ery.] The character of being zigzag; angular crookedness. [Rare.]

When my uncle Toby discovered the transverse zig-zaggery of my father's approaches towards it [his coat-pocket], it instantly brought into his mind those he had done duty in before the gate of St. Nicholas.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, III. 3.

zigzaggy (zig'zag-i), a. [< zigzag + *-y*¹.] Having sharp and quick turns; zigzag.

The zig-zaggy pattern by Savona invented
Was cleverly chiselled, and well represented.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 295.

zillah (zil'ạ), n. [Hind.] In Hindustan, an administrative division of a province.

zimb (zimb), n. [Ar. zimb, a fly.] A dipterous insect of Abyssinia, resembling and related to the tsetse of southern Africa, and very destructive to cattle.

zimbi (zim'bi), n. [E. Ind.] A money-cowry, as Cypræa moneta. See cut under cowry.

The cowry shells, which, under one name or another — changes zimbas, bouges, porcelanes, etc. — have long been used in the East Indies as small money.
Jevons, Money and Mech. of Exchange, p. 24.

ziment-water (zi-ment'wâ'tėr), n. [After G. cement-wasser, 'cement-water,' cf. cementkupfer, copper deposited in water.] Water found in copper mines; water impregnated with copper.

Zimmermann's corpuscles, Zimmermann's particles. Blood-plates.

zimocca (zi-mok'ạ), n. A kind of commercial sponge, Euspongia zimocca, a bath-sponge of fine quality.

zimome, n. See zymome.

zinc (zingk), n. [Also sometimes zink, the spelling zinc being after the F. form of the original: < F. zinc = Sw. Dan. zink = Russ. tsinkŭ (G. zinnum), < G. zink, zinc; connection with G. zinn = E. tin, is doubtful.] Chemical symbol, Zn; atomic weight, 65.4. One of the useful metals, more tenacious than lead and tin, but malleable only at a temperature between 200° and 250° F. Its ore has long been known, and the manufacture of brass from it has been practised to a considerable extent. Zinc is believed to have been first distinctly recognized as a metal by Paracelsus about the beginning of the seventeenth century; but in the metallic state it has been of importance in the arts only since the beginning of the present century. Native zinc is not positively known to occur, if existing at all, it is exceedingly rare. Its ores, however, are widely disseminated, especially the combination with sulphur, called blende, which is almost as invariably present in greater or less quantity in metalliferous veins as is galena. The localities where zinc ores are abundant enough to be worked with profit are, however, not numerous. The uses of zinc are numerous and important. In combination with copper it forms the well-known alloy called brass, which has been known for an indefinite period; it is also one of the ingredients of German silver. Zinc is largely used in the metallic form for roofing and for cornices and the like, also for coating or "galvanizing" sheet-iron to protect it from rusting, and as the electropositive element in many batteries. It is also somewhat extensively used as a paint, in the form of the oxid. This metal is usually a little more expensive than lead, and from half to a third as valuable as copper. Zinc belongs to the magnesium group of metals, in which are comprised glucinum, magnesium, zinc, and cadmium; these are all volatile, burning with a bright flame when heated in the air; they all form one chlorid and one oxid only. The common commercial name of zinc, as offered for sale in flat cakes or ingots, is spelter. — Butter of zinc. See *butter*¹. — Chlorid-of-zinc paste. See *paste*¹. — Flowers of zinc, zinc oxid. — Granulated zinc, zinc reduced to the form of granules by pouring the molten metal into water. — Oleate-of-zinc ointment. See ointment. — Precipitated carbonate of zinc. See precipitate. — Red oxid of zinc, red zinc ore. Same as zincite. — Ruby of zinc. See ruby. — Zinc ash, the impure gray oxid formed when zinc is heated in contact with air. — Zinc caustic, a mixture of 1 part of zinc chlorid to 2 or 3 of flour. — Zinc cement, a cement composed of zinc oxid made into a paste with a solution of zinc chlorid. It hardens quickly, and may be used for stopping teeth and for other purposes. A cheaper form of zinc cement is made from commercial zinc white mixed with an equal weight of fine sand and made into a paste with a solution of zinc chlorid, and is used to fill cracks in metallic apparatus, and to cement glass, crockery, etc. E. H. Knight. — Zinc colloid, a solution of 4 parts of zinc sulphate in 100 parts of styptic collodion. — Zinc green, ointment, plaster, soap, white. See the nouns. — Zinc-oxid ointment. See ointment.

zinc (zingk), v. t.; pret. and pp. zincked, ppr. zincking. [< zinc, n.] To coat or cover with zinc.

All the conditions under which the zincked pipe is to be used should be carefully considered.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXX. 401.

zinc-amyl (zingk'am'il), n. A colorless transparent liquid, $Zn(C_5H_{11})_2$, composed of zinc and amyl. When exposed to the air it absorbs oxygen rapidly, emitting fumes, but does not take fire spontaneously.

zinc-blende (zingk'blend), n. Native sulphid of zinc; sphalerite. Also called simply blende.

zinc-bloom (zingk'blōm), n. Same as hydrozincite.

zinc-colic (zingk'kol'ik), n. A form of colic thought to be caused by zinc-oxid poisoning.

zinc-ethyl (zingk'eth'il), n. A colorless volatile liquid, $Zn(C_2H_5)_2$, having a peculiar but not unpleasant smell, composed of zinc and the radical ethyl. It has powerful affinities for oxygen, igniting spontaneously on exposure to air. It is formed by heating zinc with ethyl iodide under pressure. Brande and Cox.

zincic (zin'sik), a. See zinckic.

zinciferous, zincification, zincify, zincite. See zinkiferous, etc.

zinckenite (zingk'en-it), n. [Named after J. K. L. Zincken (1790–1862), a German metallurgist, mineralogist, and mining official.] A steel-gray mineral consisting of the sulphids of antimony and lead.

zinckic (zingk'ik), a. [< zinc (zink) + -ic.] Related to, containing, or consisting of zinc. Also zincic.

zinckiferous (zingk-kif'e-rus), a. See zinkiferous.

zincking (zingk'ing), n. [Verbal n. of zinc, v.] The act of coating iron with a weak solution of sulphate of zinc, or ore of the double salts of chlorid of zinc and sal ammoniac.

zinckite, n. See zinkite.

zincky, a. See zinky.

zinc-methyl (zingk'meth'il), n. A disagreeable-smelling mobile liquid, $Zn(CH_3)_2$, fuming in the air and readily igniting.

zinco (zing'kō), n. [Short for zincograph.] A plate in relief for printing, made by etching with acid a design on prepared zinc. [Slang.]

zinco (zing'kō), v. t. [< zinco, n.] To etch with acid a zinc plate containing on its surface a design intended for printing by typographic methods. [Eng.]

> Drawings Wanted (on lithographic paper for zincoing) for a Provincial Journal. Athenæum, No. 3336, p. 591.

zincode (zing'kōd), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. ὁδός, way (cf. anode, cathode).] The negative pole of a voltaic battery; the anode of an electrolytic cell.

zincograph (zing'kō-graf), n. [See zincography.] A plate or picture produced by zincography. Also zincotype.

> Reproduced in zincograph by the aid of photography. Edinburgh Rev., CXLV. 231.

zincographic (zing'kō-graf'ik), a. [< zincograph, n.] To transfer a design to the surface of a zinc plate with intent to etch it and make therefrom a plate in relief.

zincographer (zing-kog'ra-fėr), n. [< zincography + *-er*¹.] One who makes zincographic plates.

zincographic (zing-kō-graf'ik), a. [< zincography + -ic.] Relating to zincography.

zincographical (zing-kō-graf'i-kal), a. [< zincographic + -al.] Same as zincographic.

zincography (zing-kog'ra-fi), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of producing on zinc a printing surface in relief by etching with dilute acid the unprotected parts of the plate. Compare planeography.

zincoid (zing'koid), a. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. εἶδος, form.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling zinc. Zincoid pole of a voltaic cell, the negative pole, or zincode, constituted by the zinc-ore plate connected with a copper plate which forms the positive pole, the anode of an electrolytic cell. See chlorous pole, under chlorous.

zincolysis (zing-kol'i-sis), n. [NL., < zincum, zinc, + Gr. λύσις, dissolving.] A mode of decomposition occasioned by an electrical current; electrolysis.

zincolyte (zing'kō-līt), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. λυτός, verbal adj. of λύειν, dissolve.] A body decomposable by electricity; an electrolyte.

zincopolar (zing'kō-pō'lėr), a. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + E. polar.] Having the same polarity as the zinc plate in a galvanic cell.

zincotype (zing'kō-tīp), n. [< NL. zincum, zinc, + Gr. τύπος, type.] Same as zincograph.

> The two volumes are copiously illustrated by a zincotype process. Athenæum, No. 3238, p. 482.

zincous (zing'kus), a. [< zinc + -ous.] Pertaining to zinc, or to the negative pole of a voltaic battery. Zincous element, the basic or primary element of a binary compound. Zincous pole, that pole of a particle of zinc, as of hydrochloric acid, which has the attraction or affinity which is characteristic of zinc, or the zincous attraction.

zinc-platific (zingk'plā tiṅg), n. Plating in zinc, executed with a preparation made of coarse rasped or granulated zinc boiled in a mixture of sal ammoniac and water. The deposit has a silvery brightness, and can be used as a first coat for articles to be twice plated, since any other metal can be deposited upon zinc. E. H. Knight.

zinc-salt (zingk'salt), n. A salt of which zinc is the base.

zinc-spinel (zingk'spin'el), n. Same as gahnite.

zinc-vitriol (zingk'vit'ri-ol), n. In chem., zinc sulphate; white vitriol: $ZnSO_4 + 7H_2O$. It is found as a native mineral (goslarite), as a product of the oxidation of zinc-blende, and can also be prepared by dissolving zinc in dilute sulphuric acid, and by roasting native zinc sulphuret. It is used as a dryer in oil paints and varnishes, as a mordant in dyeing, as a disinfectant, and sometimes as a source of oxygen.

Zingaro, Zingano (zing'ga-rō, -nō), n.; pl. Zingari, Zingani (-rē, -nē). [It.: see Gipsy.] A Gipsy.

zingel (zing'el), n. [G.; of. zaunzagla, encircle (see cingle).] A fish of the family Percidæ and genus Aspro; specifically, A. zingel of the Danube and its tributaries. This fish is sometimes a foot long, and is of a greenish-brown color, lighter on the side and whitish on the belly, and marked with four brownish-black bands.

Zingel (Aspro zingel).

zinghot, n. [Appar. intended for zinco, It. form of zinc.] Same as zinc.

> For cobolt and zinghot, your brother and I have made all inquiries. Walpole, To Mann, July 31, 1748.

Zingiber (zin'ji-bėr), n. [NL. (Adanson, 1763; used earlier by Lobel, 1576, and, as Gingiber, by Mattioli, about 1554), < L. zingiber, < Gr. ζιγγίβερις, ginger: see ginger.] A genus of plants, type of the order Zingiberaceæ and of the tribe Zingibereæ. It is characterized by a cone-like inflorescence, each flower having a three-celled ovary and a stamen composed of a short filament and an anther with contiguous cells having the connective extended into a long linear appendage; the two lateral staminodes either absent or represented by two small ainate staminodes. About 30 species have been described of which perhaps 23 are distinct. They are natives of India and of islands of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. They are leafy plants with horizontal tuberous rootstocks, the sterile stems differing from the flower-bearing ones. The dense cone of flowers is composed of imbricated bracts, each with from one to three flowers and spathaceous bractlets. The inflorescence is sometimes borne on a leafless scape, more or less covered with sheaths as in other species terminating a leafy stem, or apparently lateral upon a recurved peduncle. Each flower produces a membranous or hyaline tubular calyx, and a cylindrical corolla-tube dilated into narrow spreading lobes, the posterior one erect and incurved. The fruit is a globose or oblong capsule, finally irregularly ruptured, and discharging rather large oblong seeds with a lacerate aril which is sometimes much larger than the seed. The pungently aromatic roots of several species are the source of the ginger of commerce, especially those of Z. officinale, the ginger-plant of India (see cut under ginger). The root of Z. Cassumunar, of India, is used as a tonic and stimulant, and is cultivated under the name of cassumunar ginger or Bengal root. Also Zinziber.

Zingiberaceæ (zin-ji-bė-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Richard, 1808), < Zingiber + -aceæ.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Epigynæ, distinguished from the order Musaceæ by its single perfect stamen. It is characterized by irregular flowers with distinct calyx and corolla, inferior ovary, usually arillate seeds and an embryo in a canal in the center of the albumen. There are over 470 species, of 36 genera, classed in 3 tribes, of which Zingiber, Maranta, and Canna are the types. They are perennial tropical herbs growing from a horizontal thickened rootstock, their leaves chiefly radical, large and ornamental, with numerous parallel veins diverging obliquely from the midrib. Their flowers are often of great beauty, as in species of Hedychium, Alpinia, Curcuma, Kæmpferia, and Costus, in many cases fully Musaceæ, they resemble orchids. They have a strong tendency to petaloid development, producing richly colored bracts in Curcuma; three petaloid staminodes and two scales usually represent the five imperfect stamens. The order contains many of the most stimulating aromatics; products derived chiefly from the root or rhizome of the plants ginger, galangale and cardamom, of the genera Zingiber, Alpinia and Curcuma; also from the fruit or seeds as cardamoms and grains of paradise, from species of Amomum and Elettaria. The order also yields the valuable dye turmeric from Curcuma, a purple dye from Canna, and arrowroot from Maranta and Curcuma. The mucilaginous juice of species of Costus is used in medicine; edible tubers are produced by species of Maranta, an edible fruit by Globba, and a tough fiber by Phrynium and Calathea. Also Zingiberaceæ.

zingiberaceous (zin'ji-bė-rā'shius), a. Of or pertaining to ginger, or the Zingiberaceæ.

Zingiberæ (zin-ji-bē'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Zingiber + -eæ.] A tribe of plants, of the order Zingiberaceæ, typified by the genus Zingiber. It is characterized by flowers with a tubular or spathaceous calyx and a single stamen, the two lateral undeveloped stamens being often represented by petaloid staminodes, and by an ovary with three cells and three parietal placentæ, and a slender free style which at its apex clasps the two anther-cells. It embraces 21 genera, principally tropical, including the large and important aromatic genera Amomum, Curcuma, and Alpinia. Besides Zingiber, as also many of the most highly ornamental plants of the order.

zink, n. See zinc.

zinke (zingk'ke), n. [G. zinke, a cornet.] A small cornet of wood or horn, once very common in Germany. It had usually seven finger-holes, and a cupped mouthpiece. It was made in several sizes, and both straight and curved. The serpent is properly a development of the old zinke or cornetto.

zinkiferous (zing-kif'e-rus), a. [Also zinciferous, zinckiferous, < zinc (zink) + L. ferre = E. bear.] Containing or producing zinc: as, zinkiferous ore.

zinkification (zing'ki-fi-kā'shon), n. [Also zincification, < zinkify + -ation (see -fy).] The process of coating or impregnating an object with zinc, or the state resulting from such process.

zinkify (zing'ki-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. zinkified, ppr. zinkifying. [Also zincify, < zinc (zink) + L. -ficare, < facere, make.] To cover or impregnate with zinc.

zinkite (zing'kīt), n. [Also zincite, zinckite, < zinc (zink) + *-ite*².] A native oxid of zinc found at Franklin Furnace and Stirling Hill near Ogdensburg, in Sussex county, New Jersey. It is brittle, translucent, of a deep-red color, sometimes inclining to yellowish. Also called red zinc ore, or red oxid of zinc.

zinky (zing'ki), a. [Also zincky; < zinc (zink) + *-y*¹.] Pertaining to zinc; containing zinc; having the appearance of zinc.

> The Zincky Ores (of common galena) are said to be greyer than other Ores. Kirwan, Mineralogy (1796), II. 218.

Zinnia (zin'i-ā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1763), named after J. G. Zinn (1727–59), who wrote on the plants of Gottingen.] 1. A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Helianthoideæ, type of the subtribe Zinniæ. It is characterized by solitary radiate flower-heads with a conical or cylindrical receptacle, the flowers both of the disk and ray being fertile, and those of the ray almost or quite without a tube, and persistent upon the ripened achene, the achenes of the inner flowers each bear from one to three awns. There are 12 species, natives of Mexico, Texas, and Arizona, 2 of which long cultivated in gardens are now widely naturalized. They are annuals, perennials, or sometimes shrubby plants, bearing opposite entire leaves and rather large and showy flower-heads pedunculed at the ends of the branches or in the forks between them. Five species occur within the United States, mostly with light-yellow or sulphur-colored rays. The cultivated species are chiefly of various shades of deep red; they have been called youth-and-age, from the lasting and somewhat rigid rays and the continued production of new disk-flowers; but are more usually known by the generic name zinnia, especially in the common double form.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Zinn's corona. An arterial plexus about the optic nerve, in the sclerotic.

Zinn's ligament. See ligament of Zinn, under ligament.

Zinn's membrane. The anterior lamella of the iris of the eye.

Zinn's zonule. See zonule of Zinn, under zonule.

zinnwaldite (zin'wol-dīt), n. [< Zinnwald (see def.) + *-ite*².] A kind of mica related to lepidolite, but containing both lithium and iron; it is often found associated with tin ores, as at Zinnwald in the Erzgebirge.

Zinziber, Zinziberaceæ, etc. Same as Zingiber, etc.

Zion (zī'on), n. [Also Sion, LL. Sion, Gr. Σιών, Heb. Tsiyon, orig. a hill.] Figuratively, the house or household of God, as consisting of the chosen people, the Israelites; the theocracy, or church of God; hence, the church in general, or heaven as the final gathering-place of true believers: so called from Mount Zion, the holy hill of Jerusalem, the center of ancient Hebrew worship.

> Zion spreadeth forth her hands and there is none to comfort her. Lam. i. 17.
>
> Let Zion and her sons rejoice. Watts.

Zionist (zī'on-ist), n. One who advocates the colonization of Hebrews in Palestine.

Zionward (zī'on-ward), adv. [< Zion + -ward.] Toward Zion, in the figurative sense; toward the goal of salvation; heavenward.

> If I were like you, I should have my face Zionward, though prejudice and error might occasionally fling a mist over the glorious vision before me. Charlotte Brontë, in Mrs. Gaskell, viii.

zip (zip), n. [Imitative.] The sound of a bullet passing through the air or striking against an object.

> The ping, zip, zip, of bullets, and the wounded men limping from the front . . . were a prelude to the storm in earnest. The Century, XXX. 134.

Ziphiidæ (zi-fī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Ziphius + -idæ.] The Ziphiina raised as a family apart from Phocænidæ, and divided into Ziphiinæ and Anarnacinæ. Also, more properly, Xiphioidæ.

ziphiiform (zif'i-i-fôrm), a. Same as ziphioid.

Ziphiinæ (zif-i-ī'nē), n. pl. [NL., prop. Xiphiinæ*, < Ziphius + -inæ.] A subfamily of Physeteridæ, named from the genus Ziphius, often classed as the type of a family, the ziphioids or Cuvier's beaked whale (Ziphius cavirostris), one of the Ziphiinæ.

ziphiform cetaceans, among those known as bottlenoses and cow fishes. They have most of the bony teeth (submaxillary) or concealed, a distinct laryngeal sac, and a peculiar mould of cranium above which the rest of the head rises abruptly in globose form; there is a small falcate dorsal fin, the flippers are small, with five digits, and the single median blow-hole is crescentic, as in delphinoids. Several genera besides Ziphius have been recognized, of which Hyperoödon is the most prominent, but their synonymy is involved, and some distinctions which have been drawn are not clear.

ziphioid (zif'i-oid), a. and n. I. a. Resembling or related to a cetacean of the genus Ziphius.

II. n. Any member of the Ziphiidæ or Ziphiinæ.

Also written xiphioid.

ziphisternum, n. See xiphisternum.

Ziphius (zif'i-us), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1834), prop. Xiphius, < Gr. ξιφίας, the sword-fish, < ξίφος, a sword.] 1. A genus of odontocete cetaceans, or toothed whales, taken as type of the Ziphiinæ: used with varying restrictions, and in some acceptations synonymous with Mesoplodon. It was based originally on a skull discovered in 1804 on the coast of France, and supposed to be fossil; the species was named Z. cavirostris by Cuvier. Numerous living individuals have since been found in various seas. There is normally one conical tooth on each side of the lower jaw, the vertebræ are forty-nine in number; and the anterior cervicals are ankylosed, but the posterior are free. These whales are among those known as bottle-nosed whales and cow-fishes, and attain a length of from 15 to 20 feet. The genus is distinct from Hyperoodon; but variations in the dentition have been noted, and the relations of some forms known as Mesoplodon are in question. Also called Diodon.

2. [l. c.] A whale of this genus.

Ziphorhynchus, n. See Xiphorhynchus.

zippeite (zip'ē-īt), n. [Named after F. X. M. Zippe, a German mineralogist.] A basic sulphate of uranium, occurring in delicate needle-like crystals of a bright-yellow color: it is found at Joachimsthal.

zircon (zėr'kon), n. [Cf. Sp. azarcon = Pg. azarcão, zarcão, < Ar. zarkun, cinnabar, vermilion, < Pers. zargun, gold-colored: see jargon[2].] A mineral occurring in tetragonal crystals of adamantine luster and yellowish to brownish or reddish color: its hardness is somewhat greater than that of quartz. The reddish-orange variety is sometimes called hyacinth in jewelry. The colorless, yellowish, or smoky zircon of Ceylon is there called jargon. Zircon consists of the oxids of silicon and zirconium (SiO_2ZrO_2), and is usually regarded as a silicate of zirconium, though sometimes classed with the oxids of titanium (rutile) and tin (cassiterite), which have a similar form. See zirconium.

zirconate (zėr'kō-nāt), n. [< zircon(ic) + -ate[1].] A salt of zirconic acid.

zirconia (zėr-kō'ni-ą), n. [NL., < zircon.] An oxid, ZrO_2, of the metal zirconium, resembling alumina in appearance. It is so hard as to scratch glass. — Zirconia light, an intensely brilliant light, differing from the ordinary oxyhydrogen light or lime-light only in that it is produced from zircon cones acted on by oxygen and a highly carbureted gas, in place of the less durable lime balls of the other method.

zirconian (zėr-kō'ni-an), a. [< zirconia + -an.] Same as zirconic. Pop. Sci. News, XXIII. 60.

zirconic (zėr-kon'ik), a. [< zirconia, zirconium, + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or containing zirconia or zirconium. Zirconic acid, an acid containing zirconium, not capable of existing in the free state, but forming definite salts.

zirconite (zėr'kon-īt), n. [< zircon + -ite[2].] A variety of zircon.

zirconium (zėr-kō'ni-um), n. [NL., < zircon.] Chemical symbol, Zr; atomic weight, 90.5. The metal contained in zirconia. It is commonly obtained in the form of a black powder, but is also known in the crystalline state, forming highly lustrous blackish-gray lamellæ, having a specific gravity of 4.15. The amorphous metal takes fire when gently heated in the air, but the crystalline variety requires an intense heat for its ignition. The common acids do not attack it. Zirconium is a remarkable element in that it is very widely and generally diffused in nature, but nowhere, so far as is known, found in any one locality in large quantity; in this respect it has a decided resemblance to titanium. The form in which it occurs is that of the silicate (zircon), and usually in minute or even microscopic crystals, which have been detected in many granitic and syenitic rocks, as well as in various gneisses and crystalline schists. Zircon has been found also, but less abundantly, in some eruptive rocks, both ancient and modern. Zirconium is chemically most closely related to titanium, and both these metals have certain affinities with silicon, forming dioxids and volatile tetrachlorids, as does that non-metallic element.

zirconoid (zėr'kō-noid), n. [< zircon + -oid.] In crystal., a double eight-sided pyramid belonging to the tetragonal system; so called because it is a common form with zircon.

zircon-syenite (zėr'kon-sī'e-nīt), n. See elæolite-syenite.

Z-iron (zē'- or zed'ī'ėrn), n. See angle-iron.

Zirphæa (zėr-fē'ą), n. [NL., J. E. Gray, as Zirfæa.] In conch., a genus of bivalves, of the family Pholadidæ. Z. crispata is called date-fish in California, where it is available for food.

zither (zith'ėr), n. [< G. zither = E. cither, cithara, q. v.] Same as cithern.

zitherist (zith'ėr-ist), n. [< zither + -ist.] A player on the cithern.

zithern (zith'ėrn), n. [Altered form of zither, after cithern as related to cither, cithara.] Same as cithern.

Zizania (zi-zā'ni-ą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), < LL. zizania, pl., tares, < Gr. ζιζάνιον, darnel, tare.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Oryzeæ. It is characterized by numerous narrow unisexual spikelets in a long loose androgynous panicle, each spikelet having two glumes and six stamens or two more or less connate styles. Four or five species have been described, of which two, Z. aquatica and Z. miliacea, are usually considered distinct; both are natives of North America, the former also occurring in Japan and eastern Russia. They are tall aquatic grasses with long flat leaves and large terminal panicles with numerous slender elongated branches, made highly ornamental by the pendent red or purplish anthers. They are the favorite food of wild ducks, and the seeds are sold to plant in artificial fish-ponds to shade the young fish, and along watercourses to attract fowl. They are known as wild water, or Indian rice. See Indian rice, under rice[1].

Flowering Plant of Zizania aquatica.
a, branch of the panicle with male flowers; b, branch of the panicle with female flowers; c, male flower; d, female flower.

zizany† (ziz'ą-ni), n. [< F. zizanie, < LL. zizania: see Zizania.] Darnel.

They all stand or fall to their own masters, and many holy and excellent persons God has dispersed, as wheat among the tares and zizany.
Evelyn, True Religion, II. 214.

Ziziphora (zi-zif'ō-rą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753).] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiatæ and tribe Monardeæ. It is characterized by a tubular thirteen-nerved two-lipped calyx, with the throat villous within, and commonly closed after flowering by convivent teeth. There are about 12 species, natives of eastern and central Asia and of southern parts of the Mediterranean region. They are low annuals or spreading undershrubs, usually hoary with close hairs, and bearing small leaves which are nearly or quite entire. The flowers form small axillary clusters, commonly crowded upon the upper part of the stem.

Zizyphea (zi-zif'ē-ė), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1862), < Zizyphus + -eæ.] A tribe of polypetalous plants, of the order Rhamnaceæ. It is characterized by a superior or half superior ovary, by a disk filling the calyx-tube, and by a drupaceous juicy or fleshy fruit with a one- to three-celled stone. It includes 9 genera, of which Ziziphus is the type. They are shrubs or trees, mainly of the northern hemisphere; one, Berchemia, becomes a shrubby climber in B. volubilis, the supple-jack of the southern United States.

Zizyphus (ziz'i-fus), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. zizyphus, < Gr. ζίζυφος, the jujube-tree: see jujube.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Rhamnaceæ, type of the tribe Zizypheæ. It is characterized by thorny branches, triple-nerved leaves, and cymose flowers each with five petals, and by a usually two-celled ovary immersed in the disk, and bearing two or three conical divergent styles. There are 60 species, natives chiefly of tropical Asia and America, occurring rarely in Africa and Australia. They are shrubs or trees, often decumbent or sarmentose, commonly covered with hooked spines. The leaves are alternate, coriaceous, entire or crenate, three- to five-nerved, and mostly arranged in two ranks. One or both of the stipules are spinescent, often ending in a hook. The small greenish flowers form short few-flowered axillary cymes. The fruit is a globose or oblong drupe, with a woody or bony stone, containing one to three seeds. The species are known in general as jujube-tree; the name jujube is given especially to the fruit of Z. sativa (Z. vulgaris), of the Mediterranean region, which is there commonly eaten fresh, or used as a cough remedy when dried. Z. Jujuba, of India and China, also furnishes an excellent fruit, cultivated in numerous forms by the Chinese, a variety is known as the Chinese date. The true jujube does not now usually enter into the confection known as jujube-paste, but is commonly replaced by gum arabic or gelatin. Z. Lotus, the sadr is one of the reputed sources of the classical lotus food. (See lotus-tree, 1, and lote tree.) Many other species bear edible fruit, as Z. Baclei, of Africa, which is there made into bread and into a pleasant beverage; several are valued for ornament on account of their foliage, or for hedges on account of their spines, especially Z. sativa, and also Z. Spina-Christi, one of the Christ's-thorns (for which see nabbuk-tree). Z. nummularia of Persia and India, is known as camel's-thorn (which see). Z. Chloroxylon, a recently determined species, is an important timber-tree of Jamaica, there known as cog-wood. Z. Parryi occurs in southern California and Cerros Island; two former species of Florida, Z. emarginatus, or black ironwood, and Z. Domingensis, or nakedwood, are now known respectively as Rhamnidium ferreum and Colubrina reclinata. See jujube, and cut under serration.

Zn. In chem., the symbol for zinc.

zoa, n. Plural of zoon.

zoadula† (zō-ad'ū-lą), n.; pl. zoadulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. ζωή, life, + -ad[2] + dim. -ula.] In bot., the locomotive spore of some Confervæ.

zoea, zoeal. See zoëa, zoëal.

zoamylin (zō-am'i-lin), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + amylin.] Same as glycogen.

Zoanthacea (zō-an-thā'sē-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Zoanthus + -aceæ.] A suborder of Actinozoa, containing permanently attached forms, as Zoanthus and related genera.

zoanthaceal (zō-an-thā'sē-al), a. and n. [< Zoanthacea + -al.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Zoanthacea; zoanthoid.

II. n. Any member of the Zoanthacea.

Zoantharia (zō-an-thā'ri-ą), n. pl. [NL. (De Blainville, 1830), < Gr. ζῷον, animal (see zoön), + ἄνθος, flower, + -aria.] A division (Ordo or subclass) of Actinozoa, containing the hexamerous or hexacoralline forms; the hexactinoid polyps, or animal-flowers, contrasted with the Alcyonaria, and characterized by the normal disposition of their soft parts in sixes or multiples of six (not in eights, as in the Alcyonaria or Octocoralla), and by the possession of simple (not fringed) and usually numerous tentacles: so called from the resemblance of some of them, as the sea-anemones, to flowers. The Zoantharia correspond to the Hexacorallia or Coralligena, and were divided by Milne-Edwards into three subordern (or orders): Malacodermata, with the corallum absent or rudimentary, as in sea anemones; Sclerodermata, with external non-calcareous corallum, as the black corals of the family Antipathidæ, and Sclerodermata, with internal calcareous corallum, as the ordinary hard corals, or stone-corals. See the technical names.

zoantharian (zō-an-thā'ri-an), a. and n. I. a. Having the characters of or pertaining to the Zoantharia.

II. n. A member of the Zoantharia, as a sea-anemone.

Zoanthidæ (zō-an'thi-dē), n. pl. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1840), < Zoanthus + -idæ.] A family of zoantharian or hexacoralline actinozoans, typified by the genus Zoanthus. They are sea-anemones in which the individual polyps are ordinarily united by a common creeping stolon, or connective cœnosarc; they multiply by buds which remain thus adherent. They have no true corallum, but a pseudo skeleton of hard particles or spicules embedded in the ectoderm; the mesenteric septa are numerous, and of two sorts (one small and sterile, the other large and perfect and furnished with reproductive organs), generally alternating. Like most other sea-anemones, these are fixed organisms, incapable of locomotion, and they include all the colonial forms. Also Zoanthea.

Zoanthinæ (zō-an-thī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zoanthus + -inæ.] The Zoanthidæ named as a subfamily. Edwards and Haime, 1851.

zoanthodeme (zō-an'thō-dēm), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ἄνθος, a flower, + δῆμα, a bundle; literally, 'a bundle of animal-flowers.'] A compound zoantharian; the whole organism constituted by the coherent zoöids produced by the budding of a single actinozoan polyp.

zoanthodemic (zō-an-thō-dem'ik), a. [< zoanthodeme + -ic.] Of the nature of or pertaining to a zoanthodeme.

zoanthoid (zō'an-thoid), a. [< Zoanthus + -oid.] Same as zoantharian.

zoanthropic (zō-an-throp'ik), a. [< zoanthropy + -ic.] Of the nature of or pertaining to zoanthropy; as, zoanthropic mania or delusion; zoanthropic literature. This is the generic name of such delusions, which take various forms, some of which are specified according to the animal concerned, as lycanthropy.

zoanthropy (zō-an'thrō-pi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ἄνθρωπος, man. Cf. lycanthropy.] A form of insanity in which a person believes himself to be one of the lower animals.

Zoanthus (zō-an'thus), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1827), < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ἄνθος, flower.] The typical genus of Zoanthidæ. The individual polyps are lengthened, and elevated upon a footstalk springing from the connective cœnosarc common to the several zoöids of the compound organism; the mouth is linear and transverse, and surrounded by short slender rays or tentacles. The best-known species is Z. couchii of the European coasts; numerous others inhabit tropical seas, as Z. solanderi. Also Zoantus (Lamarck, 1816), Zoantha.

Zoanthus sociatus (one variety of several), natural size.
a, polyp, closed; b, the same, expanded; c, section.

…(Greek, life, + …, animal, de…
…the suborder Zoarcoidea, the so…
…(formerly Blennius viviparus). This is a large eelpout with an elongate …body, tapering behind, heavy oblong head, a …series of canine teeth in several series, a long low …dorsal fin of the hinder rays of which are developed …, broad pectoral fins, and jugular ventrals of …the scales are small, not imbri… the skin. Another species, with …fin-rays and vertebræ, is Z. (Macr…) …known as mutton-fish and mother of … found from Labrador to the Middle States, 20 inches …long, of a reddish-brown color mottled with olive, with a …dark streak across the cheek.

Zoarcidæ (zō-är'si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zoarces + -idæ.] A family of fishes, named from the genus Zoarces; now generally called Lycodidæ (which see). Also Zoarcoidæ, Zoarchidæ.

Viviparous eelpout, one of the Zoarcidæ (or Lycodidæ).

zoarite (zō'a-rīt), n. Plural of zoarium.

zoarial (zō-ā'ri-al), a. [< zoari-um + -al.] Of or pertaining to a zoarium; composing or composed of a zoarium.

zoarium (zō-ā'ri-um), n.; pl. zoaria (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷάριον, dim. of ζῷον, an animal.] A polyzoary; the colony or aggregate of the polypides of a polyzoan; the polypidom or polypary of the moss-animalcules.

zobo (zō'bō), n. [Also cholo, dzomo, etc., < Tibetan mdzopo, the male, mdzomo, the female of the mdzo, a hybrid of the yak and the so-called zebu. Cf. zebu.] A breed of zebu-cattle, supposed to be a hybrid of the common zebu with the yak, reared in the western Himalayan region for its flesh and milk, and also as a beast of burden.

zocco (zok'ō), n. [It., < L. soccus, sock: see *sock*1, socle.] A socle.

zoccolo, zocle (zok'ō-lō, zō'kl), n. [< It. zoccolo, < ceppo: see zuccolo.] A socle.

zodiac (zō'di-ak), n. [Formerly also zodiack; < ME. zodiac, zodiak, < OF. zodiac, zodiaque, F. zodiaque = Sp. zodiaco = Pg. It. zodiaco, < L. zodiacus, the zodiac (L. orbis signifer), also adj., of the zodiac, < Gr. ζῳδιακός, the zodiac, prop. adj., 'of animals,' sc. κύκλος, also called ὁ κύκλος ὁ τῶν ζῳδίων, or ὁ τῶν ζῳδίων κύκλος, 'the circle of animals' (also ἡ ζῳδιακή, sc. ὁδός, way), the ref. being to the constellations figured as animals; < ζῴδιον, dim. of ζῷον, animal: see zoön.] 1. A belt of twelve constellations, extending about 8° on each side of the ecliptic. The constellations are ♈, Aries; ♉, Taurus; ♊, Gemini; ♋, Cancer; ♌, Leo; ♍, Virgo; ♎, Libra; ♏, Scorpio; ♐, Sagittarius; ♑, Capricornus; ♒, Aquarius; ♓, Pisces. The zodiac is also divided into twelve equal parts called signs named after these constellations, and the first point of the sign Aries begins at the vernal equinox. The above symbols refer to the signs. The signs have been carried back by the precession of the equinoxes until they are now 25° behind the corresponding constellations on the average. But the position of the vernal equinox was originally, no doubt, between Aries and Taurus. There is strong evidence that the zodiac was formed at Babylon about 2100 B. C. There is a poetical description of the heavens written by Aratus in Macedonia in latitude about 41°, and about 270 B. C. But the appearances described were never to be seen in that latitude, nor in any latitude in that age. Aratus mentions that the head of the Dragon — that is, Thuban (γ Draconis) — and the waist of Cepheus — that is, Alderamin (α Cephei) — are on the circle of perpetual apparition. Now, this was true only in the latitude of Babylon, say 35°, about 2000 B. C. Hipparchus also describes pretty carefully the night southerly stars seen, mentioning the star now called the Peacock's eye (α Pavonis), as well as Canopus (α Argûs), but saying that there are no bright stars between the latter and Cetus, so that a Phœnicia must have been invisible. All our these descriptions will suit only a country of latitude 32° N. to 36° N., and an epoch between 2000 B. C. and 2000 B. C. Aratus also describes the setting of the Dolphin among the stars. That of the Dragon at Chinese best agrees with 2900 B. C., that of the Dragon of Cepheus with 2000 B. C. The equator is also described as a segment which suggests perfectly to 2100 B. C. There are twelve descriptions of the appearances of the rising of each of the constellations of the zodiac, which, while not very decisive, are not in positive disagreement with the other indications. But there is reason to think that the early part of the poem (written long before the precession of the equinoxes was suspected) copies from much earlier Accadian records. The zodiac was, therefore, probably formed about 2100 B. C. It cannot have been formed much before, since there is much reason to believe that the constellation Aries either contained the sun or was next to it at the time of the vernal equinox. This was about 2100 B. C. when the vernal equinox fell between the last point of Aries and the other constellations, in a peculiar position. Some highly competent authorities regard the first formation of the zodiac as having occurred in the time of the ancient constellations, which have a remarkably Babylonian character, as Virgo, Capricornus, Sagittarius, Centaurus, and Ophiuchus; one (Capricornus) has a Babylonian name; and nearly all may be explained from Babylonian mythology. Two at least of the symbols for signs, those of Gemini and Scorpio, much resemble the Babylonian hieroglyphs for the corresponding months. Yet the origin of the Bears, Aurigæ, Perseus, Lyra, and Corona was probably not Babylonian. Moreover, certain subjects of common Babylonian fable, such as the tree of life, are not found among the constellations. It is noticeable that it was about 2300 B. C. that Hi and Ho are said to have reformed the Chinese calendar and divided the heavens into seasons; but the attempt to connect our constellations with the Chinese asterisms has conspicuously failed. The figures of the Chinese zodiac are Tiger, Rabbit, Dragon, Serpent, Horse, Ram, Ape, Cock, Dog, Pig, Rat, Bull. The zodiac was marked out by the ancients as distinct from the rest of the heavens because the apparent places of the sun, moon, and the planets known to them were always within it. This, however, does not hold good of all the newly discovered planetoids. See cuts under constellations named.

2. Figuratively, a round or circuit; a zone; a complete course.

> The Poet . . . goeth hand in hand with Nature, not inclosed within the narrow warrant of her guifts, but freely ranging onely within the Zodiack of his owne wit.
>
> Sir P. Sidney, Apol for Poetrie.

> In your yeares zodiacke may you fairely move,
> Shin'd on by angels, blest with goodness, love.
>
> Dekker, London Tempe.

3. In her., a bearing representing a part of the imaginary zodiacal circle, forming an arched bend or bend sinister, and with several of the signs upon it, the number being specified in the blazon.— Lunar zodiac, a circle of 27 or 28 asterisms, or groups of stars selected and established to mark the moon's daily progress around the heavens. It was used in ancient India, in China, and in Arabia, with only minor variations in the star-groups selected. Its place of origin is uncertain and disputed.— Zodiac ring, a ring decorated with one of the signs of the zodiac, either as the sign under which the possessor was born, or perhaps the sign influencing a certain part of the body.

zodiacal (zō-dī'a-kal), a. [< zodiac + -al.] Of or pertaining to the zodiac: as, the zodiacal signs; zodiacal planets.— Zodiacal light, a luminous tract of the sky, of an elongated triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes, seen at certain seasons of the year either in the west after sunset or in the east before sunrise. It appears with greatest brilliance within the tropics, where it sometimes rivals the Milky Way. Its nature is unknown, the most plausible hypothesis, supported by many of the most eminent modern astronomers, is that it is the glow from a cloud of meteoric matter revolving round the sun.— Zodiacal parallel. See parallel.

zodiophilous (zō-di-of'i-lus), a. [< Gr. ζῴδιον, dim. of ζῷον, animal, + φίλος, love.] In bot., animal-loving: applied to those flowers which from their structure are especially adapted for fertilization by insects: it is the converse of anthophilous, and of the insects concerned.

zoëa, zoea (zō-ē'ä), n.; pl. zoëæ, zoææ (-ē), rarely zoëas (-äz). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal.] The name given by Bose (1802) to the larvæ of certain decapod crustaceans under the impression that they were adults constituting a distinct genus. The name is retained for the zoëa-stage, and for the animal itself in this stage. The mysis is also called the expanded stage intervening in some crustaceans between the nauplius-stage and the schizopod stage, in others in which a nauplius-stage is apparently wanting, the zoëa passes into the megalopa stage. Also zoæa, zoëa.

zoëa-form (zō-ē'ä-fôrm), n. The zoëa or zoëa-stage of a crustacean.

zoëal, zoeal (zō-ē'al), a. Of the nature of a zoëa; pertaining to a zoëa or to the zoëa-stage; zoëiform. Also zoæal.

Zoëa-stage of Shore-crab (a and new manner).

zoëa-stage (zō-ē'ä-stāj), n. That early stage of certain crustaceans which is a zoëa. In this stage of development the cephalothorax is relatively stout and usually spined, with conspicuous eyes and long fringed antennæ and mouth-parts serving as swimming-organs, the thoracic legs are undeveloped, and the abdomen is long and slender and with or without appendages. This stage usually passes into that of the megalopa.

zoëform, zoeform (zō'ē-fôrm), a. [< NL. zoëa, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Having the form of a zoëa; being or resembling a zoëa.

zoëpraxiscope (zō-ē-prak'si-skōp), n. Same as zoöpraxiscope.

zoëther (zō-ē'thėr), n. [< Gr. ζωή, life, + E. (æ)ther.] A supposed substance which manifests the phenomena of animal magnetism, and the like: same as pratyle.

zoëtheric (zō-ē-ther'ik), a. [< zoëther + -ic.] Having the character of zoëther; relating to zoëther in any way.

zoëtic (zō-et'ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. ζωή, life, + -tic.] Pertaining to life; vital.

zoëtrope (zō'ē-trōp), n. [< Gr. ζωή, life, + τρόπος, a turning.] An optical instrument which exhibits its pictures as if alive and in action, depending, like the thaumatrope, the phenakistoscope, etc., on the persistence of vision. It consists of a cylinder open at the top, with a series of slits in its circumference. A series of pictures representing the different attitudes successively assumed by an object in performing any act from its beginning to its close — as by a horseman in leaping a gate or an acrobat in performing a somersault, is arranged along the interior circumference. The instrument is then set in rapid motion, and the person applying his eye to the slits sees through them the figure appearing as if endowed with life and activity and performing the act intended. Compare zoögyroscope and zoögyrascope. Also zoetrope and wheel of life.

zoëtropic (zō-ē-trop'ik), a. [< zoëtrope + -ic.] Pertaining to or resembling the zoëtrope; adapted to or shown by the zoëtrope.

zoiatria (zō-i-at'ri-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, an animal, + ἰατρεία, healing, < ἰατρός, a healer, < ἰάομαι, heal, < ἰατρός, a physician: see iatric.] Veterinary surgery.

zoic (zō'ik), a. [< Gr. ζωικός, of animals, < ζῷον, animal.] Of or pertaining to animals or living beings; relating to or characterized by animal life; marked by the presence of life.

Zoilean (zō-il'ē-an), a. [< L. Zoilus, < Gr. Ζώϊλος, Zoilus (see def.).] Characteristic of Zoilus, a Greek critic (about the fourth century B. C.), noted for his severe criticism of Homer; having the character of Zoilism.

Zoilism (zō'i-lizm), n. [< Zoilus (see Zoilean) + -ism.] Criticism like that of Zoilus; illiberal or carping criticism; unjust censure.

> Bring candid eyes unto the perusal of men's works, and let not Zoilism or detraction blast well-intended labours.
>
> Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., II. 2.

Zoilist (zō'i-list), n. [< Zoilus (see Zoilean) + -ist.] An imitator of Zoilus; one who practises Zoilism; a carping critic.

> Out, rhyme; take't as you list!
> A flea for the sour-brow'd Zoilist!
>
> Marston, What You Will, II. 1.

zoisite (zoi'sīt), n. [Named by Werner in 1805 after Baron von Zois, from whom he received his specimen.] A mineral closely related to epidote, but orthorhombic in crystallization. It occurs in prismatic crystals, often deeply striated and rounded, also massive. It varies in color from white to yellow, greenish, and rose-red. Its composition is similar to that of epidote, except that it contains calcium and but little iron. Thulite is a variety of a rose-red color, found in Norway. Also called saussurite.

zoism (zō'izm), n. [< Gr. ζωή, life, + -ism.] The doctrine that the phenomena of life depend upon a peculiar vital principle; any vitalistic theory. [A word current from about 1840 to 1850.]

zoist (zō'ist), n. [< Gr. ζωή, life, + -ist.] One who studies the phenomena of life from the standpoint of zoism; one who upholds the theory or doctrine of zoism. See zoism.

zoistic (zō-is'tik), a. [< zoist + -ic.] 1. Pertaining to zoism or to the zoists: as, zoistic views. See zoism.— 2. Pertaining to living organisms or to vitality; vitalistic; animal: as, zoistic magnetism (that is, animal magnetism). Scoresby.

Zolaism (zō'lā-izm), n. [< Zola (see def.) + -ism.] The characteristic quality of the works of Emile Zola (born 1840), a French novelist characterized by an excessively "realistic" treatment of the grosser phases of life; coarse "realism" or "naturalism."

> Set the maiden fancies wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism.
>
> Forward, forward, ay and backward downward too into the abyss.
>
> Tennyson, Locksley Hall Sixty Years After.

Zöllner's lines. Parallel lines which seem not to be parallel by reason of oblique intersecting lines. Also called Zöllner's pattern.

Zöllner's lines.

zollverein (tsôl'fer-īn'), n. [G., < zoll (= E. toll), custom, + verein, union, < ver- (= E. for-) + ein (= E. one), one.] 1. A union of German states for the maintenance of a common tariff or uniform rates of duty on imports from other countries, and of free trade among themselves.

It began with an agreement in 1828 between Prussia and the grand duchy of Hesse, received a great development in 1834, and succeeding years, ultimately including all the German powers excepting Austria and a few small states, and is now coextensive with the German empire.

Hence—2. A commercial union, or customs-union, in general; any arrangement between a number of states for regulating rates of duty with reference to their common benefit.

The result would be a Protectionist group and an Australian Zollverein. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 226.

zomboruk (zom'bō-ruk), n. Same as zumbooruk.

zona (zō'nạ), n.; pl. zonæ (-nē). [L.] 1. In anat., a zone, belt, or girdle, or part likened to a zone: chiefly used in human anatomy.—2. Herpes zoster (which see, under herpes).—Zona alba, the white zone of the eyeball—a thickening of the sclerotic where the muscles are attached.—Zona arcuata, the inner zone of the basilar membrane, extending from the lower edge of the spiral groove of the cochlea to the external edge of the base of the outer rods of Corti.—Zona cartilaginea, the limbus of the spiral lamina.—Zona choriacea, same as zona cartilaginea.—Zona ciliaris, the ciliary zone of the eye, the ring or belt of ciliary processes, or their impression upon the vitreous humor. See cut under eye.—Zona denticulata, the inner zone of the basilar membrane together with the limbus of the spiral lamina.—Zona fasciculata, the layer of the cortical part of the suprarenal body, just beneath the zona glomerulosa.—Zona ganglionaris, a collection of gray matter on the filaments of the cochlear branch of the auditory nerve.—Zona glomerulosa, the outer layer of the cortical part of the suprarenal body.—Zona ignea, same as def. 2.—Zona incerta, a continuation of the formatio reticularis forward under the optic thalamus.—Zona laevis, same as zona arcuata.—Zona mediana, same as zona cartilaginea.—Zona membranacea, same as basilar membrane (which see, under basilar).—Zona nervea, same as zona arcuata.—Zona orbicularis, a collection of circular fibers in the capsular ligament of the hip joint.—Zona pectinata, the outer zone of the basilar membrane, extending from the rods of Corti to the spiral ligament.—Zona pellucida, a transparent membrane surrounding the yolk of the ovum: so called from its appearance in the human ovum under the microscope. It is simply the wall of the ovum, corresponding to any other cell-wall. It is traversed by numerous, more or less evident, radiating pore-canals, through which spermatozoa are supposed to enter the ovum.—Zona perforata, the lower edge of the spiral groove of the cochlea.—Zona radiata, the zona pellucida when the radiating pore-canals are especially distinct.—Zona repens, same as herpes zoster. See herpes.—Zona reticularis, the inner layer of the cortical portion of the suprarenal body.—Zona serpiginosa, same as def. 2.—Zona spongiosa, the extreme dorsal tip of the posterior horn of the gray matter of the spinal cord.—Zona tecta, the inner part of the lamina spiralis membranacea, covered by the organ of Corti.—Zona tendinosa, a fibrous ring situated at each auriculoventricular opening in the heart.—Zona Valsalvæ, the membranous spiral lamina of the cochlea.—Zona violacea. Same as def. 2.

zonal (zō'nal), a. [< LL. zonalis, < L. zona, zone: see zone.] 1. Having the character of a zone or belt.

Frequently storm clouds appeared zonal that is, alternate portions positively and negatively electrified.
C. J. Symons in Modern Meteorology, p. 163.

2. Of or pertaining to the rings, somites, or body-segments of an articulate or annulose animal; arthromeric; metameric; as, zonal symmetry, the serial homology or metamerie symmetry of a segmented animal, as an arthropod or an annulid. See symmetry, 5 (b).—3. In crystal., arranged in zones: as, the zonal structure of a mineral.—4. In bot., noting that view of a diatom in which the zone or suture of the valves is presented to the eye—the "front view" of some writers.—5. In hort., marked on the leaves with a zone or circle, as many pelargoniums, also called horseshoe geraniums.—Zonal harmonic. See harmonic.—Zonal stratum. See stratum zonale, under stratum.

zonally (zō'nal-i), adv. In a zonal manner; in zones, or in the form of a zone.

Crystals of the hyacinth variety of quarts . . . contain numerous inclusions of anhydrite arranged zonally.
Amer. Nat., XXIII. 814.

Zonaria[1] (zō-nā'ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Agardh, 1824), fem. of L. zonarius: see zonary.] A small genus of widely distributed phæosporous algæ, of the order Dictyotaceæ, having a more or less fan-shaped frond obscurely marked with concentric zones, and roundish or linear sori formed beneath the cuticle of the frond.

Zonaria[2] (zō-nā'ri-ạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. zonarius: see zonary.] One of two primary groups (the other being Discoidea) into which Huxley divided the deciduate Mammalia, consisting of those Deciduata which have a zonary placenta; the Zonoplacentalia.

zonarioid (zō-nā'ri-oid), a. [< Zonaria[1] + -oid.] In bot., pertaining to or resembling the genus Zonaria.

zonary (zō'na-ri), a. [< L. zonarius, < zona, a zone: see zone.] Pertaining to or characterized by a zone; having or presenting the form of a belt or girdle. A zonary placenta is one in which the fetal villi form a belt or zone. See Zonaria[2], Zonoplacentalia, and sinulary.

The placenta of the dugong is zonary and non-deciduate. Nature, XL. 611.

zonate (zō'nāt), a. [< NL. zonatus, < L. zona, zone: see zone.] 1. In bot., marked with zones or concentric bands of color.—2. In zoöl., having zones of color or texture; belted, girdled, or ringed; zoned.

zonda (zon'dä), n. [Named from the village of Zonda.] A local foehn wind occurring at the eastern base of the Andes, in the vicinity of San Juan, Argentine Republic. It is a hot dry west wind blowing down from the Cordillera, and carrying clouds of dust and fine sand. It may occur at any season, but is especially frequent during July and August (midwinter), when its high temperature and parching effects are especially noticeable. The name is also applied to a hot dry north wind occurring on the Argentine plains during the summer, and reported especially from the vicinity of Mendoza. This is essentially a desert wind, charged with sand, and oppressive and suffocating in its effects.

zone (zōn), n. [< F. zone, < Sp. Pg. It. zona, < L. zona, < Gr. ζώνη, a girdle, belt, one of the zones of the sphere, < ζωννύναι, gird.] 1. A girdle or belt worn as an article of dress. [Now only poetical.]

Germinatio, in green, with a zone of gold about her waist.
B. Jonson, Masque of Beauty.

With a side
White as Hebe's, when her zone
Slipt its golden clasp, and down
Fell her kirtle to her feet. Keats, Fancy.

2. A belt or band round anything, as a stripe of different color or substance round an object; figuratively, any circumscribing or surrounding line, real or imaginary; a circuitous line, path, or course; an inclosing circle.

That milky way
Which nightly, as a circling zone, thou seest Powder'd with stars. Milton, P. L., vii. 580.

And four great zones of sculpture, set betwixt
With many a mystic symbol, gird the hall
Tennyson, Holy Grail

Very frequently the colors form stripes or zones in the stone [Egyptian jasper], which are probably the result of decomposition of the upper surface.
F. W. Streeter, Precious Stones, p. 201.

3. Specifically, in geog., one of five arbitrary divisions of the earth's surface, bounded by lines parallel to the equator, each named according to its prevailing temperature; a climatic belt. These climatic zones are (a) the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic, or 23½° north and 23½° south of the equator; (b) two temperate zones, extending from the tropics to the polar circles—that is, from the parallel of 23½° north or south to that of 66½° north or south, and therefore called the north temperate and south temperate zones; and (c) two frigid zones, extending from the polar circles to the north and south poles respectively.

4. Any continuous tract or belt differing in character from adjoining tracts; a definite area or region within which some distinguishing circumstances exist or are established: as, the zones of natural history, distinguished by special forms of vegetable or animal life; a zone of free trade; a free zone on the border of a country or between adjoining states. Naturalists formerly divided the sea-bottom into five zones in accordance with the depth of water covering each which was supposed to determine its fauna and flora. They were called respectively littoral, circumlittoral, median, inframedian, and abyssal. Later researches have proved that the assumed facts were to a great extent erroneous, organisms supposed to be confined to the littoral zone having been found at the greatest depths. In geology zone has nearly the same meaning as horizon. A stratum, or a group of strata, may be characterized by the presence of a certain assemblage of fossils, or by one particular fossil, in such cases the most abundant or typical fossil may give a name to the subdivision in which it occurs, which will then be designated as the zone of that particular species. Thus, the Lower and the Middle Lias have together been divided into twelve zones, each characterized by the presence of a certain species of ammonite: as, the "zone of the Ariestites (Ammonites) raricostatus," etc.

They [the people of Savoy] would . . . lose their commercial zone or free frontier with Switzerland
C. K. Adams, Democracy and Monarchy, ix.

The zone of youthful fancy . . . is now well passed: the zone of cultured imagination is still beyond us.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 18.

How vast must have been that earlier period wherein were deposited those fine alternations of lime and clay which form hills, such as Mont Perrier, several hundred feet in height, divisible into distinct zones, each characterized by peculiar assemblages of fossils.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, v.

Attacks of a spasmodic or of a lethargic nature in hysterical patients can often be excited by touching or pressing upon certain spots or zones on the surface of the body.
Lancet, 1886, II. 1243.

5. In math., a part of the surface of a sphere included between two parallel planes.—6. In crystal., a series of planes having their lines of intersection parallel.—Annual zone. Same as annual ring (which see, under ring[1]).—Bathymetric zone. See bathymetric.—Cervical zone, that part of the pregnant uterus, surrounding the [illegible] which attachment of the placenta is [illegible] to cause alarming hemorrhage during [illegible] centric attachment of the placenta in the [illegible] tutes placenta previa (which see, under placenta).—Cingulum zone. Same as cingulum.—Clavicular zone, any zone, in anat. See clavicular.—Cone zone. Same as cone-bundle.—Convolutional zone. Same as convolutional.—Epileptic zone, an area of the [illegible] the lower part of the face and the neck [illegible] will excite an epileptic paroxysm. [illegible] that section of the spinal cord in the [illegible] animals, usually guinea-pigs, was followed by [illegible] and that the progeny of animals so treated had [illegible] leptic zones.—Epileptogenous or epileptiform zone. Same as epileptic zone.—Hypersensitive zone, [illegible] sensitive portion of the integument, sometimes [illegible] cases of spinal paralysis, at the border of the [illegible]—Hypnogenic zone, a place or region on the [illegible] the body stimulation or irritation of which [illegible] hypnotism. [Recent.]

Spots which have been described by Pitres as hypnogenic zones. Bjornström, Hypnotism (trans.), p. 49.

Hysterogenic zone, a part of the surface of the body pressure upon which will excite a paroxysm in cases of hystero-epilepsy.—Intermediary zone of the stomach, that part of the wall of the stomach, near the pylorus, where the peptic glands begin to disappear.—Intramedullary zones. See tectum mesencephali.—Lissauer's zone. Same as Lissauer's tract (which see, under tract).—Marginal zone, the border where the synovial membrane is normally converted into articular cartilage.—Neutral, intestinate, pellucid, primordial zones. See the adjectives.—Posterior marginal zone. Same as Lissauer's tract (which see, under tract).—Three-mile zone. See mile.—Zone of defense, in fort., the belt of territory around a fortification which falls under the effective fire of the besieged.—Zone of Haller. Same as zone of Zinn.—Zone of Lissauer. Same as Lissauer's tract. See tract.—Zone of operations (milit.), the region containing the lines of operations of an army, extending from the base of operations to the objective point. See strategy.—Zone of vegetation, a belt of characteristic vegetable growth following a particular line of altitude on mountain sides.—Zone of Zinn. Same as zonule of Zinn. See zonule.

zone (zōn), v.; pret. and pp. zoned, ppr. zoning. [< zone, n.] I. trans. To encircle with or as if with a zone; bring within a zone, or divide into zones or belts, in any sense.

I could hear he loved
Some fair immortal, and that his embrace
Had zoned her through the night.
Keats, Endymion, ii.

II. intrans. To be formed into zones.

What Mr. Lockyer had called the zoning of colour in the heavens. Nature, XXXVIII. 225.

zone-axis (zōn'ak'sis), n. In crystal., the line in which all the planes of a zone would intersect if they were supposed to pass through the same point.

zoned (zōnd), a. [< zone + -ed[2].] 1. Wearing a zone, as a woman.—2. Having zones, or bands resembling zones; zonate.

zoneless (zōn'les), a. [< zone + -less.] Without a zone or girdle; ungirt; hence, loosely robed.

That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist.
Cowper, Task, iii. 82.

zonic (zō'nik), n. [< zone + -ic.] A girdle; a zone; a belt. [Rare.]

I know that the place where I was bred stands upon a zonic of coal. Smollett, Travels, iv (Davies).

zoniferous (zō-nif'e-rus), a. [< L. zona, zone, + ferre = E. bear[1].] Having or bearing a zone; zoned.

Zonites (zō-nī'tēz), n. [NL. (Montfort, 1810), < Gr. ζωνίτης, girded, < ζώνη, girdle: see zone.] In conch., a genus of pulmonate gastropods, referred to the family Helicidæ, or to the Limacidæ, or to the Vitrinidæ, and giving name to the Zonitinæ. The species are numerous, as Z. cellaria (see cellarius). Z. nitidus is a very small species of the United States; Z. umbilicatus is known as the cup shell. The genus in a broad sense includes species of Hyalinia and related forms; but it is also restricted to about a dozen species of the Mediterranean region, as Z. algirus.

Zonitidæ (zō-nit'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonites + -idæ.] A family of terrestrial gastropods, typified by the genus Zonites: same as Vitrinidæ. Trans. New Zealand Inst., 1883.

Zonitinæ (zō-ni-tī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonites + -inæ.] A subfamily of Vitrinidæ or another family, typified by the genus Zonites, and including forms with a helicoid shell into which the animal can completely withdraw) and with lateral bicuspid and marginal acute teeth.

Zonitis (zō-nī'tis), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1775), < Gr. ζωνίτις, fem. of ζωνίτης: see Zonites.] A genus of blister-beetles, of the family Cantharidæ, of wide distribution and comprising about 40 species, of which 6 are North American. They are very variable in color and size, but are distinguished by having the outer lobe of the maxillæ [illegible]

zonochlorite (zō-nō-klō'rīt), n. [< Gr. ζώνη, girdle, + χλωρός, greenish-yellow, + -ite.] A zeolitic mineral, perhaps related to [illegible] occurring in massive form in [illegible] daloid: it often shows bands of [illegible] zonociliate (zō-nō-sil'i-āt), a. [< L. zona, zone, + NL. ciliatus, ciliate.] [illegible]

…and cut under …

…of the Perissodactyla, and all the …

…(-ē), n. [< Gr. ζωνιδιόν, like a girdle, < ζώνη, girdle, + εἶδος, form.] Like a zone; …; zonular. [Rare.]

…(zō″nō-plā-sen′tal), a. [< L. …, girdle, + NL. placenta + -al.] In mammals, having a ringed deciduate placenta; of …

Zonoplacentalia (zō-nō-plā-sen-tā′li-ā), n. pl. [NL.; see zonoplacental.] Those deciduate mammals in which the placenta is zonary, as …

…, with Discoplacentalia; the Zonaria. The carnivores, the elephant, and the hyrax are examples.

Zonotrichia (zō-nō-trik′i-ā), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1832), < Gr. ζώνη, girdle, + θρίξ (τριχ-), hair.] A genus of large and handsome American finches, of the family Fringillidæ; the crown-sparrows. …, abundant in many parts of North America. More numerous and familiar is …, the white-throated, or peabody-bird, Z. albicollis, whose white throat is sharply contrasted with the dark ash of the breast. In the adult the head is striped with black and white, there is a distinct yellow spot before each eye, and the edge of the wing is yellow. The length is 6¾ inches, the extent 9¾. This sparrow abounds in shrubbery of the eastern half of North America, and has a limpid pleasing song, some notes of which are rendered in the word peabody. Z. querula is Harris's finch, of the Missouri and Mississippi region; the male when adult has nearly the whole head hooded with jet black. Z. coronata, of the Pacific slope, is the golden-crowned.

White-throated Sparrow, or Peabody-bird (Zonotrichia albicollis).

zonula (zō′nū-lā), n.; pl. zonulæ (-lē). [NL.: see zonule.] In anat. and zoöl., a small zone, belt, or ring; a zonule.—Zonula ciliaris. Same as zonule of Zinn.—Zonula of Zinn. Same as zonule of Zinn.

zonular (zō′nū-lär), a. [< zonule + -ar³.] 1. Of or pertaining to a zone or zonule; zonary; zoned.—2. In zoöl., specifically, diffuse: applied to a diffuse form of placenta. See zonary.

The zonular type of a placenta. Dana.

Zonular cataract, a form of cataract, occurring usually in young children, in which the opacity is situated between the cortex and the nucleus of the lens.

zonule (zō′nūl), n. [< L. zonula, dim. of zona, girdle; see zone.] A little zone, belt, or band: a zonula.—Zonule of Zinn, the suspensory ligament of the crystalline lens of the eye. See under suspensory.

zonulet (zō′nū-let), n. [< zonule + -et.] A little zone or girdle.

That rimed 'bout my Julia's waste,
… that zonulet of love.
Herrick, Upon Julia's Riband.

zonure (zō′nūr), n. [< NL. Zonurus.] Any lizard of the genus Zonurus in a broad sense, or of the family Zonuridæ: as, the rough-tailed zonure, Zonurus cordylus.

Zonuridæ (zō-nū′ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zonurus + -idæ.] A South African and Madagascar family of agamoid cyclosaurate lacertilians, with …, short, simple tongue, … supratemporal fossæ, typified by the genus Zonurus. The family was formerly much more widely characterized, and then contained various … now … as types of other families.

Zonurus (zō-nū′rus), n. pl. [NL., < Zonurus + -us.] A subfamily of Zonuridæ, containing … lacertiform species with well-developed …, and including the greater part of the family; distinguished from Chamæsaurus.

Zonurus (zō-nū′rus), n. [NL. (Merrem), < Gr. ζώνη, girdle, + οὐρά, tail.] The typical genus of Zonuridæ: so named from the rings of spiny scales on the tail, as of Z. giganteus.

Zonure (Zonurus giganteus).

Zoo (zō), n. [The first three letters of zoölogical, taken as forming one syllable.] With the definite article, the Zoölogical Gardens in London: also used of any similar collection of animals. [From a mere vulgarism, this corruption has passed into wide colloquial use.]

zoöamylin (zō-ō-am′i-lin), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. amylin.] Same as glycogen.

zoöbiotism (zō-ō-bī′ō-tizm), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + βίος, life, + -i- + -ism.] Same as biotaxy.

zoöblast (zō′ō-blast), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + βλαστός, germ.] An animal cell; a bioplast (which see).

Zoöcapsa (zō-ō-kap′sä), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + L. capsa, box, chest: see capsule.] A genus of fossil barnacles of the Liassic period, representing the oldest known form of Balanidæ.

zoöcarp (zō′ō-kärp), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + καρπός, fruit.] Same as zoöspore.

zoöcaulon (zō-ō-kâ′lon), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + καυλός, stem, stalk: see caul³, caulis.] The erect branching tentaculiferous colony-stock of some infusorians, as of the genus Dendrosoma. W. S. Kent.

zoöchemical (zō-ō-kem′i-kal), a. [< zoöchem-y + -ic-al.] Of or pertaining to zoöchemistry.

zoöchemistry (zō-ō-kem′is-tri), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. chemistry.] Animal chemistry; the chemistry of the constituents of the animal body.

zoöchemy (zō′ō-kem-i), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. *chemy (F. chimie): see alchemy.] Same as zoöchemistry. Dunglison.

zoöchlorella (zō′ō-klo-rel′ä), n.; pl. zoöchlorellæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + χλωρός, pale green, + dim. -ella.] One of the green pigmentary particles, or minute corpuscles of green coloring matter, which are found in various low invertebrates, as the hydras among polyps and the stentors among infusorians. Compare zoöxanthella.

zoöcyst (zō′ō-sist), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + κύστις, bladder.] A cyst, formed by various protozoans and protophytes, whose contents break up into many germinal granules or spores; a kind of sporocyst.

zoöcystic (zō-ō-sis′tik), a. [< zoöcyst + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a zoöcyst.

zoöcytial (zō-ō-sit′i-al), a. [< zoöcytium + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a zoöcytium.

zoöcytium (zō-ō-sit′i-um), n.; pl. zoöcytia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + κύτος, cavity.] The common gelatinous matrix or support of certain compound or colonial infusorians, composed of a substance secreted by and containing the individual animalcules: an infusorial syncytium; a zoöthecium. Compare zoödendrium. See cut under Epistylis.

zoödendrial (zō-ō-den′dri-al), a. [< zoödendri-um + -al.] Of the nature of or pertaining to a zoödendrium.

zoödendrium (zō′ō-den′dri-um), n.; pl. zoödendria (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + δένδρον, tree.] The zoöcytium or zoöthecium of certain infusorians, which is much branched or of arborescent form. W. S. Kent. See cut under Epistylis.

zoödynamic (zō′ō-di-nam′ik), a. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + δυναμικός, dynamic: see dynamic.] Of or pertaining to zoödynamics.

zoödynamics (zō′ō-di-nam′iks), n. [Pl. of zoödynamic (see -ics).] The dynamics of the animal body; the science of the vital powers of animals; animal physiology, as a branch of biology: correlated with zoöphysics.

zoöea, zoömal, n. See zoëa, zoëal.

zoöecial (zō-ē′shi-al), a. [< zoöecium + -al.] Having the character of a zoöecium; of or pertaining to the zoöecia of polyzoans.

zoöecium (zō-ē′si-um), n.; pl. zoöecia (-ä). [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + οἶκος, house.] The cell-cyst, or outer chitinous or calcified cell, in which a polypide of the Polyzoa is lodged, and into which a polypide can be retracted after protrusion; one of the cells of the connœcium, containing a polypide. It is the cuticle of the polypide itself, dense and tough, or hard, changing without isolation of continuity into the soft delicate pellicle at the mouth of the animalcule. In the cœlomyarious polyzoans it forms a case or shield into which the soft protrusible parts of the polypide can be withdrawn. See cellaria, and cut under Hyalinella.

zoöform, a. See zoëform.

zoöerythrin (zō′ō-e-rith′rin), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ἐρυθρός, red, + -in².] 1. A red coloring matter obtained from the plumage of the Musophagidæ or turakoos, giving a continuous spectrum. See turacin.—2. A kind of red pigment of the lipochrome series widely diffused in sponges, and regarded as having a respiratory function. W. J. Sollas, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 426.

Also zoöerythrin.

zoöfulvin (zō-ō-ful′vin), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + L. fulvus, tawny, + -in².] A yellow coloring matter obtained from the plumage of the Musophagidæ or turakoos, showing two absorptive bands not the same as those of turacin.

zoögamete (zō′ō-ga-mēt), n. [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + γαμετή, a wife, etc.] In bot., a motile gamete. Also planogamete.

zoögamous (zō-og′a-mus), a. [< zoögam-y + -ous.] Of or pertaining to zoögamy; noting the pairing of animals or their sexual reproduction.

zoögamy (zō-og′a-mi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + γάμος, marriage.] The coupling, mating, or pairing of animals of opposite sexes for the purpose of reproduction or propagation of their kind; sexual reproduction; gamogenesis.

zoögen (zō′ō-jen), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -γενής, producing: see -gen.] A glairy organic substance found on the surface of the thermal waters of Baden and elsewhere. Also called zoödin.

zoögenic (zō-ō-jen′ik), a. [< zoögen + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoögeny, or the origination of animals.

zoögeny (zō-og′e-ni), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -γενία, production: see -geny.] The fact or the doctrine of the origination of living beings and the formation of their parts or organs. Also zoögony.

zoögeog. An abbreviation, used in this work, of zoögeography.

zoögeographer (zō′ō-jē-og′ra-fėr), n. [< zoögeography + -er¹.] One who studies the geographical distribution of animals, or is versed in zoögeography.

It is therefore . . . the business of the zoögeographer, who wishes to arrive at the truth, to ascertain what groups of animals are wanting in any particular locality.
Encyc. Brit., III. 738.

zoögeographic (zō-ō-jē-ō-graf′ik), a. [< zoögeograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoögeography; faunistic; chorological.

zoögeographical (zō-ō-jē-ō-graf′i-kal), a. [< zoögeographic + -al.] Same as zoögeographic.

zoögeography (zō′ō-jē-og′ra-fi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. geography.] The science or the description of the distribution of animals on the surface of the globe; faunal or faunistic zoölogy; animal chorology: correlated with phytogeography. This is an important branch of zoölogy, of much intrinsic interest in several respects, and of special significance in its bearing upon the questions of the origin of species and their modification under climatic and other physical conditions of environment. It has been much studied of late years with the result of mapping the land-surface of the globe into several major and numerous minor areas, which can be bounded and graphically represented in colors with almost the precision attained in depicting civil or political boundaries. Zoögeography is related to paleontology as the distribution of animals in space is related to their succession in time; but the principles of zoögeography are of course as applicable to any former as to the present dispersion of species on the face of the globe. See province, 6, and region, 7.

zoöglœa (zō-ō-glē′ä), n.; pl. zoöglœæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + γλοιός, a sticky substance.] 1. A peculiar colony of Schizomycetes in which they form a jelly-like mass by the swelling up of their cell-membranes. It was formerly regarded as a distinct genus, but is now known to be a kind of resting-stage in which the various elements are glued together by their greatly swollen and diffluent cell-walls becoming contiguous. It corresponds to the palmella stage of certain of the lower algæ.

Bacteria sometimes form a jelly-like mass by the swelling up of their cell-membranes, this is the zoöglœa stage.
Bessey, Botany, p. 212.

2. A massing together of micro-organisms which occurs in a certain stage of their development, the collection being surrounded by a gelatinoid envelop.

Liquids in which any of these Schizomycetes are actively developing themselves usually bear on their surface a gelatinous scum, which is termed by Prof. Cohn the Zoöglœa.
W. B. Carpenter, Microsc., § 363.

zoöglœic (zō-ō-glē'ik), a. [< zoöglœa + -ic.] Of the nature of zoöglœa; pertaining to zoöglœa.

zoöglœoid (zō-ō-glē'oid), a. [< zoöglœa + -oid.] In bot., resembling, characteristic of, or belonging to the zoöglœa stage or condition of a micro-organism.

zoögonidium (zō'ō-gō-nid'i-um), n.; pl. zoögonidia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + NL. gonidium.] In bot., a locomotive gonidium; a gonidium provided with cilia, and hence capable of locomotion.

Each zoögonidium breaks itself up into sixteen new zoögonidia, forming sixteen small and new colonies.
Bessey, Botany, p. 221.

zoögonous (zō-og'ō-nus), a. [< Gr. ζωογόνος, producing animals < ζῷον, animal, + -γονος, producing: see -gonous.] Same as viviparous.

zoögony (zō-og'ō-ni), n. [< Gr. ζωογονία, production of animals, < ζῷον, animal, + γονία, production: see -gony.] Same as zoögeny.

zoögraft (zō'ō-graft), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. graft.] In surg., a piece of living tissue taken from one of the lower animals to supply a defect in the human body by grafting it on the latter. Also epiplastic graft.

zoögrapher (zō-og'ra-fėr), n. [< zoögraph-y + -er.] A zoögraphist.

zoögraphic (zō-ō-graf'ik), a. [< zoögraph-y + -ic.] Descriptive of animals; pertaining to zoölgraphy.

zoögraphical (zō-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [< zoographic + -al.] Same as zoographic.

zoögraphist (zō-og'ra-fist), n. [< zoograph-y + -ist.] One who describes or depicts animals; a descriptive zoölogist.

zoögraphy (zō-og'ra-fi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The description of or a treatise on animals; descriptive zoölogy.

zoögyroscope (zō-ō-jī'rō-skōp), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. gyroscope.] An application of the principle of the zoötrope in which a series of pictures are placed in a rotating frame, and, as they pass between a lantern and a lens, are thrown in extremely rapid succession on a screen, so as to form a continuous but constantly changing picture. This device is used in the exhibition of continuous series of instantaneous pictures of animals in motion, etc. E. H. Knight zoöid (zō'oid), a. and n. [< Gr. ζωοειδής, like an animal, < ζῷον, animal, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Like an animal; of the nature of animals; having an animal character, form, aspect, or mode of existence, as an organism endowed with life and motion. See II.

II. n. In biol., something like an animal; that which is of the nature of an animal, yet is not an animal in an ordinary sense, and is not the whole of an animal in a strict sense; one of the "persons" or recognizably distinct entities which compose a zoön; that product of any organism, whether of animal, vegetable, or equivocal character, which is capable of spontaneous movements, and hence may have an existence more or less apart from or independent of the parent organism. The biological conception of a zooid is a fundamental one, bordering upon an almost metaphysical definition of what may constitute or individual identity or non-identity in a given case. The term covers a multitude of cases which seem at first sight to have little in common and its use in ordinary zoology and botany is consequently various. The general sense of the word is subject to the following specifications: (a) An ambiguous or equivocal organic body intermediate between a plant and an animal, and not distinctly either one or the other; a micro-organism or microbe not amenable to ordinary classification in natural history, as bacterium, bacillus, and micrococcus, a protistan, as a moner, one of the lowest protozoans, a protophyte. Such zooids are microscopic, and for the most part of extreme minuteness. See the distinctive names and Monera, Protista, Protozoa, Protophyta, Protozoa. (b) One of certain peculiar cells of multicellular animals and plants which are endowed with special activities have as it were an individuality of their own and are capable of a sort of separate existence. Zooids of this class are mainly germinal or reproductive. The female germ (ovum) and the corresponding male element are respectively types of the whole. They occur under many modifications, which receive distinctive names, many of the smallest and simplest forms are indifferently known as spores. See spore, spore formation, sporozoa, zoöspore, gonozooid, antherozoid, spermatozoid, and spermatozoön, with various cats. The foregoing definitions are independent of any distinction to be drawn between plants and animals; the following are zoölogical. (c) Any animal organism which has acquired separate existence from another by partition of that other into two or more in the processes of fission, gemmation, and the like. Such cases are numerous and diverse. Viewing the zoön or zoölogical unit as the entire product of an impregnated ovum, the parts or persons into which it may be subsequently separated, without any true sexual generation, and consequently without the origination of a new zoön, are appropriately termed zooids. The simplest case is when a zoön breaks into two or more pieces, and every piece proceeds to grow the part which it lacks, and thus becomes wholly like the organism from which it was detached. Various annelids offer a case in point. Another and large class of cases is furnished by hydrozoans which suffer segmentation directly, or detach from their main stock various parts, as free medusoids and the like, these zooids serving to found new organisms. Allman defines the zooid of a hydrozoan as a more or less independent product of non-sexual reproduction. Proliferation or strobilation of parts which may become detached is also well illustrated in the proglottides or dentoscolices which form the joints of tapeworms, these are zooids in so far as the parent worm is concerned, consisting of detachable genitals containing the elements of a new sexual generation. A similar multiplication by zooids without generation takes place among tunicates; it is unknown of true vertebrates. One of the most interesting cases is afforded in the parthenogenesis of some insects, as aphids in which, by a sort of internal gemmation, swarms of zooidal aphids are budded in succession from one another to several removes from the original impregnation. The term zooid with some writers specifies all these "inferior individuals" which thus intervene in alternation of generation between the products of proper sexual reproduction; and such have been described as "the detached portions of an individual in discontinuous development." (d) Any one of the recognizably distinct persons of a compound organism, whether actually detached or detachable or not; any member of a colonial or social aggregate, as the polypites of a polypidom, the polypides of a polyzoary, and the like. Such zooids offer every degree of separateness or separability. In some cases they are extremely numerous, all alike, and inseparable from the common stock which they fabricate and inhabit, as the members of a coral or seamat. In other cases they are less numerous, and but slightly connected and all alike, as the several members of a compositæ sea-anemone of the genus Zoanthus (see cut there). But the zooids of many hydrozoans, for instance, are quite different in both form and function, in the same individual, for the purpose of division of labor; and the zooids which thus act as the different organs of one individual are commonly distinguished by name, as gonozooids, quatorozooids, dactylozooids, spirozooids etc. See the distinctive names. Also zoonite (a mistaken use).

zoöidal (zō-ō-ī'dal), a. [< zooid + -al.] Same as zooid.

zooks (zūks), interj. A minced oath; same as gadzooks. [Obsolete or (rarely) archaic.]

Zooks! see how brave they march Sheridan (?), The Camp, i. 2.

Zooks! are we pilchards, that they sweep the streets,
And count fair prize what comes into their nets?
Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi.

zoöl. An abbreviation of zoology.

zoölater (zō-ol'a-tėr), n. [< zoölatry, after idolater.] One who worships animals or practises zoölatry.

zoölatria (zō-ō-lā'tri-ä), n. [NL.] Same as zoölatry.

The system of zoölatria, or animal worship, was said to have been introduced into Egypt by King Kekau of the IInd dynasty.
W. R. Cooper, Archaic Dict., p. 57.

zoölatrous (zō-ol'a-trus), a. [< zoölatr-y + -ous.] Worshiping animals; practising zoölatry; of or relating to zoölatry.

zoölatry (zō-ol'a-tri), n. [< NL. zoölatria, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + λατρεία, worship.] The worship of particular animals, as in the religion of the ancient Egyptians and of many other primitive peoples, either as representatives of deities, or on account of some fancied qualities or relations.

zoölite (zō'ō-lit), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + λίθος, stone (see -lite).] A fossil animal; an animal substance petrified. Also zoolith.

zoölith (zō'ō-lith), n. Same as zoölite.

zoölithic (zō-ō-lith'ik), a. [< zoölith + -ic.] Same as zoölitic.

zoölitic (zō-ō-lit'ik), a. [< zoölite + -ic.] Having the character of a zoölite; relating to zoölites. Also zoölithic.

zoöloger (zō-ol'ō-jėr), n. [< zoölogy + -er.] A zoölogist. [Now rare.]

zoölogic (zō-ō-loj'ik), a. [< zoölogy + -ic.] Same as zoological.

zoölogical (zō-ō-loj'i-kal), a. [< zoölogic + -al.] Of or pertaining to zoölogy.—Zoölogical garden, a park or other large inclosure in which live animals are kept for public exhibition.—Zoölogical province, region, etc., in zoögy, one of the faunal areas, varying in extent, into which the land surface of the globe is naturally divisible with reference to the geographical distribution of animals. (See province, 6, region, 7, and zoögeography.) Corresponding divisions of the waters of the globe may take the same name when their surface-extent is considered, or are distinctively named (see Arctalia, etc.). Zoölogical areas regarded vertically, or as to depth of water, are often called zones or belts. See zone, n., 4.

zoölogically (zō-ō-loj'i-kal-i), adv. In the manner of a zoölogist; on the principles of zoölogy; from the standpoint of the doctrines of zoölogy: as, a thing zoölogically considered.

zoölogist (zō-ol'ō-jist), n. [< zoölogy + -ist.] One who is versed in zoölogy; a biologist.

zoölogize (zō-ol'ō-jīz), v. i. To study zoölogy practically.

zoölogy (zō-ol'ō-ji), n. [= F. zoologie = Sp. zoología = Pg. It. zoologia = G. zoologie, < NL. zoologia, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] 1. The science of animals; the natural history of the animal kingdom; the body of fact and doctrine derived from the scientific study of that series of organisms whose highest term is man: correlated with physiology (or botany) as one of the two main branches of biology. The connotation which the term has acquired during the last fifty years is very extensive, as a result of the application to zoölogical science of the most general laws and principles of biology. So far is zoölogy freed from the former restriction of its scope to the mere formalities of description, classification, and nomenclature (which constitute only systematic zoology) that it now includes the results of all the biological sciences in so far as these are applicable to the study of animal structure and function. Such are phylogeny, or the origination of species, genera, etc.; ontogeny, or the origination of the individual animal; embryology, or the prenatal life-history of organisms; paleontology or palæozoology, the history of animals in geologic time; zoögeography, the history of animals as to their spatial relations; anatomy or morphics, the comparative anatomy of animals; zoödynamics or biodynamics, animal physiology; zoöchemistry, the chemistry of animal substances and tissues; zoöpsychology, the science of animal instincts; zoötechnics, bionomics, or threnmatology, which regards the relations of living animals to man, and various other cognate branches of the general science. The name zoology is an old one, and some of its branches have been cultivated from antiquity. One of the earliest classifications of animals in which a modern zoölogical group can be clearly recognized is that ascribed to Moses, which was based primarily upon certain hygienic and sacerdotal considerations: for the "clean" beasts that "cleave the hoof" are ruminants; certain "unclean" birds are carrion-feeding birds of prey, as the vulture; and the non-ruminant artiodactyla (swine) are characterized with special emphasis. The germ of modern zoology as of other sciences, is commonly ascribed to Aristotle. Though he tabulated no scheme, his three treatises on zoölogical subjects include a classification which shows great discernment. He divided the animal kingdom into two main branches: (1) Ἔναιμα, Enaima, or 'blooded' animals, in the four classes of mammals, birds, reptiles, and fishes — the Vertebrata, and nearly as they stand to-day; (2) Ἄναιμα, Anaima, or 'bloodless' animals, exactly the Invertebrata, of which he had four classes, his Μαλάκια being cephalopods; Μαλακόστρακα, crustaceans; Ἔντομα, insects (other arthropods than crustaceans); and Ὀστρακόδερμα, univalve and bivalve mollusks (together with sea-urchins). Pliny the naturalist was an industrious and indiscriminate compiler, and no name of special note in zoology appears again until the middle of the sixteenth century, when the almost simultaneous works of three authors securely founded the science and greatly enlarged its scope. Wotton (1552) followed Aristotle, but added to the system the Zoophyta (which long afterward became the Vermes of Linnæus and the Radiata of Cuvier, and continue to be the "zoophytes" of the present day); Gesner and Belon published treatises in 1555; and in 1560 was started at Naples a society which had zoology among its objects, the Academia Secretorum Naturæ, suppressed by the church. The period between Gesner and Linnæus is sometimes styled the "heroic age" of zoology. The advance upon Gesner was comparatively unmarked for a hundred years from his death in 1565; but the latter half of the seventeenth century witnessed great progress. The collection of animals from distant parts of the world increased, such anatomical examinations as had been practicable and had long been practised without the aid of the microscope were carried on with that instrument; and several still-existing societies were founded — the Academia Naturæ Curiosorum (in 1651), the Royal Society chartered in 1662), and soon afterward the Paris Academy, under Louis XIV. The immediate predecessor of Linnæus in this period was John Ray (1628–1705), who used the word species in the sense it was to bear from his day to Darwin, and did more than any other person to make the "Systema Naturæ" of the Swedish naturalist possible. This work passed through twelve editions (1735–68) in the lifetime of its author; the present binomial system of nomenclature was first applied consistently to zoology in the tenth edition (1758). Linnæus also gave fixity to certain graded groups above the species — namely, the genus, order, and class of the "Regnum Animale" — and he recognized the variety below the species. The system in 1766 was six: Mammalia, with 7 orders; Aves, 6 orders; Amphibia, 3 orders; Pisces, 4 orders; Insecta, 7 orders; Vermes, 6 orders. The Linnæan diagnoses were always terse and sometimes, if not always correct; and, finally, as many of them may now appear to be, the practical improvement of this machinery of classification and nomenclature is inestimable. Though the notion of the fixity of species and other groups as special creations, to which the system gave rise, is now known to be radically fallacious, the Linnæan classification acquired almost the character of dogma, such as had many centuries before attached to the system of Aristotle and to the Mosaic traditions. This system may be said to have culminated with the close of the eighteenth century, and the early years of the nineteenth saw important changes, both in form and substance, effected at the hands of Lamarck and Cuvier, the latter of whom was the pivot upon which zoology turned from the Linnæan to the Darwin. His "Zoological Philosophy," published [illegible] a half-century to a year from the publication of the "Systema Naturæ" of 1758, and by exactly a half-century from the publication of "Species" which was first published [illegible] Lamarckianism brought [illegible]

...ecessary to detail, suffice, and the curious ... by Haeckel, Huxley, or Cayley, as opposed to their ... recognized that two Aristotelian ... Vertebrata and Invertebrata, the ... 8, the latter with 22 classes, and both with ... and lower groups. Cuvier was profoundly ... in comparative anatomy, gave also special prominence ... to paleontology, and reached the conclusion (1812) ... that animals are modeled upon four types, for which ... he adopted the names Vertebrata, with 4 classes; Mollusca, 5 classes; Articulata, 4 classes; Radiata, 3 classes ... with more or fewer orders. Except the first of ... these (borrowed from Lamarck and so from Aristotle), ... the "types" are found to hold; and few of the ... classes or orders are now accepted as framed by Cuvier, ... though views and methods in the main were upheld in ... England by Owen. Cuvier's system was completed in ... 1830. Among the last notable views of classification before the appearance of Darwinism are those of Leuckart (1847, giving 4 types and 11 classes of invertebrates (without the protozoans); of H. Milne-Edwards (1855); and of L. Agassiz (1857). The period between Lamarck and Darwin was one of extraordinary activity in all branches of zoological investigation, involving the accumulation of a wealth of material, the description of thousands of new genera and species, and the multiplication of distinctions founded upon little difference; but philosophical generalization did not keep pace with the elaboration of systematic details. Zoological systems in various departments became almost as numerous as the specialists engaged, and the subject acquired a huge literature, descriptive, iconographic, and classificatory, as well as controversial. This aspect of zoology has continued during the past thirty years or so (1860–90); but the real history of the zoology of this period is the history of Darwinian evolution, or the application of general principles of individual development (ontogeny) to the solution of broader biological problems (phylogeny)—the development of the theory of evolution being itself an illustration of its own underlying principle.

3. Zoögraphy; the written description of animals; a treatise on animals, especially a systematic treatise, or zoölogical system. Several of the main classificatory divisions of the animal kingdom represent formally named departments of systematic zoology. Such are mammalogy or mastology or theriology, the formal science of mammals; ornithology, of birds; herpetology, of reptiles, including amphibians; ichthyology, of fishes in their several classes; conchology or malacology, of mollusks; carcinology or crustaceology, of crustaceans; entomology, of insects (more extensive than all the others combined); helminthology, of worms; and zoöphytology, of zoöphytes. From some of these again subdivisions are formed, in consequence either of the intrinsic importance of certain of their subjects or of the special activity of investigation of these subjects: as for example, anthropology (including ethnography and ethnology), or the particular study of man from a biological standpoint; cetology, the study of whales as differing much from ordinary mammals; selachology, of one of the classes of fishes; ascidiology, of the connecting links between invertebrates and ordinary vertebrates; and especially of bacteriology, the lately created science of microbes or micro-organisms, which probably of all the departments of zoology has the most direct and important bearing upon human welfare and happiness.

Zooloo, n. and a. See Zulu.

zoömagnetic (zō″ō-mag-net′ik), a. [< zoömagnet(ism) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoömagnetism.

zoömagnetism (zō-ō-mag′ne-tizm), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. magnetism.] Animal magnetism.

Turning to the other subjects of which Dr. Liébeault treats in his Thérapeutique Suggestive, Paris, 1891, the most remarkable, and almost the most puzzling, chapter is on zoömagnetism.

Proc. Soc. Psychical Research (London), July, 1891, p. 20.

zoömancy (zō′ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + μαντεία, divination.] The pretended art of divination from observation of animals, or of their actions under given circumstances.

zoömantic (zō-ō-man′tik), a. [< zoömancy (-mant-) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoömancy.

zoömechanics (zō″ō-mē-kan′iks), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. mechanics.] Same as zoödynamics.

zoömelanin (zō-ō-mel′a-nin), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + μέλας (μελαν-), black, + *-in*².] A black pigment derived from the feathers of some birds.

zoömetric (zō-ō-met′rik), a. [< zoömetr-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoömetry.

zoömetry (zō-om′e-tri), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + μέτρον, < μέτρειν, measure.] Measurement of the proportionate lengths or sizes of the parts of animals; correlated with anthropometry.

zoömorphic (zō-ō-môr′fik), a. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + μορφή, form.] 1. Representative of animals, or of their characteristic forms, as a mark of art; of or pertaining to zoömorphism; correlated with anthropomorphic.—2. Especially, representing or symbolizing the conception of a god under the form of an animal whose characteristic traits or habits suggest the ideas attached to the god. The most ... adjective was probably that of the ... Egyptians, resulting in a complex system of ... which elements of various were appropriated and ... by the Greeks and Romans.

Ogham, as is well known, occurs on some of the crosses bearing the interlaced ornamentation and zoömorphic designs found on the Manx crosses.

N. and Q., 7th ser., II. 240.

Under Dynasty XII. the gods that had previously been represented in art as beasts appear in their later shapes, often half anthropomorphic half zoömorphic, dog-headed, cat-headed, hawk-headed, bull-headed men and women.

Nineteenth Century, XX. 423.

zoömorphism (zō-ō-môr′fizm), n. [< zoömorph-ic + -ism.] 1. The character of being zoömorphic; zoömorphic state or condition; representation or exhibition of animal forms as distinguished from the human form; especially, the characterization or symbolization of a god in animal form. Compare anthropomorphism.—2. The conception or representation of men or supernal beings under the form of animals, or of men or gods transformed into beasts; the attribution of human or divine qualities to beings of animal form; worship of the images of animals; zoötheism.

Zoömorphism is much more absurd than Anthropomorphism after all. Surely the rational mode is to employ the highest conceptions you can, while freely acknowledging their utter inadequacy.

Minot, Nature and Thought, p. 220.

zoömorphy (zō′ō-môr-fi), n. [< zoömorph-ic + *-y*².] Same as zoömorphism.

zoön (zō′on), n.; pl. zoa (-ȧ). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, an animal; cf. ζωή, life; < ζάειν, ζῆν, Ionic ζώειν, live.] An animal form containing all the elements of a typical organism of the group to which it belongs; a morphological individual regarded as the whole product of an impregnated ovum, which may or may not be divided into persons or zoöids without true generation. See zoöid.

It is urged that whether the development of the fertilized germ be continuous or discontinuous is a matter of secondary importance; that the totality of living tissue to which the fertilized germ gives rise in any one case is the equivalent of the totality to which it gives rise in any other case, and that we must recognize this equivalence, whether such totality of living tissue takes a concrete or a discrete arrangement. In pursuance of this view a zoölogical individual is constituted either by any such single animal as a mammal or bird, which may properly claim the title of a zoön, or by any such group of animals as the numerous Medusæ that have been developed from the same egg, which are to be severally distinguished as zoöids.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 75.

Zoa impersonalia, organisms resulting from the coalescence or concrescence of persons, as of many sponges, which thus lose their "personality."

The remarkable cases [among sponges] of zoa impersonalia, or what we should call degraded colonies.

A. Hyatt, Proc. Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist. 1884, p. 93.

zoönal (zō′ō-nal), a. [Irreg. < zoön + -al.] Having the character of a zoön, or of pertaining to zoa.

zoönerythrin (zō″on-e-rith′rin), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ἐρυθρός, red, + *-in*².] Same as zoöerythrin. Also zoömerythrine.

zoönic (zō-on′ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -ic.] Relating to animals; obtained or derived from animal substances: as, zoönic acid.

Zoönic acid, a name given by Berthollet to acetic acid in combination with animal matter, obtained by distilling animal matter.

zoönite (zō′ō-nit), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + *-ite*².] 1. One of the rings, segments, or somites of which the body of a worm, crustacean, insect, vertebrate, or other segmented or articulated animal is composed; a zonule; a metamere or an arthromere of an articulated invertebrate; a diarthromere of a vertebrate: used generically of any segment, to which special names are given in special cases.—2. Same as zoöid: a mistaken use of the word. Eng. Cyclop. (Zool.), IV. 561. (Encyc. Dict.) zoönitic (zō-ō-nit′ik), a. [< zoönite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a zoönite; somitic.

zoönomia (zō-ō-nō′mi-ȧ), n. [NL. (the title of a celebrated treatise by Dr. Erasmus Darwin); see -nomy.] Same as zoönomy.

zoönomic (zō-ō-nom′ik), a. [< zoönom-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zoönomy.

zoönomist (zō-on′ō-mist), n. [< zoönom-y + -ist.] One who is versed in zoönomy; a biologist, in a broad sense.

zoönomy (zō-on′ō-mi), n. [< NL. zoönomia, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + νόμος, law.] The laws of animal life collectively considered: the science which treats of the causes and relations of the phenomena of living animals; the vital economy of animals: animal physiology.

zoönosis (zō-on′ō-sis), n.; pl. zoönoses (-sēz). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + νόσος, disease.] A disease communicated to man from the lower animals. Hydrophobia and glanders are examples of zoönoses.

zoönosology (zō″ō-nō-sol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. nosology.] The classification of diseases affecting the lower animals; a system of zoöpathology; zoöpathy.

zoöparasite (zō-ō-par′a-sit), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + παράσιτος, parasite.] A parasitic animal.

zoöpathology (zō″ō-pa-thol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. pathology.] The study of disease in animals; veterinary pathology.

zoöpathy (zō-op′a-thi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + πάθος, suffering.] Animal pathology; the science of the diseases of animals, excepting man. See zoötherapy.

Zoöphaga (zō-of′a-gȧ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of zoöphagus: see zoöphagous.] 1. [l. c.] Flesh-eating or carnivorous animals collectively considered: a term of no exact classificatory meaning.—2. The carnivorous and insectivorous marsupials, as collectively distinguished from the herbivorous marsupials, or Rhizophaga. The opossum is an example.—3†. A division of gastropods including carnivorous forms. Lamarck, 1822.

zoöphagan (zō-of′a-gan), n. A carnivorous animal; a sarcophagan; especially, a member of the Zoöphaga, 2.

zoöphagous (zō-of′a-gus), a. [< NL. zoöphagus, Gr. ζωοφάγος, living on animal food, < ζῷον, animal, + φαγεῖν, eat.] Devouring animals; sarcophagous; carnivorous: opposed to phytophagous. Specifically applied by Blyth, in editing Cuvier, to one of two primary types of placental Mammalia, including man, Quadrumana, Carnivora, and Cetacea; the last constituting the order Isodontia, the first three the order Typodontia.

zoöphilist (zō-of′i-list), n. [< zoöphil-y + -ist.] A lover of animals or living creatures; one whose sympathy embraces all living creation.

Our philosopher and zoophilist . . . advised those who consulted him as to the best manner of taking and destroying rats. Southey, The Doctor, cccxviii. (Davies.)

The zoophilists vowed their determination to force through Parliament a prohibitory act.

N. A. Rev., CXL. 207.

zoöphily (zō-of′i-li), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -φιλία, love, < φίλειν, love.] A love of animals, a sympathy or tender care for living creatures which prevents all unnecessary acts of cruelty or destruction. Cornhill Mag.

zoöphoric (zō-ō-for′ik), a. [< zoöphor-us + -ic.] Bearing a living being, or a figure or figures of one or more men or animals: as, a zoöphoric column.

zoöphorus (zō-of′ō-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ζωοφόρος, a frieze bearing the figures of living beings, < ζῷον, animal, + -φορος, < φέρειν = E. *bear*¹.] In anc. arch., a continuous frieze, unbroken by triglyphs, carved in relief with figures of men and animals, as the Panathenaic frieze of the Parthenon, or the frieze of Phigaleia. Also zophorus. See cuts under Doric and Hellenic.

zoöphysics (zō-ō-fiz′iks), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + φυσικά, physics.] The study of the physical structure of animals; comparative anatomy as a branch of zoölogy: correlated with zoödynamics, or animal physiology.

Zoö-Dynamics, Zoö-Physics, Zoö-Chemistry.—The pursuit of the learned physician . . . anatomy and physiology; exemplified by Harvey, Haller, Hunter, Johann Müller.

Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 668.

Zoöphyta (zō-of′i-tȧ), n. pl. [NL., pl. of zoöphyton, see zoophyte.] The alternative name of the Cuvierian Radiata; the Phytozoa; the animal-plants, or plant-like animals. In later systems, especially following the classification of Cuvier, the name has become hung for a large artificial and heterogeneous assemblage of the lower invertebrates, many of which, like the corallines, have a plant-like habit and branch from a fixed base. It thus covers, or has covered, all the true echinoderms (starfishes, sea-urchins, holothurians, and crinoids), the polyzoans, the sponges, some of the worms which used to be classed as radiates, and all the infusorians and other protozoans known, having thus no better standing than "the radiate mob" of Cuvier. Also Radiata, 1.; in some of its various restricted applications, however, it has excluded certain forms that obviously belonged elsewhere, and the tendency has been to adopt the name to the echinoderms, with or without the sponges. Quite recently the proposition has been made, and by some accepted, to use the name in this strict sense, and instead of Coelenterata or Coelenterata; in which case it would cover the Actinozoa, Hydrozoa, Ctenophora, and Spongiæ. The New Latin form of the term is attributed to Wotton (1527–1555), who in his "De Differentiis Animalium" (Paris, 1552) included under this name practically its present content, namely, holothurians, starfishes, jellyfishes, sea anemones, and sponges.

zoöphyte (zō′ō-fīt), n. [< NL. zoöphyton, < Gr. ζωόφυτον (Aristotle), lit. 'animal-plant,' < ζῷον, animal, + φυτόν, plant.] A member of the Zoöphyta, in any sense; a radiate; a phytozoon.

The term is a loose popular equivalent of the technical designation; but it is convenient, and may be employed for any of the Zoöphyta in a proper sense, as corals, sea-anemones, scalephs, and sponges. The chief objection to its use is its continued application to those polyzoans which are of coralline aspect, as these have no affinity with coelenterates. —Glass-rope zoöphytes, the glass-rope sponges, or Hyalonemidæ (which see).

zoöphyte-trough (zō′ō-fīt-trôf), n. A device for retaining living zoöphytes or infusoria which are to be examined under the microscope. It consists of a frame with two movable sides of glass, and a false bottom, also of glass, small enough to admit of the insertion of the sides between it and the frame. The upper edges of the sides are pressed together by a spring, and can be separated as desired by a wedge. E. H. Knight.

zoöphytic (zō-o-fit′ik), a. [< zoöphyte + -ic.] Of the nature of a zoöphyte; of or pertaining to zoöphytes; phytozoic.—Zoöphytic series, the series of animals composing the Zoöphyta as defined by Haeckel and Huxley beginning with the lowest sponges and ending with the highest coelenterates.

zoöphytical (zō-ō-fit′i-kal), a. [< zoophytic + -al.] Same as zoöphytic.

zoöphytoid (zō-of′i-toid), a. [< zoöphyte + -oid.] Resembling a zoöphyte; related to the zoöphytes.

zoöphytological (zō-ō-fi-tō-loj′i-kal), a. [< zoöphytology + -ical.] Pertaining to zoöphytology.

zoöphytologist (zō′ō-fi-tol′o-jist), n. [< zoöphytology + -ist.] One who is versed in the natural history of zoöphytes. E. F. Tomes, Geol. Mag. (1885), p. 549.

zoöphytology (zō″ō-fi-tol′o-ji), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, zoöphyte, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science or natural history of zoöphytes.

zoöphyton (zō-of′i-ton), n.; pl. zoöphyta (-tä). [NL.: see zoöphyte.] A zoöphyte.

zoöplastic (zō-o-plas′tik), a. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + πλάσσειν, form: see plastic.] In surg., noting a plastic operation by which living tissue is transplanted from one of the lower animals to man; of or pertaining to zoögrafts. Zoöplastic graft. Same as zoögraft.

zoöpraxinoscope (zō-ō-prak′si-nō-skōp), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. praxinoscope.] A philosophical toy, somewhat on the principle of the phenakistoscope, by which images of animals are made to execute natural movements upon a screen upon which they are thrown.

zoöpsychology (zō″ō-sī-kol′ō-ji), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. psychology.] The psychology of animals other than man; that body of fact or doctrine respecting the minds or mental activities of animals which may be derived from the study of their instincts, habits, etc.

zoöscopic (zō-o-skop′ik), a. [< zooscopy + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zooscopy.

This condition of zoöscopic hallucination is one of the commonest among the phenomena of alcohol poisoning. Science XV. 43.

zoöscopy (zō″ō-skō-pi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] A kind of hallucination in which imaginary animal forms are perceived.

zoösperm (zō′ō-spėrm), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + σπέρμα, seed.] 1. Same as zoöspermium.—2. In bot., same as zoospore.

zoöspermatic (zō″ō-o-spėr-mat′ik), a. [< zoösperm + -atic[2] (see spermatic).] Pertaining to, or of the nature of, a zoösperm; spermatozoic.

zoöspermium (zō″ō-spėr′mi-um), n.; pl. zoöspermia (-ä). [NL.: see zoösperm.] The sperm-cell, or male seed-cell; a spermatozoön. Also zoösperm.

zoösporange (zō″ō-spō-ranj), n. [< NL. zoosporangium.] Same as zoösporangium.

zoösporangial (zō″ō-spo-ran′ji-al), a. [< zoösporangium + -al.] Pertaining to a zoösporangium.

zoösporangium (zō″ō-spo-ran′ji-um), n.; pl. zoösporangia (-ä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + σπορά, seed, + ἀγγεῖον, vessel.] In bot., a sporangium or spore-case in which zoöspores or zoögametes are produced. See sporangium, and cuts under Fucaceæ and spermogonium.

There is then formed in each zoösporangium a number of zoöspores. Farlow, Marine Algæ, p. 14.

zoöspore (zō″ō-spōr), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + σπορά, seed: see spore.] 1. In bot., a spore capable of moving about; a motile spore, or a swarm-spore. Zoöspores are produced by many algæ, and occur also in some fungi (Peronosporæ Saprolegnieæ Myxomycetes, etc.); they are spores destitute for a time of any cell-wall, and motile by means of either cilia or pseudopodia. See spore[1], macrozoöspore, 2, and cut under Chytridiaceæ. Also zoösperm.

2. An animal spore; one of the minute flagelliform bodies which issue from the sporocyst of sporiparous animalcules; a swarm-spore. Cienkowski, 1865.

Also zoöcarp.

Zoösporeæ (zō-ō-spō′rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Thuret): see zoöspore.] A somewhat doubtful class or order of green or olive-green algæ in which reproduction is by means of zoöspores. Conjugation occurs between the zoöspores, but without clear distinction of male and female cells. The group includes the greater part of the Chlorospermeæ of Harvey. See Algæ, conjugation, 1.

zoösporic (zō-o-spor′ik), a. [< zoöspore + -ic.] Of the nature of a zoöspore; pertaining to zoöspores.

zoösporiferous (zō″ō-spō-rif′e-rus), a. [< zoöspore + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] In bot., bearing or producing zoöspores.

zoötaxy (zō″ō-tak-si), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + τάξις, arrangement.] The science of the classification of animals; systematic zoölogy. Compare phytotaxy.

zoötechnic (zō-ō-tek′nik), a. and n. [< zoötechny + -ic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to zoötechny.

II. n. Zoötechny.

zoötechnics (zō-ō-tek′niks), n. Same as zoötechny.

zoötechny (zō′ō-tek-ni), n. [< NL. zootechnia, < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + τέχνη, art.] Domestication of animals; the breeding and keeping of animals in domestication or captivity. See acclimatization.

zoötheca (zo-ō-thē′kä), n.; pl. zootheca (-sē). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + θήκη, case.] The case or sheath of a zoösperm; a cell containing a spermatozoöid.

zoöthecal (zo-ō-thē′kal), a. [< zoötheca + -al.] Of the nature of or forming a zoötheca.

zoöthecial (zo-ō-thē′shal), a. [< zootherium + -al.] Of or pertaining to a zoötheciura.

zoöthecium (zō-ō-thē′shium), n.; pl. zoötheca (-shiä). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + θήκιον, casket, dim. of θήκη, case, chest: see zoötheca.] A compound tubular investment or domiciliary sheath in which certain infusorians are incased. Compare zoœcytium, zooidostrium.

For these aggregations of ordinary simple lorica the distinctive title of zoötheca has been adopted. W. S. Kent, Manual of Infusoria, p. 61.

zoötheism (zo′ō-the-izm), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. theism[1].] The attribution of deity to an animal; the treatment of animals or animal forms as objects of worship. See zoölatry and zoömorphism, 2.

In the stage of barbarism all the phenomena of nature are attributed to the animals by which man is surrounded, or rather to the ancestral types of these animals, which are worshipped. This is the religion of zoötheism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVI. 68.

zoötheistic (zo′ō-the-is′tik), a. Of or pertaining to zoötheism; relating to the worship of animals; zoolatrous. See zoömorphic, 2.

The prophets tried to pull the Israelites too rapidly through the zootheistic and physitheistic stages into monotheism. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXVI. 208.

zoötherapy (zō-o-ther′a-pi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + E. therapy.] The treatment of disease in the lower animals; veterinary therapeutics.

Zoötoca[1] (zō-ō-tō′kä), n. [NL. (Wagler), < Gr. ζωός, viviparous, < ζῷον, animal, + τίκτειν, τεκεῖν, bring forth.] A genus of ovoviviparous lizards, of the family Lacertidæ, very near Lacerta proper. There are about 8 species, chiefly of southern Europe and of Africa, as the well-known Z. vivipara.

Zoötoca[2] (zō-ō-tō′kä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl.: see Zootocus.] Same as Vivipara. In its application to mammals, the term is traceable to Aristotle.

zoötocous (zō-ō-tō′kus), a. [< Gr. ζωός, viviparous, + -τοκος, < τίκτειν, bring forth.] Viviparous; pertaining to the Zoötocous.

zoötocus (zō-ō-tō′kus), n. [NL.: see Zootoca[2].] Same as Viviparous.

zoötocy (zō′ō-tō-si), n. [< Gr. ζωός, viviparous, + -τοκία, < τίκτειν, bring forth.] Viviparous generation; the production of young alive.

zoötomic (zō-ō-tom′ik), a. [< zootomy + -ic.] Same as zootomical.

The zoötomic and embryological works of the last ten years. Nature, XXVII. 70.

zoötomical (zō-ō-tom′i-kal), a. [< zoötomic + -al.] Of or pertaining to zoötomy.

zoötomically (zō-ō-tom′i-kal-i), adv. By means of or according to the principles of zoötomy.

Such being the position of apes as a whole, they are zoötomically divisible into a number of more and more subordinate groups. Encyc. Brit., II. 148.

zoötomist (zō-ot′ō-mist), n. [< zootomy + -ist.] One who dissects the bodies of animals; one who is versed in zoötomy; a comparative anatomist.

zoötomy (zō-ot′ō-mi), n. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμεῖν, cut.] The dissection of the anatomy of animals; specifically, the science, art, or practice of dissecting or anatomizing animals other than man: distinguished from human anatomy, androtomy, or anthropotomy; equivalent to comparative anatomy in a usual sense: correlated with phytotomy, or the dissection of plants. The zoötomy of living animals for other than surgical purposes is known as vivisection.

zoötrope (zō′ō-trōp), n. Same as zoëtrope.

An ingenious and effective application of the zoötrope for the illustration of the relation between certain isomeric forms. Sci. Amer. Supp., XXII., 9091.

zoötrophic (zō-ō-trof′ik), a. [< Gr. ζῷον, animal, + -τροφος, < τρέφειν, nourish.] Serving for the nourishment of animals; of or pertaining to animal alimentation.

zoöxanthella (zō″ō-zan-thel′ä), n.; pl. zoöxanthellæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. ζῷον, animal, + ξανθός, yellow, + -ella.] One of the yellow pigmentary particles, or minute corpuscles of yellow coloring matter, found in certain radiolarians.

zoozoo (zō′zō), n. [Imitative; cf. coo, cuvo.] The wood-pigeon. [Prov. Eng.]

zope (zōp), n. [G.] A certain fresh-water bream of Europe, Abramis ballerus.

Zopherus (zof′e-rus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1840), < Gr. ζοφερός, dusky, < ζόφος, darkness, gloom.] A genus of tenebrionid beetles, remarkable for their large size, bold sculpture, and special coloration, the elytra having shining callosities. About 15 species are known, all from South America, Mexico, and the southwestern United States.

zopilote (zo-pi-lo′te), n. [Also tzopilotl; < Mex. tzopilotl.] One of the smaller American vultures or Cathartidæ, as the turkey-buzzard or carrion-crow; a gallinazo; a urubu. See aura[2], and cuts under Cathartes and urubu.

zopissa (zo-pis′ä), n. [NL., < Gr. ζώπισσα, pitch and wax from old ships, < ζω- (?) + πίσσα, pitch: see pitch[2].] In med., a mixture of pitch and tar, impregnated with salt water, scraped from the sides of ships, formerly used in external applications as having resolutive and desiccative properties. Simmonds.

zoppo (tsop′po), a. [It.] In music, "limping," alternately with and without syncopation.—Alla zoppa, a duple or quadruple movement in which there is a syncopation in the midst of each measure, giving the metric figure ♩ 𝅗𝅥 ♩ | 𝅗𝅥 ♩ 𝅗𝅥 |.

zorgite (zôr′gīt), n. [< Zorge (see def.) + -ite[2].] A metallic mineral consisting of the selenides of lead and copper, found at Zorge, in the Harz mountains.

zorfil, zorille (zor′il), n. [< F. zorille (Buffon), < Sp. zorilla, zorillo (> NL. zorilla), dim. of zorra, zorro, a fox.] 1. An African animal of the genus Zorilla.—2. Some Central or South American skunk; one of the Mephitinæ, as the conepate; a zorrino. See cut under Conepatus.

Zorilla (zō-ril′ä), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray): see zoril.] 1. A genus of African skunk-like quadrupeds, representing the subfamily Zorillinæ. The common zoril, or mariput, is Z. striata (or Ictonyx zorilla), a nocturnal, burrowing, carnivorous animal, capable of emitting a very fetid odor, like a skunk. It is as large as a small house-cat, and is elegantly striped and spotted with black and white, thus closely resembling the small American skunk figured under Mephitis. This genus is also called Rhabdogale and Ictonyx. The species is quite recent; but zorilla as a specific name is more than a century old, having been [illegible] spalax species in which the African mole was confounded with some American animal: whence also the term zoned (which see).

Striped Zorilla (Zorilla striata).

2. [l. c.] A zorilla.

Zorillinæ (zor-i-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Zorilla + -inæ.] An African subfamily of Mustelidæ, represented by the genus Zorilla; the zorila, or skunk-like quadrupeds of Africa. They are closely related to the American skunks, or Mephitinæ. See cut under Zorilla.

zorilline (zor'i-lin), a. Resembling or related to the animals of the genus Zorilla; pertaining to the Zorillinæ.

Zoroaster (zō-rō-as'tėr), n. [NL. (Thomas, 1878), pun on Zoroastrian (see Zoroastrian), involving NL. aster, starfish.] In zool., a genus of starfishes, giving name to the Zoroasteridæ, and containing such species as Z. fulgens, of the North Atlantic.

Zoroasteridæ (zō'rō-as-ter'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zoroaster + -idæ.] A family of starfishes, typified by the genus Zoroaster. It contains forms with very small body, very long arms, and quadriseriate water-feet, attaining a diameter of 8 or 10 inches.

Zoroastrian (zō-rō-as'tri-an), a. and n. [< L. Zoroastres (> E. Zoroaster), the L. form of the Old Pers. name Zarathustra, + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Zoroaster, the founder of the Mazdayasnian or ancient Persian religion; relating to or connected with Zoroastrianism.

II. n. One of the followers of Zoroaster, now represented by the Guebers and Parsees of Persia and India; a fire-worshiper.

Zoroastrianism (zō-rō-as'tri-an-izm), n. [< Zoroastrian + -ism.] The system of religious doctrine taught by Zoroaster and his followers in the Avesta; the religion prevalent in Persia till its overthrow by the Mohammedans in the seventh century, and still held by the Guebers and Parsees, and commonly, though incorrectly, called fire-worship. The religion is dual, recognizing two creative powers—Ormuzd (Ahuramazda), the god of light and creator of all that is good, with six principal and innumerable inferior amshaspands, or ministers of good, and Ahriman (Angra mainyus), the god of darkness and creator of evil, with a corresponding number of devs, or ministers of evil. Zoroaster taught that Ormuzd created man with free will, that his state after death depends upon the preponderance of good or evil in his life, an intermediate state being provided for those in whom these principles are evenly balanced; and that Ormuzd will finally prevail over Ahriman in the constant war between them, and redeem him and his ministers, as well as man, from all evil.

Zoroastrism (zo-rō-as'trizm), n. [< L. Zoroastres, Zoroaster, + -ism.] Same as Zoroastrianism. [Rare.]

All these alleged facts conspire to prove that Zoroastrism and its Scriptures had their origin in eastern Iran before the rise of Median or Persian dominion.
Amer. Antiq., IX. 118.

sorra (sor'ä), n. [NL., < Sp. zorra, fem. of zorro, a fox.] A South American skunk: same as atol.

sorrino (zo-rē'nō), n. [Sp. Amer., dim. of Sp. zorro, fox.] A South American skunk. The skunks of the Neotropical region belong to the same subfamily (Mephitinæ) as the others of America, but are generically different, and like the conepate.

sorro (zor'ō), n. [Sp., a fox.] One of the South American fox-wolves, as Canis azaræ. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 353.

sorzico, n. [Basque.] A kind of song in quintuple or septuple rhythm common among the Basques.

Zosmerida (zos-mer'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Douglas and Scott, 1865), < Zosmerus + -idæ.] A family of heteropterous insects, of the superfamily Coreoidea, forming a transition between the Lygæidæ and the Tingitidæ, but by the structure of the abdomen more nearly related to the former than to the latter. It contains only the Old World genus Zosmerus.

Zosmerus (zos'mę-rus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833), irreg. < Gr. ζώνη, a girdle, < ζωννύναι, girdle.] A genus of Old World heteropterous insects, typical of the family Zosmeridæ.

zoster (zos'tėr), n. [< Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle, < ζωννύναι, girdle: see zone.] 1. In anc. Gr. costume, a belt or girdle, originally a warriors' belt round the loins, afterward any girdle or zone, but chiefly one of a kind worn by men.

The chiton . . . is girt round under the breast, to keep it from falling, by a girdle (zoster). Encyc. Brit., VI. 453.

2. Same as herpes zoster (which see, under herpes).

Zostera (zos-tē'rą), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1753), so called from the long tape-like leaves; < Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle: see zoster.] A genus of aquatic plants, of the order Naiadaceæ, type of the tribe Zosteræ, it is characterized by monœcious flowers and ovoid ovules. The 4 species are natives of marine waters of both the Old and the New World. They grow immersed in shallow bays and other waters, often forming large masses, growing from slender creeping rootstocks. The long narrowly linear two-ranked leaves are the place of attachment of great numbers of algæ, and the resting-places of many of the smaller forms of animal life. Z. marina is known in America as eel-grass and in England

1. Flowering Plant of Grass-wrack or Eel-grass (Zostera marina): a, the spadix; a', anther; b, pistil; c, fruit

as grass wrack, also as turtle-grass, sweet-grass, and bell weed; when dried, it is used, under the name of vliss or vlisse, or sea-hay, for stuffing mattresses and as bedding for horses. This, together with the related Cymodocea aequorea, constitutes the glacier's seaweed of England. Z. nana of Europe is known as dwarf grass-wrack.

Zosteræ (zos-tē'rē), n. pl. [NL. (Kunth, 1841), < Zostera + -æ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Naiadaceæ. It is characterized by unisexual flowers on a flattened spadix without a perianth, and with a subulate or capillary stigma. The 2 genera, Phyllospadix and Zostera (the type), are submerged grassy plants of sea water, the former including 2 species, both natives of the Pacific coast of the United States.

Zosterops (zos'tē-rops), n. [NL. (Vigors and Horsfield, 1826), < Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle, + ὤψ, eye.] 1. A very extensive genus of Melliphagidæ (also referred to the Dicæidæ), giving name to the subfamily Zosteropinæ, characterized among related genera by the absence of spurious character of the first primary, and named from the conspicuous orbital ring of most of its members. The genus is now held to cover a number of forms which have been made types of several subgenera or other genera. They are known as white-eyes and silver-eyes. The range of the genus in the broad sense is very extensive, embracing most of Africa, all of India, Ceylon, Burma, China, and Japan, the Malay Peninsula and Archipelago, the Papuan Islands, Australia, Tasmania, and most of the Polynesian Islands, including New Zealand. The bill is about as long as the head, straight and broad at the base. The pattern of coloration is characteristic, consisting of olives and yellows as the general colors, and the diagnostic white eye-ring of most species. The sexes are alike in plumage. The size is very small, only 4 or 5 inches. About 85 species are recognized as valid. The type is Z. cærulescens, of Australia.

Silver-eye or White-eye (Zosterops cærulescens)

tralia, the Bonham Islands, and New Zealand (to even less creeper, and rusty-sided warbler of the older and the degrees). Z. montanus is the white-eyed warbler of Lafresnaye. Z. olivaceus is the olive creeper of Bourbon (Réunion). Z. mauritianus is the Mauritius warbler of Mauritius. Z. borbonicus, Z. modestus, Z. franki, and Z. semicinctus have severally been made types of other genera. Some of these birds have been placed in Dicæum, and are among those known to the French ornithologists as soui-mangas.

2. [l. c.] Any bird of this genus.

zotheca (zō-thē'kä), n.; pl. zothecæ (-sē). [< Gr. ζωθήκη, < ζῆν, live, + θήκη, a receptacle: anc. theca.] In anc. arch., a niche or an alcove; also, a small living-room, or room used by day, as opposed to a sleeping-room or dormitory.

Zouave (zō-äv'), n. [F., from the name of a tribe inhabiting Algeria.] 1. A soldier belonging to a corps of light infantry in the French army, distinguished for their dash, intrepidity, and hardihood, and for their peculiar drill and showy Oriental uniform. The Zouaves were organized in Algeria in 1831, and consisted at first of two battalions chiefly of Kabyles and other natives, but ultimately became almost entirely French, with increased numbers. They served exclusively in Algeria till 1854, and afterward fought in European wars.

2. A member of one of the volunteer regiments of the Union army in the American civil war (1861–5) which adopted the name and to some extent imitated the dress of the French Zouaves.—Papal or pontifical Zouaves, a corps of French soldiers organized at Rome in 1860 for the defense of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope, under Lamoricière, one of the first commanders of the Algerian Zouaves. After obstinately resisting the entrance of the Italian government into Rome in 1870, they served in France against the Germans and the Communs, and in 1871 were disbanded.

Zouave-jacket (zō-äv'jak'et), n. 1. A short jacket, not reaching to the waist, cut away in front: a part of the Zouave uniform.—2. A similar jacket, usually ornamented, with or without sleeves, worn by women.

zounds (zoundz), interj. [For 'wounds, abbr. of God's wounds, referring to the wounds of Christ on the cross; one of the innumerable oaths having reference to Christ's passion.] An exclamation formerly used as an oath or as an expression of anger or wonder.

Zounds, sir! then I insist on your quitting the room directly. Sheridan, School for Scandal, v. 3.

zoutch (zouch), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To stew, as flounders, whitings, gudgeons, eels, etc., with just enough of liquid to cover them. [Prov. Eng.]

Zr. In chem., the symbol for zirconium.

zucchetta (tsük ket'tä), n. [It. zucchetta, a small gourd, a skullcap, dim. of zucca, a gourd.] 1. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., the skullcap of an ecclesiastic, covering the tonsure. That of a priest is black, of a bishop purple, of a cardinal red, and of the Pope white. Also written zucchette. 2. A late form of burganet, distinguished by having a movable nasal, hinged cheek pieces, and an articulated convre nuque.

zufolo, zuffolo (zö'fo-lo), n. [It. zufolo, < zufolare hiss, whistle.] A little flute or fingeolet, especially such as is used in teaching birds.

Zuggun falcon. See falcon.

zuisin, n. The American widgeon, Mareca americana. Webster's Dict., 1890. [Local, U. S.]

zules, zulis, n. In her., a chess rook used as a bearing.

Zulu (zö'lö), n. and a. [Also Zoolon; S. African.] I. n. A member of a warlike and superior branch of the Kafir race of South Africa, divided into many tribes. In the beginning of the nineteenth century several tribes of Zulus established a kingdom including the present British colony of Natal and the country north of it called Zululand, which was broken up and mostly absorbed by the British and the Boers during a succession of wars ending in 1883.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Zulus: as, the Zulu language (a principal member of the Bantu group of languages) or government.—Zulu cloth, a fine twilled woolen cloth used as a background for embroidery. Dict. of Needlework.

Zulu-Kafir (zö'lö kaf'ėr), n. Same as Kafir, 3.

zumbooruk (zum'bö-ruk'), n. [Also zumburuck, zombaruk, ambooruk, < Hind. Pers. Ar. zam-burak, < Turk. zamburak, a small gun, dim. of Ar. zambur, a hornet.] A small cannon mounted on a swivel, usually shorter and with larger bore than the zingal. In English writings the name is especially applied to such a piece carried on a camel, the pivot which supports it being erected on the saddle in front of the rider.

Eighteen or twenty camels caparisoned in the Rajah's colours of red and white, with zumbooraks, or swivel guns, mounted on their backs.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, II. 237.

zumic (zö'mik), a. An improper form of zymic, etc.

zumologic, zumology, etc. Same as zymologic, etc.

Zuñi (zö'nyē), n. [Amer. Ind.] A member of the best known community or tribe of the semi-civilized Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, living in a village of the same name on the Zuñi river, composed of large communal houses.

Zuñian (zö'ni-an), a. and n. [< Zuñi + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Zuñis.

All the Zuñian clay effigies of owls have burnt on their heads. Science, VI. 488.

II. n. A Zuñi.

zunyite (zū'ni-īt), n. [< Zuñi (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A fluosilicate of aluminium, occurring in glassy transparent tetrahedral crystals of the hardness of quartz: found at the Zuñi mine in Colorado.

zurf (zėrf), n. Same as zarf.

zwanziger (tswän'tsi-gėr), n. [G., < zwanzig, twenty.] A silver coin of Austria of the nineteenth century, equivalent to 20 kreutzers, and worth 8½ pence English (about 17 cents).

zwieselite (tswē'zel-īt), n. [< Zwiesel (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A variety of triplite found near Zwiesel in Bavaria.

Zwinglian (zwing'- or tswing'gli-an), a. and n. [< Zwingli (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Ulrich (Huldreich) Zwingli (1484–1531), a Swiss religious reformer, or his doctrines. Zwingli's revolt from the Roman communion took place at Zürich in 1516, a year before Luther's, with whom he differed in denying the real presence in the eucharist in any sense, and upon other points.

II. n. A follower of Zwingli.

Zygadenus (zī-gad'ē-nus), n. [NL. (Richard, 1808), named from the conspicuous pair of glands at the base of the sepals in Z. glaberrimus, < Gr. ζυγόν, a yoke, + ἀδήν, gland.] A genus of liliaceous plants, of the tribe Veratreæ. It is characterized by perfect flowers with a flattish perianth nearly equaled in its length by the stamens, and narrow angled seeds without prominent wings. The 10 species are natives of Siberia, and of North America including Mexico. They are perennials with a horizontal rootstock or a coated bulb, producing an erect stem unbranched beneath the terminal raceme or panicle, which consists of numerous whitish or greenish flowers. The long linear leaves are radical or crowded toward the base of the stem. The poisonous root of Z. venenosus of the northwestern United States is known as death camass and as hog's potato, being innocuous to hogs and greedily eaten by them. Z. glaucus extends northward to Kotzebue Sound. Z. glaberrimus and Z. fremontiadus, sometimes referred to Amianthium, are tall wand-like species with conspicuous white or cream-colored compound racemes, resembling the black cohosh.

zygadite (zig'a-dīt), n. [< Gr. ζευγάδην, jointly, < ζυγόν, a yoke: see *yoke*1.] A variety of albite, occurring in thin tabular twin crystals: it is found at Andreasberg in the Harz.

Zygæna (zī-jē'nā), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1775), < Gr. ζυγαία, supposed to mean the hammer-headed shark.] 1. In entom., a genus of moths, typical of the family Zygænidæ, the species of which are known as burnet-moths, as Z. minos, the transparent burnet; Z. trifolii, the five-spotted burnet; Z. loniceræ, the narrow-bordered burnet; Z. filipendulæ, the six-spotted burnet; etc. It was at first extensive with the family, but now includes only those forms that have the antennæ claviform, a little longer than the body; the wings elongate, and spotted; the palpi short, hairy, and acute, and the larvæ contracted, stout, hairy, and transforming in a fusiform parchment-like cocoon. Nearly 100 species are known, of which 52 occur in Europe the others in Asia and Africa; 26 are British. The larvæ are remarkable in hibernating in the half-grown condition. Some entomologists change the name to Anthrocera, because it is the same as the genus Zygæna in ichthyology; but this is a mistake, for entomology has the prior claim upon the name, and it is the genus of fishes that should not be named Zygæna.

2. In ichth., a genus of sharks, so named by Cuvier in 1817; the hammerheads: now called Sphyrna (which see). See cut under hammerhead.

zygænid (zī-jē'nid), a. and n. I. a. In entom. and ichth., of or pertaining to the Zygænidæ, as a moth or a shark.

II. n. A member of the family Zygænidæ, whether in entomology or in ichthyology.

Also zygenid, zygænoid.

Zygænidæ (zī-jē'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1819), < Zygæna, 1, + -idæ.] 1. In entom., a family of hawk-moths, named from the genus Zygæna, also wrongly called Anthroceridæ. The family comprises a more or less definite and characteristic series of moths intermediate between the Sesiidæ and the Castniidæ. By most modern authors a section of the old family Zygænidæ is separated into a family Agaristidæ. The Zygænidæ proper have pectinate antennæ, rather narrow wings rounded at the tip, and a venation similar to the arctians. Their larvæ are short, hairy, and transform in cocoons composed entirely of silk or mainly of hair. The European forms belong mainly to Zygæna, while the principal American genera are Procris, Harrisina, Cleanchia, Lycomorpha, and Glaucopis, the latter containing more than 100 South American species. Mechrostoma is another large genus, comprising more than 150 species, mainly South American. See cut under Procris. Also Zygænina, Zygænides, Zygænoidea, and Zygænides.

2. In ichth., a family of sharks, named from the genus Zygæna: now called Sphyrnidæ (which see). See cut under hammerhead.

zygænine (zī-jē'nin), a. [< Zygæna + *-ine*1.] In ichth., same as zygænid.

zygænoid (zī-jē'noid), a. and n. [< Zygæna + -oid.] Same as zygænid.

zygal (zī'gal), a. [< zyg-on + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to a zygon; connecting, as a yoke. —2. Formed like the letter H, with a cross-bar connecting two other bars. See zygon.

The frequency of the zygal or H-shaped form of fissure [of the brain].

Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 125.

[Rare in both uses.]

zygantrum (zī-gan'trum), n.; pl. zygantra (-trą). [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + ἄντρον, cave.] In herpet., the fossa upon the posterior face of the neural arch of a vertebra of serpents and some lizards, for the reception of the zygosphene of a succeeding vertebra, the series of vertebræ being more effectively interlocked thereby than is accomplished by the zygapophyses alone. Compare cut under zygosphene.

Posterior face of a dorsal vertebra of the python, showing za, the zygantrum; ptz, postzygapophysis; tp, transverse process; nr, neural spine; nc, neural canal; c, convex posterior face of centrum.

The anterior surface of the arch above the neural canal is produced into a strong wedge-shaped zygosphene, which fits into a corresponding zygantrum of the next preceding vertebra, and on the posterior surface of the arch there is a zygantrum for the zygosphene of the next preceding [read succeeding] vertebra. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 26.

zygapophysial (zī-gap-ō-fiz'i-al), a. [< zygapophysis + -al.] Of or pertaining to a zygapophysis; articular, as a vertebral process.

zygapophysis (zī-ga-pof'i-sis), n.; pl. zygapophyses (-sēz). [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + ἀπόφυσις, process: see apophysis.] A process upon the neural arch of a vertebra corresponding to that called oblique or articular in human anatomy, provided with a facet for articulation with the same process of a preceding or succeeding vertebra, thus serving to interlock the series of vertebral arches. There are normally two pairs of zygapophyses to a vertebra, the two processes (right and left) which are situated upon the anterior border of any arch being called prezygapophyses, and those upon the posterior border, postzygapophyses. Each pair of any one vertebra articulates with the other pair of the next vertebra. See cuts under cervical, dorsal, endoskeleton, hypapophysis, lumbar, vertebra, zygantrum, and zygosphene.

zygite (zī'gīt), n. [Also erroneously zeugite; < Gr. ζεῦγος, < ζεύγνυμι, yoke, cross-beam, thwart: see zygon.] In Gr. antiq., an oarsman of the second or middle tier in a trireme. Compare thranite and thalamite.

Zygnema (zig-nē'mą), n. [NL. (Kützing, 1843), irreg. < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + νῆμα, thread.] A genus of fresh-water algæ, typical of the order Zygnemaceæ, having cells with two axile many-rayed chlorophyl-bodies near the central cell-nucleus, each containing a starch granule, and the zygospore undivided, mostly contracted, and developed in the middle space between two united pairing-cells or in one or the other of the conjugating-cells. Several of the species are among the commonest of fresh-water algæ in both stagnant and running water, forming dense bright green masses. See cuts under chlorophyl and conjugation.

Zygnemaceæ (zig-ne-mā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Zygnema + -aceæ.] A very distinct order of fresh-water algæ, of the class Conjugatæ. The filamental consists of a usually simple and unbranched filament of cells placed end to end, and the individuals are joined in filamentous families. The chlorophyl mass is diffused or of a definite form, often forming a spiral band. Propagation is by means of zoospores which result from conjugation. See Conjugatæ, conjugation (with cut), and cut under chlorophyl.

Zygnemeæ (zig-nē'mē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Zygnema + -eæ.] A subfamily or tribe of fresh-water algæ, of the order Zygnemaceæ, characterized by having a mostly contracted, undivided zoöspore, which after a period of rest develops into a germ-cell.

zygobranch (zī'gō-brangk), a. and n. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, pair, + βράγχια, gills: see branchiæ.] I. a. Zygobranchiate.

II. n. A zygobranchiate mollusk.

Zygobranchia (zī-gō-brang'ki-ą), n. pl. [NL.: see zygobranch.] Same as Zygobranchiata.

Zygobranchiata (zī-gō-brang-ki-ā'tą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of zygobranchiatus*: see zygobranchiate.] An order or suborder of Gastropoda, having paired gill-combs, or right and left ctenidia, symmetrically disposed in the pallial chamber on each side of the neck, a pair of osphradia or olfactory trests, paired auricles, and distinct sexes. As an ordinal group, it contains the ormers or sea-ears, the abalones, rotamarioids, the keyhole-limpets, and the true limpets, and is divided into Cladobranchiata and Phyllobranchiata (the latter being the Patellidæ alone). Also called Zeugobranchia, Zygobranchia. See cuts under Haliotis, Fissurellidæ, Patella, patelliform, Pleurotomaria, Pleurotomariidæ, and sea-ear.

zygobranchiate (zī-gō-brang'ki-āt), a. and n. [< NL. zygobranchiatus*, < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + βράγχια, gills: see branchiate.] I. a. Having paired and as it were yoked gills or ctenidia, as certain mollusks; having the characters of or pertaining to the Zygobranchiata; zygobranch.

II. n. Any member of the Zygobranchiata.

zygocardiac (zī-gō-kär'di-ak), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + καρδία = E. heart, see cardiac.] Noting a certain hard protuberance of the stomach of a crustacean, formed by a thickening of the chitinous lining of the cardiac division (in the crawfish an elongated posterolateral ossicle, connected with the lower end of the anterolateral ossicle, and passing upward and backward to become continuous with the pyloric ossicle): correlated with pterocardiac and urocardiac.

zygodactyl, zygodactyle (zī-gō-dak'til), a. and n. [< NL. zygodactylus*, < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + δάκτυλος, finger, toe.] I. a. In ornith., yoke-toed: noting those birds, or the feet of those birds, which have the toes disposed in pairs, two before and two behind. In all yoke-toed birds, excepting the trogons, it is the outer anterior toe which is reversed; in trogons, the inner anterior one. See cut under pair-toed and parrot.

II. n. A yoke-toed bird; a bird having the toes arranged in pairs.

Zygodactyla (zī-gō-dak'ti-lą), n. pl. [NL. (Brandt, 1835), fem. of zygodactylus*: see zygodactylous.] 1. A genus of acalephs, of the family Æquoridæ. It includes some large jellyfishes, 6 or 8 inches in diameter, with long violet streamers, found in the north Atlantic waters.

2. A section of pachydermatous mammals, corresponding to the Suidæ in a broad sense; the swine. The name implied the cloven hoof of these animals, in distinction from the solidungulate or multungulate hoof of the quadrupeds with which swine were formerly classed as Pachydermata. See Artiodactyla (with cut).

Zygodactylæ (zī-gō-dak'ti-lē), n. pl. [NL.: see Zygodactyli.] A group of arboricole non-passerine birds whose toes are yoked in pairs, two before and two behind: synonymous with Scansores (which see). The group is artificial, being framed with reference to the single character expressed in the name, insistence upon which brings together some birds which belong to different orders, as Psittaci and Picariæ, separates the pleurian families which are not yoke-toed from their near relatives which are yoke-toed, and ignores the exceptional zygodactylism of the trogons. Various attempts, as by Blyth (1849), Sundevall (1872), and Sclater (1880), to restrict the name to a part of the birds it originally designated and retain it in the system in a stricter sense have not been entirely successful. Also Zygodactyli.

zygodactyle, a. and n. See zygodactyl.

zygodactylic (zī-gō-dak-til'ik), a. [< zygodactyl + -ic.] Same as zygodactyl.

zygodactylism (zī-gō-dak'ti-lizm), n. [< zygodactyl + -ism.] The yoking of the toes of a bird's foot in anterior and posterior pairs; the zygodactyl character or condition of a bird or its toes.

zygodactylous (zī-gō-dak'ti-lus), a. [< zygodactyl + -ous.] Same as zygodactyl.

Zygodon (zī'gō-don), n. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] In zoöl., same as Zeuglodon, 1. Owen.

zygodont (zī'gō-dont), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + ὀδούς (ὀδοντ-) = E. tooth.] Noting molar teeth whose even number of cusps are paired and as it were yoked together: having such molars, as a mammal or a type of dentition.

It is thus probable that trigonodontie is to be regarded as an earlier and more primitive form of molar than those of the zygodont (quadritubercular) type.

Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 888.

Zygogomphia (zī-gō-gom'fi-ą), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + γόμφιος, grinder-tooth.] In Ehrenberg's classification, a division of rotifers.

Zygogramma (zī-gō-gram'ą), n. [NL. (Chevrolat, 1843), < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + γράμμα, letter.] 1. A notable genus of chrysomelid beetles, comprising about 70 American species, mainly from South America and Mexico. By most American coleopterists it is considered a subgenus of Calligrapha, from the typical forms of which it is separated by the possession of a tooth on the last tarsal joint.

2. A genus of reptiles. Cope, 1870.

zygoite (zī'gō-īt), n. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + *-ite*2.] An organism resulting from the process of zygosis or conjugation.

zygomaticolabialis (zī-gō-mat-i-kō-lā-bi-ā'lis), n.; pl. zygomaticolabiales (-lēz). [NL., < zygo(ma) + labialis, labial.] The lesser zygomatic muscle; the zygomaticus minor. Cleland, 1867. See first cut under muscle[1].

zygoma (zī-gō'mą), n.; pl. zygomata (-ma-tą). [NL., < Gr. ζύγωμα, the zygomatic arch, also a yoke, bolt, bar, < ζυγόειν, yoke, join, < ζυγόν, a yoke; joining: see yoke[1].] 1. The bony arch or arcade of the cheek, formed by the malar or jugal bone and its connections: so called because it serves to connect bones of the face with those of the skull about the ear. In mammals, including man, the zygoma consists of a malar bone connected behind with the squamosal bone, usually by a zygomatic process of the latter, and abutting in front against a protuberance of the superior maxillary bone, or of the frontal or the lacrymal bone, or any of these. It is usually a stout bony arch, sometimes with a strong descending process, giving principal origin to a masseter muscle, and bridging over the temporal muscle. It is sometimes a slender rod, and may be imperfect, as in shrews. The part taken in its formation by the malar bone is very variable in extent. (See cut under skull.) Below mammals the construction of the zygoma posteriorly is entirely altered. In birds the arch is articulated there with the quadrate bone, or suspensorium of the lower jaw, representing the malleus of a mammal, and an additional bone, the quadratojugal, intervenes between the quadrate and the malar proper. In such cases the anterior connection is more particularly with the maxillary bone, or with this and the lacrymal, and the zygoma is generally a slender rod-like structure. (See cut under Gallinæ.) In reptiles further modifications occur, such as the completion of the arch behind by union of the jugal bone with the postfrontal and squamosal; or there may be no trace of a structure to which the term zygoma is properly applicable, as in the Ophidia, in which there is no jugal or quadratojugal bone. Among batrachians as the frog, a zygomatic arch is represented by the connection of the maxillary bone, by means of a quadratojugal bone, with a bone called temporomastoid (see cuts there and under Anura). In any case a zygoma consists of a suborbital or postorbital series of ossifications in membrane, or membrane-bones, developed on the outer side of the maxillary arch of the embryo (the same that gives rise to the pterygopalatine bar), and when best differentiated is represented by lacrymal, maxillary, jugal, and quadratojugal bones; and its connection with the sphenoid, as occurs in man, is quite exceptional.

Skull of Mylodon, a gigantic extinct sloth, showing the massive zygoma z, with strong superior and inferior processes s, i. (Great ly reduced.)

2. The malar or jugal bone itself, without its connections. [Raro.] — 3†. The cavity under the zygomatic processes of the temporal bone; the zygomatic fossa. Brande.

zygomatic (zī-gō-mat'ik), a. [< NL. zygomaticus, < zygoma, q. v.] In zoöl. and anat., of or pertaining to the malar or jugal bone, or this bone and its connections; constituting or entering into the formation of the zygoma; jugal.—Zygomatic apophysis. Same as zygomatic process.—Zygomatic arch, the zygoma. See cut under skull.—Zygomatic bone, the malar.—Zygomatic canals, two canals in the malar bone of man, through which pass branches of the superior maxillary nerve; the temporomalar canals: (a) the zygomaticofacial, or malar, running between the orbital and anterior surfaces; (b) the zygomaticotemporal, or temporal, running between the orbital and temporal surfaces.—Zygomatic crest, that edge of the mamme diaphysoid which articulates with the malar.—Zygomatic diameter, the greatest distance between the zygomatic arches of the skull.—Zygomatic fossa. See fossa[1].—Zygomatic glands, lymph-nodes found along the course of the internal maxillary artery.—Zygomatic muscle. Same as zygomaticus.—Zygomatic process, the process, and cuts under skull and temporal[2].—Zygomatic suture, the squamozygomatic suture; the immovable connection of the squamosal, usually of its zygomatic process, with the malar or jugal bone.—Zygomatic tubercle, that protuberance of the superior maxilla which articulates with the malar.

zygomatici, n. Plural of zygomaticus.

zygomatico-auricular (zī-gō-mat'i-kō-ą-rik'ū-lär), a. 1. In anat. and zoöl., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the auricle: as, a zygomatico-auricular muscle. See zygomatico-auricularis. —2. In craniom., noting the ratio between the zygomatic and auricular diameters of the skull, called the zygomatico-auricular index.

zygomatico-auricularis (zī-gō-mat'i-kō-ą-rik-ū-lā'ris), n. A muscle of the external ear of some animals which arises from the zygoma and is inserted in the auricle; in man, the attrahens aurem.

A strong zygomatico-auricularis is also seen as we remove the integument of the head [of the reindeer].
Proc. Acad. Nat. Sci. Phila., 1861, p. 332.

zygomaticofacial (zī-gō-mat'i-kō-fā'shal), a. In anat., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the face: specifying (a) the anterior connections of the zygoma, and (b) the anterior one of the two zygomatic canals which traverse the malar bone of man. See zygomatic canals, under zygomatic.

zygomaticotemporal (zī-gō-mat'i-kō-tem'pō-ral), a. In anat., of or pertaining to the zygoma and the temporal bone or fossa; specifying (a) the posterior connections of the zygoma with any element of the temporal bone, as the squamozygomatic of a mammal, and (b) the posterior one of the two zygomatic canals which traverse the malar bone of man. See zygomatic canals, under zygomatic.

zygomaticus (zī-gō-mat'i-kus), n.; pl. zygomatici (-si). [NL.: see zygomatic.] One of several small subcutaneous muscles arising from or in relation with the zygoma, or malar bone.—Zygomaticus auricularis, a muscle of the external ear, the attrahens aurem of man, commonly called zygomatico-auricularis (which see).—Zygomaticus major, zygomaticus minor, two muscles of the face, arising from the malar bone, inserted into the orbicularis oris at the corner of the mouth, and serving to draw the corner of the mouth upward and outward, as in the act of laughing. The former is sometimes called distortor oris, and the latter zygodendeus. See first cut under muscle[1].

Zygomaturus (zī'gō-ma-tū'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. ζύγωμα, the zygomatic arch, + οὐρά, tail.] 1. A genus of large fossil marsupials from the Post-tertiary deposits of Australia.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus. Imp. Dict.

zygomorphic (zī-gō-mōr'fik), a. [< zygomorphous + -ic.] In bot., same as zygomorphous.

zygomorphism (zī-gō-mōr'fizm), n. [< zygomorphous + -ism.] The character of being zygomorphous.

zygomorphous (zī-gō-mōr'fus), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + μορφή, form.] Yoke-shaped: specifically applied to flowers which can be bisected into similar halves in only one plane; monosymmetrical. Such extends the term to cases where bisection into similar halves is possible in two planes at right angles to one another, the halves of one section being different from the halves of the other. Gard. Chron. Compare actinomorphous.

zygomorphy (zī'gō-mōr-fi), n. [< zygomorphous + -y[3].] In bot., same as zygomorphism.

zygomycete (zī-gō-mī'sēt), n. In bot., a fungus belonging to the group Zygomycetes.

Zygomycetes (zī'gō-mi-sē'tēz), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + μύκης, pl. μύκητες, a mushroom.] A group of fungi characterized by the production of zygospores. It embraces the Mucorini, Entomophthoreæ, Chytridieæ, Saprolegnieæ, etc.

zygomycetous (zī'gō-mi-sē'tus), a. In bot., of or pertaining to the Zygomycetes.

zygon (zī'gon), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, a yoke, cross-bar: see yoke[1].] 1. A connecting rod or bar; a yoke in general.

Zygal bones are defined as "H-shaped or quadradiate, presenting a pair of transverse at either end of a connecting bar or yoke, the zygon." A zygal fissure contains a bar or zygon, a yoke in the most general sense. B. G. Wilder.

2. In anat., an H-shaped fissure of the brain, as the parieccipital fissure. It consists of anterior and posterior stipes, anterior and posterior rami, and the connecting bar (the zygon in strictness). B. G. Wilder.

Zygonectes (zī-gō-nek'tēz), n. [NL. (Agassiz, 1854), so called because said to swim in pairs; < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + νήκτης, swimmer.] A large genus of small carnivorous American cyprinodonts; the top-minnows. They are closely related to the killifishes (Fundulus), the technical difference being chiefly in the smallness and backwardness of the dorsal fin, which has usually less than ten rays and is commonly inserted behind the front of the anal fin. The top-minnows are on the average smaller than the killifishes, being usually only 2 or 3 inches long. They are surface swimmers and feed on insects. The species are numerous and individuals abundant. One of the best known is Z. notatus, common in ponds from Michigan to Alabama and Texas.

Zygopetalum (zī-gō-pet'a-lum), n. [NL. (Hooker, 1827), so called with ref. to the union of the perianth with the foot of the column; < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + πέταλον, leaf (petal).] A genus of epiphytic orchids, of the tribe Vandeæ and subtribe Cymbidieæ. It is characterized by showy solitary or loosely racemed flowers with spreading sepals, the lateral ones united to the short foot of the column, to a flattish lip bearing a transverse crest at its base, and by an anther with four waxy pollen masses, attached by a rather broad stalk or gland. There are about 10 species, natives of tropical America from the West Indies and Mexico to Brazil. They are handsome plants with short leafy stems finally thickened into pseudobulbs. Their leaves are two-ranked, membranous, somewhat rigid and slightly plicate or with elevated veins. They are highly prized in cultivation under glass, especially Z. Mackaii, the original species.

Zygophyceæ (zī-gō-fī'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φῦκος, sea-weed, + -eæ.] A group or order of unicellular or multicellular freshwater algæ, not now generally accepted, with the cells single, or segregate, or geminate, or united in a series. Multiplication is effected by division in one direction, and by means of zygospores resulting from the conjugation of the cells. It embraces the families Desmidiaceæ, Zygnemaceæ, etc.

Zygophyllaceæ (zī'gō-fi-lā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Zygophyll-um + -aceæ.] Same as Zygophylleæ.

Zygophylleæ (zī-gō-fil'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (R. Brown, 1814), < Zygophyll-um + -eæ.] An order of polypetalous plants, the bean-caper family, belonging to the series Discifloræ and the cohort Geraniales. It is characterized by flowers which usually bear a fleshy disk, five free glandless sepals, filaments augmented each by a small scale, and a furrowed angled or lobed ovary with two or more filiform ovules in each of the four or five cells. It includes about 110 species, classed in 18 genera, natives of tropical and warm climates, especially north of the equator. They are commonly shrubs or herbs with a woody base, bearing divaricate branches jointed at their nodes. Their leaves are usually opposite and pinnate or compound of two sessile leaflets; the twin persistent stipules are sometimes developed into spines. The flowers are white, red, or yellow, very rarely blue, usually solitary in the axils of the stipules. The principal genera are Zygophyllum (the type), Tribulus, Guaiacum, and Fagonia; 10 genera are monotypic; two species of Guaiacum (lignum-vitæ) become moderate trees. The woody species are remarkable for the extreme hardness of their wood, and several, as Guaiacum, produce a bitter and acrid bark. Their deterutive foliage is used in the West Indies to scour floors. Some of the family are so abundant in the Egyptian desert as to constitute a characteristic feature of its vegetation.

Zygophyllum (zī-gō-fil'um), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φύλλον, leaf.] A genus of plants, type of the order Zygophylleæ. It is characterized by opposite bifoliolate leaves, flowers with four or five petals, and a sessile ovary with the ovules fixed upon the axis. There are about 60 species, natives of the Old World and of Australia. They are diminutive shrubs, often prostrate, and with spinescent branches. The leaves are opposite, usually composed of two fleshy leaflets armed at the base with spines which represent stipules. The flowers are white or yellow, usually marked near the base with a purple or red spot. Z. Fabago is the bean-caper of the Levant. Its flower-buds are used as capers. The aromatic seeds of Z. coccineum are used by the Arabs as pepper. Several species are of local medicinal repute. Z. Fabago as a vermifuge, and Z. simplex, an Arabian plant of nauseous odor, as a remedy for diseases of the eye.

zygophyte (zī'gō-fīt), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + φυτόν, plant.] A plant characterized by the production of zygospores; a plant in which reproduction consists in a confluence of two similar protoplasmic masses. See cut under conjugation, 4.

In most of these zygophytes there is no plain distinction of sex. G. L. Goodale, Physiol. Bot., p. 432.

zygopleural (zī-gō-plö'ral), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + πλευρά, side.] Bilaterally symmetrical in a strict sense. Zygopleural forms are distinguished as diplopleural and tetrapleural.

Zygosaurus (zī-gō-sâ'rus), n. [NL. (Eichwald, 1848), < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σαῦρος, lizard.] A genus of labyrinthodonts, based on Z. lucius from the Middle Permian of Perm in Russia.

zygose (zī'gōs), a. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + -ose after zygous.] In bot., pertaining to or characteristic of zygosis or conjugation.

Zygoselmidæ (zī-gō-sel'mi-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Zygoselmis + -idæ.] A family of dimastigate eustomatous flagellate infusorians, named from the genus Zygoselmis. They have two similar vibratile flagella, and the endoplasm includes no pigmentary bands.

Zygoselmis (zī-gō-sel'mis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σέλμις, poop.] The typical genus of Zygoselmidæ. The animalcules are highly plastic and variable in form with two unequal flagella from the fore end at the base of which are the mouth and pharynx. Z. nebulosa and Z. marginata inhabit fresh water.

zygosis (zī-gō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζύγωσις, a joining, used in a sense of holmenergy, < ζυγοῦν, join, yoke, see zygoma.] 1. A sexual intercourse of protoplasmic bodies, resulting in their confluence and conjugation; the process and result of conjugation in protozoans or other of the lowest organisms. See conjugation, 4.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Forster, 1860).] A genus of hymenopterous insects. 3. In bot., conjugation; the fusion or union of two distinct cells or protoplasmic masses for reproduction. See conjugation, 4.

zygosperm (zī'gō-spėrm), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., same as zygospore.

zygosphene (zī'gō-sfēn), n. [< Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σφήν, wedge.] In herpet., the wedge-shaped process from the fore part of the neural arch of the vertebræ of serpents and some lizards, which fits into a corresponding fossa, the zygantrum, on the posterior part of the neural arch of a preceding vertebra, and serves thus to interlock the series of arches more effectually than would be done by zygapophyses alone. Compare cut under zygantrum.

Anterior face of a dorsal vertebra of the python, showing zs, zygosphene; pz, prezygapophysis; tp, transverse process; ns, neural spine; nc, neural canal; z, centrum of the procelian vertebra, whose convex cavity fits the convexity of the central shown under zygantrum zygosporangium (zī'gō-spō-ran'-ji-um), n.; pl. zygosporangia (-ą). [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπορά, seed, + ἀγγεῖον, vessel.] In bot., a sporangium in which zygospores are produced.

zygospore (zī'gō-spōr), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπορά, seed.] In bot., a spore formed in the process of reproduction in some algæ and fungi by the union or conjugation of two similar gametes or protoplasmic masses; called isospore by Rostafinski. Also zygosperm, zygote. See spore[2], conjugation, 4 (with cut).

Zygosporeæ (zī-gō-spō'rē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπορά, seed, + -eæ.] In Sachs's system of classification, a group of plants characterized by the production of zygospores. It is no longer maintained.

zygosporophore (zī-gō-spor'ō-fōr), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + σπορά, seed, + φέρειν = E. bear[1].] In bot., a club-shaped or conical section of a hypha adjoining a gamete-cell after its delimitation. De Bary.

zygote (zī'gōt), n. [< Gr. ζυγωτός, yoked, < ζευγνύναι, yoke: see zygoma.] Same as zygospore.

Zygotrocha (zī-got'rō-kä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + τροχός, wheel.] In Ehrenberg's classification, a division of rotifers: correlated with Schizotrocha.

zygotrochous (zī-got'rō-kus), a. Of or pertaining to the Zygotrocha.

zygozoöspore (zī-gō-zō'ō-spōr), n. [NL., < Gr. ζυγόν, yoke, + ζῷον, animal, + σπορά, seed.] In bot., a motile zygospore.

zylo-. For words so beginning, see xylo-.

zylonite, n. Same as xylonite.

Zylophagus (zī-lof'ą-gus), n. The original (incorrect) form of Xylophagus. Latreille, 1809.

zymase (zī'mās), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + -ase (after diastase).] Same as enzym.

zyme (zīm), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, < ζέειν, boil: see yeast.] 1. A ferment.

A yeast and a ferment signify the same thing, and, as a zyme also means a ferment, the term zymotic has arisen to express a certain class of diseases.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 862.

2. The living germ or other poison, of whatever nature, which is believed to be the specific cause of a zymotic disease.

zymic (zim'ik), a. [Also improperly zumic; < zyme + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of leaven: applied by Pasteur to the microbes which act as ferments only when the air is excluded, as distinguished from those which require the presence of air.

zymogen (zī'mọ-jen), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + -γενής, producing.] A substance from which an enzym may be formed by internal change. Also zymogene.

A ferment is found to exist as a zymogen in the resting seed, which is readily developed by warmth and weak acids into an active condition. Nature, XLI. 220.

zymogenic (zī-mọ-jen'ik), a. [As zymogen + -ic.] Exciting fermentation: as, zymogenic organisms.

zymogenous (zī-moj'e-nus), a. [As zymogen + -ous.] Same as zymogenic.

zymoid (zī'moid), a. [< Gr. ζυμοειδής, ζυμώδης, like leaven, < ζύμη, leaven, + εἶδος, form.] Resembling a zyme or ferment.

zymologic (zī-mọ-loj'ik), a. [< zymolog-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to zymology. Also zumologic.

zymological (zī-mọ-loj'i-kal), a. [< zymologic + -al.] Same as zymologic.

zymologist (zī-mol'ọ-jist), n. [< zymology + -ist.] One who is skilled in zymology. Also zumologist.

zymology (zī-mol'ọ-ji), n. [Also zumology; < Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of or knowledge concerning fermentation.

zymolysis (zī-mol'i-sis), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + λύσις, dissolving.] Same as zymosis, 1.

zymolytic (zī-mọ-lit'ik), a. [< zymolysis (-lyt-) + -ic.] Same as zymotic.

Prof. Salkowski . . . concluded from his researches that fermentative (zymolytic) processes are continually taking place in living tissues. Nature, XLI. 500.

zymome (zī'mōm), n. [< Gr. ζύμωμα, a fermented mixture, < ζυμοῦν, leaven, ferment, < ζύμη, leaven: see zyme.] An old name for the gluten of wheat that is insoluble in alcohol. Also zimome.

zymometer (zī-mom'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the degree of fermentation of a fermenting liquor. Also zymosimeter.

zymophyte (zī'mọ-fīt), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + φυτόν, plant.] A bacterioid ferment that liberates fatty acids from neutral fats. Cutlings.

zymoscope (zī'mọ-skōp), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument, contrived by Zenneck, for testing the fermenting power of yeast, by bringing it in contact with sugar-water and observing the quantity of carbonic anhydrid evolved. Watts.

zymosimeter (zī-mọ-sim'e-tėr), n. [< Gr. ζύμωσις, fermentation, + μέτρον, measure.] Same as zymometer.

zymosis (zī-mō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ζύμωσις, fermentation, < ζυμοῦν, ferment: see zymome.] 1. Fermentation of any kind. Also zymolysis. 2. An infectious or contagious disease.

zymotechnic (zī-mọ-tek'nik), a. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + τέχνη, art.] Relating to the art of inducing and managing such fermentations as are useful in the arts; pertaining to zymotechnics.

zymotechnical (zī-mọ-tek'ni-kal), a. [< zymotechnic + -al.] Same as zymotechnic.

zymotechnics (zī-mọ-tek'niks), n. [Pl. of zymotechnic (see -ics).] The art of managing fermentation. Compare zymurgy.

zymotic (zī-mot'ik), a. and n. [< Gr. ζυμωτικός, < ζύμωσις, fermentation: see zymosis.] I. a. Pertaining to fermentation; of the nature of fermentation. Also zymolytic.—Zymotic diseases, any disease, such as malaria, typhoid fever, or smallpox, the origin and progress of which are due to the multiplication within the body of a living germ introduced from without.—Zymotic papilloma, framboesia.

II. n. Same as zymotic disease. See I.

zymotically (zī-mot'i-kal-i), adv. [< zymotic + -al + -ly[2].] In a zymotic manner; according to the manner or nature of zymotic diseases.

zymurgy (zī'mėr-ji), n. [< Gr. ζύμη, leaven, + ἔργον, work (cf. metallurgy, etc.).] That department of technological chemistry which treats of the scientific principles of wine-making, brewing, and distilling, and the preparation of yeast and vinegar, in which processes fermentation plays the principal part. Watts.

Zyrichthys, n. See Ayrichthys. Swainson, 1839.

zythepsary† (zī-thep'sa-ri), n. [Irreg. < Gr. ζῦθος, beer, + ἑψεῖν, boil (related to πέσσειν, boil, cook: see peptic), + -ary.] A brewery or brew-house. [Rare.]

zythum (zī'thum), n. [< L. zythum, < Gr. ζῦθος, beer, applied to the beer of Egypt and also to that of the northern nations (κόρμα).] A kind of beer made by the ancient Egyptians.

Zyxomma (zik-som'ą), n. [NL. (Rambur, 1842), prop. Zeuxomma, < Gr. ζεῦξις, a joining (< ζευγνύναι, join), + ὄμμα, eye: see ommatidium.] A genus of Indian dragon-flies, of the family Libellulidæ, having the head large, the face narrow, the eyes of great size, and the first three abdominal segments vesicular.

LIST OF AMENDED SPELLINGS

RECOMMENDED BY THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON AND THE AMERICAN PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION

The American Philological Association, giving voice to the general opinion of the most eminent scholars in English philology, as reflected in previous discussions in that body and elsewhere and expressed in the annual reports of a special committee, adopted and published, in 1876, a declaration in favor of a reform in English spelling. That declaration, as printed in the List of Amended Spellings subsequently recommended by the Association, is as follows:

1. The true and sole office of alfabetic writing is faithfully and intelligibly to represent spoken speech. So-calld "historical" orthografy is only a concession to the weak sense of prejudice.

2. The ideal of an alfabet is that every sound should hav its own unvarying sign, and every sign its own unvarying sound.

3. An alfabet intended for use by a vast community need not attempt an exhaustiv analysis of the elements of utterance and a representation of the nicest varieties of articulation, it may wel leav room for the unavoidabl play of individual and local pronunciation.

4. An ideal alfabet would seek to adopt for its characters forms which should suggest the sounds signified, and of which the resemblances should in sum measure represent the similarities of the sounds. But for general practical use there is no advantage in a system which aims to depict in detail the fysical processes of utterance.

5. No language has ever had, or is likely to hav, a perfect alfabet: and in changing and amending the mode of writing of a language alredy long with regard must necessarily be had to what is practically possibl quite as much as to what is inherently desirabl.

6. To prepare the way for such a change, the first step is to break down, by the combined influence of enlightend scolars and of practical educators, the immense and stubborn prejudice which regards the establisht modes of spelling almost as constituting the language, as having a sacred character, as in themselvs preferabl to others. All agitation and all definit proposals of reform are to be welcumd so far as they work in this direction.

7. An altered orthografy will be unavoidably offensiv to those who at first calld upon to use it; but any sensibl and consistent new system will rapidly win the hartyy preference of the mass of writers.

8. The Roman alfabet is so widely and firmly establisht in use among the leading civilized nations that it cannot be displaced. In adapting it to improved use for English, the efforts of scolars should be directed towards its use with uniformity and in conformity with other nations.

In pursuance of this declaration, further action was taken by the Association from year to year; and, a similar declaration having been made by the Philological Society of London, the two bodies agreed, in 1883, upon certain rules (the Twenty-four Rules) for the correction of the orthography of certain words and classes of words. Subsequently an alphabetical list of the principal words covered by the rules was made. "The corrections are in the interest of etymological and historical truth, and are to be confined to words which the changes do not much disguise from the general reader." The rules are printed in the "Proceedings" of the American Philological Association for 1883. The list was printed in the "Transactions" for 1886, and later in the periodical "Spelling," in October, 1887, from which it is here reprinted, with some slight corrections.

The list is printed here as a record of an important movement which promises to be of special interest to lexicographers in the near future, and as a recognition, in addition to the remarks made in the Preface (p. ix), of the desirableness of correcting the anomalies and redundancies of English spelling in the directions indicated. It is the main office of a dictionary to record actual usage, not to recommend better usage; but in cases of unsettled usage it must adopt, and thus by inference recommend, one form as against the rest; and, in view of the fact that the amended spellings in question have been recommended by the highest philological authorities in the English-speaking world, and that they have been to a considerable extent already adopted, in whole or in part, by many respectable newspapers and other periodicals, and by a large number of persons in private use, besides those who take part in the agitation for spelling reform, they can hardly be ignored in a dictionary which records without winding the varying orthography of times just past, and of earlier generations. The reformed orthography of the present, made with scientific intent and with a regard for historic and phonetic truth, is more worthy of notice, if a dictionary could discriminate as to worthiness between two sets of facts, than the oftentimes capricious and ignorant orthography of the past.

It need not be said in this dictionary that the objections brought on etymological and literary and other grounds against the correction of English spelling are the unthinking expressions of ignorance and prejudice. All English etymologists are in favor of the correction of English spelling, both on etymological grounds and on the higher ground of the great service it will render to national education and international intercourse. It may safely be said that no competent scholar who has really examined the question has come, or could come, to a different conclusion; and it may be confidently predicted that future English dictionaries will be able to recognize to the full, as this dictionary has been able in its own usage to recognize in part, the right of the English vocabulary to be rightly spelled.

It is to be noted that many of the corrected spellings in the following list are merely reversions to a simpler mode of spelling formerly common; indeed, such is largely the intent of the list. Examples are engin, genuin, wil, shril, and the like, and especially verbal forms like dropt, kist, mast, lost, etc.,— a mode of spelling in use for more than a thousand years (compare Anglo-Saxon cyste, English kist; Anglo-Saxon maste, English mast, etc.), and still familiar in the usage of the best modern poets, as Tennyson and Lowell (dropt, mast, lost are in Lowell's last poem, "My Brook," December, 1890). All considerations, historical, literary, and economical, are in favor of such corrected forms.

W. D. WHITNEY.

In the following list, as in the Twenty-four Rules, many amendabl words hav been omitted for reasons such as these: 1. The changed word would not be easily recognized, as nee for knee. 2. Letters ar left in strange positions, as in edg for edge, easy for easye. 3. The word is of frequent use. Final g = j, v, q, z, and syllabic l and n, ar strange to our print but dependent in our speech. Many of them ar in the list: hav, frez, medl, sadn, etc.; liek for lik, av for of, and many other words, as wel as the final z = s of inflection, ar omitted. 4. The wrong sound is suggested, as in wey for wayne, ceer for care. 5. A valuabl distinction is lost: eanpse from cask, dest from dust.

Frequent words having a familiar change of ending, as -le to -l, and simpl derivatives and inflections, ar often omitted. Words doutful in pronunciation or etymology, and words unmodified by the Associations, however amendabl, ar omitted. Inflections ar omitted in lists.

The so-calld Twenty-four Rules ar many of them lists of words. The rules proper ar as follows:

THE RULES.

1. e.— Drop silent e when functionally useless (writing -er for -re), as in fiber (fiber), single (single), ruine (ruin), rulmakgraind), etc., theatre (theater), etc.

2. ea.— Drop a from ea having the sound of e as in feather (fether), leather (lether), etc.

3. o.— For o having the sound of u in but write u in above (abuv), tongue (tung), and the like.

4. ou.— Drop o from ou having the sound of u in but in trouble (trubl), rough (ruf), and the like; for -our now usually written -or, as in honour (honor), etc.

5. u, ue.— Drop silent u after g before a, and in many English words, and drop in ue: guard (gard), guess (ges), catalogue (catalog), league (leag), etc.

6. Dubl consonants may be simplified when functionally useless: badliff (bailiff) (not bail, etc.), battle (batl), written (writn), traveller (traveler), etc.

7. d.— Change d and ed final to t when so pronounced, as in locked (lockt), etc., unless the e affects the preceding sound, as in shaved, etc.

8. gh, ph.— Change gh and ph to f when so sounded: enough (enuf), laughter (laftur), phonetic (fonetic), etc.

9. s.— Change s to z when so sounded, especially in distinctiv words and in the -ise, -ize, verb (advize), advertise (advertiz), etc.

10. t.— Drop t in tch: catch (cach), pitch (pich), etc.

AMENDED SPELLINGS

abandoned . abandomd abashed . abasht abhorred abhord
ablative ablativ able, unaccented abl
abolishable . abollishabl abolished · abolisht abominable abominabl abortive · abortiv above : abuv abreast : abreat absolve : absolv absolved : absolvd absorbed : absorbd absorbable : absorbabl absorptive : absorptiv abstained : abstaind abstractive : abstractiv abuse, v. : abuze abusive : abusiv accelerative : accelerativ acceptable : acceptabl accessible : accessibl accommodative: accommodativ accompaniment accumpaniment accompany . accumpany accomplished . accomplisht accountable : accountabl accumulative accumulativ accursed · accurs-ed, accurst accusative : accusativ accustomed : accustomd acephalous · acefalous ache, ake . ake achievable : achievabl achieve : achiev achieved : achievd acquirable acquirabl acquisitive : acquisitiv actionable actionabl active : activ
adaptable : adaptabl adaptive : adaptiv add : ad addle : adl addled : adld addressed · addrest adhesive adhesiv adjective adjectiv adjoined · adjoind adjourn · adjurn adjourned : adjurnd adjunctive adjunctiv adjustable adjustabl admeasure . admezure administered . administerd administrative · administrativ admirable admirabl admissible admissibl admired admirt
admonished : admonisht admonitive admonitiv adoptive adoptiv adorable adorabl adorned adornd
adulterine adulterin adventuresome adventuresum adversative · adversativ advertise, tse advertize advertisement advertisment, advertizment advisable advizabl advise advize advisement advizment advisory advizory adze, adz adz affable : affabl affective affectiv affirmed affirmd
affirmable affirmabl affirmative affirmativ aged agd
afflictive . afflictiv affront . affrunt
afront, adv. · afrunt agglutinative : agglutinativ aggressive : aggressiv aggrieve aggriev aggrieved . aggrievd aghast . agast agile : agil agreeable . agreeabl ahead : ahed aided aidd aimed aimd aired . aird aisle . ile alarmed alarmd
alienable . alienabl alimentiveness alimentiveness allayed allayd
alliterative alliterativ allowed allowd
allowable allowabl alloyed . alloyd
allusive allusiv alpha . alfa alphabet alfabet already alredy alterable : alterabl altered altrd
alterative : alterativ alternative · alternativ although altho alumine, alumina . alumin amaranthine amaranthin amassed amast
amative . amativ amble ambl ambled ambld
ambushed ambusht amenable amenabl amethystine amethystin amiable amiabl amicable amicabl amorphous amorfous amphibia . amfibia amphibian · amfibian amphibious amfibious amphibrach . amfibrach amphitheater, -tre . amfitheater ample · ampl amplificative amplificativ amusive · amusiv anaglyph anaglyf analogue analog analyze, analyse analyze anatomize, -tse anatomize anchor · anker anchorage ankerage anchored ankerd
angered angerd
angle angl angled angld
anguished anguisht anise anis ankle ankl annealed annealed annexed annext annexed annexd annulled · annuld answered answerd
anthropophagy anthropofagy anticipative . anticipativ antiphony antifony antiphrasis antifrasis antistrophe antistrofe aphyllous, afyllous apocalypse apocalypse apocryph apocryfa apocryphal apocryfal apologue apolog apostle apostl apostrophe apostrofe apostrophize · apostrofize appalled : appalld appareled, -elled . apparelld appealable appealabl appealed appeald appeared appeard
appeasable appeasabl appellative appellativ appertained appertaind
apple apl applicable · applicabl applicative applicativ appointive . appointiv apportioned apportiond appreciable appreciabl appreciative : appreciativ apprehensible : apprehensibl apprehensive . apprehensiv approachable · approachabl approached approacht
approvable approvabl approximative approximativ aquiline : aquilin, lne arable . arabl arbitrable arbitrabl arbor, arbour arbor arched archt
ardor, ardour ardor are ar argumentative · argumentativ arise : arize arisen . arizn
armet, armour armor armored, armoured armord arose, arote arraigned arraignd arrayed arrayd article artikl artisan, artizan artizan asbestine asbestin ascendable · ascendabl ascertained ascertaind ascribable ascribabl asphalt · asfalt asphyxia . asfyxia assailable : assailabl assailed assaild
assayed : assayd assemble assembl assembled assembld
assertive assertiv assessed assest assigned assignd
assignable assignabl assimilative assimilativ associable associabl associative associativ assumptive assumptiv astonished · astonisht atmosphere, atmosfere atmospheric atmosferic atrophy atrofy attached · attacht attacked attackt
attainable : attainabl attained attaind
attempered attempert attentive · attentiv attractive : attractiv attributable attributabl attributive attributiv audible audibl augmentative augmentativ auricle · auricl authoritative · authoritativ autobiographer autobiographer autobiography autobiography autograph · autograf available · availabl availed . availd
avalanche : avalanch averred : averd .
avoidable : avoidabl avouched : avoucht avowed . avowd awakened : awakend awe aw awed : awd
awesome, awesome : awesum ax, axe · ax axle : axl ay, aye · ay

babble : babl babbled babld backed backt
backbidden · backbidn bad, bade, pret : bad baffle : bafl baffled : bafld
bagatelle · bagatel bailable · bailabl bailed baild bailiff . bailif baize · baiz balked balkt
balled balld banged bangd
banished banisht
bankable . bankabl banked bankt
bantered bantert barbed . barbd bareheaded bareheded barpained barpaind barnacle barnacl barreled, -elled barreld barreling, -elling : barreling bartered barterd basked baskt batch · bach battered battert battle, batl battled batld bauble bawbl bauled bauld
bayoneted, -etted bayonetd beadle : beadl beagle · beagl beaked beakt beamed beamd
bearable bearabl beaten beatn beauteous, beauteous beautiful bewtiful beautify bewtify beauty bewty becalmed becalmd beckoned beckond become becum becoming becuming bedabble bedabl bedabbled bedabld bedecked bedeckt
bedeviled, -illed · bedevild bedewed bedewd
bedimmed bedimd
bedraggle bedragl bedraggled bedragld
bedrenched bedrencht bedribble bedribl bedropped bedropt
bedstead : bedsted beetle beetl beeves beevs befallen befallin befell befel
befouled : befould
befriended : befrendd befriend befrend begged, begd begone begon begotten, begoten behavior, -our : behavior behead behed belabor belabour : belabor belabored, belaboured : belabord belayed · belayd belched : belcht beldam, beldame : beldam belraguer . beleager belaguered : belagerd believable · believabl believe believ believed believd
belittle belitl belittled · belitld
bell bel belled beld belonged belongd beloved beluv-ed, beluvd bemoaned bemoand
bemocked bemockt
benumb benum benumbed benumd
bequeathed bequeathd bereave : bereav bereaved bereavd
berhyme, berime · berime bereamed bereamd
bereaved bereavd
beseech, beseech · beseech besieged besiegd
besmeared besmeard
bespangle . bespangl bespangled bespangld bespattered bespattert bespread · bespred besprinkle besprinkl besprinkled besprinkld bestirred bestird bestowed bestowd bestraddle bestradl bestraddled bestradld betrothed betrothd bettered bettert
beveled, beveled beveld
beveling, bevelling beveling bewailed bewaild bewildered bewildert
bewitch · bewich bewitched · bewicht bewrayed bewrayd biased, biassed biast
bibliographer · bibliografer bibliography . bibliografy bicephalous bicefalous bickered bickert
bicolored, bicoloured bicolurd bilked : bilkt
bill bil
billed bild
binnacle binnacl bisect · bisect biscuit, bisket biscuit blabbed blabd blackballed blackballd blacked blackt blackened blackend
black-eyed · black-eyd blackguard blagard
black lead blacklead blackmailed · blackmaild blamable · blamabl blameworthy : blameworthy blanched · blancht blandished blandisht
blaspheme · blasfeme blasphemous : blasfemous blasphemy . blasfemy bleached : bleacht bleared bleard · blemished blemisht
blended blendt
blende · blend blessed, blest : blessed, blest blindworm blindwurm

blinked : blinkt
blistered : blistert
blithesome : blithesum blocked : blockt, blockhead : blockhed blond, blonde : blond bloomed : bloomd
blossomed : blossomd
blotch : bloch blotched : blocht
blubbered : blubberd blue-eyed . blue-eyd bluff : bluf bluffed : bluft
blundered : blunderd
blunderhead : blunderhed blurred : blurd
blushed : blusht
blustered : blusterd
boatable : boatabl bobbed : bobd
bobtailed : bobtaild bodyguard : bodygard boggle : bogl boggled : bogld boiled · boild
bolthead : bolthed bomb . bom bombastive, -sine : bombastsine bombshell · bomshel booked : bookt bookworm : bookwurm boomed . broomd
booze, boose · boos boozy, boosy : boosy bordered · borderd borrowed : borrowd bossed : bost
botch . boch botched : bocht bothered botherd
bots, botts . bots bottle botl bottled : botld bowed : bowd
bowline : bowlin boxed · boxt
boxhauled : boxhauld
brachygraphy : brachygrafy bragged · bragd
brained . braind
bramble · brambl branched · brancht
brangle . brangl brangled : brangld .
brawled brawld
brayed . brayd
breached · breacht
bread · breed breadth : bredth breakfast : brekfast breast : brest breath : breth breathable : brethabl breathed : breathd
breached : breacht
breese : brees breezed : breezd brieved : brieft
bridewell : bridewel briefed : briefd brightened : brightend brimmed : brimd brindle : brindl brindled : brindld
bristled : bristld brittle : britl broached : broacht broadened : broadend
bronzed : bronzd
broil : broil broiler, broiler : broiler bronze : bronz browned : brownd
browsed : browsd

LIST OF AMENDED SPELLINGS

brown, browne, a.: brown brownie: brownie bruise: bruise bruised: bruisd bubble: bubbl buckle: buckl buckled: buckld bulk-head: bulk head bull: bul bull-head: bul-hed bumble: bumbl bumped: bumpt bundled: bundld bundle: bundl e bundled: bundld
bungle: bungl bungled: bungld bur, burr: bur burdened: burdend burdensome: burdensum burg, burgh: burg burke: burk burked: burkt buried: buryd burned: burnd burnished: burnisht burrowed: burrowd burthened: burthend bushed: busht bushined: bushind bussed: bust
bustle: bustl bustled: bustld but, butt: but but-end, butt-end: but-end buttered: buttred buttoned: buttond buttressed: buttrest buxom: buxum bus: bys bussed: bust
by, bye, a.: by bygone: bygon

cabalist: cabalist cabined: cabind cackle: cackl cackled: cackld cacography: cacografy cacophony: cacofony caitiff: caitif calculable: calculabl calendered: calendard caliber, -bre: calfber calif, caliph, kalif, kaliph, etc.: calif or kalif called: calld
called: calld
caligraphy: caligrafy calve: calv calved: calvd camomile, chamo-: camomile camped: campt camphene: camfene camphor: camfor canalled: canald cancelled, -elled: cancelld canceling, -elling: canceling cancellation: cancelation candle: candl
candor, candour: candor cankered: cankerd
cankered: cankerd
canticle: canticl capered: capert captive: captiv
ca bandes: carbide caramel: caramel carved: carvd
carved: carvd
carminative: carminativ carolled, -elled: carold caroling, -elling: caroling carpel: carpl carnacle: carnal carry: cary carved: carvd
cashiered: cashierd castle: casl
castle: casl
castled: casld castor: castr castor-oil: castr oil castrated: castrated casual: casul catalogue: catalog catalogued: catalogd cataloguer: catalogger catastrophe: catastrofe catch: cach catechise: catechise catered: catrd caterwauled: caterwaulid cattle: catl caucused, -cussed: caucust caucusing, -cussing: caucusing
candle: candl
causative: causativ cauterize, -ise: cauterize caviled, -illed: cavild caviling, -illing: caviling caved: cavd cayenne: cayen ceased: ceast cedrine: cedrin ceiled: ceild cell, cel celled: celd cenotaph: cenotaf censurable: censurabl centre, center: center centred: centerd centuple: centupl cephalic: cefalic cephalopod: cefalopod cerography: cerografy chaff: chaf chaffed: chaft chained: chaind
chained: chaind
chalcography: chalcografy chalked: chalkt chambered: chamberd champagned: champaned
champagned: champaned
changeable: changeabl channeled, -elled: channeld channeling, -elling: channeling chapped, chapt charred: charrd chargeable: chargeabl charitable: charitabl charmed, charmd chartered: chartert chastened, chastend chastise, chastize: chastize chastisement, chastizment: chastizment chasuble: chasubl chattered, chattered chawed: chawd cheapened: cheapend checked: checkt cheered: cheerd cherished: cherisht chewed: chewd children: childrn chill: chil chilled: childd, child chincough: chincof chipped: chipt chirograph, chirogral chirography: chirografy chirped: chirpt chirruped, chirrupt chimbled, -elled: chimbld chiseling, -elling: chiseling chloride: chlorid chlorine: chlorin choler: color cholera: colera choleric: coleric chopped: chopt chorography: chorografy chrome, chroe chasm: chasm chough: chuf chronicle, chronicl chronicled: chronicld chronograph: chronograf chunked: chunkt chuckle: chuckl chuckled, chuckld chummed: chumd churched: churcht

circular: circular circular: circular cipher: cifer ciphered, cifferd circle: circl
circled, circld circumcise: circumcize circumvolve: circumvolv citrine, citrin: citrin cisors: see scissors clacked: clackt claimed: claimd clambered: clambered clamored: clamord clanked: clankt clapped: clapt clashed: clasht clasped: claspt classed: clast clattered: clattered clavicle: clavicl cleaned: cleand
cleaned: cleand
cleanliness: cleanliness cleanly: clenly cleanse: clenz cleaned: cleand
cleaved: cleavd
cleave: cleav cleaved: cleavd
clerked: clerkt clicked: clickt climbed: climbd clinched: clinsht clinked: clinkt clipped: clipt cloaked: cloakt clustered: clustard close, r: closr closet: closet closure: closure clough: cluf clyped: clypt clubbed: clubd clucked: cluckt clustered: clustered cluttered: cluttered coached: coacht coactive: coactiv coaid: coaid coarse: coars cobble: cobl cobbled: cobld cocked: cockt cockle: cockl
cockle: cockl
colored: colord
coercive: coercitiv cogitative: cogitativ cohesive: cohesiv coiled: coild collapse: collaps collapsed: collapst collared: collard collarage: collerag collective: collectiv colloquy: colloquy colon: colen
colored: colord
colorable: colorabl colored: colerd combat: combat combative: combativ combustible: combustibl comfort: comfurt comfortable: comfortabl comforter: comforter coming: coming commendable: commendabl commensurable: commensurabl commingle: commingl commanded: commanded communed: commund communicative: communicativ companion: companion companionable: companionabl companionship: companionship company: company comparable: comparabl comparative: comparativ compass: compas compassed: compast compatible: compatibl compelled: compeld competitive: competitiv complained: complaind comportable: comportabl composite: compozit comprehensive: comprehensiv compressed: compresd compressible: compresibl compressive: compresiv compulsive: compulsiv computable: computabl concealed: concelld conceivable: conceivabl conceive: concev concerned: concernd

conceptive: conceptiv concerned: concernd
concessive: concesiv conclusive: conclusiv concretive: concretiv uncovered: concerd concussive: concusiv condensed: condensd conducive: conducis confederative: confederativ conferred: conferd confessed: confest confirmed: confirmd confirmable: confirmabl confusable: confusabl conformed: conformd confront: confrunt congealed: congeald congealable: congealabl conglutinative: conglutinativ conjoined: conjoind conjunctive: conjunctiv connective: connectiv consecutive: consecutiv conservative: conservativ conserve, conserv considered: considerd considerable: considerabl consigned: consignd consolable: consolabl constable: constabl constitutive: constitutiv constrainable: constrainabl constrained: constraind constructive: constructiv contemplative: contemplativ contemptible: contemptibl contractible: contractibl contractile: contractil contributive: contributiv controlled: controld controllable: controlabl convened: convend conveyed: conveyd
convertible: convertibl conveyed: conveyd
convulsive: convulsiv cooed: cood cooked: cookt cooled: culd copied: copid copy: copi copulative: copulativ corked: corkt corned: cornd corrective: correctiv
corrective: correctiv corroborative: corroborativ corrosive: corrosiv cortex: cortex cosy, cozy: cozy couched: couchd cough: cof coughed: coft could: cood councilor, councillor, councilor counseling, counsellor: counselor counter marched: marcht countersigned, countersigned country: cuntry couple: cupl, cupls coupled: cupld couplet: cuplet coupling: cupling courage: curage courageous: curageous courteous: curteous courtesan: curtesan courtesy: curtesy cousin: cusin covenant: cuvenant cover: cuver covered: cuverd covert: cuvert covering: cuvering coverlet: cuverlet coverture: cuverture coved: cuvet covetous: cuvetous covey: cuvey cowed: cowd cowered: cowerd cowled: cowld coyen: cuyen coyenage: cuyenage coxy, coxy: coxy cracked: crackt crackle: crackl crackled: crackld crammed: cramd cramped: cramt crample, crampl crampled: crampld crashed: crasht crawled: crawld wrawled: crawlt creamed: creamd creased: creast creative: creativ credible: credibl crimped: crimpt crimple, crimpl crimpled: crimpld crinkle: crinkl crinkled: crinkld cripple: cripl crippled: cripld crisped: crispt criticise, -ize: criticize crooked, crookt crooked: crookt ed, crookt crossed: croat crotched: crocht crouched: crouchd crumb: crum crumbled: crumbld crumble: crumbl

crumbled: crumbld
crumple: crumpl crumpled: crumpld crushed: crusht crutch: cruch crutched: cruchd cuff: cof cuffed: cuft culled: culd culpable: culpabl cultivable: cultivabl cumbered: cumberd cumbers do: cumberum cumulative: cumulativ cupped: cupt curable: curabl curative: curativ curbed: curbd curled: curld curred: curred, curd cursive: cursiv curse: curs curved: curvd curvetting: curveting cuticle: cuticl cuttle fish: cut-fish

dabbed: dabd dabble: dabl dabbled: dabld dactyle, dactyl: dactyl daggle: dagl dappled: dapld
dammed: damd damnable: damnabl damped: dampt dandle: dandl dandled: dandld dandruff, dandriff: dandruf, dandrif dangle: dangl dangled: dangld dapple: dapl
dappled: dapld darkened, darkend darksome: darksum darned: darnd dashed: dasht dative: dativ dauhed: daubd dauphin, dauffin dawned: dawnd dazzle: dazl dazzled: dazld dead: ded deadened, dedend deadening: dedening deadly: dedly deaf, def: deaf deafened: defend deafening: defening deafness, defness dealt: delt dearth: derth death: deth debarred, debard debarked: debarkt debatable: debatabl debauched: debauchd debt: det debtor: detter decalogue: decalog decamped, decampt decayed: decayd deceased: deceast deceive: deceiv deceived, deceivd deceptive: deceptiv decipher: decifer deciphered: decifferd decisive: decisiv decked: deckt declaimed: declaimd declarative: declarativ decolor: decolor decolorize: decolorize decorative, decorativ decreed: decreed decreased, decreast decreasive, decreasiv deductible: deductibl deductive: deductiv deemed: deemd deepened: deepend defeasible: defeasibl defective: defectiv defense: defense defensive: defensiv definite: definit definitive: definitiv defrauded: defraud defrayed: defrayd delible: delibl delectable: delectabl deliberative: deliberativ delight: delit delighted: delitd delivered: delivert dell: del delusive: delusiv demagogue: demagog demandable: demandabl demeaned: demeand demeanor, demeanour: demeanor demesne, demens demolished: demolisht demonstrable: demonstrabl

AMENDED SPELLINGS

denouncative : denouncitativ denominative : denominativ deplorable : deplorabl deployed : deploy'd depressed : depress'd depressive : depressiv derisive : derisiv derivative : derivativ descriptive : descriptiv deserve : deserv designed : design'd designable : designabl desirable : desirabl despaired : despair'd despatch : despach despicable : despicabl despoiled : despoil'd destroyed : destroy'd destructive : destructiv detached : detach'd detailed : detail'd detained : detain'd detective : detectiv determinable : determinabl determine : determin determined : determin'd deterrive : deterriv develop, develope : develop developed : develop'd devisable : devisabl devise : devize devolve : devolv devolved : devolv'd dewed : dew'd dialed, dialled : dial'd dialing, dialling : dialing dialist, diallist : dialist dialogue : dialog diaphanous : diafanous diaphoretic : diaforetic diaphragm : diafragm dicephalous : dicefalous diffuse, v. : diffuze diffusible : diffusibl diffusive : diffusiv digestible : digestibl digraph : digraf digressive : digressiv dimmed : dim'd diminished : diminish'd diminutive : diminutiv dimple : dimpl dimpled : dimpl'd dingle : dingl dinned : din'd dipped : dip't directive : directiv disabuse : disabuze disagreeable : disagreeabl disappeared : disappear'd disarrayed : disarray'd disavowed : disavow'd disbelieve : disbeliev disbelieved : disbeliev'd disbowelled : disbowel'd disburdened : disburden'd disbursed : disburs'd discernible : discernibl discerned : discern'd discipline : disciplin disclaimed : disclaim'd disclose : disclose disclosure : disclosure discolor : discolor discolored, -oured : discolor'd discomfit : discumfit discomfort : discumfort discourage : discourage discourteous : discurteous discourtesy : discurtesy discover : discuver discovered : discuver'd discovery : discuvery discreditable : discreditabl discriminative : discriminativ discursive : discursiv discussed : discust discussive : discusiv disdained : disdain'd disembarked : disembarkt disembarrassed : disembarrast disemboweled : disemboweld disentangle : disentangl disentangled : disentangl'd disesteemed : disesteem'd disfavor, disfavour : disfavor disfavored, disfavoured : disfavor'd disgrace : disgrase disguised : disguis'd disguise : disguize disheartened : disheart'nd disheveled : disheveld dishonored, dishonoured : dishonor'd disinterred : disinter'd disjunctive : disjunctiv dismantle : dismantl dismantled : dismantl'd dismembered : dismember'd dismissed : dismist dismissive : dismissiv dispatch : dispach dispelled : dispell'd dispensable : dispensabl dispensed : dispens't dispersive : dispersiv displayed : display'd displeasure : displezure displosive : displosiv disputeused : disposest disputable : disputabl disreputable : disreputabl dissemble : dissembl dissembled : dissembl'd dissoluble : dissolubl dissolvable : dissolvabl dissolve : dissolv dissolved : dissolv'd dissuasive : dissuasiv dissyllable : dissyllabl distaff : distaf distained : distain'd distempered : distemper'd distensible : distensibl distill, distil : distil distilled : distil'd distinctive : distinctiv distinguishable : distinguishabl distinguished : distinguish't distractive : distractiv distrained : distrain'd distressed : distrest distributive : distributiv disturbed : disturb'd disuse, v. : disuze ditched : ditch't divisible : divisibl docile : docil, docile docked : dock't doctrine : doctrin doff : dof doffed : daft doll : dol dolphin : dolfin domicile : domicil domiciled : domicil'd donative : donativ double : dubl, dubla doubled : dubl'd doublet : dublet doubloon : dublon doubt : dout doubtful : doutful dove : duv dowered : dowerd dozen : duzen drabble : drabl draff : draf draft, draught : draft dragged : dragd draggle : dragl draggled : dragld dragooned : dragoond draught, draft : draft dread : dred dreadful : dredful dreamed : dream't drenched : drench't dressed : drest dribble : dribl dribbled : dribl'd driblet, dribblet : driblet drill : dril drilled : drild dripped : dript driven : drivn drizzle : drizl drizzled : drizld dropped : dropt drowned : drownd drugged : drugd drummed : drumd ducked : duckt ductile : ductil duellist, duellist : duellist dull : dul, dula
dulled : duld dumb : dum durable : durabl dutiable : dutiabl dwarfed : dwarft dwell : dwel dwelled : dweld dwindle : dwindl dwindled : dwindld

eagle : eagl eared : earl'd earl : erl early : erly earn : ern earned : ern'd earnest : ernest earnings : ernings earth : erth earthen : erthen earthling : erthling earthly : erthly eatable : eatabl eaten : eat'n ebb : eb ebbed : ebd eclipse : eclips eclipsed : eclips't eclogue : eclog
ed : d, ed edg'd : edg't edged : edgd effable : effabl effective : effectiv effectual : effectual effrontery : effruntery effuse : effuze effusive : effusiv egg : eg egged : egd elapse : elaps elapsed : elapst elective : electiv electrifiable : electrifiabl electrize : -lise : electrise eligible : eligibl ellipse : ellips elusive : elusiv embarked : embarkt embarrassed : embarrast embellished : embellisht embezzle : embezl embezzled : embezld embossed : embost emboweled, embowelled : embowel'd embowered : embower'd embroidered : embroider'd embroiled : embroil'd emphasis : emfasis emphasize : emfasize emphatic : emfatic employed : employ'd emporple : emporpl emulsive : emulsiv enactive : enactiv enameled, enamelled : enamel'd encamped : encampt encircle : encirc encircled : encirc'd encompass : encompas encompassed : encompast encountered : encountert encourage : encurage encroached : encroacht encumbered : encumber'd endeared : endear'd endeavor, endeavour : endevor endeavored, endeavoured : endevor'd endowed : endow'd endurable : endurabl enfeeble : enfeebl enfeebled : enfeebl'd enfeoff : enfef enfeoffed : enfeft engendered : engender'd engine : engin engineery : enginry engrained : engrain'd engulfed : engulft enjoyed : enjoy'd enkindle : enkindl enough : enuf enravished : enravisht enriched : enrich't enroll, enrol : enrol enrolled : enrold ensanguine : ensanguin ensealed : enseal'd entailed : entail'd entangle : entangl entangled : entangl'd entered : entar'd entertainert : entertain'd entrance, v. : entranse entranced : entrans't entrapped : entrapt enunciative : enunciativ enveloped : envelopt envenomed : envenom'd epaulet, epaulette : epaulet ephemera : efemera ephemeral : efemeral epigraph : epigraf epilogue : epilog epitaph : epitaf equable : equabl equaled, equalled : equal'd equipped : equipt equitable : equitabl erasable : erasabl ermine : ermin erosive : erosiv err : er erred : er'd eruptive : eruptiv eschewed : es'chew'd established : establisht estimable : estimabl etch : ech etched : echt euphemism : eufemism euphemistic : eufemistic euphonic : eufonic euphony : eufony euphuism : eufuism evasive : evasiv evincive : evinciv evitable : evitabl evolve : evolv evolved : evolv'd examine : examin examined : examin'd exceptionable : exceptionabl excessive : excesiv excitable : excitabl exclusive : exclusiv excretive : excretiv excursive : excursiv excusable : excusabl excuse, n. : excuze execrable : execrabl executive : executiv exercise : exercize exhaustible : exhaustibl exorcise : exorcize expansible : expansibl expansive : expansiv expelled : expell'd expensive : expensiv explain : explane explainable : explainabl explained : explain'd explative : explativ explicative : explicativ explosive : explosiv expressed : express't expressive : expresiv expugnable : expugnabl expulsive : expulsiv exquisite : exquisit extensible : extensibl extensive : extensiv extinguished : extinguisht extolled : extold extractive : extractiv extricable : extricabl eye : ey

factitive : factitiv fagged : fagd failed : faild fallible : fallibl faltered : faltert famine : famin famished : famisht farewell : farewel farmed : farm'd fascicle : fascicl fashioned : fashiond fashionable : fashionabl fastened : fasten'd fathered : father'd fathomed : fathom'd fathomable : fathomabl fattened : fatten'd favor, favour : favor favored : favor'd favorite : favorit feamed : feam'd feared : fear'd feasible : feasibl feather : fether feathered : fether'd feathery : fethery febrile : febril federative : federativ feeble : feebl feign : fein feigned : feind feminine : feminin fence : fense fermentative : fermentativ fertile : fertil, -ile festive : festiv fetch : fech fetched : fecht fevered : fever'd fiber, fibre : fiber fibered : fiber'd fibrine : fibrin fickle : fickl fiddle : fidl fiddled : fidl'd fidgetiness : fidgetiness fierce : fierse filched : filcht fill : fil filled : fil'd filliped : fillipt filtered : filter'd fingered : finger'd finished : finisht fished : fisht fissile : fisil fixed : fixt fix : fix fixed : fix'd flapped : flapt
flapped : flapt
flashed : flasht flattened : flatten'd flattered : flatter'd flavor, flavour : flavor flavored, flavoured : flavor'd flawed : flaw'd fledged : fledgd floored : flor'd flushed : flusht
flexible : flexibl flexile : flexil flinched : flincht

flogged : flogd
floored : flor'd
floundered : flounder'd flourish : flurish flourished : flurisht flushed : flusht
flustered : flustert fluttered : flutter'd fluxed : flux't fluxible : fluxibl fooled : fool'd footed : foot'd fobbed : fobd focused : focust foible : foibl offolled : foiled followed : follow'd fondle : fondl fondled : fondl'd fooled : fool'd
forbade : forbad forbidden : forbidn forcible : forcibl foregone : forgon forehead : forhed foreign : foren foreigner : forener forewarned : forwarn'd forgive : forgiv forgiveness : forgiveness forgone : forgon formed : form'd formative : formativ formidable : formidabl fosse, foss : foss fostered : foster'd fouled : foul'd foundered : founder'd fozed : foz't fragile : fragil freckle : frecki freckled : freckl'd freeze : freze freshened : fresh'nd fribble : fribbl friend : frend frieze : friz frightened : fright'nd frill : fril frilled : fril'd frisked : frisk't frittered : fritter'd frize : friz frizzed : friz'd frizzle : frizl frizzled : frizl'd frolicked : frolick't frolicsome : frolicsum front : frunt frowned : frown'd fugitive : fugitiv fulfill, fulfil : fulfil fulfilled : fulfil'd full : ful pulled : fulled fulsome : fulsum fumble : fumbl fumbled : fumbl'd furbished : furbisht furled : furl'd furlough : furlo furloughed : furlo'd furnished : furnisht furthered : further'd furtive : furtiv furze : fuze fuse : fuze fusible : fusibl fusion : fuzion fussed : fuss't futile : futil, -ile fuze : fuz

gabbed : gabd
gabble : gabl gabbled : gabl'd gall : gal galled : gal'd gamed : gam'd gamned : gamn'd gelled : gel'd gamble : gambl

AMENDED SPELLINGS

guild : gild guilty : gilty
guise : guize
gulfed : gulft gulped : gulpt
gungle : gungi
gurgled : gurgld gushed : gusht
gussie : gusi
gusted : gust

habitable : habitabl
hacked : hackt
hackle, hackl
hackled : hackld haggle : hagi
haggled : haggld hailed : haild
hallowed : hallowd
halterd : halterd
halve : halv, halves halved, halved hampered hampерd
handcuff : handcuf
handcuffed, handcuft
handsome : handsum hanged : hangd
happed : hapt
happened : happend
harangue, harang
harangued haranpd
harassed : harast
harbor, harbour : harbur
harbored, harboured, harbured
harked : harkt
harmed, harmd
harnessed : harnest
harped : harpt
harrowed harrowd
hashed hasht
hatch hach
hatched hacht
hatchment : hachment
haughty hauty hauled hauld
have hav havock, havoc havoc havocked havockt
hawked, hawkt
heat hut
headache hedake headland hedland
headlong hedlong healed, heald
health, helth healthy : helthy
heaped heapt
hazard hazerd
hearken, harken
hearkened, harkend
hearse herse
heaved : hevd
heart hart hearth harth hearty : harty
heather, hether
heave : hev
heaved, hevd
heaven : heven
heaves : heavs
heavy : hevy
hedged : hedgd
heeled : hild
heifer : hefer heightened : heightend
hell : hel
helped : helpt
helve : helv
hemlock : hemlok
hermaphrodite : hermafrodite
hiccough, hiccup, hiccof, hiccup
hiccoughed, hiccupped : hiccoft, hiccupt hidden : hidn
hill : hil
hilled : hild
hindered : hinderd
hipped : hipt
hissed : hist hitch : hich
hitched : hicht
hobble : hobl
homestead : homested honey : huney
honeyed : huneyd
honied, hunid
honor, honour : honor
honored, honoured : honerd
honorable, honourable : honorabl
hoodwinked : hoodwinkt
hoofed hooft
hooked, hookt
hooped hoopt
hooping-cough : hooping-cof
hopped hopt
horned hornd
horography horografy
horrible horribl
horsed horst
hortative hortativ
hospitable hospitabl
hough, hock : hock house, s hous
housed housd
housing housing howled howld
huff huf
huffed huft
hunted : hunt
humble : humbl
humbled humbld
humor, honour : humor
humored, humoured : humerd
humped humpt
hushed husht
hustle husti
hustled hustld
hutch hach
hutched hucht
hydrography hydrografy
hydrophobia hydrofobia
hyphen, hyfen
hyphened hyfend
hypocrite hypocrit

ichor ikor ill il
illative illativ illness ilsess
illusive illusiv
illustrative illustrativ imaginable imaginabl
imaginative imaginativ
imagine, imadjin
imagined, imadjind
imbecile, imbesil
imbittered imbitterd
imbrowned imbrownd
imitative imitativ
immeasurable immezurabl
impaired impaird
impassive impassiv
impeached impescht
impelled impeld
imperative imperativ
imperilled imperild
implacable implacabl
implausible implauzibl
impoverished impoverisht
impressed impresd
impressive impresiv
impulsive impulsiv
inaccessible, inaccesibl
inactive inactiv
incensed insend
incentive incentiv
incessive incesiv
incise incize
inclusive inclusiv
increased increast
incurred incurd
indexed indext
indicative indikativ
indorsed indurst
inferred, infird
infinite, infinit inflicted inflict inflective : inflectiv
informed : informd
infuse : infuze
inhelt : inhelt
inn : in inned : ind
inquisitive : inquisitiv installed : instalde
instead, instid
instinctive instinktiv
instructive instructiv
intelligible, intelligibl
interleave : interlev
interlaced : interlaste
interlinked : interlinkt
intermeddle : intermedl
interrogative : interrogativ
interspersed : interspurst
intestine, intestin
introduction : introduction
intrusive, intrusiv
invarnal : invarnd
invective : invectiv
inventive, inventiv involve, involv
inwebbed inwebd
inweave inwev
inwrapped inwrapt
iodine iodin, -ine
irksome : irksum
irritative, irritativ island iland isle : ile islet ilet itch ich itched icht
iterative iterativ

jabbered jabberd
jail, gaol jail
jailed jaild
jammed jamd
jarred jard
jasmine jasmin
jealous jelous
jealousy jelousy
jeered jeerd
jeopard jepard
jeopards jepardy
jerked jerkt
jessamine : jessamin
jibbed jibd
joggle jogi
joggled jogld
joined joind
jostle josti
jostled jostld
journal jurnal
journalism jurnalism journalist jurnalist journey jurney
journeyed jurneyd
joust, just just judicative judicativ
juggle jugi
juggled jugld
jumble jumbl
jumbled jumbld
jungle jungi
justifiable justifiabl
juvenile juvenil, ile

kedgeree : kedgeree
kettle : ketl
key, quay : key kidnapped kidnapt
kill kil
killed : kild
kindle kindl
kindled kindld
kissed kist
kitchen kichen
knoll knol knuckle knukl
knuckled knukld

labor, labour labur
labored laborerd labурd
lacked, lackt
lamb lam
launched : launcht
languished languisht
lapse laps
lapsed : lapst
lashed : lasht
latch lach
latched lacht
lathered latherd
laudable laudabl
laugh, laf
laughed, laft
laughable lafabl
laughter, lafter
launched launcht
laxative laxativ lead (metal) led leaden : leden
league : leag
leagued leagd
leaked : leakt
learned : learnd, larnt
leaped, leapt leapt, lept
learn larn
learned : lern-ed, lernd
learning lerning
learnt : larnt
leased least leather : lether
leathern lethern
leave : lev
leaven leven
leavened levend
levered leverd
legible, legibl
legislative, legislativ
lenitive lenitiv
leopard lepard
leavened : levend
leveled, levelled levelt
leveling, levelling leveling
lexicographer lexicografer
lexicography lexicografy liable liabl
libeled libelled libeld
libertine libertin, -tine
licensed licenst
licked lickt
lightened, lightend
limb lim
limped limpt
lipped lipt
lisped lispt
listened listend
lithograph lithogref
lithographed lithogrft
lithographer : lithografer lithography lithografy little litl
live liv lived livd
liveliong livlong
loathsome loathsum
locked lockt
loitered : loiterd
looked lookt
loosed loosd
looped loopt
loosed loosd
loosened loosend
lopped lopt
lovable luvable
love luv loved luvd
lovely luvly lucrative lucrativ
luff luf luffed luft
lull lul
lulled luld
lumped lumpt luster, lustre luster
lymph limf
lymphatic limfatic
lynched lyncht

mailed maild
manned mannd
manufactured manufakturd
maze mazi
melted meltid
mendicate mendikeit
mercied mercid
merged merjd
mesmerized mesmerizd
metaled meteld
mildewed mildewd
mill mil
milled mild milld
mimicked mimickt
miracle mirakl
misbecome misbecum
miserable, miserabl
misgive misgiv
missile : missil
missive, missiv
mistletoe : mistlitoe
misuse : misuze
mitre, miter : miter
mocked mockt
money munny
monitive monitiv
monk munk
monkey munkey
monkish munkish
monograph monogref
monologue monolog
monosyllable monosyllabl
moored murd
mopped mopt
motive : motiv
mouse : mowse
mower mouer
movable movabl moved movd
muddle mudl
muff muf
muffed muft
muffle muffl
muffled muffld
mulched : mulcht
mumble : mumbl
mumbled mumbld
munched : munsht

guild : gild
guilty : gilty
guise : guize
gulfed : gulft
gulped : gulpt
gungle : gungi
gurgled : gurgld
gushed : gusht
gussie : gusi
gusted : gust

habitable : habitabl
hacked : hackt
hackle, hackl
hackled : hackld
haggle : hagi
haggled : haggld
hailed : haild
hallowed : hallowd
halterd : halterd
halve : halv, halves
halved, halved
hampered hampерd
handcuff : handcuf
handcuffed, handcuft
handsome : handsum hanged : hangd
happed : hapt
happened : happend
harangue, harang
harangued haranpd
harassed : harast
harbor, harbour : harbur
harbored, harboured, harbured
harked : harkt
harmed, harmd
harnessed : harnest
harped : harpt
harrowed harrowd
hashed hasht
hatch hach
hatched hacht
hatchment : hachment
haughty hauty
hauled hauld
have hav
havock, havoc havoc havocked havockt
hawked, hawkt
heat hut
headache hedake
headland hedland
headlong hedlong
healed, heald
health, helth
healthy : helthy
heaped heapt
hazard hazerd
hearken, harken
hearkened, harkend
hearse herse
heaved : hevd
heart hart hearth harth hearty : harty
heather, hether
heave : hev
heaved, hevd
heaven : heven
heaves : heavs
heavy : hevy
hedged : hedgd
heeled : hild
heifer : hefer
heightened : heightend
hell : hel
helped : helpt
helve : helv
hemlock : hemlok
hermaphrodite : hermafrodite
hiccough, hiccup, hiccof, hiccup
hiccoughed, hiccupped : hiccoft, hiccupt
hidden : hidn
hill : hil
hilled : hild
hindered : hinderd
hipped : hipt
hissed : hist
hitch : hich
hitched : hicht
hobble : hobl
homestead : homested
honey : huney
honeyed : huneyd
honied, hunid
honor, honour : honor
honored, honoured : honerd
honorable, honourable : honorabl
hoodwinked : hoodwinkt
hoofed hooft
hooked, hookt
hooped hoopt
hooping-cough : hooping-cof
hopped hopt
horned hornd
horography horografy
horrible horribl
horsed horst
hortative hortativ
hospitable hospitabl
hough, hock : hock
house, s hous
housed housd
housing housing howled howld
huff huf
huffed huft
hunted : hunt
humble : humbl
humbled humbld
humor, honour : humor
humored, humoured : humerd
humped humpt
hushed husht
hustle husti
hustled hustld
hutch hach
hutched hucht
hydrography hydrografy
hydrophobia hydrofobia
hyphen, hyfen
hyphened hyfend
hypocrite hypocrit

icicle ikel ill il
illative illativ
illness ilsess
illusive illusiv
illustrative illustrativ
imaginable imaginabl
imaginative imaginativ
imagine, imadjin
imagined, imadjind
imbecile, imbesil
imbittered imbitterd
imbrowned imbrownd
imitative imitativ
immeasurable immezurabl
impaired impaird
impassive impassiv
impeached impescht
impelled impeld
imperative imperativ
imperilled imperild
implacable implacabl
implausible implauzibl
impoverished impoverisht
impressed impresd
impressive impresiv
impulsive impulsiv
inaccessible, inaccesibl
inactive inactiv
incensed insend
incentive incentiv
incessive incesiv
incise incize
inclusive inclusiv
increased increast
incurred incurd
indexed indext
indicative indikativ
indorsed indurst
inferred, infird
infinite, infinit
inflicted inflict
inflective : inflectiv
informed : informd
infuse : infuze
inhelt : inhelt
inn : in inned : ind
inquisitive : inquisitiv
installed : instalde
instead, instid
instinctive instinktiv
instructive instructiv
intelligible, intelligibl
interleave : interlev
interlaced : interlaste
interlinked : interlinkt
intermeddle : intermedl
interrogative : interrogativ
interspersed : interspurst
intestine, intestin
introduction : introduction
intrusive, intrusiv
invarnal : invarnd
invective : invectiv
inventive, inventiv
involve, involv
inwebbed inwebd
inweave inwev
inwrapped inwrapt
iodine iodin, -ine
irksome : irksum
irritative, irritativ
island iland
isle : ile
islet ilet itch ich itched icht
iterative iterativ

jabbered jabberd
jail, gaol jail
jailed jaild
jammed jamd
jarred jard
jasmine jasmin
jealous jelous
jealousy jelousy
jeered jeerd
jeopard jepard
jeopards jepardy
jerked jerkt
jessamine : jessamin
jibbed jibd
joggle jogi
joggled jogld
joined joind
jostle josti
jostled jostld
journal jurnal
journalism jurnalism
journalist jurnalist
journey jurney
journeyed jurneyd
joust, just just judicative judicativ
juggle jugi
juggled jugld
jumble jumbl
jumbled jumbld
jungle jungi
justifiable justifiabl
juvenile juvenil, ile

kedgeree : kedgeree
kettle : ketl
key, quay : key kidnapped kidnapt
kill kil
killed : kild
kindle kindl
kindled kindld
kissed kist
kitchen kichen
knoll knol knuckle knukl
knuckled knukld

labor, labour labur
labored laborerd labурd
lacked, lackt
lamb lam
launched : launcht
languished languisht
lapse laps
lapsed : lapst
lashed : lasht
latch lach
latched lacht
lathered latherd
laudable laudabl
laugh, laf
laughed, laft
laughable lafabl
laughter, lafter
launched launcht
laxative laxativ
lead (metal) led leaden : leden
league : leag
leagued leagd
leaked : leakt
learned : learnd, larnt
leaped, leapt leapt, lept
learn larn
learned : lern-ed, lernd
learning lerning
learnt : larnt
leased least
leather : lether
leathern lethern
leave : lev
leaven leven
leavened levend
levered leverd
legible, legibl
legislative, legislativ
lenitive lenitiv
leopard lepard
leavened : levend
leveled, levelled levelt
leveling, levelling leveling
lexicographer lexicografer
lexicography lexicografy
liable liabl
libeled libelled libeld
libertine libertin, -tine
licensed licenst
licked lickt
lightened, lightend
limb lim
limped limpt
lipped lipt
lisped lispt
listened listend
lithograph lithogref
lithographed lithogrft
lithographer : lithografer
lithography lithografy
little litl
live liv
lived livd
liveliong livlong
loathsome loathsum
locked lockt
loitered : loiterd
looked lookt
loosed loosd
looped loopt
loosed loosd
loosened loosend
lopped lopt
lovable luvable
love luv
loved luvd
lovely luvly
lucrative lucrativ
luff luf
luffed luft
lull lul
lulled luld
lumped lumpt
luster, lustre luster
lymph limf
lymphatic limfatic
lynched lyncht

mailed maild
manned mannd
manufactured manufakturd
maze mazi
melted meltid
mendicate mendikeit
mercied mercid
merged merjd
mesmerized mesmerizd
metaled meteld
mildewed mildewd
mill mil
milled mild milld
mimicked mimickt
miracle mirakl
misbecome misbecum
miserable, miserabl
misgive misgiv
missile : missil
missive, missiv
mistletoe : mistlitoe
misuse : misuze
mitre, miter : miter
mocked mockt
money munny
monitive monitiv
monk munk
monkey munkey
monkish munkish
monograph monogref
monologue monolog
monosyllable monosyllabl
moored murd
mopped mopt
motive : motiv
mouse : mowse
mower mouer
movable movabl
moved movd
muddle mudl
muff muf
muffed muft
muffle muffl
muffled muffld
mulched : mulcht
mumble : mumbl
mumbled mumbld
munched : munsht

maneuver, manœuvre : manœuver manoeuvred, manœuvred : manœuvred marched, marcht marked markt
marveled, marvelled : marveld marvelous, marvellous : marvelous masculine : masculin massed mast massive, massiv mastered, mastерd match mach matched macht
materialize, materialise : materialize meadow medow meager, meagre meager meant ment measles measls measurable : mezurabl measure : mezure measured mezurd meddle medl meddled : medld
meddlesome : medlesum medicine medicin meditative meditativ melancholy, melancoly memorable, memorabl memorialize, memorialise : memorialize mephitic mefitic mephitis : mefitis mercantile mercantil, -ile merchandise : merchandize merchantable, merchantabl meshed mesht
messed mest
metamorphose : metamorfose metamorphosis : metamorfosis metaphysics metafysics metre, meter : meter mettle metl mettled metld mettlesome : metlesum mewled mewld middle midl middling midling
mildewed mildewd
mill mil
milled mild milld
mimicked mimickt
miracle mirakl
misbecome misbecum
miserable, miserabl
mingle : mingl
missile : missil
missive, missiv
mistletoe : mistlitoe
misuse : misuze
mitre, miter : miter
mocked mockt
money munny
monitive monitiv
monk munk
monkey munkey
monkish munkish
monograph monogref
monologue monolog
monosyllable monosyllabl
moored murd
moped mopt
motive : motiv
mouse : mowse
mower mouer
movable movabl
moved movd
muddle mudl
muff muf
muffed muft
muffle muffl
muffled muffld
mulched : mulcht
mumble : mumbl
mumbled mumbld
munched : munsht

AMENDED SPELLINGS

murdered: murderd murmured murmurd muscle: muscl mutable, mutabl muzzle muzl muzzled muzzld myrtle, myrtl nabbed nabd nailed naild

naphtha: naptha, naftha narrative narrativ narrowed, narrowd native: nativ neared: neard needle: needl negative: negativ nephew, nevew, nefew nephritic nefritic nerve: nerv nerved, nervd nestle: nestl nestled: nestld nettle: netl neutralise, -ize: neutralize newfangled, newfangld newfashioned: newfashiond nibble, nibl nibbled: nibld necked: nickt nipple, nipl nitre, niter: niter noddle: nodl nominative: nominativ notable: notabl notch: noch notched, nocht nourish: nurish nourished nurisht nozzle, nosle nozl nubile: nubil null: nul
numb: num numskull numskul nursed: nurst nutritive, nutritiv nuzzle: nuzl nymph: nymf

oared: oard objective: objectiv observable observabl observe: observ observed: observd obtained obtaind obtainable, obtainabl obtrusive, obtrusiv occurred, occurd odd: od offence, offense offens offensive offensiv offered, offerd
ogre, ogur: oger olive, oliv once: onse one: on opened opend ophidian: ofidian ophthalmic: ofthalmic ophthalmy ofthalmy opposite opposit oppressed oppresst oppressive: oppressiv optative: optativ oracle oracl ordered ordrd ordered: ordered organise, organize organize orphan, orfan orthographer: orthografer orthographic orthografic orthography, orthografy ostracise, ostracize ostra cise outlive: outliv outspread outspred outstretch outstrech outstretched outstrecht overawed: overawd
overawe overaw
overawed, overawd

overpassed, overpast overspread: overspred owe, ow owed: oud owned, ownd oxide, oxid oxid

packed packt pack thread jack thred paddle, padl paddled, padld padlocked padlockt pained paind
pained, paind
palaeography palaeografy palatable palatabl palatine palatin line palled palld palliative palliativ palmed, palmd palpable palpabl paltered, paltred pampered pampert pamphlet pamflet pandered, pandred paraded, paradled paradt parish: parisht parallelled: parallelled parlour: parlor parliament parliament parsed, parst parst partible partibl participle participl particle, particl partitive partitiv passed, past past passable passabl passive: passiv patch pach patched pacht patrolled patrold patterned patternd pavilioned pavilliond paused praud peaceed peaced payable payabl peaceable peaceabl pearched peacht pealed pealt pearl perl peasant pezant peasantry pezantry pease, peas peas pebble pebl peccable peccabl pecked peckt pedagogue pedagog peddle pedl peddled pedld peddler pedler pedimele pedimel peeled peelt peeped peept peered peerd peeped peept
pell pel pellicle: pellicl pell mell pel mel penned pend pence pense
pencilled, pencild pencild penetrable penetrabl penetrative penetrativ penitle penitl, tle pensioned pensiond pensive pensiv people peple

peppered: peppered perceivable: perceivabl perceive: perceiv perceived perceivd perceptible perceptibl perceptive perceptiv perched perchd perfectible, perfectibl perfective perfectiv performative performativ performed performd performable performabl perilled perild perild periphery perifery periphrase periphrase periphrastic periphrastic perished perisht perishable perishabl perruqued periqued periwinkle periwinkl perked perkt permeable permeabl perishable permissibl permissive permissiv perplexed perplext perquisite perquisit personable personabl perspective perspectiv perspirable perspirabl persuadable persuasibl persuasive persuasiv pertained pertaind perturbed perturbd pervasive pervasiv perversive perversiv pervertible pervertibl pestered pestrd pestle pestl petit petty petty petitioned petitiond petrifactive petrifactiv ph f phaeton faeton phalansterian falansterian phalanstery falanstery phalanx, falanx phantasm fantasm phantasmagoria: fantasmagoria phantom fantom pharmacy farmacy pharynx farynx phase faze pheasant fezant phenix fenix phenomenal fenomenal phenomenon fenomenon phial vial, fial, vial philander filander philanthropic filanthropic philanthropist filanthropist philanthropy filanthropy philharmonic filharmonic philippic filippic philologer filologer philological filological philologist filologist philology filology philomel filomel philopena filopena philosopher filosofer philosophic filosofic philosophize filosofize philosophy filosofy phlebotomy flebotomy phlegm flegm phlegmatic flegmatic phlox flox phoenix, phenix, fenix, fenix phonetic fonetic phonetist fonetist phonic fonic phonograph fonograf phonographer: fonografer phonographic fonografic phonography fonografy phonologic fonologic phonologist fonologist phonology fonology phonotypy, fonotypy

phosphate: fosfate phosphoric: fosforic phosphorus: fosforus photograph: fotograf photographed: fotografd photographer: fotografer photographic: fotografic photography: fotografy photometer: fotometer photometry, fotometry phrase: frase phraseology, fraseology phrenologist: frenologist phrenology frenology phrensy, frenzy, frenzy phthisic tisic phylactery fylactery physic: fysic physical fysical physicked fysickt physician fysician physicist fysicist physics fysics physiognomist fysiognomist physiognomy fysiognomy physiologic fysiologic physiologist fysiologist physiology, fysiology physiography fysiografy physiology fytology picked pickt pickle pickl pickled pickld pienicked, pienickt pilfered pilferd pill pil pillowed pillowd pimped pimpt pimple pimpl pimpled pimpldt pinned pind pinched pinsht pinioned pinniond pinked pinkt pinnacle pinnacl pintle pintl pinioned, pinnaced pished pisht pitch pich pitched picht pitcher, picher pitchy pichy pitiable pitiabl placable placabl planned planned plaintiff plaintif plaintive plaintiv planned plannd planked plankt plashed plasht plastered plastered plausible plausibl plausive plausiv played plaid pleasant plezant pleasurable plezurabl pleasure, plezure pledged pledgd pliable, pliabl plough, plow: plow plower, plowr plow see plough plowed plowd plowable plowabl plucked pluckt plugged plugd plumb: plum plumbed, plumd
plumber, plummer: plummer plumbing, plumming plumming plumb-line: plum-line plumped plumpt plundered: plundred pouched poucht
poisoned: poisond polished, polisht polygraph polygraf polygraphy: polygrafy polysyllable: polysyllabl

mel pommelled: pommeld pondered: ponderd ponderable: ponderabl pontiff, pontif poodle: poodl popped popt
porphyritic: porfyritic porphyry porfyry portable portabl portioned, portiond portrayed portrayd positive positiv possessed possest possessive possessiv possible: possibl potable potabl pottle potl pouched poucht poured pourd pouthered pourdred practicable practicabl practise, practis practised: practist pranked prankt prattle pratl prattled pratld prattler pratler prayed prayd preached preacht preamble preambl prevalent: precalty preceptive preceptiv preclusive preclusiv precocious precocity precursive precursiv predestine predestin predestined predestind predetermine predetermin predetermined predetermind predicable predicabl predictive predictiv premed premd
pre established pre establisht preferable preferabl preferred preferd prefigurative prefigurativ prefixed: prefixt prehensile prehensil prelusive prelusiv premise, premiss premis premise, v premize premised premizd premeditated premeditated preparative preparativ prepositive prepositiv prepossessed prepossest prerequisite prerequisit prerogative prerogativ prescriptive prescriptiv presumable presumabl
presumable presumabl
presumptive presumptiv pretense, pretence; pretense preterit, preterite preterit prevailed prevaild preventable preventabl preventive preventiv preyed preyd pricked: prickt prickle: prickl primitive primitiv principle, principl principled principld printed: printd prisoned, prisond pristine: pristin -ine privative privativ probable: probabl probatis probativ procreative, procreativ procurable: procurabl proficible: proficibl productive: productiv nest professed: professt proffered: proffered profitable: profitabl progressed: progrest progressive: progressiv prohibitive: prohibitiv projectile: projectil prologue: prolog prolonged: prolongd promise: promis promised: promisd promotive: promotiv propped: propt propagable: propagabl propelled: propeld prophecy: profecy prophesy, prefesy prophet: profet prophetess: profetess prophetic: profetic prophylactic: profylactic proportioned: proportiond proportionable: proportionabl propulsive: propulsiv proscriptive: proscriptiv prospective: prospectiv prospered: prospert protective: protectiv protractive: protractiv protrusive: protrusiv provable: provabl provocative: provocativ provoked: provokt published publisht puckered: puckerd puddle: pudl puddled puddld puddling: puddling puerile pueril, -ile puff: puf puffed: puft pull pul pulled: pulld pulsatile: pulsatil pulsative, pulsativ pulsed, pulst pulverable: pulverabl pumped: pumpt punned: pund punched: puncht punished: punisht punishable: punishabl punitive: punitiv purr, pur purred, purd purchasable: purchasabl purgative: purgativ purled purld purline, purlin: purlin purloined: purloind purple purpl purpled: purpld pursued: pursud pushed: pusht putative putativ putrefactive: putrefactiv puttered: puttrd puzzle: puzl puzzled: puzzld

quadded: quadd quadruple: quadrupl quail: quail quaffed: quaft quailed: quaild qualitative: qualitativ quantitative: quantitativ quarreled, quarrelled: quarrel quarrelsome: quarrelsom quay, key: key quell: quell quelled: quelld quenched: quencht queue, cue: cue quibble: quibl quibbler: quibler quicksand: quicksand

reprimand: reprimt reprieve: reprieve reprieved: reprieved reproached: reproacht reproductive: reproductiv reptile: reptil, -ile republished: republisht repulsive: repulsiv requisite: requisit resemble: resembl resembled: resembld reserve: reserv reserved: reserved resistible: resistibl resolve: resolv resolved: resolved respective: respectiv respite: respit responsible: responsibl responsive: responsiv restive: restiv restrained: restraind restrictive: restrictiv retailed: retaild retained: retaind retaliative: retaliativ retentive: retentiv retouch: retuch retouched: retucht retrenched: retrencht retributive: retributiv retrievable: retrievabl retrieve: retriev retrieved: retrieved retrospective: retrospectiv returned: returnd revealed, revelled: revelled reveling, revelling: reveling reversed: reversd reversible: reversibl revolve: revolv revolved: revolved revulsive: revulsiv rhyme, rime: rime
rhymer, rimer: rimer ridden: ridn riddle: ridl riddled: ridld riffraff: riffraf rigged: rigd rigor, rigour: rigor rill: ril rime, rhyme: rime
rimple: rimpl rinsed: rinsd ripsaw: ripsaw ripple: ripl rippled: ripld rise, v.: rize risen: rizn risible: risibl risked: riskt rivaled, rivalled: rivald riven: rivn
riveted, rivetted: riveted roared: roard robbed: robd rockab: rockt rolled: rold
rolled: rold
romped: rompt roofed: rooft roomed: roomd rose: roze rotten: rotn rough: ruf roughen: rufen roughened: rufend roughening: rufening rowed: rowd ruff: ruf ruffled: ruffl rustic: rustic rustle: russl rustled: russld rustled: rustld

ushered: usherd vaulted: vault veddened: veddend veddle: vedl veggied: vejd veiled: veild
vellumed: vellumd venomed: venomd ventured: ventured verified: verifid vermined: vermind vesseled: vesseld vestible: vestibl victualed: victuald vignetted: vignetted villainized: villainizd violated: violated violined: violind violoncellist: violoncellist virginal: virginal visaged: visajd visored: visord vitalized: vitalizd vitrified: vitrifid vocalized: vocalizd volleyed: volleyed vulcanized: vulcanizd

wadded: wadd waddled: waddld wagged: wagd
wailed: waild
saltpetre, -peter: saltpeter salve: salv salved: salvd samphire: samfire sanative: sanativ sandaled: sandald sanguine: sanguin sapphire: safire sardine, sardin, -ine sashed: sasht saunitered: saunterd savior, saviour: savior savor, saviour: savor savored, savoured: savord scalped: scalpt scanned: scand
scarred: scard scarce: scarse scarcity: scarsity scarfed: scarft scattered: scatterd scent, sent: sent scepter, sceptre: scepter sceptered, sceptred: sceptord sceptic, skeptic: skeptic scholar, scolar: scolar scholastic: scolastic school: scool schooner: scooner scimitar, cimitar: cimitar scissors: cisors scoff: scof scoffed: scoft scooped: scoopt scorned: scornd scoured: scourd scourge: scurge scrabble: scrabl scramble: scrambl scrambled: scrambld scratch: scrach scratched: scracht screwed: screwd
screamed: screamd screeched: screecht screened: screend screwed: screwd
scribble: scribl scribbled: scribld scrubbed: scrubd scuffle: scufl scuffled: scufld scull: scul sculled: sculd scummed: scumd scurrile: scurril scuttle: scutl scuttled: scutld scythe, sithe: sithe sealed: seald seamed: seamd search: serch searched: sercht seared: seard seasonable: seasonabl seclusive: seclusiv secretive: secretiv sedative: sedativ seductive: seductiv seemed: semd seize: seez seized: seizd sell: sel selves: selvs sensed: sensd sensible: sensibl sensitive: sensitiv
separable: separabl separative: separativ sepulcher, sepulchre: sepulcher sepulchered, sepulchred: sepulchrd sequestered: sequestrd seraph: seraf seraphic: serafic seraphim: serafim serve: serv served: servd serviceable: serviceabl servile: servil, -ile sesille: sessil, -ile settle: setl settled: setld settlement: setlment sewed: sewd sextile: sextil shackle: shackl shackled: shackld shadowed: shadowd shall: shal shambles: shambls sharpened, sharpend: sharpend sheared: sheard sheaves: shevz shell: shel shelled: sheld sheltered: sheltered shelve: shelv, shelve shelved: shelvd sheriff: sheriff shingle: shingl shingled: shingld shingles: shingls shipped: shipt shirked: shirkt shivered: shivverd shocked: shockt shopped: shopt shortened: shortend shove: shuv shoved: shuvd shoving: shuving shovel: shuvel shoveled: shuvld showed: shoud shrieked: shrieckt shrill: shrill shrugged: shrugd shuffle: shufl shuffled: shufld shuttle: shuttl sicative: siccativ sickened: sickend slave: slev sighed: sighd signed: signd significative: significativ sill: sil silvered: silverd simple: simpl

since: sinse single: singl singled: singld sipped: sipt siphon: sifon sithe: see scythe sizable: sizabl sketch: skech sketched: skecht skiff: skif skill: skil skilled: skild skimmed: skimd skinned: skind skipped: skipt skull: skul skulled: skuld slacked: slackt slackened: slackend slammed: slamd slapped: slapt slaughter, slantey slaughtered: slawterd sleeve: slev sleeved: slevd slidden: slidn slipped: slipt slivered: sliverd slouched: slouchd slough: sluf sloughed: sluft slumbered: slumberd slurred: slurrd smashed: smasht
smeared: smeerd smelt: smel smelted, smelt, smelt smirked: smirkt
smoothed: smoothd
smuggle: smugl
smuggled: smugld
snaffle: snafl
snapped: snapt
sneered: sneerd
snatch: snach
snatched: snacht sneaked: sneakt
sneered: sneerd
sneeze: sneez
sneezed: sneezd
sniff: snif
sniffed: snift
snivel: snivel
sniveled, snivelled: sniveld snooze: snooz
snoozed: snoozd
snowed: snowd
snubbed: snubd
snuff: snuf
snuffed: snuft snuffle: snufl
snuffled: snufld
snuggle: snugl
snuggled: snugld
soaked: soakt
soaped: soapt
soared: soard
sobbed: sobd
sobered: sobberd
sodden: sodn
softened: softend soiled: soild
sojourn: sojurn
sojourned: sojurnd
sojourner: sojurner
soldered: soldrd
soluble: solubl
solutive: solutiv solve: solv
solved: solvd somber, sombre: somber
some: sum
-some: -sum somebody: sumbody
somehow: sumhow
somersault, sumersault: somersault, sumersault
somerset: somerset something: sumthing
son: sun
sophism: sofism
sophist: sofist sophisticate: sofisticate
sophistry: sofistry
sophomore: sofomore
sophomoric: sofomoric soured: sourd
source: sourse
southerly: sutherly
southern: suthern
southron: suthron
sovereign: soveren sovereignty: soverenty
sowed: sowd spanned: spand spangle: spangl
spangled: spangld
sparked: sparkt
sparred: sparrd
sparkle: sparkl
sparkled: sparkld
spattered: spatterd
spawned: spawnd
specked: specked
speckle: specki
speckled: speckld
spectacle: spectacl
spectacles: spectacls
specter, spectre: specter spell: spel
spelled: speld spewed: spewd
spheroid: sferoid
sphere: sfere
smashed: smasht
smeared: smeerd
smelt: smel
smelted, smelt, smelt smirked: smirkt
smoothed: smoothd
smuggle: smugl
smuggled: smugld
snaffle: snafl
snapped: snapt
sneered: sneerd
snatch: snach
snatched: snacht
sneaked: sneakt
sneered: sneerd
sneeze: sneez
sneezed: sneezd
sniff: snif
sniffed: snift
snivel: snivel
sniveled, snivelled: sniveld
snooze: snooz
snoozed: snoozd
snowed: snowd
snubbed: snubd
snuff: snuf
snuffed: snuft
snuffle: snufl
snuffled: snufld
snuggle: snugl
snuggled: snugld
soaked: soakt
soaped: soapt
soared: soard
sobbed: sobd
sobered: sobberd
sodden: sodn
softened: softend
soiled: soild
sojourn: sojurn
sojourned: sojurnd
sojourner: sojurner
soldered: soldrd
soluble: solubl
solutive: solutiv
solve: solv
solved: solvd
somber, sombre: somber
some: sum
-some: -sum somebody: sumbody
somehow: sumhow
somersault, sumersault: somersault, sumersault
somerset: somerset
something: sumthing
son: sun
sophism: sofism
sophist: sofist sophisticate: sofisticate
sophistry: sofistry
sophomore: sofomore
sophomoric: sofomoric
soured: sourd
source: sourse
southerly: sutherly
southern: suthern
southron: suthron
sovereign: soveren
sovereignty: soverenty
sowed: sowd
spanned: spand
spangle: spangl
spangled: spangld
sparked: sparkt
sparred: sparrd
sparkle: sparkl
sparkled: sparkld
spattered: spatterd
spawned: spawnd
specked: specked
speckle: specki
speckled: speckld
spectacle: spectacl
spectacles: spectacls
specter, spectre: specter spell: spel
spelled: speld
spewed: spewd
spheroid: sferoid
sphere: sfere

spherics: sferics spheroidal: sferoidal spherule: sferule sphinx: sfinx spill: spil spilled: spild, spilt spindle: spindl spindled: spindld spittle: spitl splashed: splasht spoiled: spoild, spoilt sponge: spunge sprained: spraind spreaded: spreadd spread: spred sprightly: spritely spurred: spurd spurned: spurnd sputtered: sputterd squandered: squanderd squealed: squeeld squeaked: squeakt squealed: squeald squeeze: squeez squeezed: squeezd stabbed: stabd
staff: staf stained: staind stalled: stalld stammered: stammerd stamped: stampt stanched: stanchd starred: starrd startle: startl startled: startld starve: starv starved: starvd stayed: stayd steal: steel steadfast: stedfast steady: stedy stealth: stelth steamed: steamd steeped: steept steeple: steepl steered: steerd stemmed: stemd stenographer: stenografa stenographic: stenografic stenography: stenografy stepped: stept sterile: steril stewed: stewd stickle: stickl stickled: stickld stiff: stif stiffened: stiffend still: stil stilled: stild stirred: stirrd stitch: stich stitched: stichd stocked: stockt stomach: stumac stomached: stumacd stomachic: stumachic stopped: stopt
stopped: stopt
stopple: stopl stormed: stormd stowed: stowd straddle: stradl straddled: straddld straggle: stragl straggled: straggld strained: straind strangle: strangl strangled: strangld strapped: strapt streaked: streakt, streaked strengthened: strengthend stretch: strech stretched: strecht stricken: stricken stripped: stript striven: striven stroll: strol
strolled: strold, strolld stubble: stubbl stuff: stuf, stuft stuffed: stuft

AMENDED SPELLINGS

stumped, stumpt stuttered, stuttèrd subjective: subjectiv subjunctive: subjunctiv submissive: submissiv subtile: subtil subtle: sutl subtly: sutly subversive, subversiv successive: successiv succor, succour: succor succored, succoured: succord succumb: succum succumbed, succumd sucked: suckt suckle: suckl suckled: suckld suffered: sufferd suffixed: suffixt suffuse, suffuze suggestive: suggestiv suitable: suitabl sulphate: sulfate sulphur: sulfur sulphurate: sulfurate sulphuret: sulfuret sulphuric: sulfuric sulphurous: sulfurous summed: sumd sundered: sunderd superlative: superlativ supple: supl suppressed: suppresst suppurative: suppurativ surcingle: surcingl surpassed: surpast surprise, surprize surveyed: surveyd swaddle: swaddl swapped: swapt swallowed, swallowd swamped: swampt sweyed, swayd sweat: swet sweetened: sweetend swell: swel swelled, sweld sweltered, swoltèrd swerve: swurv swerved: swurvd swollen, swoln: swoln swooned: swoond sylph: sylf synagogue, synagog

tabernacle: tabernacl tacked: tackt tackle, tackl tackled: tackld tactile: tactil tagged, tagd talked, talkt talkative, talkativ tanned: tand tangible: tangibl tapped: tapt tapered, taperd tarred: tard tarried: tarid tariff: tarif tasted, tastt tasseled: tasseld tattered: tattèrd tattle, tatl tattled, tatld taxed, taxt taxable: taxabl teachable: teachabl teemed, teemd telegraph: telegraf telegraphed: telegraft telegraphic: telegrafic telegraphy: telegrafy telephone: telefone telephonic: telefonic tell: tel tempered: tempèrd temple: templ tenable: tenabl tendered: tendèrd termed, termd terrible: terribl thanked: thankt thawed: thawd theater, theatre: theater themselves: themselvs thence: thens thickened: thickend thieve: thiev thieved: thievd thimble, thimbl thinned: thind thistle: thisl thorough, thoro though, tho': tho thrashed: thrasht thread, thred threat: thret threaten: thretn threatened: thretnd thrill: thril thrilled, thrild throbbed: throbd thronged: thrompt throttle: throtl throttled: throtld through, thro', thru throughout: thruout thrummed: thrumd thumb: thum thumbed, thumd thumped: thumpt thundered: thundèrd thwacked: thwackt ticked: tickt tickle: tickl tickled: tickld tierce: tiers till: til tillable: tillabl tilled: tild timed: timd tingle: tingl tingled: tingld tinkered: tinkerd tinkle, tinkl tinkled: tinkld tipped, tipt: tipt tipple: tipl tippled: tipld tipstaff: tipstaf tiresome: tiresum tisic: see phthisic tittered: tittèrd tittle, titl titled, titld toilsome, toilsum tolerable: tolerabl tolled, told, told ton: tun tongue: tung tongued: tungd toothed: tootht toothache, toothake topographer: topografer topography: topografy topple: topl toppled, topld toured, tourd, tourt tottered: tottèrd touch: tuch
touched: tucht touchy, tuchy tough, tuf toughen: tufen toughened: tufend toured: tourd toyed: toyd traceable: traceabl tracked: trackt tractable: tractabl trafficked, trafficht traded, tradid trained: traind tramped: trampt trample: trampl trampled: trampld trance: transe tranquillize, tranquillise: tranquillize transferred: transferd transformed: transformd transfuse: transfuse transmissive: transmissiv trapped: trapt trapanned: trapand traveled, travelled: travèld traveler, traveller: traveler treacherous: trecherous treachery: trecherry treacle, treacl tread: tred treadle: tredl treatise: treatis treasure: trezure treasurer: treasurer treasury: trezury treble: trebl tremble: trembl trembled: trembld trenched: trenchd trepanned: trepand trespassed: trespast trestle: treatl, tressel trusted, trustt

trickle: trickl trickled: trickld triglyph: triglyf trill: tril trilled: trild trimmed: trimd tripped: tript triple: tripl tripled: tripld triumph: triumf triumphed: triumft triumphal: triumfal triumphant: triumfant trodden: trodn trooped: troopt trouble: trubl troubled: trubld troublesome: trublsum troublous: trublous trough: trof trucked: trukt truckle: truckl truckled: truckld trumped: trumpt tucked: tuckt tugged: tugd tumble: tumbl tumbled: tumbld turned: turnd turtle, turtl twaddle: twaddl twanged: twangd tweaked: tweakt twelve: twelv twill: twil twilled: twild twinkle: twinkl twinkled: twinkld twirled: twirld twitch: twich twitched: twicht twittered: twittèrd typographer: typografer typographical: typografical typography: typografy

un (negative prefix): see the simpl forms uncle, uncl unwounted: unwunted use, s. uze usual, usuul uterine: uterin, ine vaccine, vaccin, -ine valuable: valuabl valve: valv vamped: vampt vanished: vanisht vanquished: vanquisht vapor, vapour: vapor vapored, vapoured: vapord variable: variabl vegetable, vegetabl vegetative, vegetativ vehicle: vehicl vell: vell veiled: veild veined: veind

ventured: ventèrd ventricle: ventricl veritable: veritabl verged: vurjd verdicle: verdicl vesicle: vesicl viewed: vieud vigor, vigour: vigor vindictive, vindictiv vineyard: vinyard visible: visibl vocative, vocativ volatile, volatil, -ile vouched: voucht

wafered: wafèrd
wagged, wagd
wagered: wagèrd waggle: wagl waggled: wagld wailed: waild
waive: waiv waived: waivd walked: walkt warred: wurd warble: warbl warbled: warbld warmed: warmd washed: washt watch: wach watched: wacht watered: watèrd waged: wajd weakened: weakend wealth: welth wealthy: welthy weaned: weand
weapon: wepon weather, wether weathered: wethèrd weave: weav webbed: webd weaned: weand
welcome, welcum welcomed: welcumd well: wel welled, weld were: wer wheeled: wheeld wheeze: wheez wheezed: wheezd whence: whens whimpered: whimperd whipped: whipt whir, whirr: whir whirred: whurd whirled: whurld whisked: whiskt whispered: whisperd whistle, whistl whistled: whistld whizzed: whizd whole: hole wholesale: holesale wholesum: holesum wholly: holely

whooped: whoopt will: wil willed: willd, wild willed, willed: willed winkle: winkl winged: wingd winked: winkt winnowed: winnowd withered: withèrd withheld: withheld women: wimen won: wun wonder: wunder wondered: wunderd wonderful: wunderful wondrous: wundrous wont: wunt wonted: wunted worked: wurkt worm: wurm wormed: wurmd worry: wurry worse: wurse worship: wurship worshiped, worshipped: wurshipt worst, wurst worth: wurth
worthless: wurthless worthy: wurthy wrangle: wrangl wrangled: wrangld wrapped: wrapt wrenched: wrenchd
wrenched: wrenchd
wrestle: wresl wrestled: wresld wretch: wrech wretched: wreched wriggle: wrigl wriggled, wrigld wrinkle: wrinkl wrinkled, wrinkld written: writn

xanthine: xanthin xylography: xylografy

yawned: yownd yeaned: yeand yearn: yern yearned: yernd yell: yel yelled: yeld yeoman: yoman yerked: yerkt young: yung

zealot: zelot zealous: zelous zephyr: zefyr zincography: zincografy zoography: zoografy

LIST OF WRITERS QUOTED AND AUTHORITIES CITED IN THE DICTIONARY

	Cited in Dict. as
Aasen, Ivar Andreas (1813–1896). Norwegian Philologist. ("Norsk Ordbog," 1873.)	Aasen
Abbott, Francis Ellingwood (1836–). American philosophical writer.	F. E. Abbot
Abbot, George (1562–1633). Archbishop of Canterbury.	Abp. Abbot
Abbott, Austin (1831–1896). American jurist.	A. Abbott
Abbott, Benjamin Vaughan (1830–1890). American jurist.	Abbott
Abbott, Edwin Abbott (1838–). English clergyman, Shakesperian scholar	E. A. Abbott
Abbott, Lyman (1835–). American clergyman, author, and editor	L. Abbott
Abbott, Thomas Kingsmill. Contemporary English philosophical writer	T. K. Abbott
Academy, The (1869–). English weekly literary review.	The Academy
Adair, James (18th century). American writer on North American Indians	James Adair
Adams, Arthur. Contemporary English naturalist.	Adams
Adams, Charles Francis, Jr. (1835–). American lawyer	C. F. Adams, Jr.
Adams, Charles Kendall (1835–1902). American historical writer.	C. K. Adams
Adams, F. Ottiwell. British diplomatic official	F. O. Adams
Adams, Henry (1838–). American historian.	H. Adams
Adams, Henry G. American jurist. ("Juridical Glossary," 1886.)	Adams's Gloss.
Adams, Herbert B. (1850–1901). American historical writer.	H. B. Adams
Adams, John (1735–1826). Second President of the United States.	J. Adams
Adams, John Quincy (1767–1848). Sixth President of the United States	J. Quincy Adams
Adams, Samuel (1722–1803). American statesman.	S. Adams
Adams, Sarah Flower (1805–1848). English hymn writer	S. F. Adams
Adams, Thomas (died after 1652). English divine.	T. Adams
Adamson, Robert (1852–1902). Scottish philosophical writer.	Adamson
Addis, William E. See Catholic Dictionary.
Addison, Joseph (1672–1719). English essayist and poet.	Addison
Addison, Lancelot (1632–1703). English clergyman	L. Addison
Adventurer, The (1752–1754). English literary periodical	Adventurer
Adye, Sir John Miller (1819–1900). British general and military writer.	Sir J. M. Adye
Agardh, Jakob Georg (1813–1901). Swedish botanist	Agardh
Agassiz, Alexander (1835–). American naturalist	A. Agassiz
Agassiz, Louis John Rudolph (1807–1873). Swiss American naturalist	Agassiz, or L. Agassiz
Ainsworth, Robert (1660–1743). English lexicographer ("Dictionary of the Latin Tongue," 1736, 1752, etc.)	Ainsworth
Ainsworth, William Harrison (1805–1882). English novelist	W. H. Ainsworth
Aird, Thomas (1802–1876). Scottish poet	Aird
Airy, Sir George Biddell (1801–1892). English mathematician and astronomer.	Airy
Airy, Osmund (1845–). English biographical writer.	O. Airy
Aitken's Scottish Song.
Akenside, Mark (1721–1770). English poet	Akenside
Akers, Elizabeth. See E. A. Allen
Alcott, Amos Bronson (1799–1888). American educator, philosopher, and author.	A. B. Alcott
Alcott, Louisa May (1832–1888). American author.	L. M. Alcott
Aldrich, Thomas Bailey (1836–). American poet and novelist	T. B. Aldrich, or Aldrich
Alexander, Mrs. British novelist. See Hector.	Mrs. Alexander
Alexander, James Waddell (1804–1859). American clergyman.	J. W. Alexander
Alexander, John Henry (1812–1867). American scientific writer ("Universal Dictionary of Weights and Measures," 1850, 1867.)	J. H. Alexander
Alexander, Joseph Addison (1809–1860). American clergyman, commentator, and Orientalist.	J. A. Alexander
Alexander, Sir William. See Stirling.
Alexander, William Lindsay (1808–1884). Scottish theologian.	W. L. Alexander
Alford, Henry (1810–1871). English theologian and commentator	Dean Alford
Alger, William Rounseville (1822–). American clergyman and author	W. R. Alger
Alienist and Neurologist (1880–). American quarterly periodical	Alien. and Neurol.
Alison, Sir Archibald (1792–1867). British historical and legal writer	Alison
Allen, Alexander Viets Griswold (1841–). American clergyman.	A. V. G. Allen
Allen, Charles Grant Blairfindie (1848–1899). British miscellaneous writer.	Grant Allen, or G. Allen
Allen, Elizabeth Akers (1832–). American poet	E. A. Allen
Allen, Richard L. (1806–1869). American agriculturist.	R. L. Allen
Allen, Timothy Field (1837–). American physician.	T. F. Allen
Allibone, Samuel Austin (1816–1889). American bibliographer and author	Allibone
Allingham, William (1824–1889). British poet.	Allingham
Allman, George James (1812–1898). British naturalist.	Allman
Allman, George Johnston (1824–). Irish mathematician.	G. J. Allman
Allston, Washington (1779–1843). American painter and author	Allston
All the Year Round (1859–). English weekly literary periodical	All the Year Round
Almanach de Gotha (1764–). German annual statistical record.

	Cited in Dict. as
American, The (1880–). Weekly periodical (Philadelphia).	The American
American Anthropologist (1888–). Quarterly periodical	Amer. Anthropologist
American Chemical Journal (1879–). Bimonthly periodical.	Amer. Chem. Jour.
American Cyclopædia, Appleton's.	Amer. Cyc., or Am. Cyc.
American Journal of Archæology (1885–). Quarterly periodical	Amer. Jour. Archæol.
American Journal of Philology (1880–). Quarterly periodical	Amer. Jour. Philol.
American Journal of Psychology (1887–). Quarterly periodical.	Amer. Jour. Psychol.
American Journal of Science (1818–). Monthly periodical	Amer. Jour. Sci.
American Meteorological Journal (1884–). Monthly periodical.	Amer. Meteor. Jour.
American Naturalist (1867–). Monthly periodical.	Amer. Nat.
Ames, Fisher (1758–1808). American statesman and orator.	Ames.
Ames, Mary Clemmer (Mrs. Hudson) (1839–1884). American author.	M. C. Ames
Amhurst, Nicholas (1697–1742). English poet and publicist	Amhurst
Amos, Sheldon (1835?–1899). British jurist and publicist	S. Amos
Ancient and Modern Britons (1884). Anonymous	Anc. and Mod. Britons
Ancren Riwle ("Rule of the Anchoresses") (about 1210). Anonymous old English work	Ancren Riwle
Anderson, Anthony (died 1493). English theologian	A. Anderson
Anderson, Joseph (1833–). Contemporary Scottish archæologist.	J. Anderson
Anderson, Rasmus Björn (1846–). American writer on Scandinavian subjects	R. B. Anderson
Anderson, William C. (1857–). American legal writer. ("Dictionary of Law," 1889.)	Anderson
Andover Review (1884–). American monthly theological periodical	Andover Rev.
Andrews, Ethan Allen (1787–1858). American classical scholar (editor of Freund's Latin Lexicon, 1850, etc.)	E. A. Andrews
Andrews, James Pettit (died 1797). English historian and antiquary.	Andrews
Andrews, Lancelot (1555–1626). Bishop of Winchester	Bp. Andrews
Angell, Joseph Kinnicut (1794–1857). American legal writer.	Angell
Anglo-Saxon Chronicle. English annals to the middle of the 12th century.	A. S. Chron.
Angus, Joseph (1816–). English clergyman, writer on English, etc.	Angus
Annandale, Charles. Scottish lexicographer. See Imperial Dictionary.
Annual Review, The (1807–1808).	Annual Rev.
Anson, Lord (George Anson) (1697–1762). English admiral and writer of travels	Lord Anson
Ansted, David Thomas (1814–1880). English geologist.	Ansted
Anstey, Christopher (1724–1805). English poet.	C. Anstey
Antijacobin, Poetry of the (1797–1798)
Antiquities of Athens. Stuart and Revett.
Appleton's American Cyclopædia.	Amer. Cyc., or Am. Cyc.
Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia (1861–).	Appleton's Ann. Cyc.
Appleton's Cyclopædia of American Biography.
Appleton's Cyclopædia of Applied Mechanics Arabian Nights. Lane's and Burton's editions used.
Arber's English Garner	Arber's Eng. Garner
Arber's English Reprints.	Arber's Eng. Reprints, or ed. Arber
Arbuthnot, John (1667–1735). Scottish physician and author	Arbuthnot
Archæologia (1770–). Published by the Society of Antiquaries, London.	Archæologia
Archæological Association, Journal of British. See Journal
Archæological Journal (1845–). Published quarterly by the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland	Archæol. Inst. Jour.
Archæology, American Journal of. See American
Arden of Feversham (1592) Anonymous historical tragedy	Arden of Feversham
Argot and Slang, Dictionary of (1889). Edited by A. Barrère	Diet. of Argot and Slang, and Barrère
Argyll, Eighth Duke of (George Douglas Campbell) (1823–1900). Scottish statesman and author	Argyll
Armin, Robert. English actor and poet. ("A Nest of Ninnies," 1608.)	Armin
Armstrong, John (1709–1779). British poet, essayist, and physician	Armstrong
Arnold, Sir Edwin (1832–). English poet, journalist and Orientalist.	Edwin Arnold
Arnold, Matthew (1822–1888). English critic and poet.	M. Arnold
Arnold, Richard (died 1521). English antiquary. ("Arnold's Chronicle," edition dated 1502, reprinted 1811.)	Arnold's Chronicle
Arnold, Thomas (1795–1842). English historian and educator	Arnold, or Dr. Arnold
Arnold, Thomas (1823–1900). English philologist and miscellaneous writer. See Catholic Dictionary.	T. Arnold
Arnold's Chronicle. See Arnold, Richard
Arnway, John (1693–1765). English clergyman.	Arnway
Art of the Old English Potter. E. M. Sedan.
Arundel, Thomas (1353–1414). Archbishop of Canterbury.	Abp. Arundel
Ascham, Roger (c. 1515–1568). English scholar and author.	Ascham

Ash, John (died 1779). English lexicographer. ("The New and Complete Dictionary of the English Language," 1775.) Ash

Ashburner, Charles Albert (1854–1899). American geologist. Ashburner

Ashburner, John. English physician. J. Ashburner

Ashmole, Elias (1617–1692). English antiquary. Ashmole

Ashton, John (1834–). English writer J. Ashton

Astle, Thomas (1735–1803). English antiquary. Thomas Astle

Athenæum, The (1828–). English weekly literary review Athenæum

Atkins, John (1685–1757). English surgeon and traveler. Atkins

Atkinson, Edward (1827–). American economist. E. Atkinson

Atlantic Monthly (1857–). American monthly literary periodical The Atlantic

Atterbury, Francis (1662–1732). Bishop of Rochester. Atterbury, or Bp Atterbury

Atwater, Lyman Hotchkiss (1813–1883). American clergyman and philosophical writer. Atwater

Aubrey, John (1626–1697). English antiquary Aubrey

Audsley, George Ashdown (1838–). See W. J. Audsley

Audsley, William James. Compiler (with G. A. Audsley) of "Dictionary of Architecture and the Allied Arts." Audsley

Audubon, John James (1780–1851). American naturalist. Audubon

Austen, Jane (1775–1817). English novelist Jane Austen

Austin, William (1587–1634). English religious and miscellaneous writer. Austin, or W. Austin à Wood. See Wood.

Ayenbite of Inwyt, The (about 1340) Translation by Dan Michel of a French treatise. (E. E. T. S.) Ayenbite of Inwyt

Ayliffe, John (1676–1732). English jurist Ayliffe

Aylmer, John (1521–1594). Bishop of London Bp. Aylmer

Ayre, John (about 1837). British writer Ayre

Aytoun, William Edmonstoune (1813–1865). Scottish poet and essayist. Aytoun

Babbage, Charles (1792–1871). English mathematician. Babbage

Bacon, Francis (Baron Verulam, Viscount St. Albans) (1561–1626). English statesman, philosopher, and essayist Bacon

Bacon, Nathaniel (1593–1660). English lawyer. N. Bacon

Badcock, John (pseudonym "Jon Bee"). Author of a life of Samuel Foote, 1830. Jon Bee

Badeau, Adam (1831–1895). American military officer and author. Badeau

Badham, Charles David (1806–1857). English naturalist. Badham

Badminton Library of Sports and Pastimes. Badminton Library

Bagehot, Walter (1826–1877). English economist and essayist. Bagehot

Bailey, Nathan (died 1742). English lexicographer and translator. ("Universal Etymological Dictionary," 1721; editions used, 1727, 1741, 1783, 1749, 1755.) Bailey

Bailey, Philip James (1816–1902) English poet. P. J. Bailey, or Bailey

Baillie, Joanna (1762–1851). English poet and dramatist. J. Baillie

Bain, Alexander (1818–). Scottish writer on philosophy, rhetoric, etc. A. Bain

Bainbridge, Christopher (died 1514). Cardinal and Archbishop of York. Card. Bainbridge

Baines, Edward (1774–1848). English journalist and author. Baines

Baird, Spencer Fullerton (1823–1887). American naturalist S. F. Baird

Baird, William (1803–1872) British naturalist. Baird

Baker, James (1831–). British military officer and author. J. Baker

Baker, John Gilbert (1834–). English botanist. J. G. Baker

Baker, Sir Richard (1568–1645). English chronicler. Baker

Baker, Sir Samuel White (1821–1893). English explorer in Africa. Sir S. W. Baker

Baker, Thomas (1656–1740). English antiquary. T. Baker

Baker, William Mumford (1838–1883). American clergyman and novelist. W. M. Baker

Balch, William Ralston. Compiler of "Mines, Miners, and Mining Interests of the United States in 1882." Balch

Bale, John (1495–1563). Bishop of Ossory, Ireland, and dramatist. Bp Bale

Balfour, Sir Andrew (1630–1694) Scottish physician and botanist. Sir A. Balfour

Balfour, Sir James (1600–1657) Scottish antiquary and poet. Sir J. Balfour

Balfour, James (1705–1795). Scottish philosophical writer. Balfour

Balfour, John Hutton (1808–1884). Scottish botanist J. H. Balfour

Ball, Sir Robert Stawell (1840–). Astronomer royal of Ireland. R. S. Ball

Ballads, English and Scotch (1857–8, edition used, 1886–90) Edited by Francis James Child. Child's Ballads

Ballantine, James (1808–1877). Scottish poet and miscellaneous writer. J. Ballantine

Bancroft, Edward (1744–1821). English chemist and naturalist E. Bancroft

Bancroft, George (1800–1891). American historian Bancroft

Bancroft, Hubert Howe (1832–). American historian H. Bancroft

Bancroft, Richard (1544–1610). Archbishop of Canterbury Bp. Bancroft

Banim, John (1798–1842). Irish novelist, poet, and dramatist. Banim

Barbour, John (died 1395). Scottish poet Barbour

Barclay, Alexander (died 1552). British poet, scholar, and divine. Alex. Barclay, or Barclay Baret. See J. Barret.

Barham, Richard Harris (1788–1845). English clergyman, author of "Ingoldsby Legends." Barham

Baring-Gould, Sabine (1834–). English clergyman, miscellaneous writer. Baring-Gould

Barlow, Alfred. English writer. ("History and Principles of Weaving," 2d ed., 1879.) A. Barlow

Barlow, Joel (1754?–1812). American poet. J. Barlow

Barlow, Thomas (1607–1691). Bishop of Lincoln. Bp. Barlow

Barnes, Robert (1816–). British medical writer. R. Barnes

Barnes, Thurlow Weed (1853–). American author T. W. Barnes

Barnfield, Richard (1574–1627). English poet. Barnfield

Barr, Amelia Edith (1831–). American novelist. A. E. Barr

Barrère, A. See Argot and Leland.

Barret or Baret, John (died about 1580). English lexicographer. ("An Alvearie," an English-Latin dictionary, 1573; ed. Fleming, 1580.) Barret, or Baret

Barrett, Benjamin Fisk (1808–1892). American Swedenborgian clergyman. B. F. Barrett

Barrett, Eaton Stannard (1786–1820). British poet and satirist. E. S. Barrett

Barrett, William Alexander (1836–). English writer on music. (See Stainer.) Barrington

Barrington, Daines (1727–1800). English antiquary and naturalist. Barrington

Barrington, Shute (1734–1826). Bishop of Durham. Bp. Barrington

Barrough or Barrow, Philip (about 1590). English physician. Philip Barrough

Barrow, Isaac (1630–1677). English divine and mathematician. Barrow

Barrows, William (1815–1891). American clergyman. W. Barrows

Barry Cornwall. See Procter.

Barry, Lodowick. British dramatist ("Ram Alley," 1611). L. Barry

Barry, M. J. English poet. M. J. Barry

Bartholow, Roberts (1831–). American medical writer. Bartholow

Bartlett, John (1820–). American editor and compiler. ("Familiar Quotations," 1855; edition used, 1882.)

Bartlett, John Russell (1805–1886). American author and compiler. ("Dictionary of Americanisms," 1850, edition used, 1877.) Bartlett

Barton, John. English botanist. J. Barton

Bartram, John (1699–1777). American botanist. Bartram

Bastian, Henry Charlton (1837–). English biologist and medical writer. Bastian

Bastin, Edson Sewell (1843–). American botanist. Bastin

Bates, Samuel Penniman (1827–). American teacher and historical writer. S. P. Bates

Bates, William (1625–1699). English theologian. Bates

Battie, William (1704–1776). English physician. Battie

Baxter, Andrew (died 1750). Scottish philosophical writer. A. Baxter

Baxter, Richard (1615–1691). English theologian. Baxter

Bayly, Thomas Haynes (1797–1839). English poet. T. H. Bayly

Bayne, Peter (1830–1896). Scottish essayist. P. Bayne

Beaconsfield, Earl of. See Disraeli.

Beale, Lionel Smith (1828–). English physiologist. L. Beale, or Beale

Beattie, James (1735–1803). Scottish poet and author. Beattie

Beaumont, Francis (died 1616). English dramatist. Beaumont

Beaumont and Fletcher. English dramatists. (Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher.) Beau. and Fl.

Beaumont, Sir John (1583?–1627). English poet. Sir J. Beaumont

Beaumont, Joseph (1616–1699). English poet J. Beaumont

Beckett, Sir Edmund (Lord Grimthorpe) (1816–). English author. Sir E. Beckett

Beckford, William (1759–1844). English writer and collector, author of "Vathek." Beckford

Becon, Thomas (about 1512–1567). English Reformer. Becon

Beddoes, Thomas (1760–1808). English physician Beddoes

Bedell, William (1571–1642). Bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh, Ireland. Bp. Bedell

Bee, Jon. See Badcock.

Beecher, Henry Ward (1813–1887). American clergyman and author. H. W. Beecher

Beecher, Lyman (1775–1863). American clergyman and author. Lyman Beecher

Behmen, Behme, or Boehme, Jakob (1575–1624). German mystic. J. Behmen

Behn, Aphra (1640–1689). English writer of plays and novels. Mrs. Behn

Behrens, Julius Wilhelm. German botanist. Translation by A. B. Hervey and R. H. Ward. Behrens

Belfield, William T. (1855–). American physiologist. W. T. Belfield

Bell, Acton. See A. Brontë.

Bell, Alexander Melville (1819–). Scottish writer on phonetics. Melville Bell

Bell, Currer. See C. Brontë.

Bell, Ellis. See E. J. Brontë.

Bell, Thomas (1792–1880). English naturalist. Thos. Bell

Bell, William (died 1839). Writer on Scots law. Bell

Bell's British Theatre (London, 1797).

Bellamy, Charles J. (1852–). American journalist. C. J. Bellamy

Bellamy, Edward (1850–1898). American journalist and novelist. E. Bellamy

Bellows, Henry Whitney (1814–1882). American clergyman. Bellows

Belsham, Thomas (1750–1829). English clergyman. Belsham

Belsham, William (1753–1827). English historian and political writer. W. Belsham, or Belsham

Benjamin, Samuel Greene Wheeler (1837–). American miscellaneous writer. S. G. W. Benjamin

Bennet, Thomas (1673–1728). English divine. Bennet

Benson, George (1699–1762). English divine. Dr. G. Benson

Benson, Martin (1689–1752). Bishop of Gloucester. Bp. Benson

Benson, Thomas. English lexicographer. ("Vocabularium Anglo-Saxonicum," 1701.)

Bentham, George (1800–1884). English botanist. G. Bentham

Bentham, Jeremy (1748–1832). English writer on politics and jurisprudence. Bentham

Bentinck, Lord George (George Frederick Cavendish) (1802–1848). English politician. Lord George Bentinck

Bentley, Richard (1662–1742). English classical scholar. Bentley

Bentley, Robert (1821–1893). English botanist. R. Bentley

Benton, Joel (1832–). American essayist. Joel Benton

Benton, Thomas Hart (1782–1858). American statesman. T. H. Benton

Berger, E. See E. S. Sheppard.

Berington, Joseph (1746–1827). English Roman Catholic divine. Berington

Berkeley, George (1685–1753). Bishop of Cloyne, Ireland, and philosopher. Berkeley, or Bp. Berkeley

Berkenhout, John (died 1791). English physician, naturalist, and miscellaneous writer. Berkenhout

Bernard, Richard (died 1641). English Puritan divine. R. Bernard

Berners, Lord (John Bourchier) (1467–1533). English statesman, translator of Froissart's "Chronicle," etc. Berners

Berners, Juliana (15th century). Reputed English writer on hunting, hawking, and fishing. Juliana Berners

[illegible], Sir Walter (1832–1891). English novelist. W. Basant

[illegible], Charles E. (1845–). American botanist. Beasy

[illegible], Matilda Barbara (1839–). English novelist and writer of books. M. Betham-Edwards

Beveridge, William (1637–1708). Bishop of St. Asaph. Bp. Beveridge

Beverley or Beverly, Robert (1673?–1716). American historical writer. Beverley

Bevis of Hampton or Beves of Hamtoun (Hamtoun) (about 1320–1330). Translation of an Anglo-Norman romance. Beves of Hamtoun

Bible. English Authorized (1611) and Revised (1881, 1884) Versions; Middle English Version (about 1380); Wyclif (Oxford, about 1384; Purvey, about 1388); Tyndale's Bible (1525); Coverdale (1535); Bible of 1551; Geneva Version (1560); Douay (and Rheims) Version (1582, 1609–10).

Bibliotheca Sacra (1841–). American quarterly theological review. Bibliotheca Sacra

Bickerstaff, Isaac (1735?–1812?). British dramatic writer. Bickerstaff

Bickersteth, Edward Henry (1825–). Bishop of Exeter. Bickersteth

Billroth, Theodor (1829–1894). German surgeon. Billroth

Bingham, Joseph (1668–1723). English writer on ecclesiastical antiquities. Bingham

Birch, Thomas (1705–1766). English historian and biographer. Birch

Birdwood, Sir George Christopher Molesworth (1832–). Anglo-Indian writer on Eastern subjects. Birdwood

Bishop, Joel Prentiss (1814–1901). American writer on law. Bishop

Black, William (1841–1898). Scottish novelist. W. Black

Blackie, John Stuart (1809–1895). Scottish essayist and poet. J. S. Blackie

Blackmore, Sir Richard (died 1729). English poet and author. Sir R. Blackmore

Blackmore, Richard Doddridge (1825–1900). English novelist. R. D. Blackmore

Blackstone, Sir William (1723–1780). English jurist. Blackstone

Blackwall, Anthony (1674–1730). English classical scholar. Blackwall

Blackwood's Magazine (1817–). Scottish monthly literary magazine. Blackwood's Mag.

Blaikie, William (1843–). American writer on physical training. Blaikie

Blaine, James Gillespie (1830–1893). American statesman. J. G. Blaine

Blair, Hugh (1718–1800). Scottish preacher and critic. Dr. Blair, or H. Blair

Blair, Robert (1699?–1746). Scottish poet. Blair

Blake, William (1757–1827). English poet. Blake

Blamire, Susanna (1747–1794). English poet. Blamire

Blanqui, Jérôme Adolphe (1798–1854). French political economist. Blanqui

Blasema, Pietro. Italian physicist. ("Theory of Sound," trans., 1876.) Blasema

Blessington, Countess of (Marguerite Power) (1789–1849). English novelist. Lady Blessington

Bloomfield, Robert (1766–1823). English poet. Bloomfield

Blount, Sir Henry (1602–1682). English traveler. Sir H. Blount

Blount, Thomas (1618–1679). English lexicographer ("Glossographia," 1656, 1670; "A Law Dictionary," 1670.) Blount

Blundeville, Thomas (lived about 1580). English miscellaneous writer. Blundeville

Blunt, John Henry (1823–1884). English ecclesiastical writer. ("Dictionary of Doctrinal and Historical Theology," 2d ed., 1872; "Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, and Schools of Religious Thought," 1874.) J. H. Blunt, or Blunt

Blunt, John James (1794–1855). English divine. J. J. Blunt

Blyth, Edward (1810–1873). English zoologist. Blyth

Boardman, George Dana (1828–). American clergyman. G. D. Boardman

Boat Sailer's Manual (1886). Edward F. Qualtrough.

Boccalini, Trajano (1556–1613). Italian satirist. Boccalini

Boece. See Boethius.

Boehme, Jakob. See Behmen.

Boethius or Boece, Hector (died 1536). Scottish historian. Boethius or Boece

Baker, George Henry (1823–1890). American poet and dramatist. G. H. Baker

Bolingbroke, Viscount (Henry St. John) (1678–1751). English statesman, publicist, and philosopher. Bolingbroke

Bolles, Albert S. (1845–). American financial writer. A. S. Bolles

Bonaparte, Charles Lucien (1803–1857). French American ornithologist. Bonaparte

Bonar, Horatius (1808–1889). Scottish clergyman and hymn writer. H. Bonar

Bonet, John Henry (1845–). American poet. J. H. Bonet

Bon Gaultier Ballads. By Sir Theodore Martin and W. E. Aytoun. Bon Gaultier Ballads

Book of Saint Albans. A collection of treatises on hunting, fishing, and heraldry, attributed to Juliana Berners, first edition, 1486.

Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry. Translation (about 1450) of a French work written about 1372.

Boole, George (1815–1864). English mathematician. Boole

Boone, Thomas Charles. English clergyman and miscellaneous writer (lived 1836–1864). Boone

Booth, Mary Louise (1831–1889). American author and translator. M. Booth

Boothroid or Boothroyd, Benjamin (1768–1836). English Hebraist. Boothroid

Boorde or Boorde, Andrew (1490?–1549). English physician and traveler. Boorde

Borlase, William (1695–1772). English antiquary. Borlase

Bosc, Bruno. French writer on architecture. ("Dictionnaire Raisonné d'Architecture," 1877–1884.) Bosc

Boswell, James (1740–1795). Scottish author ("Life of Dr. Johnson"). Boswell

Bosworth, Joseph (1789–1876). English Anglo-Saxon scholar. ("Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," 1838, 1843; ed. Toller, 1882.)

Boucher, Jonathan (1738–1804). English clergyman and philologist. Boucher

Bouvier, John. See Bouvier.

Bourne, Henry (1696–1733). English antiquary. Bourne

Boutell, Charles (1812–1877). English archæologist. C. Boutell or Boutell

Bouvier, John (1787–1851). American legal writer. ("A Law Dictionary," 1839, etc.) Bouvier

Bowen, Christiana Mendell (1820–). American author. Bowen

Bowles, Samuel (1826–1878). American journalist. S. Bowles

Bowring, Sir John (1792–1872). English linguist, writer, and traveler. Sir J. Bowring

Boyd, Andrew Kennedy Hutchison (1825–1899). Scottish clergyman and essayist. A. K. H. Boyd

Boyd, Zachary (died 1654). Scottish clergyman. Z. Boyd

Boyesen, Hjalmar Hjorth (1848–1895). Norwegian-American author. Boyesen

Boyle, Charles (Fourth Earl of Orrery) (1676–1731). English author. C. Boyle

Boyle, Robert (1627–1691). British physicist and chemist. Boyle

Boyse, Samuel (1708–1749). British poet. S. Boyse

Brachet, Auguste (1844–1898). French philologist ("Dictionnaire Etymologique de la Langue Française," 1868; trans. by Kitchin, 2d ed., 1878.)

Bracton, Henry de (died 1268). English jurist. Bracton

Braddon, Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Maxwell) (1837–). English novelist. Miss Braddon

Bradford, John (died 1555). English Reformer. J. Bradford

Bradford, William (1588–1657). American colonial governor and historian. Bradford

Bradley, Francis Herbert (1846–). English philosophical writer. F. H. Bradley

Bradley, Henry. Contemporary English lexicographer. (See J. A. H. Murray.) H. Bradley

Bradley, Richard (died 1732). English botanist. Bradley

Bradstreet, Anne (1612?–1672). American poet. Anne Bradstreet

Brady, Robert (died 1700). English historian. Brady

Bramhall, John (1594–1663). Archbishop of Armagh, Ireland. Bramhall, or Abp. Bramhall

Bramston, James (died 1744). English poet. Bramston

Brand, John (1744–1806). English antiquary and topographer. Brand

Brande, William Thomas (1788–1866). English chemist. (See next entry.) Brande

Brande and Cox (W. T. Brande and Sir G. W. Cox). ("A Dictionary of Science, Literature and Art", edition used, 1878.) Brande and Cox

Brassey, Lady (1840?–1887). English writer of travels. Lady Brassey

Brathwaite, Richard (died 1673). English poet and writer. R. Brathwaite

Bray, Thomas (1656–1730). English divine. Dr. Bray

Brayley, Edward Wedlake (1773–1854). English archæologist and topographer. Brayley

Brende, John (lived about 1568). English translator. J. Brende

Brerewood, Edward (died 1613). English mathematician and antiquary. Brerewood

Breton, Nicholas (about 1545–1626). English poet. Breton

Brevint, Daniel (1616–1695). English controversialist and religious writer. Brevint

Brewer, Antony (lived about 1655). English dramatist. A. Brewer

Brewer, E. Cobham (1810–1897). English clergyman and miscellaneous writer. ("Dictionary of Phrase and Fable," 21st ed., 1889; "Dictionary of Miracles," 1884.) Brewer

Brewer, William Henry (1828–). American chemist. W. H. Brewer

Brewster, Sir David (1781–1868). Scottish physicist. Brewster

Bright, John (1811–1889). English statesman and orator. John Bright

Brinton, Daniel Garrison (1837–1899). American ethnologist. Brinton

Bristed, Charles Astor (1820–1874). American essayist and miscellaneous writer. C. A. Bristed

British and Foreign Review (1835–1844). English quarterly literary review. British and Foreign Rev.

British Critic (1793–1843). English High-church periodical.

British Quarterly Review (1845–). English quarterly literary review. British Quarterly Rev.

Britten and Holland (James Britten and Robert Holland). ("A Dictionary of English Plant Names," 1878–1886.) Britten and Holland

Britton, John (1771–1857). English antiquary and miscellaneous writer. Britton

Brockett, John Trotter (1788–1842). English antiquary. Brockett

Brockett, Linus Pierpont (1820–1893). American historical and geographical writer. L. P. Brockett

Brome, Alexander (1620–1666). English poet and dramatist. A. Brome

Brome, Richard (died 1652?). English dramatist. Brome, or R. Brome

Brontë, Anne (pseudonym "Acton Bell") (1820–1849). English novelist. A. Brontë

Brontë, Charlotte (Mrs. A. B. Nicholls, pseudonym "Currer Bell") (1816–1855). English novelist. Charlotte Brontë

Brontë, Emily Jane (pseudonym "Ellis Bell") (1818–1848). English novelist. E. Brontë

Brooke, Henry (died 1783). English author. Brooke, or H. Brooke

Brooke, Lord (Robert Greville) (1608–1643). English general and author. Lord Brooke

Brooke, Stopford Augustus (1832–). English clergyman and author. S. A. Brooke, or Stopford Brooke

Brooks, Charles William Shirley (1816–1874). English journalist, dramatist, and novelist. Shirley Brooks

Brooks, Thomas (1608–1680). English Puritan divine. T. Brooks

Brooks, William Keith (1848–). American naturalist. W. K. Brooks

Broome, William (1689–1745). English poet. W. Broome

Brougham, Lord (Henry Brougham) (1778–1868). British statesman, orator, and author. Brougham

Broughton, Rhoda (1840–). English novelist. R. Broughton

Brown, James Baldwin (1820–1884). English clergyman. Rev. J. B. Brown

Brown, John (1810–1882). Scottish physician and author. Dr. J. Brown

Brown, Thomas or "Tom" (1663–1704). English humorist. Tom Brown

Brown, Dr. Thomas (1778–1820). Scottish metaphysician. Dr. T. Brown

Browne, Edward (1644–1708). English traveler. E. Browne

Browne, Sir Thomas (1605–1682). English physician and author. Sir T. Browne

Browne, William (1591–1643?). English poet. W. Browne

Brownell, Henry Howard (1820–1872). American poet. H. H. Brownell

Browning, Elizabeth Barrett (1806–1861). English poet. Mrs. Browning

Browning, Robert (1812–1889). English poet. Browning

Bruce, James (1730–1794). Scottish traveler in Africa. Bruce

Bruce, Michael (1746–1767). Scottish clergyman. M. Bruce

Brunne, Robert de or of Bourne Manning. (first part of 14th century) English chronicler and translator. R. Brunne, or Rob. of Brunne

Brush, George Jarvis (1831–). American mineralogist. G. J. Brush

Bryant, Jacob (1715–1804). English antiquary. J. Bryant

Bryant, William Cullen (1794–1878). American poet. Bryant

Bryce, James (1838–). British historical and political writer. J. Bryce

Brydone, Patrick (died 1818). Scottish traveler. Brydone

Brykett, Lodowick (about 1571–1611). English poet. L. Brykett

Buchanan, James (1791–1868). Fifteenth President of the United States. Buchanan Buchanan, Robert Williams (1841–1901). Scottish poet and author. R. Buchanan
Buck or Buc, Sir George (died 1623). English historian and poet. Sir G. Buck
Buck's Reference Handbook of Medical Sciences (1885–1888).
Buckingham, Second Duke of (George Villiers) (1627–1688). English statesman and author. Buckingham Buckinghamshire, Duke of. See Sheffield.
Buckland, Francis Trevelyan (1826–1880). English naturalist. F. T. Buckland
Buckland, William (1784–1856). English geologist. Buckland
Buckle, Henry Thomas (1821–1862). English historical writer Buckle
Buckman, James (1816–1884). English geologist and naturalist. J. Buckman
Buckminster, Thomas. English clergyman. ("Right Christian Calendar," 1570.) Buckminster
Budgell, Eustace (1686–1737). English miscellaneous writer Budgell
Buffon, Georges Louis Leclerc, Comte de (1707–1788) French naturalist. Buffon
Bull, George (1634–1710). Bishop of St. David's. Bp. Bull
Bullein, William (1500?–1576). English physician Bullein
Bullinger, Heinrich (1504–1575). Swiss pastor and theological writer Bullinger Bullokar, John. English physician and lexicographer ("An English Expositor," 1616; edition used, 1641.) Bullokar
Bullokar, William (about 1586) English grammarian. ("Booke at Large for the Amendment of Orthographie," etc., 1580.) W. Bullokar Bulwer. See Lytton.
Bunner, Henry Cuyler (1855–1896). American author and journalist. H. C. Bunner
Bunyan, John (1628–1688) English preacher and allegorist. Bunyan
Burgersdicius, Francis (1590–1629). Dutch logician ("Logic," trans. in 1697.) Burgersdicius
Burgess, James W. English writer on coach building (1881) J. W. Burgess
Burgess, Thomas (1756–1837). Bishop of Salisbury Bp. Burgess
Burgoyne, John (died 1792). British general and dramatist Burgoyne Burguy, Georges Frédéric (1823–1876). French philologist ("Grammaire de la langue d'Oïl," 2d ed., 1870). Burguy
Burke, Edmund (1729–1797) British statesman, author, and orator Burke
Burke, Sir John Bernard (1815–1892). English writer on heraldry and genealogy. Burke's Peerage
Burleigh, Lord (William Cecil) (1520–1598). English statesman. Lord Burleigh
Burn, Robert. British military officer ("Naval and Military Dictionary of the French Language," 1842, etc.) Burn Burn, Richard (1709–1785). English jurist and antiquary Richard Burn
Burnell, Arthur Coke (1840–1882) English Sanskrit scholar. (See Yule.) A. C. Burnell
Burnet, Gilbert (1643–1715). Bishop of Salisbury, and historian Bp. Burnet, or Burnet
Burnet, Thomas (died 1715). English theological writer. T. Burnet
Burnett, Frances Hodgson (1849–). American novelist. F. H. Burnett
Burney, Charles (1726–1814). English musician and musical writer. Dr. Burney
Burney, Frances (Mme. D'Arblay) (1752–1840). English novelist and diarist Miss Burney (novels), Mme. D'Arblay (diary)
Burns, Robert (1759–1796) Scottish poet Burns
Burrill, Alexander M. (1807–1869) American lawyer. ("Law Dictionary and Glossary," 1850.) Burrill
Burroughs, John (1837–). American author. J. Burroughs
Burt, Edward (died 1756) British writer Burt
Burton, John Hill (1809–1881). Scottish historian. J. H. Burton
Burton, Sir Richard Francis (1821–1890). English traveler and Arabic scholar. R. F. Burton
Burton, Robert (1577–1640). English writer. ("Anatomy of Melancholy.") Burton
Bury, Viscount (William Coutts Keppel) (1832–1894) Author (with G. L. Hillier) of "Cycling" (Badminton Library). Bury and Hillier
Bushnell, Horace (1802–1876). American theologian Bushnell or H. Bushnell Butcher, Samuel Henry (1850–) English classical scholar. Butcher Butcher and Lang. ("Translation of the Odyssey," 1879.) Butcher and Lang
Butler, Alfred Joshua (1850–) English writer A. J. Butler
Butler, Charles (died 1647). English grammarian. C. Butler
Butler, Joseph (1692–1752) Bishop of Durham, author of "Analogy of Religion." Butler
Butler, Samuel (1612?–1680). English poet, author of "Hudibras." S. Butler
Butler, William Allen (1825–1902) American lawyer and author W. A. Butler
Butler, William Archer (died 1848) Irish clergyman, and writer on ethics and philosophy. Archer Butler
Bynner, Edwin Lassetter (1842–1883). American novelist. E. L. Bynner
Byrne, Oliver. American writer on mechanical subjects. O. Byrne
Byrom, John (1692–1763). English poet. Byrom
Byron, Lord (George Gordon Noel Byron) (1788–1824). English poet Byron

Cable, George Washington (1844–) American novelist. G. W. Cable
Caird, Edward (1835–). Contemporary Scottish philosophical writer E. Caird
Caird, John (1820–1898) Scottish theological writer. J. Caird
Calamy, Edmund (1600–1666) English clergyman Calamy
Calderwood, Henry (1830–1897). Scottish philosophical writer. Calderwood
Calhoun, John Caldwell (1782–1850) American statesman. Calhoun
Calthrop, Sir Harry. English jurist. ("Customs of London," 1612.) Calthrop
Calverley, Charles Stuart (1831–1884). English poet C. S. Calverley
Camden Society Publications. Society instituted 1838
Camden, William (1551–1623) English antiquary and historian. Camden
Campbell, Lord (John Campbell) (1779–1861) British jurist and biographer Lord Campbell
Campbell, George (1719–1796). Scottish theologian and writer on rhetoric. G. Campbell
Campbell, John (1708–1775). Scottish writer of history, travels, etc. Dr. J. Campbell
Campbell, John Francis (1822–1885). Scottish writer on Highland life J. F. Campbell
Campbell, Thomas (1777–1844) Scottish poet Campbell
Campin, Francis. English engineer ("Mechanical Engineering," 1855, 1865.) Campin
Campion, Edmund (1540–1581). English Jesuit. Campion
Canes, John Vincent (died 1672). English friar, historical writer. Canes
Canning, George (1770–1827). English statesman. ("Anti-Jacobin Ballads.") Canning
Capgrave, John (1393–1464). English chronicler and theologian. Capgrave
Car-Builder's Dictionary (1864). Matthias N. Forney. Car-Builder's Dict.
Carew, George (Earl of Totnes) (1555–1629). English statesman. G. Carew
Carew, Richard (1555–1620). English antiquarian and poet. ("Survey of Cornwall.") R. Carew
Carew, Thomas (1589?–1639). English poet. Carew
Carey, Henry (died 1743). English musician and poet. Carey
Carleton, Will (1845–). American poet. Will Carleton
Carlile, Richard (1790–1843). English free-thinker. R. Carlile
Carlyle, Thomas (1795–1881). Scottish essayist and historian. Carlyle Carmichael, Mrs. A. C. (wrote 1833) Mrs. Carmichael
Carnochan, John Murray (1817–1887). American physician and writer. J. M. Carnochan
Carpenter, Philip Pearsall (1819–1877). English writer on natural history. P. P. Carpenter
Carpenter, William Benjamin (1813–1885). English physiologist and naturalist. W. B. Carpenter
Carpenter, William Lant (died 1800). English scientific writer. W. Lee Carpenter
Carr, William (17th century). British writer. W. Carr
Carruthers, Robert (1799–1878). Scottish miscellaneous writer. R. Carruthers
Carter, Elizabeth (1717–1806). English poet and translator. Miss Carter
Cartwright, William (1611–1643). English dramatist, poet, and clergyman. W. Cartwright Carver, Jonathan (1732–1780). American traveler. Carver
Cary, Alice (1820–1871). American poet A. Cary
Cary, Henry Francis (1772–1844). English poet and translator. Cary
Cary, Phœbe (1824–1871). American poet P. Cary
Casaubon, Isaac (1559–1614). English classical scholar. Casaubon
Cass, Lewis (1782–1866). American statesman L. Cass
Castle, Egerton (1858–). English miscellaneous writer. Egerton Castle Catholic Dictionary. Edited by William E. Addis and Thomas Arnold; American edition, 1884 Cath. Dict.
Catholicon Anglicum (1483). An English-Latin dictionary. (E. E. T. S.) Cath. Ang.
Catlin, George (1796–1872) American traveler and painter. Catlin
Cavendish. See H. Jones.
Cavendish, George (1500–1561?). English biographer G. Cavendish
Cavendish, Henry (1731–1810) English chemist and physicist. H. Cavendish
Cavendish, Sir William (died 1557). English politician Sir W. Cavendish
Cawthorn, James (1719–1761). English poet. Cawthorn
Caxton, William (died 1491?). English printer and translator. Caxton Caxton Society, Publications of. Society instituted in London, 1845.
Cecil, Richard (1748–1810). English evangelical divine. R. Cecil Centlivre, Susannah (died 1723). English dramatist and actress. Mrs. Centlivre Century, The. American monthly literary magazine (Founded in 1870 as "Scribner's Monthly" an Illustrated Magazine for the People"; name changed in 1881 to "The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine.") The Century
Chalmers, Thomas (1780–1847). Scottish theologian. Chalmers
Chaloner, Sir Thomas (died 1565). English diplomatist and translator. Chaloner Chamberlayne or Chamberlaine, Edward (1616–1703). English publicist Chamberlayne
Chamberlayne, William (1619–1689) English poet. W. Chamberlayne
Chambers, Ephraim (died 1740). English encyclopedist. ("Cyclopædia," 1st ed., 1728, 2d ed., 1738, ed. Rees, 1778–88.) Chambers Chambers, Robert (1802–1871). Scottish publisher and author. R. Chambers
Chambers, William (1800–1883). Scottish publisher and author. W. Chambers
Chambers's Book of Days. Edited by R. Chambers.
Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature. Chambers's Cyc. Eng. Lit.
Chambers's Encyclopædia. Chambers's Encyc.
Chambers's Information for the People.
Chambers's Journal (1832–). Scottish weekly literary periodical. Chambers's Journal
Channing, William Ellery (1780–1842) American theologian and philanthropist Channing
Chapman, Alvan Wentworth (1809–1899). American botanist. A. W. Chapman
Chapman, George (died 1634). English dramatist and poet. Chapman
Charles I. (1600–1649). King of England ("Letters," etc.) King Charles I.
Charnock, Stephen (1628–1680) English Puritan divine. Charnock
Chatham, Earl of (William Pitt) (1708–1778). English statesman and orator Lord Chatham
Chatterton, Thomas (1752–1770) English poet. Chatterton
Chatto, William Andrew (1799–1864) Writer on wood-engraving. Chatto
Chaucer, Geoffrey (1340?–1400). English poet. (In the "Canterbury Tales" the Ellesmere text in the six-text edition has been preferred.) Chaucer
Cheke, Sir John (1514–1557). English classical scholar. Sir J. Cheke
Cherubini, Pierre Adolphe (1809–1891). French historian. Cherubini
Chesterfield, Earl of (Philip Dormer Stanhope) (1694–1773). English politician and author. Chesterfield, or Lord Chesterfield
Chester Plays. A series of miracle-plays assigned to the close of the 14th century. Chester Plays
Chettle, Henry (died 1607?). English dramatist. H. Chettle
Cheyne, George (1671–1743). Scottish physician and philosopher. G. Cheyne Child, Francis James (1825–1896). American critic and scholar. See Ballads.
Child, Sir Josiah (1630–1699). English writer on trade. Sir J. Child
Chillingworth, William (1602–1644). English theologian. Chillingworth
Chilmead, Edmund (1619–1654). English mathematician and miscellaneous writer Chilmead
Choate, Rufus (1799–1859). American jurist and statesman. R. Choate
Christian Union (1870–). American weekly religious periodical.
Christison, Sir Robert (1797–1882). Scottish physician and author. Sir R. Christison

Churchyard, Thomas (1520–1604). English poet and soldier. Churchyard

Churchill, Charles (1731–1764). English poet and satirist. Churchill

Church Times, The (1863–). American weekly religious periodical.

Churchyard, Thomas (died 1634). English poet and miscellaneous writer. ChurchAyard

Clarendon, Edward Hyde, Earl of (1609?–1674). English statesman and historian. Clarendon

Clarendon, Henry Hyde, Earl of (1638–1709). English writer of memoirs. Lord Henry Clarendon

Clark, Daniel Kinnear. Contemporary English writer on engineering. D. K. Clark

Clark, William George (1821–1878). English Shakesperian scholar (editor, with W. A. Wright, of the "Globe Edition" of Shakespere, 1864, edition used, 1887). W. G. Clark

Clarke, Edward Hammond (1820–1877). American medical writer. E. H. Clarke

Clarke, Frank Wigglesworth (1847–). American chemist. F. W. Clarke

Clarke, George T. (1811–1898). ("Medieval Military Architecture in England.") G. T. Clarke

Clarke, James Freeman (1810–1888). American clergyman and author. J. F. Clarke

Clarke, Joseph Thacher. Contemporary American archæologist. J. T. Clarke

Clarke, Samuel (1599–1682 or 1683). English clergyman. S. Clarke

Clarke, Samuel (1675–1729). English clergyman and philosophical writer. Clarke

Claus, Karl Friedrich Wilhelm (1830–). German zoologist. Claus

Clay, Henry (1777–1852). American statesman and orator. H. Clay

Clayton, John (about 1656). English law-writer. Clayton

Cleaveland or Cleveland, John (1613–1658). English poet. Cleaveland

Cleaveland, Parker (1780–1858). American geologist. P. Cleaveland

Cleaver, Robert (died 1613). English Biblical commentator. Robert Cleaver

Clemens, Samuel Langhorne (pseudonym "Mark Twain") (1835–). American humorist. Mark Twain, or S. L. Clemens

Clerke, Agnes M. Contemporary English writer on astronomy. A. M. Clerke

Clifford, William Kingdon (1845–1879). English mathematician and philosophical writer. W. K. Clifford

Clifton, William (1772–1799). American poet. Clifton

Clough, Arthur Hugh (1819–1861). English poet. Clough

Cobbe, Frances Power (1822–). English writer. F. P. Cobbe

Cobden, Richard (1804–1865). English statesman and economist. Cobden

Cockburn, Lord (Henry Thomas) (1779–1854). Scottish judge. Cockburn

Cockeram, Henry. English lexicographer. ("The English Dictionary, or an Interpreter of Hard English Words," 1632; edition used, 1642.) Cockeram

Cogan, Thomas (1736–1818). English physician and philosophical writer. T. Cogan

Coghan or Cogan, Thomas (died 1607). English physician. Coghan or Cogan

Cokayne, Sir Aston (1608–1684). English dramatist. Cokayne

Coke, Sir Edward (1552–1634). English jurist. Sir E. Coke

Coleridge, Hartley (1796–1849). English poet. H. Coleridge

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772–1834). English poet, critic, and philosopher. Coleridge

Coles, Abraham (1813–1891). American author and translator. A. Coles

Coles, Elisha (died 1680). English lexicographer. ("English Dictionary," 1677, 1717.) Coles

Collier, Jane. English writer. ("Art of Tormenting," 1753.) Jane Collier

Collier, Jeremy (1650–1726). English nonjuring clergyman and author. Jeremy Collier

Collier, John Payne (1789–1883). English critic and Shakesperian scholar. J. P. Collier

Collingwood. See Watts. Collingwood

Collins, Mortimer (1827–1876). English miscellaneous writer. Mortimer Collins

Collins, William (1721–1759). English poet. Collins

Collins, William Wilkie (1824–1889). English novelist. W. Collins

Colman, George (1732–1794). English dramatist. Colman

Colman, George (1762–1836). English dramatist and miscellaneous writer. Colman the Younger

Colquhoun, Patrick (1745–1820). Scottish statistician. Colquhoun

Colton, Charles Caleb (died 1832). English author. Colton

Combe, Andrew (1797–1847). Scottish physiologist. A. Combe

Combe, George (1788–1858). Scottish phrenologist. G. Combe

Colnbe or Coombe, William (1741–1823). English miscellaneous writer. W. Combe

Comber, Thomas (1645–1699). English theological writer. T. Comber

Comenius, Johann Amos (1592–1670). Moravian writer. Comenius

Compton, Henry (1632–1713). Bishop of London. Bp. Compton

Cone, Helen Gray (1859–). American poet. H. G. Cone

Congregationalist, The (1817–). American weekly religious periodical. Congregationalist

Congreve, William (1670–1729). English dramatist. Congreve

Constable, Henry (1562–1613). English poet. Constable

Constitution of the United States (1787).

Consular Reports, United States. U. S. Cons. Rep.

Contemporary Review (1866–). English monthly literary periodical. Contemporary Rev.

Conybeare, William Daniel (1787–1857). English clergyman and geologist. Conybeare

Conybeare and Howson (William John Conybeare, 1815–1857; J. S. Howson, 1816–1885). ("Life and Epistles of St. Paul," 1851.) Conybeare and Howson

Cook, Eliza (died 1889). English poet. Eliza Cook

Cook, James (1728–1779). English navigator. Cook

Cook, Joseph (1838–1901). American lecturer and writer. J. Cook

Cooke, George Wingrove (1814–1865). English lawyer and author. Wingrove Cooke

Cooke, John (early part of 17th century). English dramatist. J. Cooke

Cooke, John Esten (1830–1886). American novelist. J. E. Cooke

Cooke, Josiah Parsons (1827–1894). American chemist. J. P. Cooke

Cooke, Mordecai Cubitt (1825–). English botanist. M. C. Cooke

Cooke, Philip Pendleton (1816–1850). American poet. P. Pendleton Cooke

Cooke, Rose Terry (1827–1892). American author. R. T. Cooke

Cooke or Cook, William (died 1854). English dramatist and general writer. W. Cooke

Cooley's Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts. Cooley's Cyc.

Cooper, James Fenimore (1789–1851). American novelist. J. F. Cooper, or Cooper

Cooper, John Gilbert (1723–1769). English poet and general writer. J. G. Cooper

Cooper, Thomas (1517?–1594). Bishop of Winchester, and lexicographer. ("Thesaurus Linguæ Romanæ et Britannicæ," 1565, etc.) Cooper

Cope, Edward Drinker (1840–1897). American naturalist. E. D. Cope, or Cope

Copland, James (1791–1870). Scottish physician. Copland

Copley, John (1577–1622). British religious writer. Copley

Corbet, Richard (1582–1635). Bishop of Norwich, and poet. Bp. Corbet

Cornhill Magazine (1860–). English monthly literary magazine. Cornhill Mag.

Cornish, Joseph (1750–1823). English theologian. Cornish

Cornwall, Barry. See Procter.

Cornwallis, Sir Charles (died 1629). English diplomatist. Sir C. Cornwallis

Coryat or Coryate, Thomas (died 1617). English traveler. T. Coryat

Cosin, John (1594–1672). Bishop of Durham. Bp. Cosin

Costard, George (1710–1782). English writer on astronomy. Costard

Cotgrave, John (lived about 1655). English author. J. Cotgrave

Cotgrave, Randle (died 1634?). English lexicographer. ("A Dictionarie of the French and English Tongues," 1611 and 1632; ed. James Howell, 1650, 1660, 1673.) Cotgrave

Cotton, Charles (1630–1687). English poet and translator. Cotton

Cotton, John (1585–1652). American clergyman. J. Cotton

Cotton, Nathaniel (1705–1788). English poet and physician. N. Cotton

Cotton, Sir Robert Bruce (1571–1631). English antiquary. Sir R. Cotton

Coues, Elliott (1842–1899). American naturalist. Coues

Coulter, John Merle (1851–). American botanist. Coulter

Court and Times of Charles I. By Father Cyprien de Gamache. Court and Times of Charles I.

Court of Love. Middle English poem, once assigned to Chaucer. Court of Love

Cousin, Victor (1792–1867). French philosopher. Cousin

Coventry, Henry (died 1752). English religious writer. Coventry

Coventry Mysteries. A series of miracle plays assigned to the 15th and 16th centuries. Coventry Mysteries

Coverdale, Miles (1488–1568). English Biblical translator. Coverdale

Cowell, John (1554–1611). English jurist. ("The Interpreter," a law dictionary, 1607, edition used, 1637.) Cowell

Cowley, Abraham (1618–1667). English poet. Cowley

Cowper, William (1731–1800). English poet. Cowper

Cox, Sir George William (1827–1902). English clergyman and historian. See Brande and Cox. Sir G. Cox

Coxe, Arthur Cleveland (1818–1896). Bishop of Western New York. Bp. Coxe

Coxe, William (1747–1828). English historian. Coxe

Crabb, George (1778–1851). English scholar and author. Crabb

Crabbe, George (1754–1832). English poet. Crabbe

Craddock, Charles Egbert. See Murfree.

Craig, John. English lexicographer. ("New Universal Etymological Technical Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language," 1847–49, 1853.) Craig

Craik, Dinah Maria Mulock (1826–1887). English novelist. Mrs. Craik

Craik, George Lillie (1798–1866). Scottish writer on language and literature. Craik

Cranch, Christopher Pearse (1813–1892). American poet and painter. C. P. Cranch

Cranch, William (1769–1855). American jurist. Cranch

Cranmer, Thomas (1489–1556). Archbishop of Canterbury. Cranmer

Crashaw, Richard (died 1649). English poet. Crashaw

Crawford, Francis Marion (1854–). American novelist. F. M. Crawford

Crawford, Thomas C. (1849–). American journalist. T. C. Crawford

Crawfurd, John (1783–1868). Scottish traveler and orientalist. J. Crawfurd

Creasy, Sir Edward Shepherd (1812–1878). English historian. Sir E. Creasy

Creech, Thomas (1659–1700). English translator. Creech

Critic, The (1881–). American weekly literary periodical. The Critic

Croft, Herbert (1603–1691). Bishop of Hereford. Bp. Croft

Croll, James (1821–1890). Scottish physicist. J. Croll, or Croll

Croly, George (1780–1860). Irish clergyman, poet, and author. Croly

Cromek, Robert Hartley (1770–1812). English engraver and writer. Cromek Remains

Crompton, Hugh (about 1657). English poet. Crompton

Crookes, Sir William (1832–). English chemist. W. Crookes

Cross, Mrs. J. W. (Mary Ann Evans, pseudonym "George Eliot") (1819–1880). English novelist. George Eliot

Crowe, Mrs. Catherine (died 1876). English novelist. Mrs. Crowe

Crowe, William (1745–1829). English clergyman and poet. W. Crowe

Crowley, Robert (died 1588). English clergyman, printer, and author. Crowley

Crowne, John (last half of 17th century). English dramatic writer. Crowne

Cruikshank, William (1745–1800). Scottish anatomist. Cruikshank

Cudworth, Ralph (1617–1688). English philosopher and theologian. Cudworth

Culley, R. S. ("A Handbook of Practical Telegraphs," 8th ed., 1885.) R. S. Culley

Culverwel or Culverwell, Nathaniel (died about 1651). English theologian. Culverwell

Cumberland, Richard (1631? 1718). Bishop of Peterborough. Bp. Cumberland

Cumberland, Richard (1732–1811). English dramatist. Cumberland

Cunningham, Allan (1784–1842). Scottish poet and author. Allan Cunningham

Cunningham, John (1729–1773). Irish poet. J. Cunningham

Cursor Mundi (about 1320). Middle English poem. Cursor Mundi

Curtis, George Ticknor (1812–1894). American jurist. G. T. Curtis

Curtis, George William (1824–1892). American essayist and editor. G. W. Curtis

Curtis, John. English entomologist. ("Farm Insects," 1860.) Curtis

Curzon, Robert (Lord Zouche) (1810–1873). English traveler and scholar. R. Curzon

Cushing, Luther Stearns (1803–1856). American jurist. Cushing

Cust, Robert Needham (1821–). English philologist. R. N. Cust

Cuvier, Georges Léopold Chrétien Frédéric Dagobert, Baron (1769–1832). French naturalist. G. Cuvier, or Cuvier

Cyclopædia, English. Eng. Cyc.

Cyclopædia of American Biography. See Appleton.

Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature. See McClintock and Strong.

Cyclopædia of Education. Kiddle and Schem.

Cyclopædia of English Literature, Chambers's.

Cyclopædia of Political Science, Political Economy, and United States History (1881-1884). Edited by John J. Lalor. Cyc. Polit. Sci.

Dalgarno, George (died 1687). English writer on pasigraphy. Dalgarno

Dall, William Healey (1845-) American naturalist. Dall

Dalrymple, Sir David. See Hailes.

Dalton, John Call (1825-1889). American physiologist. Dalton

Dalton, Michael (died about 1648). English lawyer. M. Dalton

Dampier, William (1652-1715). English navigator. Dampier

Dana, Charles Anderson (1819-1897). American journalist. C. A. Dana

Dana, Edward Salisbury (1849-). American mineralogist. E. S. Dana

Dana, James Dwight (1813-1895). American mineralogist and geologist. Dana, or J. D. Dana

Dana, Richard Henry (1787-1879). American poet. R. H. Dana

Dana, Richard Henry, Jr. (1815-1882) American jurist and author. R. H. Dana, Jr.

Daniel, Samuel (1562-1619). English poet. Daniel

Daniell, Alfred. Contemporary Scottish physicist. A. Daniell

D'Arblay, Mme. See Burney.

Darcie or Darcy, Abraham (about 1635) English author. Darcie

Darlington, William (1782-1863). American botanist. Darlington

Darmesteter, James (1849-1894). French author and translator. J. Darmesteter

Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882) English naturalist Darwin

Darwin, Erasmus (1731-1802). English physician, naturalist, and poet. Dr. E. Darwin

Darwin, Francis (1848-). English naturalist F. Darwin

Davenant, Charles (1656-1714) English political economist and publicist. C. Davenant

Davenant, John (1576-1641) Bishop of Salisbury. Davenant

Davenant, Sir William (1606-1668) English dramatist and poet. Sir W. Davenant

Davids, Thomas William Rhys (1843-) English Orientalist. Rhys Davids

Davidson, David. British writer ("Thoughts on the Seasons," 1789.) Davidson

Davies, John (died 1618). English poet Davies

Davies, Sir John (1569-1626). English lawyer and poet. Sir J. Davies

Davies, Thomas Lewis Owen. English clergyman and lexicographer. ("Supplementary English Glossary," 1881.) Davies

Davis, Charles Thomas (1807-) American technical writer. C. T. Davis

Davis, Thomas Osborne (1814-1845). British poet and politician. T. Davis

Davison, D. Translator of Schlosser's History Davison

Dawbeny, H. English writer ("Historie relating to Cromwell," 1659.) Dawbeny

Dawkins, William Boyd (1838-) English geologist and ethnologist. W. Boyd Dawkins

Dawson, Sir John William (1820-1899). Canadian geologist. Dawson

De Bary, Heinrich Anton (1831-). German botanist De Bary

De Candolle, Alphonse (1806-1893). French botanist. De Candolle

De Colange, L. American compiler, editor of "Zell's Encyclopædia," 1871, and "The American Dictionary of Commerce," 1881.

Dee, John (1527-1608). English mathematician and astrologer. Dr. John Dee

Defoe, Daniel (died 1731). English novelist and pamphleteer. Defoe

De Kay, Charles (1848-). American author. C. De Kay

Dekker, Thomas (about 1570-1641). English dramatist Dekker

De La Beche, Sir Henry Thomas (1796-1855). English geologist. Sir H. De La Beche

Delany, Mary (1700-1788) English writer of memoirs. Mrs. Delany

Delany, Patrick (died 1768). Irish divine Delany

De Lolme, John Louis (died 1807) English lawyer and author. De Lolme

De Long, George Washington (1844-1881). American explorer. De Long

Delta. See Moir

De Mille, James (1837-1880) Canadian educator and novelist. J. De Mille

De Morgan, Augustus (1806-1871) English mathematician and logician. De Morgan

Denham, Sir John (1615-1669). English poet Sir J. Denham

Denison, John (died 1629). English divine. J. Denison

Dennis, John (1657-1734). English critic, dramatist, etc. Dennis

De Quincey, Thomas (1785-1859). English author De Quincey

Derby, Fourteenth Earl of (Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley) (1799-1869). English statesman and author. Derby

Derham (or Durham), William (1657-1735) English divine Derham

Dering, Sir Edward (1598-1644) English politician and religious writer Sir E. Dering

Descartes, René (1596-1650). French philosopher and mathematician Descartes

* Trans. by Veitch.

De Vere, Sir Aubrey (1788-1846) Irish poet Aubrey De Vere

De Vere, M. von Schele. See Schele.

Dibdin, Charles (1745-1814). English songwriter and dramatist. C. Dibdin

Dibdin, Thomas Frognall (1776-1847) English bibliographer Dibdin

Dicey, Albert Venn (1835-). English historical writer A. V. Dicey

Dicey, Edward. Contemporary English historical writer and publicist. E. Dicey

Dickens, Charles (1812-1870) English novelist. Dickens

Dictionaries. For general English dictionaries (including glossaries and dialectal dictionaries), see Ash, N. Bailey, T. Blount, J. Bullokar, Cockeram, E. Coles, Cowel, T. L. O. Davies, Encyclopædic, Fallows, Glossographia Anglicana Nova, Halliwell, Imperial, Jamieson, Jodrell, Johnson, Kersey, Latham, Mason, Meadows, Nares, New English, Nuttall, E. Phillips, C. Richardson, Sanser, T. Sheridan, P. H. Smart, Stormonth, J. Walker, N. Webster, J. K. Worcester, T. Wright. For early English Latin or Latin-English dictionaries, see Barcet, Catholicon Anglicum, T. Cooper, Herman, Huloet, Levins, Promptorium Parvulorum, Withal. The numerous dictionaries of foreign languages used are not mentioned in this list unless they have been specially cited (see Cotgrave, Diefenbach, Diez, Godefroy, Grimm, Littré, Scheler, etc.).

Dictionary, Catholic. See Catholic.

Dictionary, Commercial. See De Colange, J. R. McCulloch, McElrath, and Simmonds.

Dictionary, Drapers'. See Drapers' Dictionary.

Dictionary, Law. See W. C. Anderson, Blount, Bouvier, Burrill, Cowell, Manley and Whiteley, Rapalje and Lawrence, and J. J. S. Wharton.

Dictionary, Mechanical. See E. H. Knight.

Dictionary, Medical. See Dunglison, Foster, Quain, and Thomas, also Syden-ham Society's Lexicon and Buck's Handbook.

Dictionary, Micrographic. Griffith and Henfrey.

Dictionary, Military. See Burn, Farrow, Knollys, and Wilhelm.

Dictionary, Nautical or Naval. See Burn, Hamersly, Totten, and A. Young.

Dictionary of Americanisms. See J. R. Bartlett, J. S. Farmer, Pickering, and Schele de Vere.

Dictionary of Anonymous Literature. S. Halkett and John Laing.

Dictionary of Apiculture. John Phin.

Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words. See Halliwell, and compare T. Wright.

Dictionary of Architecture. See Audsley, Bose, Gwilt, R. Stuart, and Weale.

Dictionary of Art and Archæology. See Mollett.

Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines. See Ure.

Dictionary of Biography and Mythology. J. Thomas.

Dictionary of Chemistry. Henry Watts.

Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. Smith and Cheetham.

Dictionary of Christian Biography. Smith and Wace.

Dictionary of Dates. See Haydn.

Dictionary of Dyeing and Calico Printing. See O'Neill.

Dictionary of Electrical Words. E. J. Houston.

Dictionary of Electricity. See Greer

Dictionary of English History Sidney J. Low and F. S. Pulling

Dictionary of English Names of Plants. See Britten and Holland, W. Miller, and John Smith.

Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, Smith's.

Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology, Smith's.

Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography, Smith's.

Dictionary of Hindu Mythology. See J. Dowson.

Dictionary of India. See Garrett.

Dictionary of Islam. Thomas Patrick Hughes.

Dictionary of Miracles. See E. C. Brewer.

Dictionary of Music and Musicians. See Sir G. Grove.

Dictionary of Musical Terms. Stainer and Barrett.

Dictionary of National Biography. Edited by Leslie Stephen and Sidney Lee. Dict. Nat. Biog.

Dictionary of Old English Plays. J. O. Halliwell.

Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. See E. C. Brewer.

Dictionary of Pseudonyms. William Cushing.

Dictionary of Racing Terms. J. Cattanach

Dictionary of Religious Knowledge. Lyman Abbott.

Dictionary of Science and Technical Terms. W. M. Buchanan.

Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art. See Brande and Cox.

Dictionary of Scientific Terms. See Rimmer

Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, etc. See J. H. Blunt.

Dictionary of Slang. See Ayre, Hotten, and C. G. Leland.

Dictionary of the Bible, Smith's.

Dictionary of Theology. See J. H. Blunt.

Dictionary of Weights and Measures. See J. H. Alexander.

Dictionnaire de Botanique. M. H. Baillon.

Dictionnaire des Antiquités Grecques. Daremberg et Saglio.

Diefenbach, Lorenz (1806-1883) German philologist. ("Glossarium Latino-Germanicum," 1857; "Novum Glossarium Latino-Germanicum," 1867.)

Diez, Friedrich Christian (1794-1876) German philologist. ("Etymologisches Wörterbuch der romanischen Sprachen," 4th ed., 1878.)

Digby, George (Earl of Bristol) (1612-1677). English politician and writer. Digby

Digby, Sir Kenelm (1603-1665). English diplomatist, naval officer, and author. Sir K. Digby

Dilke, Sir Charles Wentworth (1843-). English politician and publicist. Sir C. W. Dilke

Disraeli, Benjamin (Earl of Beaconsfield) (1804-1881). English statesman and novelist. Disraeli

D'Israeli, Isaac (1766-1848). English man of letters. I. D'Israeli

Ditton, Humphrey (1675-1715). English mathematician. Ditton

Dix, Morgan (1827-). American clergyman. Morgan Dix

Dixon, James Main. British compiler ("Dictionary of Idiomatic English Phrases," 1891.)

Dixon, Richard Watson (1833-1900). English church historian and poet. R. W. Dixon

Dixon, William Hepworth (1821-1879). English traveler and historical writer. Hepworth Dixon

Dobell, Sydney Thompson (1824-1874). English poet. S. Dobell

Dobson, Austin (1840-). English poet and critic. A. Dobson

Doddridge, Philip (1702-1751) English divine and hymn-writer. Doddridge

Dodge, Mary Mapes (1838-). American author and editor. M. M. Dodge

Dodsley, Robert (1703-1764). English bookseller, poet, and author. Dodsley

Domestic Cyclopædia (1878). Todd & Goodholme.

Domett, Alfred (1811-1887). British colonial statesman and poet. A. Domett

Don, George (1798-1856). British botanist. Don

Donne, John (1573-1631). English poet and divine. Donne

Dorr, Julia Caroline Ripley (1825-) American poet and novelist. J. C. R. Dorr

Dorset, Sixth Earl of (Charles Sackville) (1637-1706). English poet and patron of letters. Lord Dorset

Drummond, Thomas (1797–1870). English poet, politician, and writer. Drummond Duart, Francis (1797–1866). English antiquary. Duart
Dunbar, Gavin or Gawin (died 1532). Scottish poet. Gavin Dunbar Duncan, Edward (1803–). English critic. Duncan
Dunham, Samuel Astley (1766–1856). English historical writer. S. Dunham Dunning, Calybute (1606–1644). English divine. Dunning
Dutton, John (1820–1881). English Oriental. (“Classical Dictionary of Hindu Mythology,” etc., 1879.) J Dowson
Drake, Sir Francis (died 1596). English navigator. Sir F Drake
Drake, Joseph Rodman (1795–1820). American poet. J. R. Drake
Drake, Nathan (1766–1836). English physician and essayist. N. Drake
Drant, Thomas (died 1578?). English translator. Drant
Draper, John William (1811–1882). American scientist and historian. J. W. Draper
Draper, Sir William (1721–1787). English political writer. Draper
Draper’s Dictionary, The. Edited by S. William Beck.
Drayton, Michael (1563?–1631). English poet. Drayton
Dredge, James. Writer on electric illumination. Dredge
Drone, Eaton Sylvester (1842–). American legal writer. Drone Drummond, Alexander (died 1769). Scottish traveler. A Drummond Drummond, Henry (1851–1897). Scottish author. H. Drummond Drummond, William, of Hawthornden (1585–1649). Scottish poet. Drummond, or Drummond of Hawthornden
Dryden, John (1631–1700). English poet and dramatist. Dryden
Dublin Review (1836–). Irish quarterly literary review Dublin Rev.
Dublin University Magazine (1833–1880). Irish monthly magazine. Dublin Univ. Mag.
Du Cange, Charles du Fresne, Seigneur (1610–1688). French philologist. (“Glossarium ad Scriptores Mediæ et Infimæ Latinitatis,” 1678; edition used, 1883–1887.) Du Cange
Duff, Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant (1829–). Scottish political writer. Grant Duff Dufferin, Countess of (Helen Selina Sheridan) (1807–1867). English poet. Countess of Dufferin
Dufferin, Marquis of (Frederick Temple Hamilton Blackwood) (1826–). English statesman. Lord Dufferin
Dugdale, Sir William (1605–1686). English antiquary. Dugdale
Duhring, Louis Adolphus (1845–). American physician. Duhring
Dunbar, William (about 1460–1530). Scottish poet Dunbar
Duncan, Peter Martin. British naturalist P. M Duncan
Dunglison, Robley (1798–1869). American physician (“A Dictionary of Medical Science,” 1833; edition used, 1874.) Dunglison
Dunlap, William (1766–1839). American playwright and artist Dunlap
Dunlop, John Colin (died 1842). Scottish critic and author J Dunlop
Dunman, Thomas. English physiologist. (“Glossary of Biological, Anatomical, and Physiological Terms,” 1879.) Dunman
Dunton, John (1659–1733). English miscellaneous writer. Dunton
Duppa, Brian (1588–1662). Bishop of Winchester. Bp Duppa
D’Urfey, Thomas (1653–1723). English dramatist and song writer Tom D’Urfey, or D’Urfey Durham. See Derham.
Dury or Durie, John (1596–1680). Scottish theologian. Dury
Dwight, Timothy (1752–1817). American theologian and poet. Dwight Dyce, Alexander (1798–1869). English clergyman and critic. Dyce
Dyer, John (died 1748). English poet. Dyer
Dyer, Thomas Henry (1804–1888). English historian. T. H. Dyer

Earbery, Matthias (about 1700). English author. Earbery
Earle, John (1601?–1665). Bishop of Salisbury. Bp Earle
Earle, John (1824–). English philologist. J. Earle
Early English Text Society, Publications of. Society instituted in 1864 E. E. T. S.
Eaton, Daniel Cady (1834–1895). American botanist. Eaton
Eckard, Lawrence (1670?–1730). English historian Eckard
Eclectic Review (1805–1868). English quarterly literary review Eclec. Rev.
Eden, Richard (died 1576). English compiler and translator R. Eden
Eden, Robert (about 1780). English clergyman. Eden, or Dr R. Eden
Edgeworth, Maria (1767–1849). English novelist. Miss Edgeworth
Edgeworth, Roger (died 1560). English Roman Catholic divine Roger Edgeworth Edinburgh Magazine (1817–1826). Scottish monthly magazine Edinburgh Mag.
Edinburgh Medical Journal (1855–). Edinburgh Med. Jour.
Edinburgh Review (1802–). British quarterly literary review Edinburgh Rev.
Education (1881–). American bimonthly periodical Education.
Edwards, Amelia Blandford (1831–1892). English novelist and archæologist A. B. Edwards
Edwards, Bryan (1743–1800). West India merchant and writer Bryan Edwards
Edwards, Henry Sutherland (1828–). English journalist H. S. Edwards
Edwards, Jonathan (1703–1758). American theologian and metaphysician Edwards
Edwards, M. B. Betham-. See Betham-Edwards
Edwards, Richard (died 1566). English dramatist and poet R. Edwards
Edwards, Thomas (1699–1757). English critic. T. Edwards
Eggleston, Edward (1837–1902). American novelist and historical writer E. Eggleston Ehrenberg, Christian Gottfried (1795–1876). German naturalist Ehrenberg
Eikon Basilike (1649). Work relating to Charles I. Eikon Basilike
Eissler, Manuel. American engineer. (“The Modern High Explosives,” 1884.) Eissler Eliot, George. See Cross.
Eliot, John. English writer. (“Orthoepia Gallica, Eliot’s Fruits for the French,” 1593.) Eliot
Ellesmere, Earl of (Francis Egerton) (1800–1857). English poet and politician. Lord Ellesmere
Ellis, Henry (1721–1806). American colonial governor and explorer H Ellis
Ellis, John. Irish divine (wrote about 1743). Ellis
Ellwood, Thomas (1639–1713). English author. T Ellwood
Elys, Anthony (1690–1764). Bishop of St. David’s. Bp Elys
Elton, Sir Arthur Hallam (1818–1863). English novelist. Sir A. H. Elton
Elton, Charles Isaac (1839–). English jurist and ethnologist. C. Elton
Ely, Richard Theodore (1854–). American political economist. R. T. Ely
Elyot, Sir Thomas (1490? 1546). English diplomatist, author, and lexicographer. (“The Dictionary [Latin-English] of Syr T. Elyot, Knyght,” 1538, 1545; ed. Cooper, “Bibliotheca Eliotæ,” 1552, 1559.) Sir T. Elyot
Emerson, Ralph Waldo (1803–1882). American poet and essayist. Emerson
Encyclopædia, Blackie’s Popular. Pop. Encyc.
Encyclopædia, Chambers’s. Edinburgh editions 1860–1868, etc., 1886. American edition (“Library of Universal Knowledge”), 1880–1882.
Encyclopædia, Farrow’s Military. Farrow
Encyclopædia, Hamersly’s Naval. Hamersly Encyclopædia, Religious. See Schaff-Herzog.
Encyclopædia, Zell’s Popular. Zell Encyclopædia Americana. Encyc. Amer.
Encyclopædia Britannica. Ninth edition, 1875–1888. Encyc. Brit.
Encyclopædia Metropolitana. Encyc. Metr.
Encyclopædia of Architecture. See Gwilt.
Encyclopædia of Arts, Manufactures, etc. See Spons.
Encyclopædic Dictionary (1879–1888). Edited by Robert Hunter. Encyc. Dict., or E. D.
Encyclopædic Medical Dictionary. See F. P. Foster Encyc. Med. Dict.
Endlicher, Stephan Ladislaus (1804–1849). Austrian botanist Endlicher
Engineer, The (1856–). English weekly periodical. The Engineer Engineering (1866–). English weekly periodical Engineering
Engineering News (1874–). American weekly periodical Engineering News
English Cyclopædia (1854–1862). Charles Knight, Eng. Cyc.
English Dialect Society, Publications of. Society instituted in 1873 E. D. S.
Erskine, John (1695–1768). Scottish jurist. Erskine’s Inst., or Erskine
Eschscholtz, Johann Friedrich von (1793–1834). German naturalist and traveler. Eschscholtz
Etherege, Sir George (died 1691) English dramatist. Etherege
Evelyn, Laurence (1688–1730) English poet. Evelyn Eustace, John Chetwode (died 1815) English antiquary. Eustace
Evans, Sir John (1823–). British antiquary. Evans
Evans, Mary Ann. See Cross.
Evelyn, John (1620–1706) English author Evelyn Everett, Edward (1794–1865). American orator and statesman. Everett Everett, Joseph David (1831–). English physicist. J. D. Everett
Ewing, Juliana Horatia (1841–1885) English writer. J. H. Ewing

Faber, Frederick William (1814–1863) English poet Faber
Faber, George Stanley (1773–1854). English theologian G. S. Faber
Fabyan, Robert (died 1513) English chronicler Fabyan
Fagge, Charles Hilton (1838–1883). English medical writer. Fagge
Fairfax, Edward (died 1635) English translator and poet Fairfax
Fairholt, Frederick William (1814–1866) English antiquary and writer on art. Fairholt Faiths of the World. St Giles Lectures, Edinburgh. Faiths of the World
Falconer, William (1732–1769). British poet Falconer
Fallon, S. W. (“English-Hindustani Dictionary,” 1879.) Fallon
Fallows, Samuel (1836–). American bishop (“Supplemental Dictionary,” 1886.) Fallows
Fanning, John Thomas (1837–) American engineer Fanning
Fanshawe, Sir Richard (1608–1666). English diplomatist and poet. Fanshawe
Faraday, Michael (1791–1867) English physicist Faraday
Farindon, Anthony (1598–1658). English divine Farindon
Farley, James Lewis (1823–1885). English writer on Turkey J. L. Farley
Farlow, William Gibson (1844–) American botanist Farlow
Farmer, Hugh (1714–1787) English theological writer. H. Farmer
Farmer, John S. English compiler (“Dictionary of Americanisms,” 1889.) Farmer
Farquhar, George (1678–1707) British dramatist Farquhar
Farrar, Frederic William (1831–) English clergyman and theological writer Farrar, or F. W. Farrar
Farrow’s Military Encyclopædia (1885). Farrow
Favour, John (died 1623) English divine J. Favour Fawcett, Henry (1833–1884) English statesman and political economist Fawcett
Fawkes, Francis (1720–1777) English poet and divine Fawkes
Featley, Daniel (1582–1645) English controversialist D. Featley
Fell, John (1625–1686) Bishop of Oxford Bp Fell
Fellowes, Robert (1771–1847) English religious and miscellaneous writer. Fellowes
Feltham, Owen (died 1668) English moralist Feltham
Felton, Henry (1679–1740) English divine Felton
Fenton, Elijah (1681–1730) English poet Fenton
Fergusson, James (1808–1886) British writer on architecture J. Fergusson
Fergusson, Robert (1750–1774) Scottish poet Fergusson
Ferrar, Nicholas (1592–1637). English religious writer N. Ferrar
Ferrars, George (died 1579) English politician, historian, and poet G. Ferrars
Ferrier, James Frederick (1808–1864) Scottish metaphysician Ferrier
Ferrier, Susan Edmonstone (1782–1854) Scottish novelist Miss Ferrier
Fiddes, Richard (1671–1725) English divine and historian Fiddes
Field, The (1853–) English weekly country gentleman’s newspaper The Field
Fielding, Henry (1707–1754). English novelist Fielding Fields, James Thomas (1817–1881) American publisher and writer J. T. Fields
Filmer, Edward (about 1706) English dramatic writer F. Filmer
Finch-Hatton, Hon. Harold Heneage (1856–) English writer on Australia. Finch-Hatton
Finlay, George (1799–1875) English historian Finlay
First Year of a Silken Reign, The Andrew W. Tuer and Charles E. Fagan Fish, Simon (died 1531). English Reformer and pamphleteer S. Fish
Fisher, George Park (1827–) American writer on church history. G. P. Fisher
Fisher, John (died 1535). Bishop of Rochester. Bp. Fisher

Fisheries and Fishing Industries of the United States. Edited by George Brown Goode, 1887. Fisheries of U. S.
Fiske, John (1842–1901). American historical and philosophical writer. J. Fiske
Fitch, Sir J. G. (1824–). English writer on educational subjects. J. G. Fitch
Fitz-Geoffry, Charles (died 1638). English poet and divine. Fitz-Geoffry Fitz-Osborne, Sir Thomas. See W. Melmoth.
Fitzroy, Robert (1805–1865). British admiral, hydrographer, and meteorologist. Fitzroy
Fleetwood, William (1656–1723). Bishop of Ely. Bp. Fleetwood
Fleming, John (1785–1857). Scottish naturalist. Jn. J. Fleming
Fleming, William (1794–1866). Scottish divine, philosophical writer, and compiler. Fleming Fletcher, Giles (died 1623). English poet. G. Fletcher
Fletcher, John (1579–1625). English dramatist. J. Fletcher, or Fletcher
Fletcher, Phineas (1582–1650). English poet. P. Fletcher
Flint, Austin (1836–). American medical writer Flint
Flint, Charles Louis (1824–1869). American botanist. C. L. Flint
Florio, John (died 1625). Italian-English lexicographer. ("A Worlde of Wordes," an Italian and English dictionary, 1598; 2d ed., 1611.) Florio
Flower, Sir William Henry (1831–1899). English naturalist W. H. Flower
Floyer, Sir John (1649–1734). English physician Floyer
Folk-Lore Society, Publications of. Society instituted in 1877 Fonblanque, Albany (1793–1872). English journalist. A. Fonblanque, Jr.
Fonblanque, John de Grenier (1760–1837) English jurist. J. Fonblanque
Fonseca, Pedro José da (died 1816). Portuguese philologist. Fonseca
Foote, Samuel (1720–1777). English dramatist and actor. Foote
Forbes, Archibald (1838–1900). British war correspondent and miscellaneous writer. Arch. Forbes
Forbes, Edward (1815–1854). British naturalist E. Forbes
Forbes, Henry Ogg. Contemporary Scottish traveler. H. O. Forbes
Forbes, James David (1809–1868). Scottish scientist. J. D. Forbes
Forby, Robert (1759–1825). English clergyman and compiler. ("Vocabulary of East Anglia," 1830.) Forby
Ford, John (1586–after 1638). English dramatist. Ford
Fordyce, Sir William (1724–1792). Scottish physician Sir W. Fordyce
Foreign Quarterly Review (1827–1846). English quarterly literary review. Foreign Quarterly Rev.
Forest and Stream (1873–). American weekly periodical.
Forney, Matthias N. American writer on mechanical subjects. Forney
Forster, John (1812–1876). English journalist and essayist. Forster
Forsyth, Joseph (1763–1815). Scottish traveler Forsyth
Fortescue, Sir John (1394?–1476?). English jurist. Fortescue
Fortnightly Review (1865–). English monthly literary periodical. Fortnightly Rev.
Forum, The (1886–). American monthly literary periodical The Forum
Fosbrooke, Thomas Dudley (1770–1842). English antiquary. Fosbrooke
Foster, Frank Pierce (1841–). American physician and editor. ("An Illustrated Encyclopædic Medical Dictionary," 1888–.) Foster, Med. Dict.
Foster, John (1770–1843). English essayist Foster
Foster, Sir Michael (1836–). English physiologist. M. Foster
Fotherby, Martin (died 1619). Bishop of Salisbury. Fotherby
Fountainhall, Lord (Sir John Lauder) (1646–1722). Scottish judge. Fountainhall
Fourcroy, Antoine François de (1755–1809) French chemist. Fourcroy
Fowler, Thomas (1832–). English clergyman and writer on logic and philosophy Fowler Fownes, George (1815–1849). English chemist Fownes
Fox, Caroline (1819–1871). English diarist Caroline Fox
Fox, Charles James (1749–1806). English statesman and orator Fox
Foxe or Fox, John (1516–1587). English writer ("the martyrologist") Foxe Frampton, John (about 1580). English merchant. Frampton
Francis, Philip (died 1773). English translator and general writer. P. Francis Frankland, Sir Edward (1825–1899). English chemist. E. Frankland
Franklin, Benjamin (1706–1790). American philosopher, statesman, and author. Franklin
Franklin Institute, Journal of the See Journal
Fraser, Alexander Campbell (1819–). Scottish philosophical writer Fraser Fraser's Magazine (1830–1882). English monthly magazine. Fraser's Mag.
Freeman, Edward Augustus (1823–1892). English historian. E. A. Freeman
Freneau, Philip (1752–1832). American poet. Freneau
Frere, John Hookham (1769–1846). English diplomatist and writer J. H. Frere
Frey, Heinrich (1822–1890). German physician and naturalist Frey
Friswell, James Hain (1825–1878). English miscellaneous writer. Hain Friswell
Frost, Percival (1817–1898). English mathematician. Frost
Frothingham, Octavius Brooks (1822–1895). American clergyman and author O. B. Frothingham
Froude, James Anthony (1818–1894). English historian. Froude
Fryth or Frith, John (1503–1533). English Reformer and martyr. Fryth
Fulke, William (1538–1589). English Puritan divine. Fulke
Fuller, Andrew (1754–1815). English theologian. A. Fuller
Fuller, Margaret (Marchioness Ossoli) (1810–1850). American author Marg. Fuller
Fuller, Thomas (1608–1661). English theologian and historian Fuller
Furness, Horace Howard (1833–). American Shakesperian scholar Furness

Galusford, Thomas (died 1634?). English author. T. Gainsford
Gairdner, James (1828–). Scottish historian J. Gairdner
Gallatin, Albert (1761–1849). American statesman. Gallatin
Galloway, Robert (lived about 1780). Scottish poet Galloway
Galt, John (1779–1839). Scottish novelist Galt
Galton, Francis (1822–). English traveler and anthropologist. Francis Galton
Ganot, Adolphe (1804–). French physicist. Trans. by Atkinson. Ganot
Gardiner, Stephen (died 1555). Bishop of Winchester. Bp. Gardiner
Garner, Robert. British naturalist. R. Garner
Garnett, Richard (1789–1850). English philologist. Garnett
Garrard, Kenner. American military officer, editor of "Nolan's System for Training Cavalry Horses," 1862. Garrard
Garrett, John. ("Classical Dictionary of India," 1871–1875.) Garrett
Garrick, David (1717–1779). English actor and playwright. Garrick Garth, Sir Samuel (1661–1719). English physician and poet. Garth
Gascoigne, George (died 1577). English poet and dramatist. Gascoigne
Gaskell, Elizabeth Cleghorn (1810–1865). English novelist. Mrs. Gaskell
Gauden, John (1605–1662). Bishop of Worcester. Bp. Gauden
Gay, John (1685–1732). English poet and dramatist. Gay
Gayarré, Charles Étienne Arthur (1805–1895). American historian. Gayarré
Gayton, Edmund (1608–1666). English humorist. Gayton
Geddes, Alexander (1737–1802). Scottish Biblical critic. Geddes Geddes, William Duguid (1828–1900). Scottish classical scholar. Prof. Geddes Gegenbaur, Karl (1826–). German anatomist. Gegenbaur
Geikie, Sir Archibald (1835–). Scottish geologist. Geikie
Geikie, James (1839–). Scottish geologist. J. Geikie, or Geikie
Geneste, John (1764–1839). ("Account of the English Stage," 1832.) Geneste
Gentleman's Magazine (1731–). English monthly literary magazine. Gentleman's Mag.
Gentleman's Recreation (1st ed. 1674). By Nicholas Cox. Gent. Recreation
Genung, John F. (1850–). American educator. J. Genung
Geological Magazine (1864–). English monthly periodical. Geol. Mag.
Geological Society, Quarterly Journal of (1845–). English quarterly periodical. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc.
Gerarde or Gerard, John (1545–1612). English surgeon and herbalist. Gerarde Gesta Romanorum (13th century). Collection of legends.
Gibbon, Edward (1737–1794). English historian. Gibbon
Gibbs, Josiah Willard (1790–1861). American philologist. J. W. Gibbs
Gifford, John (1768–1818). English miscellaneous writer. J. Gifford
Gifford, Richard (1725–1807). English clergyman and general author. R. Gifford Gifford, William (1756–1826). English editor, critic, and satirist. Gifford
Gilbert, William Schwenck (1836–). English librettist and ballad-writer. W. S. Gilbert
Gilder, Richard Watson (1844–). American poet and editor. R. W. Gilder Gilder, William Henry (1838–1899). American explorer and journalist. W. H. Gilder
Giles, Henry (1809–1882). American lecturer H. Giles
Giles, Herbert. British consul in China. ("Glossary of Reference," 1878.) Giles
Gill, Theodore Nicholas (1837–). American naturalist Gill
Gillmore, Quincy Adams (1825–1888). American general and engineer. Q. A. Gillmore
Gilly, William Stephen (1789–1855). English clergyman. Gilly
Gilman, Daniel Coit (1831–). American educator and author. D. C. Gilman Gilpin, William (1724–1804). English clergyman and general writer. W. Gilpin
Gindely, Anton (1829–1892). Bohemian historian. A. Gindely
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809–1898). English statesman and scholar. Gladstone Glanville or Glanvill, Joseph (1636–1680). English divine. Glanville
Glazebrook and Shaw. ("Practical Physics," 1885.) Glazebrook and Shaw
Glen, William (1789–1826). Scottish poet W. Glen Glennie, John S. Stuart. Contemporary British writer. Stuart Glennie
Glossary, Juridical. See H. C. Adams.
Glossary, Nares's. See Nares.
Glossary of Anglo-Indian Terms. See Yule and Burnell.
Glossary of Architecture. See Oxford Glossary.
Glossary of Biological, Anatomical, and Physiological Terms. See Duaman
Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms. F. G. Lee.
Glossary of Mining and Metallurgical Terms. R. W. Raymond.
Glossary of North Country Words. John Trotter
Glossary of Terms and Phrases. H. Percy Smith.
Glossary of the Shetland and Orkney Dialect. Thomas Edmonston.
Glossographia. See T. Blount.
Glossographia Anglicana Nova (1707). An anonymous English dictionary.
Glover, Richard (1712–1785). English poet. Glover
Godefroy, Frédéric (1826–). French scholar. ("Dictionnaire de l'Ancienne Langue Française," 1880.) Godefroy
Godwin, William (1756–1836). English novelist and author. Godwin
Golding, Arthur (1536?–1606?). English translator. Golding
Goldsmith, Oliver (1728–1774). British poet, dramatist, and author. Goldsmith
Goldsmith's Handbook (1881). George E. Gee Goldsmith's Handbook
Good, John Mason (1764–1827). English physician and author. Good Goodale, George Lincoln (1839–). American botanist. G. L. Goodale
Goode, George Brown (1851–1896). American ichthyologist. Goode, or Brown Goode
Goodman, Godfrey (1583–1656). Bishop of Gloucester. Bp. Goodman
Goodman, John (about 1680) English clergyman. J. Goodman
Goodrich, Chauncey Allen (1790–1860) American lexicographer, editor of "Webster's Dictionary," 1847 and 1859. Goodrich
Goodrich, Samuel Griswold (1793–1860) (pseudonym "Peter Parley"). American miscellaneous writer S. G. Goodrich
Goodwin, John (died 1665) English clergyman and controversialist. Goodwin
Googe, Barnabe (1540–1594). English poet. Googe
Gordon, James (1665–1746). Scottish Roman Catholic prelate. Bp. Gordon
Gordon, J. E. H. Author of "Electricity and Magnetism," 1893. J. E. H. Gordon
Gordon-Cumming, Constance Frederica (1857–). Scottish writer of travels. C. F. Gordon-Cumming
Gore, Catherine Grace Frances (1799–1861). English novelist. Mrs. Gore
Gore, George (1826–). English scientist. G. Gore
Gorges, Sir Arthur (died 1625). English poet and author. Sir A. Gorges, or A. Gorges
Gorman, Thomas Murray. Contemporary English psychological writer, translator of Swedenborg. T. M. Gorman Gosse, Edmund William (1849–). English critic and poet. E. W. Gosse
Gosse, Philip Henry (1810–1888). English zoologist. P. H. Gosse
Gotch, Frederick William (1807–1890). English clergyman and author. F. Gotch
Gough, Richard (1735–1809). English antiquary. Gough

LIST OF WRITERS AND AUTHORITIES

Gould, Augustus Addison (1805–1866). American naturalist. A. A. Gould

Gow, J. Contemporary English historical writer. Gow

Gower, John (1325?–1408?). English poet. ("Confessio Amantis," about 1393–1398.) Gower

Grafton, Richard (died 1572?). English chronicler. Grafton

Graham, Thomas (1805–1869). Scottish chemist. Graham

Grahame, James (1765–1811). Scottish poet. Grahame

Grainger, James (died 1766). British poet and physician. Grainger

Grammont, Memoirs of Count de. By Anthony Hamilton. Memoirs of Count de Grammont

Granger, James (1723–1776). English biographer. J. Granger

Granger, Thomas (about 1620). British religious writer. Granger

Grant, A. C. Contemporary writer on Australia. A. C. Grant

Grant, James (1822–1887). Scottish novelist and historical writer. J. Grant

Grant, Ulysses S. (1822–1885). General, and eighteenth President of the United States. U. S. Grant

Granville, George (Lord Lansdowne) (1667–1735). English poet and dramatist. Granville

Grattan, Thomas Colley (1792–1864). Irish novelist. T. C. Grattan

Graunt, John (1620–1674). English statistician. Graunt

Graves, Richard (1715–1804). English novelist and poet. Graves

Gray, Asa (1810–1888). American botanist. A. Gray

Gray, Elisha (1835–1901). American inventor. E. Gray

Gray, George Robert (1808–1872). English zoologist. G. R. Gray

Gray, Henry (1825?–1861). British anatomist. H. Gray

Gray, John Edward (1800–1875). English naturalist. J. E. Gray

Gray, Thomas (1716–1771). English poet. Gray

Greeley, Horace (1811–1872). American journalist. H. Greeley

Greely, Adolphus Washington (1844–). American officer and arctic explorer. A. W. Greely

Green, John Richard (1837–1883). English historian. J. R. Green

Green, Matthew (1696–1737). English poet. M. Green

Green, Thomas Hill (1836–1882). English writer on ethics. T. H. Green

Greene, Robert (died 1592). English dramatist, poet, romancer, and pamphleteer. Greene

Greener, W. W. ("The Gun and its Development," 1858; edition used, 1881.) W. W. Greener

Greenhill, Thomas (1681–1740?). English writer. Greenhill

Greenwood, William Henry. English technical writer. ("Steel and Iron," 1884.) W. H. Greenwood

Greer, Henry. American compiler. ("A Dictionary of Electricity," 1883.) Greer

Greg, William Rathbone (1809–1881). English essayist. W. R. Greg

Gregg, William Stephenson. Contemporary British author. W. S. Gregg

Gregory, George (1754–1808). English clergyman and man of letters. G. Gregory

Gregory, George (1790–1853). English physician. Dr. George Gregory

Gregory, John (1607–1646). English clergyman and Orientalist. J. Gregory

Grein, Christian Wilhelm Michael (1825–1877). German philologist. ("Sprachschatz der Angelsachsischen Dichter," 1861–1864.)

Grettin, Phillips (about 1726). English clergyman. Grettin

Greville, Charles Cavendish Fulke (1794–1865). English writer of memoirs. Fulke Greville, or Greville

Greville, Robert Kaye (1794–1866). English botanist. Kaye Greville

Grew, Nehemiah (1641–1712). English botanist. N. Grew

Grew, Obadiah (1607–1689). English clergyman. O. Grew

Grey, Zachary (1688–1766). English critic and antiquary. Z. Grey

Griffith, Edward (1790–1858). English naturalist. E. Griffith

Griffith, Matthew (died 1665). English divine. Matthew Griffith

Grimbald or Grimoald, Nicholas (died about 1563). English poet. Grimbald

Grimm, Jacob Ludwig (1785–1863), and Grimm, Wilhelm Karl (1786–1859). German philologists. ("Deutsches Worterbuch," 1854–.) Grimm

Grindal, Edmund (died 1583). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Grindal

Grinnell, George Bird (1849–). American writer on sports. G. B. Grinnell

Grisebach, August Heinrich Rudolf (1814–1879). German botanist. Grisebach

Grose, Francis (1731?–1791). English antiquary. ("A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue," 1785; "A Provincial Glossary," 1787.) Grose

Grote, George (1794–1871). English historian. Grote

Grove, Sir George (1820–1900). English engineer and editor. ("Dictionary of Music and Musicians," 1879–1889.) Grove

Grove, Sir William Robert (1811–1896). English physicist. W. R. Grove

Guardian, The (1713). English literary periodical. Guardian

Guest, Edwin (1800–1880). English historical writer and philologist. Guest

Guevara, Sir Antonio of (1480?–1545?). Spanish chronicler. ("Familiar Letters," trans. by Hellowes, 1577.) Guevara

Guillaume, E. French writer on art. E. Guillaume

Guillim, John (1565–1621). English writer on heraldry. Guillim

Gunther, Albert Karl Ludwig Gotthilf (1830–). German-British zoologist. Gunther

Gurnall, William (1617–1679). English divine. Gurnall

Gurney, Edmund. Contemporary English metaphysical writer. E. Gurney

Guthrie, Thomas (1803–1873). Scottish clergyman and philanthropist. Guthrie

Guthrie, William (1708–1770). Scottish historical and general writer. W. Guthrie

Guylforde or Guildford, Sir Richard (died 1506). English politician. Sir R. Guylforde

Guy of Warwick (about 1314). Middle English romance. Guy of Warwick

Guyot, Arnold Henry (1807–1884). American geographer. Guyot

Gwilt, Joseph (1784–1863). English architect and archæologist. ("An Encyclopædia of Architecture," 1842; ed. Papworth, 1881.) Gwilt

Habington, William (1605–1654). English poet. Habington

Hacket, John (1592–1670). Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Bp. Hacket

Haddan, Arthur West (1816–1873). English clergyman, writer on ecclesiastical history, etc. A. W. Haddan

Hadley, James (1821–1872). American philologist. J. Hadley

Haeckel, Ernst Heinrich (1834–). German naturalist. Haeckel

Haggard, Henry Rider (1856–). English novelist. H. R. Haggard

Hailes, Lord (Sir David Dalrymple) (1726–1792). Scottish jurist and historian. Lord Hailes

Hakewill, George (1578–1649). English divine. Hakewill

Hakluyt, Richard (died 1616). English geographer. Hakluyt

Hakluyt Society's Publications. Society instituted in London, 1846.

Haldeman, Samuel Stehman (1812–1880). American naturalist and philologist. S. S. Haldeman

Haldorsen, Björn (1724?–1794). Icelandic lexicographer. ("Lexicon Islandico Latino-Danicum," ed. Rask, 1814.)

Hale, Edward Everett (1822–). American clergyman, historian, and novelist. E. E. Hale

Hale, Horatio (1817–1896). American ethnologist and philologist. H. Hale

Hale, Sir Matthew (1609–1676). English jurist. Sir M. Hale

Hales, John (1584–1656). English clergyman and critic. Hales

Haliburton, Thomas Chandler (pseudonym "Sam Slick") (1797–1865). British American judge and humorist. Haliburton

Halifax, Earl of (Charles Montague) (1661–1715). English statesman. Lord Halifax

Halkett, Samuel (1814–1871). Scottish compiler. ("Dictionary of Anonymous Literature," continued by J. Laing; published 1861–1888.) Halkett

Hall, Arthur (died 1604). English translator and politician. A. Hall

Hall, Basil (1788–1844). Scottish traveler. B. Hall

Hall, Benjamin Homer (1830–1895). American writer, compiler of "College Words and Customs." B. H. Hall

Hall, Charles Francis (1821–1871). American arctic explorer. C. F. Hall

Hall, Edward (died 1547). English historian. Hall

Hall, Fitzedward (1825–1901). American English philologist. Fitzedward Hall, or F. Hall

Hall, Granville Stanley (1845–). American educator. G. S. Hall

Hall, Hubert. Author of "Society in the Elizabethan Age," 1886. H. Hall

Hall, John (1627–1656). English poet and pamphleteer. John Hall

Hall, Joseph (1574–1656). Bishop of Norwich. Bp. Hall

Hall, Marshall (1790–1857). English physiologist. M. Hall

Hall, Robert (1764–1831). English divine. R. Hall

Hall, Mrs. Samuel Carter (Anna Maria Fielding) (1800–1881). British writer. Mrs S. C. Hall

Hallam, Henry (1777–1859). English historian. Hallam

Halleck, Fitz-Greene (1790–1867). American poet. Halleck

Halleck, Henry Wager (1815–1872). American general. H. W. Halleck

Halliwell (later Halliwell-Phillipps), James Orchard (1820–1889). English antiquary and Shakesperian scholar. ("A Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words," 1847, etc.) Halliwell

Hallywell, Henry (about 1680). English clergyman. Hallywell

Halpine, Charles Graham (pseudonym "Miles O'Reilly") (1829–1868). American humorist and poet. Miles O'Reilly

Halsted, George Bruce (1853–). American mathematician. Halsted

Halyburton, Thomas (1674–1712). Scottish theologian. Halyburton

Hamersly, Lewis R. American publisher. ("Naval Encyclopædia," 1884.) Hamersly

Hamerton, Philip Gilbert (1834–1894). English artist, writer on art, and essayist. P. G. Hamerton

Hamilton, Alexander (1757–1804). American statesman. A. Hamilton

Hamilton, Anthony (died 1720). English writer. Memoirs of Count de Grammont

Hamilton, Lady Claude. Translator of a life of Pasteur. Lady Claude Hamilton

Hamilton, Elizabeth (1758–1816). British miscellaneous writer. Eliz. Hamilton

Hamilton, Leonidas Le Conci. Contemporary American writer. L. Hamilton

Hamilton, Walter (about 1815). British geographer. Hamilton

Hamilton, Sir William (1788–1856). Scottish metaphysician. Sir W. Hamilton, or Hamilton

Hamilton, Sir William Rowan (1805–1865). Irish mathematician. Sir W. Rowan Hamilton

Hammond, Charles Edward (1837–). English clergyman and writer on liturgies. C. E. Hammond

Hammond, Henry (1605–1660). English divine. Hammond

Hammond, William Alexander (1828–). American physician and author. W. A. Hammond

Hampole, Richard Rolle of (died 1349). English author. Hampole

Hampson, R. T. Compiler of "Medii Ævi Kalendarium." Hampson

Handbooks, South Kensington Museum. S. K. Handbook

Hanmer, Jonathan (1646–1687). English clergyman. Hanmer

Hanna, William (1808–1882). Scottish biographer and theological writer. Hanna

Hannay, James (1827–1873). Scottish novelist and man of letters. Hannay

Hardinge, George (1743–1816). English jurist and author. G. Hardinge

Hardwick, Charles (1821–1859). English theologian. Hardwick

Hardy, Samuel (1720–1795). English clergyman and theological writer. S. Hardy

Hardy, Thomas (1840–). English novelist. T. Hardy

Hardyng, John (1378–1465?). English chronicler. Hardyng

Hare, Augustus John Cuthbert (1834–). English writer of travels, etc. A. J. C. Hare

Harford, John Scandrett (1785–1866). English biographer. J. S. Harford

Hargrave, Francis (1741?–1821). English lawyer and antiquary. Hargrave

Harington, Sir John (1561–1612). English poet and author. Sir J. Harington

Harleian Miscellany ("The Harleian Miscellany," a collection of scarce, curious, and entertaining Pamphlets and Tracts . . . selected from the Library of Edward Harley, second Earl of Oxford, 1744–1746, 1808–1813.) Harl. Misc.

Harleian Society, Publications of. Society instituted 1869.

Harman, Thomas. English writer. ("Caveat for Cursitors," 1567.) Harman

Harmar, John (died 1670). English classical scholar. Harmar

Harper, Robert Goodloe (1765–1825). American statesman. R. G. Harper

Harper's Magazine (1850–). American monthly literary magazine. Harper's Mag.

Harper's Weekly (1857–). American weekly illustrated periodical. Harper's Weekly

Harrington or Harington, James (1611–1677). English political writer. J. Harrington

Harris, James (1709–1780). English writer on art, philology, etc. Harris

Harris, Joel Chandler (1848–). American author. J. C. Harris

Harris, William Torrey (1835–). American educator. W. T. Harris

Harrison, Mrs. Burton (Constance Cary) (1843–). American novelist. Mrs. Burton Harrison

Harrison, Frederic (1831–). English writer on positivism, etc F. Harrison

Harrison, John (about 1570–1600). British printer J. Harrison

Harrison, William (1534–1593). English chronicler and historian. Harrison

Harsnet or Harsnett, Samuel (1561–1631). Archbishop of York. Harsnet

Hart, James Morgan (1830–). American author. J. M. Hart

Hart, John Seely (1810–1877). American author. J. S. Hart

Harte, Francis Bret (1839–1902). American novelist and poet. Bret Harte

Harte, Walter (1709–1774). English essayist and poet. W. Harte

Hartley, David (1705–1757). English philosopher Hartley

Hartlib, Samuel (about 1650). Polish-British miscellaneous writer. Hartlib

Harvey, Gabriel (1545?–1630). English poet. G. Harvey

Harvey, Gideon (1640?–1700?). English physician. Gideon Harvey

Harvey, William (1578–1657). English anatomist Harvey

Harvey, William Henry (1811–1866). British botanist. W. H. Harvey

Hatherly, S. G. Archpriest of the Greek Church, writer on liturgies. Hatherly

Havelok the Dane (about 1280). Middle English poem Havelok

Haweis, Hugh Reginald (1838–1901). English clergyman and miscellaneous writer. Haweis

Hawes, Stephen (died 1523?). English poet. Hawes

Hawes, William (1736–1808). English physician. ("Premature Death," 1777.) W. Hawes

Hawkesworth, John (died 1773). English essayist Hawkesworth

Hawkins, Henry (1571?–1646). English translator and author. H. Hawkins

Hawkins, Sir John (1719–1789). English author ("History of Music," 1776). Sir J. Hawkins

Hawkins, Sir Richard (died 1622) English navigator Sir R. Hawkins

Hawkins, Thomas. English author. ("Origin of the English Drama," 1773.) Hawkins

Hawthorne, Julian (1846–) American novelist. J. Hawthorne

Hawthorne, Nathaniel (1804–1864) American novelist. Hawthorne

Hawtrey, Edward Craven (1789–1862). English educator and poet. Hawtrey

Hay, John (1838–). American diplomatist, journalist, and author John Hay

Hay, William (1695–1755). English politician W. Hay

Haydn, Joseph (died 1856). Eng. compiler ("Dictionary of Dates," 1841, etc.) Haydn

Haydon, Benjamin Robert (1786–1846). English painter. B. R. Haydon

Hayley, William (1745–1820). English poet. W. Hayley

Hayne, Paul Hamilton (1830–1886). American poet. Paul Hayne

Hayward, Abraham (1801–1884) English lawyer and essayist. A. Hayward

Hayward, Sir John (died 1627). English historian. Sir J. Hayward

Hazlitt, William (1778–1830). English essayist and critic. Hazlitt

Head, Barclay Vincent (1844–). English numismatist. B. V. Head

Hearn, Lafcadio (1850–). American author L. Hearn

Hearn, William Edward (1826–1888). Irish Australian jurist and economist. W. E. Hearn

Heath, James (1629–1664). English historian. J. Heath

Heber, Reginald (1783–1826) Bishop of Calcutta. Bp. Heber

Hector, Annie F. (pseud. "Mrs. Alexander") (1825–1902) Brit novelist. Mrs. Alexander

Hedge, Frederic Henry (1805–1890) American author. F. H. Hedge

Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770–1831). German philosopher. Hegel

Helmholtz, Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand (1821–1894). German physicist. Helmholtz

Helps, Sir Arthur (1813–1875) English essayist Helps or A. Helps

Helps, Sir Arthur (1813–1875). English essayist Helps, or A. Helps

Hemans, Felicia Dorothea (1793–1835). English poet. Mrs. Hemans

Hemsley, William Botting (1843–) English botanist Hemsley

Henderson, Peter (1833–1890) American agricultural writer Henderson

Henfrey, Arthur (1819–1859). English botanist Henfrey

Henley, John (1692–1756) English orator and writer J. Henley

Henry, Matthew (1662–1714). English commentator M. Henry

Henry, Patrick (1736–1799). American statesman and orator. P. Henry

Henryson, Robert (1400?–1506?) Scottish poet. Henryson

Henslow, George (1835–) English botanist G. Henslow

Henslow, John Stevens (1796–1861) English botanist Henslow

Herbert, George (1593–1633). English poet G. Herbert

Herbert, Lord, of Cherbury (Edward Herbert) (1583–1648). English philosopher and historian. Lord Herbert

Herbert, Sir Thomas (1606–1682). English traveler Sir T. Herbert

Herd, David (1732–1810). Collector of Scottish songs Herd

Herrick, Robert (1591–1674) English poet Herrick

Herrick, Sophie McIlvaine Bledsoe (1847–). American editor and writer S. B. Herrick

Herschel, Sir John Frederick William (1792–1871). English astronomer. Sir J. Herschel

Herschel, Sir William (1738–1822) German-English astronomer Sir W. Herschel

Hervey, James (1714–1758). English clergyman and devotional writer Hervey

Hewitt, John (1807–1878). English archæologist J. Hewitt

Hewyt or Hewytt, John (died 1558) English divine. Hewyt

Hexham, Henry. English soldier in the Netherlands, and lexicographer ("A Large Netherdutch and English Dictionarie," 1658 ed Manly, 1678.) Hexham

Heylin or Heylyn, Peter (1600–1662) English theologian and historian. Heylin

Heywood, John (died about 1580?) English dramatist and poet J. Heywood

Heywood, Thomas (died about 1650). English dramatist Heywood

Hickes, George (1642–1715) English clergyman and philologist Hickes

Hickok, Laurens Perseus (1798–1888). American clergyman and philosophical writer Hickok

Hicks, Francis (1568–1634). English translator. F. Hicks

Hieron, Samuel (1572–1617) English clergyman and theological writer Hieron

Higden, Ranulf or Ralph (died 1364). English chronicler. ("Polychronicon," 1327–1342, trans. by John Trevisa, 1387.) Higden

Higginson, Francis (1586–1630). English-American Puritan divine. F. Higginson

Higginson, John (1616–1708). English-American clergyman. J. Higginson

Higginson, Thomas Wentworth (1823–). American essayist and historian. T. W. Higginson

Hill, Aaron (1685–1750). English poet. A. Hill

Hill, Adams Sherman (1833–). American writer on rhetoric. A. S. Hill

Hill, David J. (1850–). American writer on rhetoric, socialism, etc. D. J. Hill

Hill, Sir John (1716–1775). English writer. Sir J. Hill

Hill or Hylle, Thomas (lived about 1590). English astrologer, compiler, and translator. T. Hill

Hillhouse, James Abraham (1789–1841). American poet. Hillhouse

Hillier, G. L. See Parry.

Hinton, Richard J. (Contemporary American writer. R. J. Hinton

History of Manual Arts (1851). Hist. Manl. Arts, 1851

History of the Royal Society of London (1848). By Charles Richard Weld. Hist. Roy. Soc.

Hitchcock, Roswell Dwight (1817–1887). American theologian and educator. R. D. Hitchcock

Hobbes, Thomas (1588–1679). English philosopher. Hobbes

Hoblyn, Richard Dennis (1803–1896). English educational writer. Hoblyn

Hoccleve. See Occleve.

Hodge, Archibald Alexander (1823–1886). American theologian. A. A. Hodge

Hodge, Charles (1797–1878). American theologian C. Hodge

Hodgson, Frederick T. Contemporary American technical writer. F. T. Hodgson

Hodgson, Shadworth Holloway. Contemporary English philosophical writer. S. H. Hodgson

Hodgson, William Ballantyne (1815–1880) Scottish educational writer and economist. W. B. Hodgson

Hoffman, Charles Fenno (1806–1884). American poet and author. C. F. Hoffman

Hogg, James ("the Ettrick Shepherd") (1770–1835). Scottish poet. Hogg

Holden, Edward S. See Newcomb and Holden.

Holder, William (1616–1698). English writer. Holder

Hole, Samuel Reynolds (1819–). English clergyman and author. S. R. Hole

Holinshed, Raphael (died about 1580) English chronicler Holinshed

Holland, Frederic May (1836–) American author. F. M. Holland

Holland, Sir Henry (1788–1873). English physician and writer. Sir H. Holland

Holland, Josiah Gilbert (pseudonym "Timothy Titcomb") (1819–1881). American editor, poet, and novelist. J. G. Holland

Holland, Lady (Saba Smith) (died 1866) English writer, biographer of her father, Sydney Smith. Lady Holland

Holland, Philemon (1552–1637) English translator. Holland

Hollyband, Claudius. English lexicographer, author of a French and English dictionary, 1593. Hollyband

Holme, Randle (1627–1699). English genealogist and writer on heraldry. Randle Holme

Holmes, Abiel (1763–1837). American clergyman and historian. A. Holmes

Holmes, Oliver Wendell (1809–1894). American poet, essayist, and novelist. O. W. Holmes

Holmes, Timothy. Contemporary English medical writer. Holmes

Holst, Hermann Eduard von (1841–) German historian. H. von Holst

Holyday, Barten (1593–1661). English clergyman, dramatist, and translator. Holyday

Home, John (1722–1808). Scottish dramatist. J. Home

Hone, William (1780–1842). English publisher and author. Hone

Hood, Thomas (1798–1845). English poet and humorist. Hood

Hook, Theodore Edward (1788–1841) English novelist and miscellaneous writer T. Hook

Hook, Walter Farquhar (1798–1875). English theologian and biographer. Hook

Hooker, Sir Joseph Dalton (1817–). English botanist. J. D. Hooker

Hooker, Richard (1554?–1600). English theologian Hooker

Hooker, Sir William Jackson (1785–1865). English botanist. W. J. Hooker

Hoole, John (1727–1803). English translator. Hoole

Hooper, George (1640–1727) Bishop of Bath and Wells. Bp. Hooper

Hooper, Robert (1773–1835). English medical writer. Hooper

Hopkins, Ezekiel (1633?–1690) Bishop of Derry, Ireland. Bp. Hopkins

Hopkins, Mark (1802–1887). American clergyman, educator, and writer on intellectual and moral philosophy. Mark Hopkins

Hoppe, A. German compiler. ("Englisch-Deutsches Supplement-Lexicon," 1871, 1888.) Hoppe

Horman, William (died 1535) English lexicographer. ("Vulgaria Puerorum," 1519.) Horman

Horn, Frederik Winkel. Danish author. Horn

Horne, George (1730–1792). Bishop of Norwich. Bp. Horne

Horne, Thomas Hartwell (1780–1862) English Biblical scholar. T. H. Horne

Horner, Leonard (1785–1864) British geologist and author. Horner

Horsley, Samuel (1733–1806). Bishop of St. Asaph. Bp. Horsley

Hosmer, James Kendall (1834–). American author J. K. Hosmer

Hotten, John Camden (1832–1873). English publisher, compiler of "The Slang Dictionary, 1859" (ed. 1869 also used). Hotten, or Slang Dict.

Houghton, Lord (Richard Monckton Milnes) (1809–1885). English poet and author. Lord Houghton

Howard, Henry (Earl of Northampton) (1540–1614). English writer. Howard

Howe, Julia Ward (1819–). American poet and author. J. W. Howe

Howell, James (died 1666). English traveler, author, and lexicographer (editor of Cotgrave, etc.). Howell

Howells, William Dean (1837–). American novelist, poet, and critic. W. D. Howells, or Howells

Howitt, Mary (1799–1888). English author Mary Howitt

Howitt, William (1793–1879). English author. W. Howitt

Howson, John (1557?–1632). Bishop of Durham. Bp. Howson

[illegible], Robert (1802–1870). American poet. R. Hegt [illegible], Henry Clintonian. See Amer.
[illegible], Thomas (about 1600). English poet. T. Hudson
[illegible], Ferdinand. Contemporary German lexicologist. Hoeppe
[illegible], John (1677–1739). English poet and translator. J. Hughes [illegible], Thomas (1823–1896). English author. T. Hughes
Huloet, Richard. English lexicographer. ("Abecedarium Anglico-Latinum pro Pueris," 1552; ed. Higgins, 1572.) Huloet
Hume, David (1711–1776). Scottish philosopher and historian. Hume
Humphrey, Heman (1779–1861). American clergyman. H. Humphrey
Humphreys, Henry Noel (1810–1879). English numismatist and antiquary. H. N. Humphreys
Hunt, James Henry Leigh (1784–1859). English poet and essayist. L. Hunt
Hunter, Henry (1741–1802). Scottish clergyman and author H. Hunter
Hunter, Robert. See Encyclopædic Dictionary.
Hurd, Richard (1720–1808). Bishop of Worcester. Bp. Hurd
Hutcheson, Francis (1694–1746). Irish philosopher. Hutcheson
Hutchinson, Thomas (1698–1769). English theologian. T. Hutchinson
Hutchinson, Thomas J. (1820–1886). British author. T. J. Hutchinson
Hutton, Charles (1737–1823). English mathematician. Hutton
Hutton, James (1726–1797). Scottish geologist. J. Hutton
Hutton, Richard Holt (1826–1897). English critic. R. H. Hutton
Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825–1895). English naturalist. Huxley
Hyatt, Alpheus (1838–1902). American naturalist. Hyatt Hylle, Thomas. See Hill.

Hive, Jacob (1705–1763). English printer. J. Hive
Illustrated London News (1842–). English weekly illustrated journal. Ill. Lond. News
Imperial Dictionary. Compiled by John Ogilvie, 1850, enlarged edition, edited by Charles Annandale, 1883 Imp. Dict.
Inchbald, Elizabeth (1753–1821). English actress, dramatist, and novelist. Mrs. Inchbald Independent, New York (1848–). American weekly religious journal New York Independent Ingelow, Jean (1820–1897). English poet. Jean Ingelow
Inman, Thomas. Contemporary English physician, author of "Ancient and Modern Symbolism." Inman
Innes, Cosmo (1798–1874). Scottish historian and antiquary. Cosmo Innes
Irving, Washington (1783–1859). American author. Irving

Jackson, Helen Hunt (Helen Maria Fiske; Mrs. Helen Hunt; pseudonym "H. H.") (1831–1885). American author. Mrs. H. Jackson
Jackson, Thomas (1579–1640). English divine. T. Jackson
Jacob, Giles (1686–1744). English legal writer. Jacob
Jacolliot, Louis (1837–). French philosopher and author Jacolliot
Jago, Frederick W. P. English compiler. (A Cornish glossary, 1882.) Jago
James, A. G. F. Eliot. English writer. ("Indian Industries," 1880.) A. G. F. Eliot James
James, George Payne Rainsford (1801–1860). English novelist. G. P. R. James
James, Henry (1811–1882). American theological writer. H. James
James, Henry, Jr. (1843–) American novelist and critic H. James, Jr.
James, William (1842–) American philosophical writer. W. James Jamieson, John (1759–1838). Scottish clergyman and lexicographer. ("An Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language," 1808, new ed., 1879–1882.) Jamieson
Janvier, Thomas Allibone (1849–). American novelist T. A. Janvier
Jarvis, Charles (died about 1740). English painter, translator of "Don Quixote." Jarvis
Jay, William (1769–1853) English clergyman. Jay
Jeaffreson, John Cordy (1831–1901). English novelist and miscellaneous writer. Jeaffreson
Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse (1841–). English classical scholar. R. C. Jebb
Jefferson, Joseph (1829–). American actor. J. Jefferson Jefferson, Thomas (1743–1826). Third President of the United States Jefferson Jeffrey, Lord (Francis Jeffrey) (1773–1850). Scottish judge and critic Jeffrey
Jenkin, Fleeming (1833–1885). British engineer and physicist Fleeming Jenkin
Jenkins, Edward (1838–). British author. Jenkins
Jenks, Benjamin (1646–1724). English religious writer B. Jenks
Jennings, Arthur Charles (1847–). English clergyman and ecclesiastical writer. A. C. Jennings
Jenyns, Leonard (middle of 19th century) English clergyman and naturalist. Jenyns
Jenyns, Soame (1704–1787). English writer and politician. S. Jenyns
Jerrold, Douglas William (1803–1857) English dramatist and humorist. D. Jerrold
Jesse, John Heneage (died 1874). English historical writer J. H. Jesse Jevons, William Stanley (1835–1882). English political economist and philosophical writer. Jevons
Jewell or Jewel, John (1522–1571). Bishop of Salisbury. Bp. Jewell
Jewett, Edward H. (1800–) English-American clergyman. E. H. Jewett
Jewett, Sarah Orne (1849–). American author. S. O. Jewett
Jewitt, Llewellyn (1816–1886). English antiquary. Jewitt
Jewsbury, Geraldine Endsor (died 1880). English novelist. Miss Jewsbury
Jodrell, Richard Paul (died 1831). English compiler. ("Philology on the English Language," 1826.) Jodrell
John, Gabriel (about 1700). English writer. Gabriel John Johns Hopkins University, Studies from Biological Laboratory of.
Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science.
Johnson, Charles (died 1748). English dramatist. C. Johnson
Johnson, Edward (1599–1671). American historian. E. Johnson
Johnson, John (1662–1725). English divine. J. Johnson
Johnson, Samuel (1649–1703). English controversialist. Samuel Johnson
Johnson, Samuel (1696–1772). American clergyman. S. Johnson
Johnson, Samuel (1709–1784). English lexicographer, critic, and poet. ("A Dictionary of the English Language," 1755; ed. Todd, 1818.) Johnson
Johnson, Thomas (died 1644). English botanist. T. Johnson
Johnston, Alexander Keith (1804–1871). Scottish geographer.
Johnston, George (died 1855). British naturalist. G. Johnston
Johnstone, Charles (died about 1800). Irish novelist. C. Johnstone
Joly, N. French physicist. ("Man before Metals.") N. Joly
Jones, Henry (pseudonym "Cavendish") (1831–1899). English writer on whist and other games. Cavendish
Jones, Stephen (1763–1827). English editor and compiler. S. Jones
Jones, William (1726–1800). English theologian and general writer. W. Jones
Jones, Sir William (1746–1794) English Orientalist Sir W. Jones
Jonson, Ben (1573?–1637). English dramatist and poet. B. Jonson
Jordan, Thomas (died about 1685). English poet and dramatist. Jordan
Jortin, John (1698–1770). English clergyman and critic Jortin
Josselyn, John (middle of 17th century) English traveler. Josselyn
Joule, James Prescott (1818–1889). English physicist Joule
Journal of Botany, British and Foreign (1862–) English monthly periodical. Jour. of Botany, Brit. and For.
Journal of Education (1858–). American weekly periodical. Jour. of Education
Journal of Mental Science (1860–). English quarterly periodical. Jour. of Ment. Sci.
Journal of Philology (1868–). English half-yearly periodical. Jour. of Philol.
Journal of Science (1864–). English periodical Jour. of Sci.
Journal of Speculative Philosophy (1867–). American quarterly periodical. Jour. Spec. Philos.
Journal of the American Oriental Society. Jour. Amer. Oriental Soc.
Journal of the Anthropological Institute (1871–). English periodical. Jour. Anthrop. Inst.
Journal of the British Archæological Association (1845–) Jour. Brit. Archæol. Assoc.
Journal of the Franklin Institute (1826–). American monthly periodical. Jour. Franklin Inst.
Journal of the Linnean Society (1857–). Society founded in London in 1788. Jour. Linn. Soc.
Journal of the Military Service Institution of the United States (1881–) American quarterly periodical Jour. of Mil. Service Inst.
Journal of the Royal Microscopic Society (1869–). Society founded in London in 1839. Jour. Roy. Microsc. Soc.
Journal of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies (1880–). English half-yearly periodical. Jour. Soc. for Hellenic Studies Journals, American (various). See American.
Jowett, Benjamin (1817–1893). English scholar, translator of Plato, etc. Jowett
Joyce, Robert Dwyer (1832–1883) Irish poet. R. D. Joyce
Joye or Joy, George (died 1553?). English Reformer and printer. Joye
Judd, John W. (1840–). English geologist. J. W. Judd
Judd, Sylvester (1813–1853). American clergyman and novelist. S. Judd
Jukes, Joseph Beete (1811–1869). English geologist. Jukes
Julien, Alexis Anastay (1840–) American geologist Julien
Junius, Franciscus (François du Jon) (1545–1602). French theologian. F. Junius
Junius, Franciscus (1589–1677). German-English philologist. ("Etymologicum Anglicanum," ed. Lye, 1743.) Junius
Junius, Letters of. Political letters, collected edition, 1769–1772 Junius Letters Junius, R. ("Cure of Misprision," 1660.) R. Junius

Kames, Lord (Henry Home) (1696–1782) Scottish judge and philosophical writer Lord Kames, or Kames
Kane, Elisha Kent (1820–1857) American arctic explorer Kane
Kane, Richard (about 1745). British officer, writer on military subjects. Rich. Kane
Kant, Immanuel (1724–1804) German philosopher. Kant
Kavanagh, Julia (1824–1877). British novelist Kavanagh
Kaye, John (1783–1853) Bishop of Lincoln Bp. Kaye
Keary, C. F. (1849–). English ethnologist and historical writer. Keary
Keats, John (1795–1821). English poet Keats
Keble, John (1792–1866). English clergyman and poet Keble
Keddie, Henrietta (pseudonym "Sarah Tytler") Contemporary English novelist. H. Tytler
Keepe, Henry (about 1680). English antiquary Keepe
Keightley, Thomas (1789–1872) British historian. Keightley
Keill, John (1671–1721). Scottish astronomer and mathematician. Keill
Kelham, Robert (last half of 18th century). English antiquary Kelham Kemble, Frances Anne (Mrs. Pierce Butler) (1809–1893) English actress and author F. A. Kemble, or Fanny Kemble
Kemble, John Mitchell (1807–1857) English Anglo-Saxon scholar and historian Kemble
Kempis, Thomas a (Thomas Hammerken) (died 1471) German mystic. Thomas a Kempis
Kendall, Timothy. English poet (wrote about 1577). Kendall
Kennan, George (1845–) American traveler and author G. Kennan
Kennet, Basil (1674–1715). English antiquary Kennet
Kennet, White (1660–1728). Bishop of Peterborough Bp. Kennet
Kenrick, William (died 1779) English critic and lexicographer Kenrick Kent, Charles (1823–) English poet and journalist C. Kent
Kent, James (1763–1847) American jurist. Kent, or Chancellor Kent
Kent, William Saville. Contemporary English naturalist W. S. Kent
Ker, Robert (1755–1813) Scottish surgeon, translator of Lavoisier, etc. R. Ker
Kersey, John. English lexicographer ("A General English Dictionary," 1708.) Kersey
Kettlewell, John (1653–1695) English clergyman Kettlewell
Key, Francis Scott (1779–1843). American poet Key Kilian, Cornelis (died 1607) Dutch philologist. ("Etymologicum Teutonicæ Linguæ," 1599; repr. 1777, ed. Hasselt.)

Killingbeck, John (about 1710). English clergyman. Killingbeck
Kimball, Richard Burleigh (1816–1892). American author. R. B. Kimball Kinahan, D. British legal writer (wrote about 1830–1880). Kinahan
King, Edward (1848–1896). American journalist and author. E. King
King, Henry (1591–1669). Bishop of Chichester Bp King
King, Thomas Starr (1824–1864). American clergyman and author. Starr King
King, William (1650–1729). Archbishop of Dublin. Abp. King
King, William (1663–1712). English satirist. W. King
King Horn (before 1300). Middle English poem, translated from French. King Horn
Kinglake, Alexander William (1811–1891). English historian and traveler. Kinglake
Kingsley, Charles (1819–1875). English clergyman, novelist, and poet. Kingsley
Kingsley, Henry (1830–1876). English novelist. H. Kingsley
Kipling, Rudyard (1865–). English novelist. R. Kipling
Kirby, William (1759–1850). English entomologist. Kirby Kirby and Spence. ("Introduction to Entomology," 1815–1826, etc.) Kirby and Spence
Kirwan, Richard (died 1812). Irish physicist and chemist. Kirwan Kitchener, William (1775?–1827). English miscellaneous writer. W. Kitchener
Kitto, John (1804–1854). English Biblical scholar. Kitto
Klein, Edward. English bacteriologist. ("Micro-Organisms and Disease," 1885.) E. Klein
Kluge, Friedrich (1856–). German philologist ("Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Deutschen Sprache," 1881; 4th ed., 1888.) Kluge
Knatchbull, Sir Norton (1601–1684). English Biblical critic. Knatchbull
Knight, Charles (1791–1873). English author and editor. Knight
Knight, Edward. English author ("Tryall of Truth," 1580.) E. Knight
Knight, Edward Henry (1824–1906). American mechanician and compiler ("Knight's American Mechanical Dictionary," 1873–1884.) E. H. Knight
Knight, Richard Payne (1750–1824). English classical scholar and antiquary. R. P. Knight
Knolles, Richard (died 1610). English historian Knolles
Knollys, W. W. British officer ("Dictionary of Military Terms," 1874.) Knollys
Knox, John (1505–1572). Scottish Reformer Knox
Knox, Robert (died about 1700). English naval officer R. Knox
Knox, Vicesimus (1752–1821). English clergyman and essayist. V. Knox
Kollock, Henry (1778–1819). American divine Kollock
Krauth, Charles Porterfield (1823–1883). American theologian. Krauth
Krauth and Fleming (C. P. Krauth and W. Fleming). ("Vocabulary of the Philosophical Sciences," 1881.) Krauth Fleming
Kunth, Karl Sigismund (1788–1850). German botanist. Kunth
Kurtz, Johann Heinrich (1809–1890). German church historian. J. H. Kurtz
Kyd, Thomas (lived about 1590). English dramatist. Kyd

Lacépède, Comte de (Bernard Germain Étienne de Laville) (1756–1825). French naturalist. Lacepede
Lacy, John (died 1681). English actor, dramatist, and adapter. J. Lacy Ladd, George Trumbull (1842–). American theologian and philosophical writer. G. T. Ladd
Laing, Samuel (1780–1868). Scottish writer. Laing
Lamb, Charles (1775–1834). English essayist and humorist. Lamb
Lamb, Patrick (about 1710). British writer on cookery Lamb's Cookery
Lambarde or Lambard, William (1536–1601). English lawyer and antiquary Lambarde Lancashire and Cheshire Historical Society, Publications of. Society instituted 1858.
Lancashire and Cheshire Record Society, Publications of. Society instituted 1878.
Lancet (1823–). English weekly medical journal Lancet
Lanciani, Rodolfo (1847–). Italian archæologist. Lanciani
Landon, Letitia Elizabeth (Mrs. Maclean; pseudonym "L. E. L.") (1802–1838). English poet. L. E. Landon
Landor, Walter Savage (1775–1864). English poet and author. Landor
Landsborough, David (1782–1854). Scottish naturalist. Landsborough
Lane, Edward William (1801–1876). English Orientalist. Lane
Lang, Andrew (1844–). English poet and essayist. A. Lang
Langbaine, Gerard (1656–1692). English collector of plays. Langbaine
Langhorne, John (1735–1779). English translator and poet Langhorne Langland or Langley, William (1332? 1400?) English poet. See Piers Ploughman.
Langtoft, Peter (about 1300). English translator and chronicler. Langtoft Lanier, Sidney (1842–1881). American poet and critic. S. Lanier
Lankester, Edwin (1814–1874). English naturalist. Lankester
Lankester, Edwin Ray (1847–). English naturalist E. R. Lankester
Lansdell, Henry. Contemporary English clergyman, traveler, and author. Lansdell
Larcom, Lucy (1826–1893). American poet. Lucy Larcom
Lardner, Dionysius (1793–1859). Irish physicist and mathematician. Lardner
Larive and Fleury. ("Dictionnaire Français Illustré," 1884–1889.) Larive et Fleury
Larousse, Pierre Athanase (1817–1875). French encyclopedist ("Grand Dictionnaire Universelle du XIXe Siècle," 1866–1878.) Larousse
Leslett, Thomas. English writer. ("Timber and Timber-trees," 1875.) Leslett
Lassell, William (1799–1880). English astronomer. Lassell
Latham, P. M. (about 1840). British medical writer. P. M. Latham
Latham, Robert Gordon (1812–1888). English philologist and ethnologist ("Dictionary founded on Todd's Johnson," 1870). Latham
Lathrop, George Parsons (1851–1898). American author. G. P. Lathrop
Lathrop, Joseph (1731–1820). American clergyman. J. Lathrop
Latimer, Hugh (died 1555). English Reformer and martyr. Latimer
Latreille, Pierre André (1762–1833). French naturalist. Latreille
Laud, William (1573–1645). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Laud
Lauder, Sir Thomas Dick (1784–1848). Scottish economist, etc. Sir T. Dick Lauder
Lavalleye, Émile Louis Victor de (1822–1892). Belgian economist and publicist. Trans. by Goddard H. Orpen. Laveleye
Lavington, George (1683–1762). Bishop of Exeter. Bp. Lavington
Law, William (1686–1761). English divine. Law
Lawrence, George Alfred (1827–1876). English novelist. Lawrence
Lawrence, Sir William (died 1867). English writer on surgery. W. Lawrence Layamon. English priest and poet. ("Brut," a versified chronicle, about 1205.) Layamon Layard, Sir Austen Henry (1817–1894). English archæologist and diplomatist. Layard
Laycock, Thomas (1812–1876). English physician. Laycock
Lazarus, Emma (1849–1887). American poet. E. Lazarus
Lea, Matthew Carey (1823–). American chemist. Lea
Leach, William Elford (1790–1836). English naturalist. Leach
Lecky, William Edward Hartpole (1838–). British historian. Lecky
Le Conte, John (1818–1891). American physicist. Dr. John Le Conte
Le Conte, John (1784–1860). American naturalist. John Le Conte
Le Conte, John Lawrence (1825–1883). American entomologist. J. L. Le Conte
Le Conte, Joseph (1823–1901). American geologist and physicist. Le Conte
Ledyard, John (1751–1789). American traveler. Ledyard
Lee, Frederick George (1832–). English ecclesiastical writer. F. G. Lee, or Lee
Lee, James (died 1795). British botanist. J. Lee
Lee, Nathaniel (died 1692?). English dramatist. Lee Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England. Edited by T. O. Cockayne, 1862. A. S. Leechdoms
Legge, James (1815–1897). Scottish sinologist. J. Legge
Leibnitz, Gottfried Wilhelm (1646–1716). German philosopher and mathematician. Leibnitz
Leidy, Joseph (1823–1891). American naturalist. Leidy
Leigh, Sir Edward (1602–1671). English Biblical scholar and theologian. Leigh
Leighton, Robert (1611–1684). Archbishop of Glasgow. Abp. Leighton
Leland, Charles Godfrey (1824–). American author and compiler. ("Dictionary of Slang, Jargon, and Cant," 1889–1890, ed. Barrère and Leland.) C. G. Leland
Leland, John (died 1552). English antiquary. Leland
Leland, John (1691–1766). English Christian apologist. J. Leland
Leland, Thomas (1722–1785). Irish historian and classical scholar. T. Leland
Le Maout and Decaisne. French botanists. ("A General System of Botany," trans. by Mrs. Hooker, 1876.) Le Maout and Decaisne
Le Neve, John (1679?–1740?). English antiquary. Le Neve
Lennox, Charlotte (1720–1804). British novelist. Charlotte Lennox
Leo, Heinrich (1799–1878). German historian and philologist ("Angelsächsisches Glossar," 1877, etc.) Leo Leslie, Charles (1650?–1722). Irish nonjuring divine. C. Leslie Lesquereux, Leo (1806–1889). Swiss-American paleontologist. Lesquereux
Lesson, René Primevère (1794–1849). French naturalist. Lesson
L'Estrange, Sir Roger (1616–1704). English translator and publicist. Sir R. L'Estrange
Letters of Eminent Men. From the Bodleian collection (London, 1813).
Lever, Charles James (1806–1872). Irish novelist Lever
Levins, Peter (died after 1567). English physician and lexicographer. ("Manipulus Vocabulorum: A Dictionarie of English and Latine Words," 1570; repr. 1867, ed. H. B. Wheatley (E. E. T. S.).) Levins
Lewes, George Henry (1817–1878). English philosophical writer. G. H. Lewes
Lewis, Sir George Cornewall (1806–1863). English statesman and author. Sir G. C. Lewis
Lewis, John (1675–1746). English theologian and biographer. J. Lewis
Lewis, William Lillington (about 1767). British translator. W. L. Lewis
Lewis and Short (Charlton Thomas Lewis, 1834– , Charles Short, 1821–1886). American lexicographers, editors of "Harper's Latin Dictionary," 1879. Lewis and Short Leyden, John (1775–1811). Scottish poet and Orientalist. Leyden
Library of Universal Knowledge. See Encyclopædia, Chambers's.
Liddell and Scott (Henry George Liddell, 1811–1898; Robert Scott, 1811–1887). English lexicographers. ("A Greek-English Lexicon," 1843; 7th ed., 1883.) Liddell and Scott
Liddon, Henry Parry (1829–1890). English clergyman and theologian. Liddon
Lightfoot, John (1602–1675). English Biblical scholar. Lightfoot
Lightfoot, Joseph Barber (1828–1889). Bishop of Durham. Bp. Lightfoot
Lilly, John. See Lyly.
Lilly William (1602–1681). English astrologer. Lilly
Lincoln, Abraham (1809–1865). Sixteenth President of the United States. Lincoln
Lindley, John (1799–1865). English botanist. Lindley
Linnæus, Carolus (Carl Linné) (1707–1778). Swedish botanist. Linnæus
Linton, William James (1812–1897). English-American engraver and author. W. J. Linton
Linwood, William (about 1840). English classical scholar. Linwood
Lister, Martin (died about 1711). English naturalist. Lister
Lithgow, William (1582?–1650?). Scottish traveler. Lithgow
Littleton, Adam (1627–1694). English clergyman and lexicographer. (A Latin and English dictionary, 1678, 1684, etc.) Littleton Littleton or Lyttleton, Sir Thomas (died 1481). English legal writer. Littleton Littré, Maximilien Paul Emile (1801–1881). French lexicographer and philosopher. ("Dictionnaire de la Langue Française," 1863–1873.) Littré
Livingston, Edward (1764–1836). American statesman and jurist. E. Livingston
Livingstone, David (1813–1873). Scottish missionary and traveler. Livingstone
Lloyd, Robert (1733–1764). English poet. Lloyd Lloyd, William (1627–1717). Bishop of Worcester. Bp. Lloyd
Lobel, Matthias de (1538–1616). French botanist. De Lobel
Locke, John (1632–1704). English philosopher. Locke Locker-Lampson, Frederick (1821–1895). English poet. F. Locker
Lockhart, John Gibson (1794–1854). Scotch critic, biographer, and novelist. Lockhart
Lockhart, Col. Lawrence W. M. (1832–1892). English novelist and journalist. L. W. M. Lockhart

[illegible] of electricity. T. D. Lockwood

Lockyer, Joseph Norman (1836–). English astronomer. J. N. Lockyer

Locrine (1595). Anonymous tragedy. Locrine

Lodge, Henry Cabot (1850–). American historical writer and politician. H. Cabot Lodge

Lodge, Thomas (died 1625). English dramatist, poet, and novelist. Lodge

Lee, Wrightson (about 1630). English clergyman. Lee

Logan, John (1748–1788). Scottish poet. Logan

Lommel, Eugène. French scientist. ("Nature of Light," trans., 1876.) Lommel

London Quarterly Review (1853–). English quarterly literary review. London Quarterly Rev.

Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth (1807–1882). American poet. Longfellow

Longfellow, Samuel (1819–1892). American poet. S. Longfellow

Longstreet, Augustus Baldwin (1790–1870). American writer. A. B. Longstreet

Loomis, Alfred Lebbeus (1831–1896). American physician. A. L. Loomis

Loomis, Elias (1811–1889). American mathematician and physicist. Loomis

Lord, Henry (about 1630). English traveler. H. Lord

Lotze, Rudolf Hermann (1817–1881). German philosopher. Hermann Lotze

Loudon, John Claudius (1783–1843). Scottish agriculturist and botanist. Loudon

Loveday, Robert (second half of 17th century). English writer. Loveday

Lovelace, Richard (1618–1658). English poet. Lovelace

Lover, Samuel (1797–1868). Irish novelist and poet. S. Lover

Lowe, Charles (1868–). English historical writer. Lowe

Lowell, Edward Jackson (1845–). American historical writer. E. J. Lowell

Lowell, James Russell (1819–1891). American poet and essayist. Lowell

Lowell, Robert Traill Spence (1816–1891). American clergyman and author. R. Lowell

Lower, Mark Antony (1813–1876). English antiquary. Lower

Lowndes, William Thomas (died 1843). English bibliographer. Lowndes

Lowth, Robert (1710–1787). Bishop of London. Bp. Lowth

Lubbock, Sir John (Lord Avebury) (1834–). English ethnologist, naturalist, and politician. Sir J. Lubbock

Luce, Stephen Bleecker (1827–). American admiral. ("Text book of Seamanship," 1884.) Luce

Ludlow, Edmund (1617?–1692). English Parliamentarian general. Ludlow

Lyall, Sir Alfred Comyns (1835–). Anglo-Indian official and writer. Lyall

Lydgate, John (about 1370–1460). English poet. Lydgate

Lye, Edward (died 1767). English philologist. ("Dictionarium Saxonico et Gothico-Latinum," ed. Manning, 1772.) Lye

Lyell, Sir Charles (1797–1875). Scottish geologist. Sir C. Lyell

Lyly or Lilly, John (1553?–1600?). English dramatist and author of "Euphues." Lyly

Lyndsay or Lindsay, Sir David (died about 1555). Scottish poet. Sir D. Lyndsay

Lyric Poetry, Specimens of (1274–1797). Edited by Wright. Spec. of Lyric Poetry

Lyte, Henry Francis (1793–1847). British religious poet. Lyte

Lyttelton, Lord (George Lyttelton) (1709–1773). English statesman and author. Lord Lyttelton

Lytton, Earl of (Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton) (pseudonym "Owen Meredith") (1831–1891). English poet and diplomatist. Owen Meredith

Lytton, Lord (Edward George Earle Lytton Bulwer Lytton) (1803–1873). English novelist, dramatist, poet, and politician. Bulwer

Macaulay, Lord (Thomas Babington Macaulay) (1800–1859). English historian, essayist, poet, and politician. Macaulay

McCarthy, Justin (1830–). Irish politician, historian, and novelist. J. McCarthy

McCarthy, Justin Huntly (1860–). Irish historical writer. J. H. McCarthy

McClintock, Sir Francis Leopold (1819–). British arctic explorer. McClintock

McClintock and Strong (John McClintock, 1814–1870; James Strong, D.D.) ("Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature," 1868–1887.) McClintock and Strong

McCormick, Robert (1800–1889). English explorer. R. McCormick

McCosh, James (1811–1894). Scottish-American philosopher. McCosh

McCulloch, James Melville (1801–1883). Scottish clergyman, compiler of educational works. J. M. McCulloch

McCulloch, John Ramsay (1789–1864). Scottish political economist. ("Dictionary of Commerce and Commercial Navigation," 1852, edition used, 1880.) McCulloch

MacDonald, George (1824–). Scottish novelist. Geo. MacDonald

Macdougall, P. L. British military writer. ("Theory of War," 1856.) Macdougall

McElrath, Thomas (1807–1868). American lawyer, publisher, and banker. ("A Dictionary of Words and Phrases used in Commerce," 1871.) McElrath

Macgillivray, William (1796–1852). Scottish naturalist. Macgillivray

Machin, Lewis. English dramatist. ("The Dumb Knight," 1608.) Machin

Mackay, Charles (1814–1889). British poet and journalist. C. Mackay

Mackenzie, Henry (1745–1831). Scottish novelist, essayist, and dramatist. H. Mackenzie

Mackintosh, Sir James (1765–1832). Scottish philosopher and historian. Sir J. Mackintosh

Macklin, Charles (died 1797). British dramatist and actor. Macklin

Macleod, Alexander (1821–1879). British poet. A. Macleod

McLennan, John Fergus (1827–1881). Scottish historical writer. J. F. McLennan

Macloskie, George (1854–). British naturalist. Macloskie

McMaster, Guy Humphrey (1829–1887). American poet. G. H. McMaster

McMaster, John Bach (1852–). American historian. J. B. McMaster

Macmillan's Magazine (1859–). English monthly literary magazine. Macmillan's Mag.

Macready, William Charles (1793–1873). English actor. Macready

Madison, James (1751–1836). Fourth President of the United States. Madison

Madox, Thomas (died about 1795). English antiquary. Madox

Magazine of American History (1877–). Monthly magazine. Mag. Amer. Hist.

Mahan, Dennis Hart (1802–1871). American military engineer. Mahan

Mahan, Milo (1816–1899). American clergyman and church historian. Dr. Mahan

Mahony, Francis (pseudonym "Father Prout") (1805–1866). Irish author. Father Prout

Maine, Sir Henry James Sumner (1822–1888). English jurist and political writer. Maine

Maiden, Henry (1600?–1676). English writer. H. Maiden

Mallet, David (died 1765). Scottish poet and dramatist. Mallet

Mallet, Robert. English writer on earthquakes. R. Mallet

Mallock, William Hurrell (1849–). English author. W. H. Mallock

Malmesbury, William of. See William.

Malone, Edmund (1741–1812). Irish antiquary and Shakspearian scholar. Malone

Malory, Sir Thomas (15th century). British romancer. Sir T. Malory

Mandeville, Bernard de (died 1733). English poet and satirist. B. de Mandeville

Mandeville, Sir John de (died 1372). English traveler. Mandeville

Mann, Edward C. ("Manual of Psychological Medicine," 1883.) E. C. Mann

Mann, Horace (1796–1859). American educator. H. Mann

Manning, Henry Edward (1808–1892). English cardinal. Card. Manning

Manning, Robert, of Brunne. See Brunne.

Mannyngham, Thomas (died 1722). Bishop of Chichester. Bp. Mannyngham

Mansel, Henry Longueville (1820–1871). English clergyman and philosophical writer. Dean Mansel

March, Francis Andrew (1825–). American philologist. March, or F. A. March

Markham, Albert Hastings. English naval officer and arctic explorer. A. H. Markham

Markham, Gervase (about 1570–1655). English soldier and poet. G. Markham

Marlowe, Christopher (1564–1593). English dramatist. Marlowe

Marmion, Shakerley (1602–1639). English dramatist, poet, and soldier. Marmion

Marryat, Frederick (1792–1848). English novelist. Marryat

Marsden, William (1754–1836). British Orientalist and numismatist. W. Marsden

Marsh, Anne Caldwell (died 1874). English novelist. Mrs. Marsh

Marsh, George Perkins (1801–1882). American philologist and diplomatist. G. P. Marsh

Marsh, Herbert (1757–1839). Bishop of Peterborough. Bp. Marsh

Marsh, James (1794–1842). American divine and educator. J. Marsh

Marsh, Othniel Charles (1831–1899). American naturalist. O. C. Marsh

Marshall, John (1755–1835). American jurist. Marshall

Marston, John (1574?–1634?). English dramatist. Marston

Martin, Edward (about 1662). English ecclesiastical writer. E. Martin

Martin, Sir Theodore (1816–). British biographer, translator, and poet. Theo. Martin

Martin, Thomas (died 1584). English ecclesiastical writer. T. Martin

Martineau, Harriet (1802–1876). English historian, economist, and novelist. H. Martineau

Martineau, James (1805–1900). English clergyman and philosophical writer. J. Martineau

Martinus Scriblerus (1741?). Satire by Arbuthnot, Pope, and others. Martinus Scriblerus

Martyn, John (1699–1768). English botanist. Martyn

Marvel, Ik. See D. G. Mitchell.

Marvell, Andrew (1621–1678). English poet and statesman. Marvell

Marvin, Charles (1854–1894). British traveler and author. C. Marvin

Mascart and Joubert ("Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism," 1883. trans. by Atkinson.) Mascart and Joubert

Mason, George (died 1808). English lexicographer. (Supplement to Johnson's Dictionary, 1801.) Mason

Mason, John (1603?–1672). New England soldier and historian. J. Mason

Mason, John Mitchell (1770–1829). American clergyman. J. M. Mason

Mason, Lowell (1792–1872). American musician. Lowell Mason

Mason, William (1725–1797). English poet. W. Mason

Massey, Gerald (1828–). English poet. G. Massey

Massinger, Philip (1584–1640). English dramatist. Massinger

Masson, David (1822–). Scottish biographer and critic. D. Masson

Masters, Maxwell Tylden (1833–). English botanist. Masters

Mather, Cotton (1663–1728). American clergyman and historical writer. C. Mather

Mather, Increase (1639–1723). American clergyman. Increase Mather

Mathews, William (1818–). American miscellaneous writer. W. Mathews

Mathias, Thomas James (died 1835). English miscellaneous writer. T. J. Mathias

Maty, Matthew (1718–1776). English-Dutch medical writer. Maty

Matzner, Eduard Adolf Ferdinand (1806–1887). German philologist. ("Altenglische Sprachproben, nebst einem Glossar," 1867–1881, still unfinished.) Matzner

Maudsley, Henry (1835–). English physiologist. Maudsley

Maunder, Samuel (died 1849). English compiler of "Treasuries." Maunder

Maundrell, Henry (died about 1710). English traveler. Maundrell

Maurice, John Frederic Denison (1806–1872). English clergyman and author. Maurice

Maury, Matthew Fontaine (1806–1873). American naval officer and physical geographer. Maury

Maxwell, James Clerk (1831–1879). Scottish physicist. Clerk Maxwell

May, Thomas (died 1650). English historian and dramatist. May

May, Sir Thomas Erskine (Lord Farnborough) (1815–1886). English constitutional historian. Sir E. May

Mayhew, Henry (1812–1887). English journalist and litterateur. Mayhew

Mayne, Jasper (1604–1672). English clergyman and dramatist. Jasper Mayne

Mayne, John (1759–1836). Scottish poet. J. Mayne

Mayne, Robert Gray. English surgeon; compiler of a medical lexicon (1854). R. G. Mayne

Mede, Joseph (1586–1638). English clergyman and Biblical critic. J. Mede

Medhurst, Walter H. (1796–1857). English missionary and Sinologist. W. H. Medhurst

Medical News (1847–). Syracuse weekly periodical. Med. News

Meehan, Thomas (1826–). American botanist. Meehan

Melmoth, Courtney. See Pratt.

Melmoth, William (pseudonym "Sir Thomas Fitz-Osborne") (1710–1799). English author. W. Melmoth, or Sir Thomas Fitz-Osborne

Melton, John. English writer (wrote about 1609–1620). J. Melton

Melville, George John Whyte (1821–1878). Scottish novelist. Whyte Melville

Melville, Herman (1819–1891). American novelist and traveler. H. Melville

Mendez, Moses (died 1758). English poet. Mendez

Meredith, Mrs. Charles. English poet and writer on Tasmania. Mrs Charles Meredith

Meredith, George (1828–). English novelist and poet. G. Meredith

Meredith, Owen. See Lytton.

Merivale, Charles (1808–1893). English clergyman and historian. Merivale

Merriam, George S. (1843–). American publisher and writer G. S. Merriam

Merrick, James (1720–1769) English poet. J. Merrick

Merrifield, Mrs. (about 1850). English writer on art. Mrs Merrifield

Meston, William (died 1745). Scottish poet. W. Meston

Metrical Romances. See Ritson and Weber.

Meyrick, Sir Samuel Rush (1783–1848). English antiquary. Meyrick

Mickle, William Julius (1734–1788). Scottish poet and translator. Mickle

Middleton, Conyers (1683–1750). English scholar and controversialist. C. Middleton

Middleton, Thomas (died 1627) English dramatist Middleton

Miege, Guy. French-English lexicographer. ("The Great French Dictionary," 1688.) Miege

Miklosich, Franz von (1813–1891). Slavic philologist Miklosich

Mill, James (1773–1836). Scottish historian, economist, and philosopher. James Mill

Mill, John (1645–1707). English clergyman and Biblical scholar. J. Mill

Mill, John Stuart (1806–1873). English philosopher and economist. J. S. Mill

Miller, Cincinnatus Hiner (pseudonym "Joaquin Miller") (1841–). American poet. Joaquin Miller

Miller, Hugh (1802–1856). Scottish geologist and author. Hugh Miller

Miller, Philip (1691–1771). English botanist P. Miller

Miller, William. ("Dictionary of English Names of Plants," 1884.) W. Miller

Miller, William Allen (1817–1870). English chemist. W. A. Miller

Milman, Henry Hart (1791–1868). English historian Milman

Milne, John (1855–) Scottish geologist Milne

Milne-Edwards, Henri (1800–1885) French naturalist. Milne-Edwards

Milner, Joseph (1744–1797). English ecclesiastical historian. Milner

Milton, John (1608–1674). English poet and author. Milton

Minchin, George M. ("Uniplanar Kinematics," 1882) Minchin

Mind (1876–). British quarterly philosophical review Mind

Minot, Lawrence (14th century) English poet and author Minot

Minsheu, John. English lexicographer ("The Guide into Tongues," 1617; 2d ed., 1625.) Minsheu

Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. Sir Walter Scott Border Minstrelsy

Minto, William (1845–1893). Scottish critic. Minto

Mirror for Magistrates, The. A collection of satirical poems, first published about 1559–1574, with an induction by Sackville Mir. for Mags.

Mitchell, Donald Grant (pseudonym "Ik Marvel") (1822–). American novelist and essayist. D. G. Mitchell

Mitchell, Silas Weir (1829–) American medical writer and novelist. S. Weir Mitchell

Mitford, A. B. British diplomatic official in Japan A. B. Mitford

Mitford, John (1781–1859?). English author and editor J. Mitford

Mitford, Mary Russell (1786–1855). English author. Miss Mitford

Mitford, William (1744–1827). English historian Mitford

Mivart, St. George (1827–1900). English biologist Mivart

Moir, David Macbeth (pseudonym "Delta") (1798–1851). Scottish physician, poet, and novelist D. M. Moir

Mollett, J. W. Editor of "Dictionary of Art and Archæology," 1883 Mollett

Monboddo, Lord (James Burnett) (1714–1799). Scottish jurist and philosopher. Monboddo

Monmouth, Earl of (Henry Carey) (1596–1661). English historian and translator Monmouth

Monroe, James (1758–1831). Fifth President of the United States. Monroe

Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley (1690?–1762). English author Lady M. W. Montagu

Montague, George (died 1815). English naturalist G. Montagu

Montague, Walter (middle of 17th century) English religious writer W. Montague

Montaigne, Michel de (1533–1592) French essayist. Montaigne

Montgomery, James (1771–1854) Scottish poet. Montgomery

Montgomery, Robert (1807–1855). English poet. R. Montgomery

Monthly Review (1749–1845) English monthly literary review Monthly Rev.

Montrose, Marquis of (James Graham) (1612–1650) Scottish general and poet. Montrose

Moore, Charles Herbert (1840–). American writer on architecture. C. H. Moore

Moore, Edward (1712–1757). English writer E. Moore

Moore, John (1730?–1802). Scottish descriptive writer and novelist. J. Moore

Moore, Thomas (1779–1852). Irish poet. Moore

More, Hannah (1745–1833). English moralist. Mrs H. More

More, Henry (1614–1687) English philosopher and poet. Dr. H. More

More, Sir Thomas (1478?–1535). English statesman and philosopher. Sir T. More

Morell, John D. (1816–1891). English educational and philosophical writer. J. D. Morell

Morgan, Lady (Sydney Owenson) (died 1859). Irish novelist and writer Lady Morgan

Morgan, Lewis Henry (1818–1881). American anthropologist. L. H. Morgan

Morgans, William. ("Manual of Mining Tools," 1871.)

Morier, James (died 1849). English novelist and traveler. Morier

Morley, Henry (1822–1894). English writer on literature. H. Morley

Morley, John (1838–). English critic and statesman. J. Morley

Morris, George P. (1802–1864). American poet and journalist G. P. Morris

Morris, George Sylvester (1840–1889). American writer on philosophy. G. S. Morris

Morris, Richard (1833–1894). English philologist R. Morris

Morris, William (1834–1896). English poet. William Morris

Morrison, Richard James (pseudonym "Zadkiel") (about 1835). English astrologer. Zadkiel

Morse, John Torrey (1840–). American historical and legal writer. J. T. Morse

Morte d'Arthur. Middle English romance, compiled and translated from the French by Sir Thomas Malory, and printed in 1485. Morte d'Arthur

Mortimer, John (died 1736). English miscellaneous writer. [illegible]

Morton, Nathaniel (1613–1685). American historian. [illegible]

Morton, Thomas (1564–1659). Bishop of Durham. [illegible]

Morton, Thomas (1764–1838). English dramatist. [illegible]

Moseley, Walter Michael (about 1792). British writer on archery. [illegible]

Mosheim, Johann Lorenz von (1694–1755). German ecclesiastical historian. [illegible]

Motherwell, William (1797–1835). Scottish poet. [illegible]

Motley, John Lothrop (1814–1877). American historian. [illegible]

Motteux, Peter Anthony (1660–1718). French-English author (translator of Rabelais). [illegible]

Moule, Thomas (1784–1851). English antiquary. [illegible]

Moulton, Louise Chandler (1835–). American poet and writer. L. C. Moulton

Mountagu, Richard (1578–1641). Bishop of Norwich. Bp. Montague

Mourt, George. (Mourt's Relation of the Plymouth Plantation, 1622.) Mourt

Mowry, Sylvester (1830–1871). American explorer. Mowry

Moxon, Charles. English mineralogist (wrote about 1838). Moxon

Moxon, Joseph (1627–about 1700). English hydrographer. J. Moxon

Moxley, James Bowling (1813–1878). English theologian. J. B. Moxley

Moxley and Whiteley (Herbert Newman Moxley; George Crispe Whiteley). English editors. ("A Concise Law Dictionary," 1876.) Moxley and Whiteley

Mueller, Ferdinand von (1825–1896). German botanist. Mueller

Muhlenberg, William Augustus (1796–1877). American clergyman and hymn-writer. Muhlenberg

Mulford, Elisha (1833–1885). American clergyman and author. E. Mulford

Mulhall, Michael G. (1836–1909). Irish statistician. Mulhall

Müller, Carl Otfried (1797–1840). German archæologist and Hellenist. C. O. Müller

Müller, Eduard F. H. L. (1836–) German philologist. ("Etymologisches Wörterbuch der englischen Sprache," 1878–1879.) E. Müller

Müller, Friedrich Max (1823–1900) German-English philologist. Max Müller

Mullock, John Thomas (1806–1869). Roman Catholic bishop of St. John's, Newfoundland. Mullock

Mulock, Dinah Maria. See Craik.

Munday, Anthony (1588?–1633) English poet and dramatist. Munday

Müntz, Eugène. French technical writer Müntz

Murchison, Sir Roderick Impey (1792–1871). British geologist. Murchison

Murr, William (1799–1860) Scottish critic and scholar. W. Murr

Murfree, Mary Noailles (pseudonym "Charles Egbert Craddock") (1850?–). American novelist M. N. Murfree

Murphy, Arthur (died 1805). Irish dramatist and general writer. A. Murphy

Murray, Alexander S. (1841–). Scottish archæologist. A. S. Murray

Murray, James Augustus Henry (1837–). Scottish philologist, editor (with H. Bradley) of "A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles," 1884– . J. A. H. Murray

Musgrave, Sir Richard (1758?–1818). Irish historical and political writer. Sir R. Musgrave

Myers, Frederick William Henry (1843–1901). English contemporary philosophical writer. F. W. H. Myers

Nabbes, Thomas (died about 1645). English poet and dramatist. Nabbes

Nairne, Lady (Carolina Oliphant) (1766–1845) Scottish poet Lady Nairne

Napier, Sir William Francis Patrick (1785–1860). British historian and general. Napier

Nares, Robert (1753–1829). English clergyman, critic, and compiler. ("A Glossary or Collection of Words, Phrases, Names and Allusions to Customs, Proverbs," etc., 1822; ed. Halliwell and Wright, 1859.) Nares

Nash, Thomas (1564?–1601?). English dramatist, poet, and pamphleteer. Nash, or Nashe

Nation, The (1865–). American weekly literary periodical. The Nation

National Review (1855–1864) English quarterly literary review. National Rev.

Natural History Review. Nat. Hist. Rev.

Nature (1869–). English weekly scientific periodical. Nature

Naunton, Sir Robert (died 1635?). English statesman. Sir R. Naunton

Neal, John (1793–1876) American novelist and miscellaneous writer. Neal

Neale, John Mason (1818–1866) English ecclesiastical historian and hymnologist. J. M. Neale

Neill, Edward Duffield (1823–1893). American educator and author. E. Neill

Nelson, Robert (1656–1715). English religious writer. R. Nelson

Newcomb, Simon (1835–). American astronomer, mathematician, and economist. Newcomb

Newcomb and Holden (Simon Newcomb, Edward S. Holden). ("Astronomy," 1885.) Newcomb and Holden

Newcome, William (1729–1800). Archbishop of Armagh, Ireland. Abp. Newcome

Newcourt, Richard (died 1716). English church historian. Newcourt

New England Journal of Education (1876–) New Eng. Jour. of Education

New English Dictionary (1884–). Edited by J. A. H. Murray and H. Bradley. N. E. D.

Newman, Francis William (1805–1897). English scholar. ("Dictionary of Modern Arabic," 1871.) F. W. Newman

Newman, John Henry (1801–1890). English cardinal and theologian. J. H. Newman

New Mirror (1843–1846). American periodical. New Mirror

New Monthly Magazine (1814–). English literary periodical. New Monthly Mag.

New Princeton Review (1886–). American bimonthly review. New Princeton Rev.

New Testament, Cambridge (1881). Cambridge N. T.

Newton, Alfred (1830–). English naturalist. A. Newton

Newton, Sir Charles Thomas (1816–1894). English archæologist. C. T. Newton

Newton, Sir Isaac (1642–1727). English mathematician and philosopher. Newton

Newton, John (1725–1807) English clergyman and poet. J. Newton

Newton, Thomas (1704–1782). Bishop of Bristol. Bp. Newton

New York Medical Journal (1865–). N. Y. Med. Jour.

New York Medical Record (1866–). N. Y. Med. Rec.

Nichol, John (1833–1894). Scottish poet and critic. J. Nichol

Nichol, John Pringle (1804–1859). Scottish astronomer. Prof. Nichol

Nicholls, Mrs. A. B. See Charlotte Brontë.

Nicholls, Thomas (about 1550). English translator. Nicholls

Nichols, James Robinson (1819–1889). American chemist and scientific writer. J. R. Nichols or Nichols

Nichols, John (died 1826). English antiquary. Nichols

Nicholson, Henry Alleyne (1844–1899). Scottish geologist and zoölogist. H. A. Nicholson

Nicholson, William (died 1815). English scientist. Nicholson

Nicholson, William (1782–1849). Scottish poet. W. Nicholson

Nicolay, John George (1832–1901). American author. J. G. Nicolay

Nicoll, Robert (1814–1837). Scottish poet. Nicoll

Nicolson, William (1655–1727). Archbishop of Cashel, Ireland. Bp. Nicolson

Niles's Register (1811–1849). American weekly periodical. Niles's Register

Nineteenth Century, The (1877–). English monthly review. Nineteenth Century

Noble, Mark (died 1827). English antiquary. M. Noble

Noble, Samuel (1779–1853). English Swedenborgian minister. Noble

Noctes Ambrosianæ. By John Wilson. Noctes Ambrosianæ

Nolan, Lewis Edward (died 1854). English officer and writer on cavalry tactics. (See Garrard.) Nolan

Norden, John (died about 1626). English topographer and poet. Norden

Normandy, Alphonse (died 1864). English chemist. Normandy

Norris, John (1657–1711). English philosopher. Norris

North, Christopher. See J. Wilson.

North, Lord (Dudley North) (1704–1677). English biographer. Lord North

North, Hon. Roger (1651–1733?). English biographer. Roger North

North, Sir Thomas (1535?–1603?). English translator. (Plutarch, 1579.) North

North American Review (1815–). American literary review. N. A. Rev.

North British Review (1844–1871; 1891–1763). Scottish quarterly literary review. North British Rev.

Northbrooke, —— (wrote about 1570–1640). J. Northbrooke

Norton, Frederick William (1800–1871). English scholar and writer. C. E. Norton

Norton, Henry Cr—— (1800–1871). American clergyman. John Norton

W—— diarist. J. Norton

Norton, ——, John. English clergyman. T. Norton

Norton, Charles Eliot (1827–). American critic, dramatist, and translator. N and Q

Norton, John (1606–1663). English Abbot. periodical. Nott

Norton, John (1651–1716). American clergyman and theologist. Norton Chron.

Norton, Thomas (16th century). English quarterly periodical. Notes and Queries

Notes and Queries (1849–). English weekly Wood, dead.

Nott, Josiah Clark (1804–1873). Amer

Numismatic Chronicle (1838–). Irish American author. Fitz James O'Brien

Nuttall's Standard Dictionary (1850–1450?). English poet and lawyer. Occleve

——, the Emperor (14th century). Middle English

Octavian

Occleve or Hoccleve (14th century). Middle English poem. Occleve

Octavian, Roge (1726–1802). Irish historian and antiquary. O'Curry

O'Connell, Edmond (1808–1885). British journalist and author. O'Donovan

Octovivan, John (died 1854). Irish archæologist. J. O'Donovan

O'Flvia, John (1797–1857). Scottish lexicographer. Ogilvie

O'Keefe, John (1747–1833). Irish dramatist. O'Keefe

Oldham, John (1653–1683). English poet and satirist. Oldham

Oldys, William (died 1761). English biographer. Oldys

Oliphant, Laurence (1829–1888). English author. L. Oliphant

Oliphant, Margaret Wilson (1828–1897). Scottish novelist and historian. Mrs. Oliphant

Oliphant, Thomas Laurence Kington (1831–). English philologist and author. Oliphant

O'Neill, Charles ("Dictionary of Dyeing and Calico Printing," 1862, etc.) O'Neill

O'Reilly, Edward. Irish lexicographer. ("An Irish English Dictionary," 1864.) O'Reilly

O'Reilly, John Boyle (1844–1890). Irish American journalist and poet. J. B. O'Reilly

O'Reilly, Miles. See Halpine.

Orm or Ormin (12th century). English monk. ("Ormulum," a metrical homilies in verse, about 1200, ed. White, 1852.) Ormulum

Ormerod, George (1785–1873). English county historian. Ormerod

Orton, James (1830–1877). American naturalist. J. Orton

Osborn, Henry Stafford (1823–1894). American educator and writer. H. S. Osborn

Osborne, Francis (died 1654). English moralist. Osborne

Ossoli, Marchioness (Margaret Fuller). See Fuller.

Otway, Thomas (1651–1686). English dramatist. Otway

Ottred, Marcellius (about 1580). Biblical commentator. Ottred

Overbury, Sir Thomas (1581–1613). English poet and courtier. Sir T. Overbury

Owen, John B. (1787–1872). English philosophical writer. J. Owen

Owen, Sir Richard (1804–1892). English naturalist, anatomist, and paleontologist. Owen

Owl and Nightingale (about 1230). Middle English poem, ascribed to Nicholas de Guildford.

Oxenham, Henry Nutcombe (1829–1888). English essayist and religious writer. H. N. Oxenham

Oxford Glossary of Architecture (1850). Oxford Gloss.

Oxlee, John (1779–1854). English clergyman and theological writer. J. Oxlee

Ozell, John (died 1743). English translator. Ozell

Packard, Alpheus Spring (1839–). American naturalist. A. S. Packard

Page, David (1794–1879). Scottish geologist. Page

Pagit, Ephraim (1575–1647). English clergyman. E. Pagit

Paine, Robert Treat (1773–1811). American poet. R. T. Paine

Paine, Thomas (1737–1809). English American writer. T. Paine

Paley, William (1743–1805). English clergyman, theologian, and moralist. Paley

Palfrey, John Gorham (1796–1881). American historian. Palfrey

Palgrave, Sir Francis (1788–1861). English historian. Sir F. Palgrave

Palgrave, Francis Turner (1824–1897). English poet and critic. F. T. Palgrave

Palgrave, William Gifford (1826–1888). English traveler. W. G. Palgrave

Pallas, Peter Simon (1741–1811). German naturalist and traveler. Pallas

Pallister, Frances Bury (1803–1879). English writer on hen, etc. Mrs. Bury Pallister

Pall Mall Gazette (1865–). English daily newspaper. Pall Mall Gazette

Palmer, A. Smythe. English philological writer. A. S. Palmer

Palmer, Edward Henry (1840–1882). English scholar. ("Persian Dictionary," 2d ed., 1884.) E. H. Palmer

Palmer, John Williamson (1825–). American author and editor. J. W. Palmer

Palmer, Ray (1808–1887). American clergyman and hymn writer. Ray Palmer

Palmer, William (1803–1885). English clergyman and theological writer. William Palmer

Palmer, William (1811–1879). English writer on the Greek Church. W. Palmer

Palmerston, Viscount (Henry John Temple) (1784–1865). British statesman. Palmerston

Palsgrave, John (died 1554). English grammarian. ("Eclaircissement de la Langue Francoyse," 1530; reprinted as "L'Eclaircissement de la Langue Française," ed. Genin, 1852.) Palsgrave

Paris, Comte de (Louis Philippe Albert, Prince d'Orléans) (1838–). French historian and soldier. Comte de Paris

Parke, Robert (end of 16th century). English writer. R. Parke

Parker, Martin. English writer. ("The Nightingale," 1632.) M. Parker

Parker, Matthew (1504–1575). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Parker

Parker, Samuel (1640–1687). Bishop of Oxford. Bp. Parker, or Parker

Parker, Samuel (died 1730). English theological writer. S. Parker

Parker, Theodore (1810–1860). American clergyman and author. Theodore Parker

Parker, W. Kitchen (1823–1890). English anatomist and physiologist. W. K. Parker

Parker Society Publications. Society instituted at Cambridge, England, in 1840.

Parkman, Francis (1823–1893). American historian. F. Parkman

Parley, Peter. See Goodrich.

Parnell, Thomas (1679–1717). Irish poet. Parnell

Parr, Samuel (1747–1826). English scholar. Parr

Parsons, Thomas William (1819–1892). American poet and translator. T. W. Parsons

Pascoe, Francis P. (1813–1895). British naturalist. Pascoe

Pasteur, Louis (1822–1895). French physician and chemist. Pasteur

Paston Letters. A collection of English letters (1422–1509); ed. Gairdner, 1872–1875.

Paterson, James (1804–1864). English legal writer. J. Paterson

Patmore, Coventry Kearsey Deighton (1823–1896). English poet. Coventry Patmore

Patrick, Simon (1626–1707). Bishop of Ely, and religious writer. Bp. Patrick

Patterson, Robert Hogarth (1821–1886). Scottish financial writer. R. H. Patterson

Pattison, Mark (1813–1884). English clergyman and author. Mark Pattison

Paxton, Sir Joseph (1803–1865). English gardener and architect. ("Botanical Dictionary," 1840, 1868.) Paxton

Payn, James (1830–1898). English novelist. J. Payn

Payne, John (1811–). British poet. Payne

Payne, John Howard (1792–1852). American poet and playwright. J. Howard Payne

Peacham, Henry (beginning of 17th century). English author. Peacham

Peacock, Thomas Love (1785–1866). English novelist and poet. Peacock

Pearce, Zachary (1690–1774). Bishop of Rochester, and commentator. Bp. Pearce

Pearson, Charles Henry (1830–1894). English historical writer. C. H. Pearson

Pearson, John (1612–1686). Bishop of Chester. Bp. Pearson

Pecock, Reynold or Reginald (about 1390–1460). Bishop of Chichester. Bp. Pecock

Peel, Sir Robert (1788–1850). English statesman. Sir R. Peel

Peele, George (1558–1598). English dramatist. Peele

Pegge, Samuel (1704–1800). English antiquary. Pegge

Pelle, John (1808–). English philologist. Pelle

Peirce, Benjamin (1778–1831). American author. Peirce

Peirce, Benjamin (1809–1880). American mathematician. B. Peirce

Peirce, Charles Sanders (1839–). American mathematician and logician. C. S. Peirce

Penhallow, D. P. (1854–). American botanist. Penhallow

Penn, William (1644–1718). Founder of Pennsylvania. Penn

Pennant, Thomas (1726–1798). English naturalist. Pennant

Pennecuik, Alexander (1654–1722). Scottish physician, botanist and poet. Pennecuik

Pennell, Elizabeth Robins. Contemporary American writer. E. R. Pennell

Pennell, Joseph. Contemporary American artist and writer. J. Pennell

Pepys, Samuel (1633–1703). English diarist. Pepys

Percival, James Gates (1795–1856). American poet. J. G. Percival

Percy, John (1817–1889). English metallurgist. J. Percy

Percy, Thomas (1729?–1811). Bishop of Dromore, Ireland. ("Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," 1765.) Bp. Percy, and Percy's Reliques

Percy Society Publications. Society instituted in London in 1840.

Pereira, Jonathan (1804–1853). English physician and chemist. Pereira

Perkins, Charles Callahan (1823–1886). American writer on art. C. C. Perkins

Perkins, William (1558–1602). English divine. Perkins

Perry, Thomas Sergeant (1845–). American literary historian. T. S. Perry

Perry, William. Scottish lexicographer. ("Royal Standard English Dictionary," 1775.) Perry

Peters, Charles (died 1777). English clergyman. Peters

Pett, Sir P. (second half of 17th century). English writer. Pett

Petty or Pettie, Sir William (1623–1687). English political economist. Petty, or Sir W. Pettie

Phaer, Thomas (died 1560). British translator of Virgil, etc. Phaer

Phelps, Austin (1820–1890). American clergyman and author. A. Phelps

Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart (Mrs. Ward) (1844–). American novelist and poet. E. S. Phelps

Phillips, Ambrose (died 1749). English poet and dramatist. Phillips

Phillips, John (1676–1708). English poet. J. Phillips

Phillimore, Joseph (1775–1855). English jurist. Phillimore

Phillips, Edward (1630–1698?). English lexicographer and compiler. ("The New World of Words or a General English Dictionary," 1658, etc., revised ed., 1706, editions used, 1678, 1702.) E. Phillips, or Phillips

Phillips, John (1800–1874). English geologist. Phillips
Phillips, Samuel (1815–1854). English critic and novelist. S. Phillips
Phillips, Wendell (1811–1884). American orator and reformer. W. Phillips
Philological Society, Dictionary of. The "New English Dictionary" (see J. A. H. Murray).
Philosophical Magazine (1798–). British monthly scientific periodical. Philos. Mag.
Phin, John (1832–). Scottish-American publisher and writer. ("Dictionary of Apiculture," 1881.) Phin
Piatt, Sarah Morgan Bryan (1836–). American poet. Mrs. Piatt
Pichardo, Estéban (1799–1879). Cuban lexicographer. ("Diccionario Provincial de Voces Cubanas," 1836; 3d ed., 1862.)
Pickering, John (1777–1846). American lawyer and compiler. ("A Vocabulary" of alleged or supposed Americanisms, 1816.) Pickering
Pickering, Timothy (1745–1829). American statesman. T. Pickering
Pierce, Thomas (died 1691). English theological and controversial writer. T. Pierce Piers the Plowmans Crede. Middle English poem (about 1393). Piers Plowman's Crede
Pierpont, John (1785–1866). American clergyman and poet. Pierpont Piers the Plowman. Poem by William Langland (or Long), about 1362; text B, about 1377; text C, about 1393; edition used: Skeat's (of 1886). Piers Plowman Pinkerton, John (1758–1826). Scottish antiquarian, historian, and poet. Pinkerton
Pinkney, Edward Coate (1802–1828). American poet. Pinkney
Piozzi, Mrs. (Hester Lynch Salusbury; Mrs. Thrale) (1741–1821). English writer. Mrs. Piozzi
Pitscottie, Robert Lindsay of (16th century). Scottish chronicler. Pitscottie
Pitt, Christopher (1699–1748). English translator and poet. C. Pitt
Pitt, William (1759–1806). English statesman. W. Pitt
Planché, James Robinson (1796–1880). English antiquary and dramatist. Planché
Playfair, Sir Lyon (1819–1898). British chemist, scientist, and economist. Playfair Plot, Robert (died 1696). English naturalist and antiquary. Plot
Plumbe, S. (first half of 19th century). British medical writer. S. Plumbe
Plumtree or Plumtre, Robert. English writer (wrote about 1782). Plumtree
Pocock, Edward (1604–1691). English Orientalist. Pocock
Pococke, Richard (1704–1765). English traveller. Pococke
Poe, Edgar Allan (1809–1849). American poet and romancer. Poe
Political Songs (about 1264–1327). Edited by Wright, 1839.
Pollock, Sir Frederick (1845–). English jurist. F. Pollock
Pollok, Robert (1798–1827). Scottish poet. Pollok
Pomfret, John (1667–1703). English poet. Pomfret
Pope, Alexander (1688–1744). English poet. Pope
Pope, Walter (died 1714). English physician and author. W. Pope Popular Encyclopædia, Blackie's. Pop. Encyc.
Popular Music of the Olden Time. Chappell.
Popular Science Monthly (1872–). American periodical. Pop. Sci. Mo.
Popular Science Review (1862–1881). English quarterly periodical. Pop. Sci. Rev.
Porson, Richard (1759–1808). English classical scholar and critic. Porson
Porter, Ebenezer (1772–1834). American educator. E. Porter
Porter, Noah (1811–1892). American educator and philosophical writer; editor of "Webster's Dictionary," editions of 1864 and 1880. N. Porter
Porteus, Beilby (1731–1809). Bishop of London. Bp. Porteus
Potter, Francis (1594–1678). English clergyman. F. Potter
Potter, John (1674–1747). Archbishop of Canterbury; classical scholar. Abp. Potter
Poulsen, V. A. Danish chemist. ("Botanical Micro-Chemistry," 1884.) Poulsen
Pownall, Thomas (died 1805). English colonial governor and antiquary. Pownall
Praed, Mrs. Campbell Mackworth (18– –). Writer on Australia. Mrs. Campbell Praed
Praed, Winthrop Mackworth (1802–1839). English poet. Praed
Pratt, Samuel Jackson (pseudonym "Courtney Melmoth") (1749–1814). English poet and novelist. C. Melmoth
Preble, George Henry (1816–1885). American admiral. Preble
Presse and Sivewright. ("Telegraphy," 1876.) Presse and Sivewright
Premature Death. See Hamer. Premature Death
Prescott, George Bartlett (1830–1894). American electrician. G. B. Prescott
Prescott, William Hickling (1796–1859). American historian. Prescott
Preston, Harriet Waters (about 1845–). American author and translator. H. W. Preston Preston, Margaret J. (1832–1897). American poet. M. J. Preston
Preston, Thomas (died 1598). English writer of plays. T. Preston Preston, Thomas Arthur (1841–). English clergyman and botanist. T. A. Preston Price, Sir Uvedale (1747–1829). English essayist. Sir Uvedale Price
Prichard, James Cowles (1786–1848). English ethnologist and physician. J. C. Prichard Prideaux, John (1578–1650). Bishop of Worcester. Prideaux on the Letters
Priestley, Joseph (1733–1804). English physicist, theologian, and philosopher. Priestley
Prior, Sir James (1790–1869). Irish biographer. Sir J. Prior Prior, Matthew (1664–1721). English poet. Prior Prior, Richard Chandler Alexander (1830–1873). English physician and author. R. C. A. Prior Proceedings of American Society for Psychical Research. Proc. Amer. Soc. Psychical Research
Proceedings of English Society for Psychical Research. Proc. Soc. Psychical Research
Procter, Adelaide Anne (1825–1864). English poet. A. A. Procter
Procter, Bryan Waller (pseudonym "Barry Cornwall") (died 1874). English poet. Barry Cornwall or B. W. Procter
Procter, Francis. English clergyman, writer on ecclesiastical history, etc. F. Procter
Proctor, Richard Anthony (1837–1888). English astronomer. R. A. Proctor Promptorium Parvulorum (about 1440). An English-Latin dictionary (ed. Way, 1843–1865). Prompt. Parv.
Prout, Father. See Mahony.
Prynne, William (1600–1669). English politician and pamphleteer. Prynne

Pugin, Augustus Welby Northmore (1812–1852). English architect. Pugin
Puller, Timothy (died 1699). English clergyman. T. Puller
Punch (1841–). English weekly comic periodical. Punch
Purchas, Samuel (1577–about 1626). English clergyman and compiler of travels. Purchas Pusey, Edward Bouverie (1800–1882). English clergyman and Anglo-Catholic writer. Pusey
Puttenham, George (died about 1600). English critic and poet. Puttenham

Quain, Sir Richard (1816–1898). British anatomist. ("Dictionary of Medicine," 1883.) Quain
Quarles, Francis (1592–1644). English poet. Quarles Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science (1853–). Quart. Jour. Micros. Sci.
Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society (1845–). Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc.
Quarterly Review (1809–). English quarterly literary review. Quarterly Rev.
Quin, Life of Mr. James (English actor, 1693–1766). Anonymous work, 1766. Life of Quin
Quincy, Edmund (1808–1877). American biographer. E. Quincy
Quincy, John (died 1723). English medical writer. Quincy
Quincy, Josiah (1772–1864). American statesman. J. Quincy
Quincy, Josiah (1802–1882). American writer. Josiah Quincy

Rabenhorst, Ludwig (1806–1881). German botanist. Rabenhorst
Rae, John (1845–). English economist. Rae
Rae, W. Fraser (1835–). British author. W. F. Rae
Rainbow, Edward (1608–1684). Bishop of Carlisle. Bp. Rainbow
Raleigh, Sir Walter (1552–1618). English statesman, explorer and historian. Raleigh Rambler, The (1750–1752). English w[illegible] Dr. Johnson. Rambler
Ramsay, Allan (1686–1758). Scottish [illegible]erman English ph[illegible] Ramsay Ramsay, Sir Andrew Crombie (1814–[illegible]). [illegible]oman Catholic bishop [illegible] A. C. Ramsay
Ramsay, Edward B. (1793–1872). Sc[illegible] Ramsay
Ramsay, Sir George (1800–1871). "[illegible] Ramsay
Randolph, Bernard. English writer [illegible]ish poet and dramatist. Mundus Mimicus Randolph, John (1773–1833). Amer[illegible]ter. Mimicus
Randolph, Thomas (1605 or 1634). En[illegible]–1871). British geologist. Murchison Ranke, Leopold von (1795–1886). G[illegible]critic and scholar. W. Muris Rankine, William John Macquorn (1[illegible] (Charles Egbert Craddock") (1850?–).
Rapalje and Lawrence (Stewart Rapalj[illegible] M. N. Murfree tionary of English and American Law," 1[illegible]ist and general writer. A. Murphy Raper, Matthew. British antiquary (wrote about [illegible]ogist. A. H. Murray
Ravenscroft, Edward (last half of 17th century). Eng[illegible]ish philologist, editor Historical Princi[illegible] Ravenscroft, Thomas (about 1582–1630). English composer, [illegible]ical writer. J. A. H. Murray music and songs.
Rawlinson, George (1812–). Eng[illegible]ish historian and editor. Sir R. Murphree Rawlinson, Sir Henry Creswicke (1810–1895). English geographer, [illegible]rary Orientalist. Sir H. C. H. Myers.
Ray, John (1628–1705). English naturalist and philologist.
Raymond, Henry Jarvis (1820–1869). American journalist and author. H. J. Raymond Raymond, Rossiter Worthington (1840–). American mining engineer. R. W. Raymond Read, Thomas Buchanan (1822–1872). American poet. T. B. Read
Reade, Charles (1814–1884). English novelist. C. Reade
Reade, John Edmund (died 1870). English poet. J. E. Reade
Reber, Franz von (1834–). German art historian. Reber
Recorde, Robert (1500?–1558). English mathematician. Recorde
Redding, Cyrus (1785–1870). English journalist. Redding
Redhouse, Sir James William (1811–1892). English Orientalist. ("Turkish Dictionary," 2d ed., 1890.) Redhouse
Rees, Abraham (1743–1825). English encyclopedist. ("Cyclopædia," 1803–1819. Compare E. Chambers.) Rees
Reeve, Thomas (middle of 17th century). English clergyman. Reeve Reeves, John (1752–1829). English lawyer. Reeves
Reid, Mayne (1818–1883). Irish-American novelist. Mayne Reid
Reid, Thomas (1710–1796). Scottish philosopher. Reid
Reid, Thomas Wemyss (1842–). English journalist. T. W. Reid
Rein, Johann Justus (1835–). German geographer and naturalist. J. J. Rein Reliquiæ Antiquæ. Edited by Halliwell and Wright, 1841–1843. Rel. Antiq.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ (1651). Collected by Sir H. Wotton. Reliquiæ Wottonianæ
Rennie, James (died 1867). English clergyman and naturalist. Rennie Rereaby, Sir John (first part of 16th century). English politician and traveler. Sir J. Rereaby
Reynolds, Edward (1599–1676). Bishop of Norwich. Bp. Reynolds
Reynolds, John (17th century). English merchant and writer. J. Reynolds
Reynolds, Sir Joshua (1723–1792). English painter. Sir J. Reynolds
Reynolds, J. Russell (1828–1896). English anatomist and physiologist. J. R. Reynolds
Rheims Translation of the New Testament. Rheims N. T.
Rhodes, Albert (1846–). American essayist. A. Rhodes
Rhys, John (1840–). Welsh philologist. Rhys
Ribton-Turner, C. J. Contemporary English writer. ("Vagrants and Vagrancy," 1887.) Ribton-Turner
Rich, Barnaby (about 1600). English soldier and author. Barnaby Rich
Richard Coer de Lion (about 1335). Middle English poem. Metr. Coer de Lion
Richardson, Sir Benjamin Ward (1828–1896). English physician and scientist. B. W. Richardson
Richardson, Charles (1775–1865). English lexicographer. ("A New Dictionary of the English Language," 1836–1837; editions 1839–1847 and 1859.) C. Richardson, or Richardson
Richardson, John (died 1654). Bishop of Ardagh, Ireland. Bp. Richardson
Richardson, Sir John (1787–1865). Scottish naturalist. Sir J. Richardson

Richardson, Jonathan (died 1745). English painter and art critic. J. Richardson Richardson, Robert (about 1820). English physician and traveler. R. Richardson
Richardson, Samuel (1689–1761). English novelist. Richardson
Richardson, William (1743–1814). Scottish essayist. W. Richardson
Richard the Redeless (1399). Middle English poem ascribed to William Langland; ed. Skeat, 1886. R
Richthofen, Karl, Baron von (1811–1888). German philologist. ("Altfriesisches Wörterbuch," 1840.) Richthofen
Riddell, Henry Scott (1798?–1870?). Scottish poet. H. Scott Riddell
Riddell, Mrs. J. H. (Charlotte E. L. Cowan) (1832–). Irish novelist. Mrs. Riddell
Ridley, Nicholas (died 1555). Bishop of London, Reformer, and martyr. Bp. Ridley Riley, Charles Valentine (1843–1895). American entomologist. C. V. Riley
Riley, James Whitcomb (1853–). American poet. J. W. Riley
Ripley, George (1802–1880). American author. G. Ripley
Ritson, Joseph (1752–1803). English antiquary and critic, editor of "Ancient English Metrical Romances" (1802). Ritson
Rivers, Earl of (Anthony Woodville) (died 1483). English courtier and writer. Lord Rivers
Robert of Gloucester (about 1280). English chronicler. Robert of Gloucester
Robertson, Frederick William (1816–1853). English clergyman. F. W. Robertson
Robertson, George Croom (1842–1892). Scottish philosophical writer. Prof. G. C. Robertson
Robertson, James Craigie (1813–1882). English clergyman and church historian. J. C. Robertson
Robertson, William. ("Phraseologia Generalis, English and Latin Phrase Book," 1681.)
Robertson, William (1721–1793). Scottish historian. Principal Robertson, or W. Robertson
Robinson, Frederick William [illegible] temporary English novelist. F. W. Robinson Robinson, Henry Cr[illegible] –1867). English lawyer, journalist, and diarist. Crabb Robinson
Robins[illegible] John. English clergyman. J. Robinson
R[illegible] Charles Eliot (1847–). Anglo-Indian author. P. Robinson
[illegible]orton, John (1600–1664). English [illegible] More's "Utopia" (1551). R. Robinson
Norton, John (1651–1716). American clergyman. English poet and courtier. Rochester Norton, Thomas (16th century). English [illegible] on ecclesiastical vestments. Rock
Notes and Queries (1849–). English weekly [illegible] of the Koran (1862). Rodwell
Nott, Josiah Clark (1804–1873). American [illegible] divine. D. Rogers Numismatic Chronicle (1838–). English [illegible] ological writer. H. Rogers
Nuttall's Standard Dictionary (ed. Jan [illegible] 1890). English political economist. Thorold Rogers
O'Brien, Fitz James (1828–1862). [illegible]glish Reformer and martyr. John Rogers
Occleve or Hoccleve, Thom[illegible] English clergyman and controversialist. J. Rogers
Octavian, Romance of [illegible] English poet. Rogers poem.
[illegible] 1616). English religious writer. T. Rogers
Octovian Impera[illegible] (1779–1828). English miscellaneous writer. Roget O'Curry, Eug[illegible]man. Writer on fencing. ("Modern Art of Fencing," edited O'Donovan [illegible] by J. S. Forsyth, 1825.) Rolando O'Doun [illegible] Richard, of Hampole. See Hampole.
O[illegible], Alice Wellington (1847–1887). American author. A. W. Rollins
Romanes, George John (1848–1894). English naturalist. G. J. Romanes
Romaunt of the Rose, The (13th and 14th centuries). Middle English translation (often ascribed to Chaucer) of a French poem. Rom. of the Rose Romilly, Sir Samuel (1757–1818). English statesman and jurist. Romilly
Rood, Ogden Nicholas (1831–). American physicist. O. N. Rood
Roosevelt, Robert Barnwell (1829–). American politician and author. R. B. Roosevelt
Roosevelt, Theodore (1858–). American politician and author. T. Roosevelt Roquefort, Jean Baptiste Bonaventure (1777–1834). French scholar. ("Glossaire de la Langue Romane," 1808–1820.) Roquefort
Roscher, Wilhelm (1817–1894). German political economist. W. Roscher
Roscoe, Sir Henry Enfield (1833–). English chemist. H. E. Roscoe
Roscoe, William (1753–1831). English historian. Roscoe
Roscoe and Schorlemmer (Sir H. E. Roscoe, C. Schorlemmer). ("A Treatise on Chemistry," 1877–1884.) Roscoe and Schorlemmer
Roscommon, Earl of (Wentworth Dillon) (died 1684). English poet. Roscommon
Rose, Joshua (died 1898). Technical writer. ("Complete Practical Machinist," 1876.) J. Rose Rosenbusch, Karl H. F. (1836–). German mineralogist. Rosenbusch
Ross, Alexander (1590–1654). Scottish divine. Ross
Ross, Alexander (1699–1784). Scottish poet. A. Ross
Ross, Denman W. ("Early History of Landholding among the Germans," 1883.) D. W. Ross
Ross, Sir James Clark (1800–1862). English navigator and scientific writer. Sir J. C. Ross
Ross, W. A. British military officer. ("The Blowpipe," 1884.) W. A. Ross Rossetti, Christina Georgina (1830–1894). English poet. C. G. Rossetti
Rossetti, Gabriel Charles Dante (known as Dante Gabriel Rossetti) (1828–1882). English poet and painter. D. G. Rossetti Rossetti, William Michael (1829–). English critic, biographer, and translator. W. M. Rossetti
Rossiter, William. Compiler of "Dictionary of Scientific Terms," 1879. Rossiter
Roughley, Thomas. ("Jamaica Planter's Guide," 1823.) T. Roughley
Rous[illegible] (about 1600). English poet. Rous
Row[illegible] Charles (died 1856?). English novelist. C. Rowcroft
Rowe, Nicholas (1674?–1718). English dramatist and poet. Rowe Rowlands, Samuel (died 1634?). English poet and satirist. Rowlands Rowley, William (first half of 17th century). English dramatist. Rowley Roxburghe Ballads (1567–1790). Edited by J. P. Collier, 1847. Roxburghe Ballads
Royal Society of London, History of the (1848). Hist. Roy. Society
Ruskin, John (1819–1900). English critic and writer on art. Ruskin
Russell, Irwin (1853–1879). American author. Irwin Russell
Russell, Patrick (1726–1805). Scottish physician. P. Russell

Russell, W. Clark (1844–). English novelist. W. C. Russell
Russell, Sir William Howard (1821–). British journalist and author. W. H. Russell
Rust, George (died 1670). Bishop of Dromore, Ireland. Bp. Rust
Rutherford, Samuel (died 1661). Scottish divine. Rutherford
Rutley, Frank (1842–). English mineralogist. Rutley
Ruxton, George Frederick (died 1848). English traveler. Ruxton
Rycaut, Sir Paul (died 1700). English diplomatist and historian. Rycaut
Ryder, J. A. (1852–1895). American naturalist. J. A. Ryder
Rymer, Thomas (died 1713). English antiquary. Rymer

Sabine, Sir Edward (1788–1883). English general and physicist. Sir E. Sabine
Sachs, Julius von (1832–). German botanist. Sachs
Sackville, Thomas (Earl of Dorset) (1536–1608). English poet and dramatist. Sackville
Sadler, John (1615–1674). English political writer. J. Sadler
Sage, John (1652–1711). Scottish bishop. Bp. Sage
St. John, James Augustus (1801–1875). British traveler and author. J. A. St. John St. John, Pawlett (first part of 18th century). English clergyman. P. St. John
St. Nicholas (1873–). American monthly magazine for children. St. Nicholas
Saintsbury, George Edward Bateman (1845–). English critic. G. Saintsbury Sala, George Augustus (1828–1895). English journalist and miscellaneous writer. G. A. Sala
Salkeld, John (1576–1659). English clergyman and theological writer. Salkeld
Salmon, George (1819–). Irish clergyman and mathematical and theological writer. Salmon
Sancroft, William (1616–1693). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Sancroft
Sanders or Saunders, Richard (second half of 17th century). English astrologer. R. Sanders Sanderson, Robert (1587–1663). Bishop of Lincoln. Bp. Sanderson
Sandys, Edwin (1519–1588). Archbishop of York. Abp. Sandys
Sandys, Sir Edwin (1561–1629). English writer of travels. Sir E. Sandys
Sandys, George (1577–1644). English poet. Sandys
Sanford or Sandford, James (second half of 16th century). English translator. Sanford Sanitarian, The (1873–). American monthly periodical. The Sanitarian
Sankey, W. H. O. Alienist. ("Mental Diseases," 1866.) Sankey
Sargent, Charles S. (1841–). American botanist. C. S. Sargent
Sargent, Epes (1813?–1880). American editor and author. Epes Sargent
Sargent, Nathan (1794–1875). American journalist. N. Sargent
Saturday Review (1855–). English weekly periodical. Saturday Rev.
Savage, Marmion W. (died 1872). British novelist. M. W. Savage
Savage, Richard (1698–1743). English poet. Savage
Savile, Sir Henry (1549–1622). English antiquary. Sir H. Savile
Saxe, John Godfrey (1816–1887). American poet and humorist. J. G. Saxe
Sayce, Archibald Henry (1846–). English Orientalist. A. H. Sayce
Scammon, Charles M. (1825–). American navigator. C. M. Scammon
Schade, Oskar. German philologist. ("Altdeutsches Wörterbuch," 1872–1882.) Schade
Schaff, Philip (1819–1893). Swiss-American ecclesiastical historian and theologian. Schaff
Schaff-Herzog (Philip Schaff, 1819–1893, Johann Jakob Herzog, 1805–1882). ("A Religious Encyclopædia, based on the Real-Encyklopädie of Herzog, Plitt, and Hauck," 1882–84.) Schaff-Herzog
Schele de Vere, Maximilian von (1820–1898). German-American scholar. ("Americanisms," 1872.) Schele de Vere
Scheler, Johann August Huldreich (1819–1890). Belgian philologist. ("Dictionnaire d'Étymologie Française," 3d ed., 1873.) Scheler
Schimper, Wilhelm Philipp (1808–1880). German geologist and paleontologist. Schimper Schley, Winfield Scott (1839–). American naval officer and writer on arctic explorations. Schley Schliemann, Heinrich (1822–1890). German archæologist. Schliemann
Schlosser, Friedrich Christoph (1776–1861). German historian. Trans. by D. Davison. Schlosser
Schmidt, Alexander (1816–). German Shaksperian scholar. ("Shakespeare Lexicon," 1874.) Schmidt
Schouler, James (1839–). American historian and legal writer. J. Schouler
Schreiner, Olive. Contemporary South African author. Olive Schreiner
Schuyler, Eugene (1840–1890). American diplomatist. E. Schuyler
Science (1883–). American weekly scientific periodical. Science Scientific American (1845–). American weekly scientific periodical. Sci. Amer.
Sclater, Philip Lutley (1829–). English naturalist. P. L. Sclater
Sclater, William (died 1626). English theologian. W. Sclater
Scotsman, The (1817–). Scottish daily newspaper. The Scotsman
Scott, Sir George Gilbert (1811–1878). English architect. G. G. Scott
Scott, John (1638–1695). English divine. J. Scott
Scott, John (died 1783). English poet and author. John Scott
Scott, Joseph Nicol (died about 1769). English clergyman, physician, and lexicographer (editor of Bailey's Dictionary, 1755). J. N. Scott
Scott, Michael (1789–1835). Scottish novelist. M. Scott
Scott, Thomas (1747–1821). English Biblical commentator. T. Scott
Scott, Sir Walter (1771–1832). Scottish poet and novelist. Scott
Scott, William (about 1625). English writer. W. Scott
Scribner's Magazine (1887–). American monthly literary periodical. Scribner's Mag.
Scudder, Horace Elisha (1838–). American editor and historical and miscellaneous author. H. E. Scudder
Scudder, Samuel Hubbard (1837–). American naturalist. S. H. Scudder Seager, John. English clergyman and grammarian. ("A Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary," 1819.) Seager
Sears, Edmund Hamilton (1810–1876). American clergyman. E. H. Sears
Secker, Thomas (1693–1768). Archbishop of Canterbury. Secker
Sedgwick, Catharine Maria (1789–1867). American novelist. Miss Sedgwick

Sedley, Sir Charles (1639–1701). English dramatist and poet. Sedley

Seebohm, Frederic (1833–). English historical writer. F. Seebohm

Seebohm, Henry (1832–1895). British naturalist. Seebohm

Seeley, Sir John Robert (1834–1895). English historian and philosopher. J. R. Seeley

Seelye, Julius Hawley (1824–1896). American philosophical writer. J. H. Seelye

Seemann, Berthold (1825–1871). German-English naturalist Seemann

Seiss, Joseph Augustus (1823–). American theologian. Seiss

Selby, Prideaux John (died 1867). English naturalist. Selby

Selden, John (1584–1654). English statesman and jurist Selden

Serenius, Jacobus. Swedish-English clergyman and scholar ("Dictionarium Svethico-Anglo Latinum," 1741.) Serenius

Settle, Elkanah (1648–1723). English dramatist, poet, and politician. Settle

Sewall, Samuel (1652–1730). English American jurist and historical writer. Sewall

Seward, Anna (1747–1809). English poet. Anna Seward

Seward, William (1747–1799). English writer W. Seward

Sewel, William (about 1654–1796). English lexicographer. ("A Compleat Dictionary, Dutch and English," 1691; 5th ed., 1754; ed. Buys, 1766.) Sewel

Sewell, George (died 1726). English miscellaneous author G. Sewell

Shadwell, Charles (died 1726). English dramatist C. Shadwell

Shadwell, Thomas (1640–1692). English dramatist and poet Shadwell

Shaftesbury, Third Earl of (Anthony Ashley Cooper) (1671–1713). English moralist. Shaftesbury

Shairp, John Campbell (1819–1885). Scottish critic and poet. J. C. Shairp

Shakespeare Society, Publications of. Society instituted in London in 1840.

Shakspere, William (1564–1616). English dramatist and poet (folio 1623 (Booth's reprint, 1864), Knight's ed., 1838–43 (Amer. ed., 1861), Globe ed., 1864; Furness's Variorum ed., beginning 1877. Globe edition generally used; quarto, variorum editions and others consulted) Shak

Shakspere Society, New, Publications of. Society instituted in London in 1842.

Shaler, Nathaniel Southgate (1841–). American geologist and author. N. S. Shaler

Sharp, John (1644–1714). Archbishop of York Abp. Sharp

Sharp, William (1856–). English critic W. Sharp

Sharpe, James B. (lived about 1830). British medical writer Sharpe

Sharpe, John. English clergyman, translator of William of Malmesbury's writings (1815). J. Sharpe

Sharpe, Samuel (1799–1881). English Egyptologist and Biblical scholar. S. Sharpe

Shaw, Albert (1857–). American political economist and journalist. A. Shaw

Shaw, Peter (died 1763). English physician and writer on chemistry P. Shaw

Shaw, Thomas Budd (1813–1862). English writer on English literature T. B. Shaw or Shaw

Shedd, William Greenough Thayer (1820–1894). American clergyman and theologian. Shedd

Sheffield, John (Duke of Buckinghamshire) (1649–1721). English poet and writer Sheffield

Sheil, Richard Lalor (1791–1851). Irish politician and writer Sheil

Sheldon, Richard (beginning of 17th century). English clergyman Sheldon

Shelford, Robert (beginning of 17th century). English religious writer. Shelford

Shelley, Percy Bysshe (1792–1822). English poet Shelley

Shelton, Thomas (beginning of 17th century). English translator Shelton

Shenstone, William (1714–1763). English pastoral poet Shenstone

Shepard, Thomas (1605–1649). English American clergyman T. Shepard

Sheppard, Elizabeth Sara (pseudonym "S. Berger") (1830–1862). English novelist. E. S. Sheppard

Sherburne, Sir Edward (1618–1702). English translator. Sir E. Sherburne

Sheridan, Philip Henry (1831–1888). American general P. H. Sheridan

Sheridan, Richard Brinsley Butler (1751–1816). Irish dramatist and orator. Sheridan

Sheridan, Thomas (1721–1768). Irish actor and lexicographer ("A Complete Dictionary of the English Language," 1780, 4th ed., 1797.) T. Sheridan

Sherlock, Thomas (1678–1761). Bishop of London. Bp. Sherlock

Sherman, William Tecumseh (1820–1891). American general W. T. Sherman

Sherwood, Robert. English lexicographer ("A Dictionary, English and French," appended as an index to Cotgrave's French dictionary, 1632.) Sherwood

Shinn, Charles Howard (1852–). American author. C. H. Shinn

Shipley, Orby (1832–). English clergyman and ecclesiastical writer O. Shipley

Shirley, Sir Anthony (about 1565–1640). English traveler Sir A. Shirley

Shirley, James (1596–1666). English dramatist. Shirley

Shorter Catechism, Westminster Assembly's (1647) Shorter Catechism

Shorthouse, Joseph Henry (1834–). English novelist J. H. Shorthouse

Shuckford, Samuel (died 1754). English historian Shuckford

Sibbald, Sir Robert (died 1712). Scottish antiquarian and antiquary. Sir R. Sibbald

Sibbes, Richard (1577–1635). English clergyman R. Sibbes

Sibley, Ebenezer (about 1800). English physician and writer on astrology Sibley

Sidgwick, Alfred. Contemporary English philosophical writer. A. Sidgwick

Sidgwick, Henry (1838–1900). English philosophical writer H. Sidgwick

Sidney or Sydney, Algernon (1622?–1683). English republican statesman, and writer on government, etc. Algernon Sidney

Sidney or Sydney, Sir Henry (died 1586). English statesman Sir H. Sidney

Sidney or Sydney, Sir Philip (1554–1586). English poet, author, and soldier Sir P. Sidney

Sigourney, Lydia Huntley (1791–1865). American poet. L. H. Sigourney

Silliman, Benjamin (1779–1864). American scientist. Silliman

Silliman, Benjamin (1816–1885). American chemist. B. Silliman

Silversmith's Handbook (1884). George E. Ives Silversmith's Handbook

Silver Sunbeam, The. A treatise on photography. J. Towler, 1858. Silver Sunbeam

Simmonds, Peter Lund (1814–1897). English commercial writer. ("The Dictionary of Trade Products," etc., 1858, 1872.) Simmonds

Simms, William Gilmore (1806–1870). American novelist, poet, and historical writer. W. G. Simms

Sinclair, Sir John (1754–1835). Scottish politician and author. Sir J. Sinclair

Sinnett, A. P. (1840–). English journalist and writer on theosophy. A. P. Sinnett

Skeat, Walter William (1835–). English philologist. ("An Etymological Dictionary of the English Language," 1882; 3d ed., 1884; "A Concise Etymological Dictionary of the English Language," 1885; "Concise Etymological Dictionary of Middle English" (ed. Mayhew and Skeat), 1888; "A Moeso-Gothic Glossary," 1868, etc.) Skeat

Skelton, John (died 1529). English clergyman and poet. Skelton

Skelton, Joseph (first half of 19th century). English antiquary. J. Skelton

Skelton, Philip (1707–1787). Irish theological writer. Philip Skelton

Skinner, John (1721–1807). Scottish clergyman, poet, and church historian. Skinner, or Rev. J. Skinner

Skinner, Robert (died 1670). Bishop of Worcester. Bp. Skinner

Skinner, Stephen (1623–1667). English lexicographer. ("Etymologicon Linguæ Anglicanæ," 1671.) Skinner

Sladen, Douglas (1856–). English-Australian writer. D. Sladen

Slang Dictionary, The. See Hotten. Slang Dict.

Slick, Sam. See Haliburton.

Smalridge, George (1663–1719). Bishop of Bristol Bp. Smalridge

Smart, Benjamin Humphrey (1787?–1872?). English lexicographer and philosopher. ("A New Critical Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language," 1836.) Smart

Smart, Christopher (1722–1770). English poet. C. Smart

Smellie, William (1740?–1795). Scottish naturalist, editor of 1st edition of "Encyclopædia Britannica." W. Smellie

Smiles, Samuel (1812–). Scottish biographer and moralist. S. Smiles

Smith, Adam (1723–1790). Scottish political economist and philosopher. Adam Smith

Smith, Albert (1816–1860). English novelist and humorist. Albert Smith

Smith, Alexander (1830–1867). Scottish poet Alex. Smith

Smith, Charles John. English clergyman and grammarian. ("Synonyms Discriminated," 1879.) C. J. Smith

Smith, Edmund (1668–1710). English poet. E. Smith

Smith, George Barnett (1841–). English journalist and author. G. Barnett Smith

Smith, Goldwin (1823–). English-Canadian historian and publicist. Goldwin Smith

Smith, Henry Boynton (1815–1877). American theologian. H. B. Smith

Smith, Horace (1779–1849). English poet and humorist H. Smith

Smith, James (1775–1839). English poet and humorist. James Smith

Smith, Sir James Edward (1759–1828). English botanist. J. E. Smith

Smith, John (1579?–1631?). English traveler, and writer and compiler of travels. Capt. John Smith

Smith, John. English writer ("Solomon's Portraiture of Old Age," 1666.) Dr. J. Smith

Smith, John. ("A Dictionary of Popular Names of Economic Plants," 1882.) John Smith

Smith, Philip (died 1885). English classical, ecclesiastical, and general writer. P. Smith

Smith, R. Bosworth. Contemporary English historical writer R. Bosworth Smith

Smith, Samuel Stanhope (1750–1819). American theologian. S. S. Smith

Smith, Sydney (1771–1845). English clergyman, wit and essayist. Sydney Smith

Smith, Sir Thomas (died 1577). English statesman and author Sir T. Smith

Smith, Thomas Roger (1830–). English writer on architecture T. R. Smith

Smith, William (1711–1787). English translator. Dava Smith

Smith, Sir William (1813–1893). English scholar, and editor of various dictionaries (especially classical and Biblical). Dr. W. Smith, or Smith

Smith, William Robertson (1846–1894). Scottish Biblical critic, Oriental scholar, and editor. W. R. Smith

Smollett, Tobias George (1721–1771). British novelist and historian. Smollett

Smyth, Charles Piazzi (1819–1900). British astronomer Piazzi Smyth

Smyth, William Henry (1788–1865). English admiral and astronomer. Admiral Smyth

Soley, James Russell (1850–). American writer J. R. Soley

Sollas, W. Johnson (1849–). English scientist. W. J. Sollas

Somerville, William (died 1742). English poet. Somerville

Somner, William (died 1669). English antiquary and philologist. ("Dictionarium Saxonico Anglico-Latinum," 1659.) Somner

Sophocles, Evangelinus Apostolides (1807–1883). Greek-American classical scholar. ("Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods," 1870.) Sophocles

Sopwith, Thomas (about 1800). English writer. Sopwith

Sorley, William Ritchie. Contemporary English philosophical writer. W. R. Sorley

Soule, Richard (1812–1877). American compiler ("Dictionary of Synonyms"). Soule

South, Robert (1633–1716). English divine. South

Southern or Sotherne, Thomas (1660–1746). Irish dramatist. Southern

Southey, Robert (1774–1843). English poet and author. R. Southey

South Kensington Museum Handbooks. S. K. Handbook

Southwell, Robert (1560–1595). English poet and theological writer. Southwell

Spalding, John (died about 1670). Scottish historian. Spalding

Spectator, The (1711–1712). English literary periodical. Spectator

Spectator, The (1828–). English weekly periodical. Spectator

Speed, John (died 1629). English historian and topographer. Speed

Spelman, Sir Henry (1562–1641). English antiquary. ("Glossarium Archæologicum," 1626–1664.) Spelman

Spence, Joseph (1699–1768). English critic. J. Spence

Spencer, Herbert (1820–). English philosopher. H. Spencer

Spencer, John (1630–1695). English Biblical critic. J. Spencer

Spenser, Edmund (died 1599). English poet. Spenser

Spiers, Alexander (died 1849). English-French philologist. (A French and English dictionary, 1846; 19th ed., 1884.) Spiers

Spofford, Harriet Elizabeth Prescott (1835–). American novelist and poet. H. P. Spofford

Spons' Encyclopædia of Industrial Arts, Manufactures, etc. Spons' Encycl. Manuf.

Sportsman's Gazetteer (1883). Charles Hallock. Sportsman's Gazetteer

Spottiswoode, William (1825–1883). English mathematician and physicist. Spottiswoode

Sprague, Charles (1791–1875). American poet. Sprague

[illegible], Thomas (1635–1713). Bishop of Rochester. Bp. Sprat

[illegible], Samuel (1783–1873). American clergyman. Gardiner Spring

[illegible], William. Welsh publisher and lexicographer. ("A Dictionary of the Welsh Language," 1803; 3d ed., 1866.) Spurrell

Speed, Thomas (died 1752). English clergyman and author. Silkebarne

Spelman, Sir Anthony (died 1641). English religious writer. Stafford

Spilsbury, Sir John (1846–1901). English writer on music, and composer (edited, with W. A. Barrett, of "A Dictionary of Musical Terms"). Stainer, or Stainer and Barrett

Spectator, The (1863–). American weekly periodical. The Standard

Spectator Natural History (1864–1865). Edited by John Sterling Kingsley. Stand. Nat. Hist.

Spencer, Lady Hester (1776–1839). English traveler. Lady Stanhope

Spencer, Fifth Earl (Philip Henry Stanhope, Viscount Mahon) (1805–1875). English historian. Lord Stanhope

Spenser, Richard (died 1618). Irish priest, historian, and translator. Stanihurst

Stanley, Arthur Penrhyn (1815–1881). English clergyman and theological and historical writer. A. P. Stanley

Stanley, Henry Morton (1840–). Welsh-American traveler in Africa. H. M. Stanley

Stanley, Thomas (1625–1678). English poet, translator and philosophical writer. T. Stanley

Stansbury, Howard (1806–1863). American surveyor. H. Stansbury

Stapleton or Stapylton, Sir Robert (died 1669). English poet and translator. Stapylton

Stapleton, Thomas (1535–1598). English Roman Catholic writer. T. Stapleton

Stapleton, Thomas (1800?–1850). English antiquary. Stapleton

Statesman's Year Book (1864–). English statistical annual.

Stedman, Edmund Clarence (1833–). American poet and critic. Stedman

Steele, Sir Richard (1672–1729). Irish essayist and dramatist. Steele

Stevens, George (1736–1800). English Shakspearian commentator. Stevens

Stephen, Henry John (1787?–1864). English jurist. Stephen

Stephen, Sir James (1789–1859). English historical writer. Sir J. Stephen

Stephen, Sir James Fitzjames (1829–1894). English jurist. J. F. Stephen

Stephen, Sir Leslie (1832–). English critic, editor (with Sidney Lee) of "Dictionary of National Biography," 1885–). Leslie Stephen

Stephens, Alexander Hamilton (1812–1883). American statesman. A. H. Stephens

Stepney, George (1663–1707). English diplomatist and poet. Stepney

Sterling, John (1806–1844). Scottish essayist and poet. Sterling

Sternberg, George Miller (1838–). American physician. G. M. Sternberg

Sterne, Laurence (1713–1768). English clergyman and humorist. Sterne

Sternhold, Thomas (died 1549). English versifier of the Psalms. Sternhold

Stevens, John (died 1726). English lexicographer. ("A New Spanish and English Dictionary," 1706.) Stevens

Stevens, John Austin (1827–). American historical writer. J. A. Stevens

Stevenson, Robert Louis (1850–1894). Scottish novelist. R. L. Stevenson

Stewart, Balfour (1828–1887). Scottish physicist. B. Stewart

Stewart, Dugald (1753–1828). Scottish philosopher. D. Stewart

Stiles, Henry Reed (1832–). American physician and historical writer. H. R. Stiles

Still, John (about 1543–1607). Bishop of Bath and Wells, and dramatist. Bp. Still Stillé, Charles Janeway (1819–1899). American historical writer. Stillé

Stillingfleet, Edward (1635–1699). Bishop of Worcester. Stillingfleet

Stirling, James Hutchinson (1820–). Scottish philosopher. J. Hutchinson Stirling

Stirling, Earl of (William Alexander) (1567?–1640). Scottish poet. Stirling

Stockton, Francis Richard (1834–1902). American novelist. F. R. Stockton

Stocqueler, Joachim Haywood. British military writer. Stocqueler

Stoddard, Charles Warren (1843–). American poet and author. C. W. Stoddard

Stoddard, Mrs. R. H. (Elizabeth Barlow) (1823–1902). American author. E. Stoddard

Stoddard, Richard Henry (1825–). American poet and author. R. H. Stoddard

Stoddart, Sir John (1773–1856). English miscellaneous writer. Sir J. Stoddart

Stokes, David (middle of 17th century). English Celtic and Biblical scholar. D. Stokes

Stokes, Sir George Gabriel (1819–). British mathematician and physicist. Stokes

Stonehenge. See J. H. Walsh.

Stormonth, James (1825–1882). Scottish lexicographer. ("Etymological and Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language," 1871; 7th ed., 1881.) Stormonth

Storrs, Richard Salter (1821–1900). American clergyman. R. S. Storrs

Story, Joseph (1779–1845). American jurist. Story

Story, William Wetmore (1819–1895). American sculptor and author. W. W. Story

Stoughton, William (1632–1701). Governor of Massachusetts. Stoughton

Stout, George Frederick. Contemporary English writer on metaphysics. G. F. Stout

Stow, John (1525–1605). English antiquary. Stow

Stowe, Harriet Beecher (1812–1896). American novelist. H. B. Stowe

Stowell, Lord (William Scott) (1745–1836). English jurist. Lord Stowell

Strachey, William (first part of 17th century). American colonist and writer of travels. W. Strachey

Strangford, Viscount (Percy Smythe) (1825–1869). English writer. Lord Strangford

Strassburger, Eduard (1844–). German botanist. Strasburger

Stratmann, Francis Henry (died 1894). German philologist. ("A Dictionary of the Old English Language," 3d ed., 1878; revised ed., "A Middle-ing Dictionary," ed. H. Bradley, 1891.) Stratmann

Street, Alfred Billings (1811–1881). American poet. A. B. Street

Streeter, Edwin W. (1832–). British writer on precious stones. E. W. Streeter

Strickland, Agnes (1806–1874). English historical writer. Miss Strickland

Strutt, Joseph (1742–1802). English antiquary. Strutt

Strype, John (1643–1737). English ecclesiastical biographer. Strype

Stuart, Moses (1780–1852). American theologian and Hebraist. M. Stuart

Stuart, Robert. English writer. ("Dictionary of Architecture," 1850.) R. Stuart

Stubbes, Philip. English writer. ("Anatomie of Abuses," 1583.) Stubbes

Stubbs, William (1825–1901). Bishop of Oxford, and historian. Stubbs

Student, The (1850). Student

Stukeley, William (1687–1765). English antiquary. Stukeley

Suckling, Sir John (about 1609–1642). English poet. Suckling

Sullivan, William Kirby (1859–1896). Irish Celtic scholar. W. K. Sullivan

Sullivant, William Starling (1803–1873). American botanist. W. S. Sullivant

Sully, James (1842–). English psychologist. J. Sully

Sumner, Charles (1811–1874). American statesman and orator. Sumner

Sumner, William Graham (1840–). American political economist. W. G. Sumner

Surrey, Earl of (Henry Howard) (died 1547). English poet. Surrey

Surtees Society Publications. Society instituted at Durham, 1834.

Swainson, William (1789–1855?). English naturalist. Swainson

Swan, John. English writer. ("Speculum Mundi," 1635.) Swan

Swedenborg, Emanuel (1688–1772). Swedish naturalist, mathematician, and theologian. Swedenborg

Swift, Jonathan (1667–1745). Irish clergyman, satirist, humorist, and publicist. Swift

Swift, Zephaniah (1759–1823). American jurist. Z. Swift

Swinburne, Algernon Charles (1837–). English poet and essayist. Swinburne

Swinburne, Henry (1752?–1803). English traveler. H. Swinburne

Swinton, William (1833–1892). American historical writer and journalist. W. Swinton

Sydenham Society's Lexicon. ("The New Sydenham Society's Lexicon of Medicine and the Allied Sciences," 1879–). Syd. Soc. Lex.

Sydney. See Sidney.

Sylvester, Joshua (1563–1618). English translator. Sylvester

Symonds, John Addington (1840–1893). English essayist. J. A. Symonds

Tait, Peter Guthrie (1831–1901). Scottish physicist. Tait

Talfourd, Sir Thomas Noon (1795–1854). English lawyer, poet, dramatic writer, and essayist. Talfourd

Tannahill, Robert (1774–1810). Scottish poet. Tannahill

Tate, Nahum (1652–1715). Irish poet and dramatist. Tate

Tate, Ralph. Contemporary English naturalist. R. Tate

Tatham, John (middle of 17th century). English poet and pageant writer. J. Tatham

Tatler, The (1709–1711). English literary periodical. Tatler

Taussig, Frank W. (1859–). American political economist. Taussig

Taylor, Alfred Swaine (1806–1880). English medical writer. A. S. Taylor

Taylor, Bayard (1825–1878). American poet, translator, writer of travels, and novelist. B. Taylor

Taylor, Sir Henry (1800–1886). English dramatist, poet, and author. Sir H. Taylor

Taylor, Isaac (1787–1865). English philosophical and theological writer. Is. Taylor

Taylor, Isaac (1829–1901). English clergyman and philologist. Isaac Taylor

Taylor, Jeremy (1613–1667). Bishop of Down and Connor, Ireland. Jer. Taylor

Taylor, John (1580–1654). English poet ("the Water Poet"). John Taylor

Taylor, John (died 1761). English clergyman and theological writer. J. Taylor

Taylor or Tailor, Robert (lived about 1614). English playwright. R. Taylor

Taylor, William (1765–1836). English translator and author. W. Taylor

Teall, J. J. Harris. British writer on petrography. Teall

Telegraphic Journal and Electrical Review (1872). English weekly scientific periodical. Elect. Rev. (Eng.)

Temple, Sir William (1628–1699). English statesman and author. Sir W. Temple

Ten Brink, Bernhard (1841–1892). German author. ("Early Eng. Lit.," 1883.) Ten Brink

Tennant, William (1765?–1848). Scottish poet and philologist. Tennant

Tennent, Sir James Emerson (1804–1869). Irish politician and miscellaneous author. Sir J. E. Tennent

Tennyson, Lord (Alfred Tennyson) (1809–1892). English poet. Tennyson

Teonge, Henry. Chaplain in British navy. ("Diary," 1675–1679.) Henry Teonge

Terry, Edward (died about 1660). English traveler. E. Terry

Testament of Love (about 1400). Middle English poem, at one time assigned to Chaucer. Testament of Love

Thackeray, Anne Isabella (Mrs. Richmond Ritchie) (1838–). English author. Miss Thackeray

Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811–1863). English novelist and critic. Thackeray

Thaxter, Celia Laighton (1836–1894). American poet. C. Thaxter

Thearle, S. J. P. English writer. ("Naval Architecture," 1878.) Thearle

Therapeutic Gazette (1877–). American medical periodical. Therapeutic Gazette

Thirlwall, Connop (1797–1875). Bishop of St. David's and historian. Bp. Thirlwall

Thiselton-Dyer, T. F. English clergyman and writer on folk lore. Thiselton Dyer

Thom, William (1799–1850). Scottish poet. W. Thom

Thomas, Edith Matilda (1854–). American poet. Edith M. Thomas

Thomas, Joseph (1811–1861). American physician and encyclopedist. ("A Complete Pronouncing Medical Dictionary," 1856.) J. Thomas

Thomas, Theodore Gaillard (1831–). American physician. Thomas

Thompson, Maurice (1844–1901). American miscellaneous writer, author (with William Thompson) of "Archer". M. and W. Thompson

Thompson, Silvanus Phillips (1851–). English physicist. S. P. Thompson

Thompson, William (died about 1766). English poet. W. Thompson

Thoms, William John (1803–1885). English antiquary and writer on folk-lore, first editor of "Notes and Queries." W. J. Thoms

Thomson, Sir Charles Wyville (1830–1882). Scottish scientist. Sir C. W. Thomson

Thomson, James (1700–1748). Scottish poet. Thomson

Thomson, Mowbray (English officer. ("History of Cowpens," 1879.) M. Thomson

Thomson, William (1819–1890). Archbishop of York. Abp. Thomson

Thomson, Sir William (Lord Kelvin) (1824–). Scottish physicist and mathematician. Sir W. Thomson

Thoreau, Henry David (1817–1862). American author. Thoreau

Thoresby, Ralph (1658–1725). English antiquary. Thoresby

Thornton Romances (about 1440).

Thorold, Anthony Wilson (1825–1895). Bishop of Winchester. A. W. Thorold

Thorpe, Benjamin (died 1870). English Anglo-Saxon scholar. Thorpe

Thorpe, Thomas Bangs (1815–1878). American artist and journalist. T. B. Thorpe

Thrale, Hester Lynch. See Piozzi.

Throckmorton, Sir John Courtney (about 1860). English writer. Throckmorton

Thurlow, Lord (Edward Thurlow) (1732–1806). English statesman and jurist. Lord Thurlow

Thurston, Robert Henry (1839–). American engineer. Thurston Thynn or Thynne, Francis (died about 1611). English antiquary. Thynn
Tibbits, Edward T. English physician. ("Medical Fashions," 1884.) E. T. Tibbits
Tickell, Thomas (1686–1740). English poet and translator. Tickell
Ticknor, George (1791–1871). American scholar. ("History of Spanish Literature," 1849.) Ticknor
Tidball, John Caldwell (1825–). American general and military writer. Tidball
Tillotson, John (1630–1694). Archbishop of Canterbury. Tillotson
Times, The (1788–). English daily newspaper. Times (London)
Tindal, Nicholas (1687–1774). English translator. Tindal
Tindal or Tindale, William. See Tyndale
Titcomb, Sara Elizabeth. American writer. S. E. Titcomb
Titcomb, Timothy. See J. G. Holland
Todd, Henry John (died 1845). English clergyman and author, editor of Johnson's Dictionary (1818). Todd Todhunter, Isaac (1820–1884). English mathematician. Todhunter
Tollet, George (died 1779). English critic. Tollet
Tomkis or Tomkins, Thomas (17th century). British dramatist. T. Tomkis
Tomlins, Harold Nuttall (beginning of 19th century). English legal writer. Tomlins Tomlinson, Charles (1808–1897). English physicist. C. Tomlinson
Tooke, John Horne (1736–1812). English philologist and politician. Horne Tooke
Tooke, William (1744–1820). English historian and miscellaneous writer. Tooke Tooker, William (died 1619). English clergyman. Tooker
Topiady, Augustus Montague (1750–1778). English clergyman and hymn writer. Topiady Topsell, Edward (about 1600). English naturalist. Topsell
Torkington, Sir Richard (about 1517). Writer of memoirs. Torkington
Totten, Benjamin J. (1806–1867). American naval officer. ("Naval Text book and Dictionary," 1841, revised ed., 1864.) Totten
Tourgée, Albion Winegar (1838–). American novelist, lawyer, and lecturer. Tourgée
Tournefort, Joseph Pitton de (1656–1708). French botanist. Tournefort
Tourneur, Cyril (beginning of 17th century). English dramatist. Tourneur Towneley Mysteries. A series of miracle plays acted at Wakefield, assigned to the end of the 13th century. Towneley Mysteries Trapp, John (1601–1669). English clergyman and Biblical commentator. J. Trapp
Trapp, Joseph (1679–1747). English poet. Trapp
Treasury of Botany, Maunder's. Edited by John Lindley and Thomas Moore. Treas. of Bot.
Treasury of Natural History, Maunder's. Treas. of Nat. Hist.
Trench, Richard Chenevix (1807–1886). Archbishop of Dublin, miscellaneous writer. Abp. Trench, or Trench
Trevelyan, Sir George Otto (1838–). English politician and author. Trevelyan Trevisa, John de (English clergyman, translator of Higden's "Polychronicon" (1387). Trevisa
Trollope, Anthony (1815–1882). English novelist. Trollope
Trollope, Frances Milton (died 1863). English novelist. Mrs. Trollope
Trollope, Thomas Adolphus (1810–1892). English novelist and historian. T. A. Trollope
Trowbridge, John (1843–). American physicist. J. Trowbridge
Trowbridge, John Townsend (1827–). American novelist, poet, and miscellaneous writer. J. T. Trowbridge
Trumbull, Benjamin (1735–1820). American historical writer. B. Trumbull
Trumbull, Gurdon (1841–). American ornithologist and artist. G. Trumbull Trumbull, Henry Clay (1830–). American religious writer. H. C. Trumbull Trumbull, James Hammond (1821–1897). American philologist and historical writer. J. Hammond Trumbull Trumbull, John (1750–1831). American lawyer and poet. J. Trumbull
Tryon, George Washington (1838–1888). American conchologist. Tryon Tucker, Abraham (1705–1774). English philosophical writer. A. Tucker
Tucker, Josiah (1711–1799). English clergyman and political writer. Tucker
Tuckerman, Bayard (1836–). American critic. B. Tuckerman
Tuckerman, Edward (1817–1886). American botanist. E. Tuckerman
Tuckerman, Henry Theodore (1813–1871). American author. H. T. Tuckerman
Tuer, Andrew W. (1838–1900). British author and publisher. Tuer
Tuke, Sir Samuel (died 1674). English dramatist. Tuke
Tulloch, John (1823–1886). Scottish clergyman and theological writer. Tulloch
Tunstall, Cuthbert (1475–1559). Bishop of Durham. Bp. Tunstall
Tupper, Martin Farquhar (1810–1889). English writer. Tupper
Turberville, George (died about 1590–1594). English poet. Turberville
Turnbull, Richard (about 1600). English clergyman. R. Turnbull
Turner, Edward (1798–1859). English chemist. E. Turner
Turner, Sir James (last half of 17th century). English writer of military essays. Sir J. Turner
Turner, Sharon (1768–1847). English historian. S. Turner
Tusser, Thomas (died about 1580). English agricultural poet. Tusser
Twain, Mark. See Clemens
Twining, Thomas (1734–1804). English translator and writer. Twining
Twisden or Twysden, Sir Roger (1597–1672). English antiquary. Sir R. Twisden
Tyers, Thomas (1730–1798). English miscellaneous writer. Tyers
Tyler, Moses Coit (1835–1900). American critic. M. C. Tyler
Tylor, Edward Burnett (1832–). English archæologist and ethnologist. E. B. Tylor
Tyndale or Tindale, William (died 1536). English Reformer, translator of the Bible. Tyndale
Tyndall, John (1820–1893). British physicist. Tyndall
Tyrwhitt, Thomas (1730–1786). English antiquary (editor of Chaucer). Tyrwhitt
Tytler, Sarah. See Keddie

Udall, John (died 1592). English nonconformist divine. J. Udall
Udall, Nicholas (1506?–1556?). English dramatist and translator. Udall Ueberweg, Friedrich (1826–1871). German philosopher. Ueberweg
Underwood, Lucius Marcus (1853–). American botanist. Underwood
Upton, Emory (1839–1881). American general and military writer. Upton
Ure, Andrew (1778–1857). Scottish physician and chemist. ("Ure's Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines"; 7th ed., by R. Hunt and P. L. Simmonds, 1875.) Ure
Urquhart, Sir Thomas (middle of 17th century). Scottish mathematician, translator of Rabelais. Urquhart
Usher or Ussher, James (1580–1656). Archbishop of Armagh. Abp. Usher

Valenciennes, Achille (1794–1865). French naturalist. Valenciennes
Valentine, Thomas (lived about 1645). English clergyman. Valentine
Vanbrugh, Sir John (1666?–1726). English dramatist and architect. Vanbrugh
Van Dyke, John Charles (1856–). American author. J. C. Van Dyke
Vanicek, Alois. Bohemian philologist. ("Griechisch-Lateinisch Etymologisches Wörterbuch," 1877.) Vanicek
Vasey, George (1822–1893). American botanist. Vasey
Vaughan, Henry (1621–1695). British poet. H. Vaughan
Vaughan, Rice (second half of 17th century). British legal and economic writer. Rice Vaughan Veitch, John (1829–1894). Scottish philosophical writer. Veitch
Venn, John (1834–1883). English logician. J. Venn
Vergil, Polydore (died 1555). Italian-English ecclesiastic and historian. Vergil
Verstegan, Richard (died about 1635). English antiquary. Verstegan
Very, Jones (1813–1880). American poet. Jones Very Vicars, John (1582–1652). English religious writer. Vicars
Vieyra, Antonio. Portuguese lexicographer. (A Portuguese-English dictionary, 1806, 1809, 1828, etc.) Vieyra
Vigfusson, Gudbrand (1827–1889). Icelandic-English philologist. ("An Icelandic-English Dictionary, based on the MS. Collections of the late Richard Cleasby" (1797–1847), 1874.) Vigfusson
Vincent, William (1739–1815). English clergyman and scholar. W. Vincent Vines, Sydney Howard (1849–). English botanist. Vines
Viollet-le-Duc, Eugène Emmanuel (1814–1879). French archæologist and architect. Viollet-le-Duc Vives, John Louis (1492–1540). Spanish theologian. Vives

Wackernagel, Karl Heinrich Wilhelm (1806–1869). German philologist. ("Altdeutsches Handwörterbuch," edited 1878.) Wackernagel
Wahl, William H. (1848–). American technical writer. W. H. Wahl
Waitz, Theodor (1821–1864). German anthropologist and philosopher. Trans. by Collingwood. Waitz
Wake, William (1657–1737). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Wake
Wakefield, Gilbert (1756–1801). English theologian and scholar. Wakefield
Wakefield Plays. Same as Towneley Mysteries
Walker, Anthony (about 1650–1709). English miscellaneous writer. A. Walker
Walker, Francis Amasa (1840–1897). American political economist. F. A. Walker
Walker, John (1732–1807). English lexicographer. ("A Rhyming Dictionary," 1775; "A Critical Pronouncing Dictionary," 1791.) Walker
Wallace, Alfred Russel (1823–). English naturalist. A. R. Wallace
Wallace, Donald Mackenzie (1841–). Scottish traveler and author. D. M. Wallace
Wallace, Horace Binney (1817–1852). American jurist and author. H. B. Wallace
Wallace, Lewis (1827–). American general and novelist. Lew Wallace, or L. Wallace
Wallace, Robert (1697–1771). Scottish clergyman and politician. R. Wallace
Wallace, William (1844–). English philosophical writer. W. Wallace
Wallack, Lester (1820–1888). American actor. Lester Wallack
Waller, Edmund (1606–1687). English poet. Waller Wallis, John (1616–1703). English mathematician and theologian. Wallis
Walpole, Horace (4th Earl of Orford) (1717–1797). English novelist and miscellaneous writer. Walpole
Walpole, Sir Robert (1st Earl of Orford) (1676–1745). English statesman. Sir R. Walpole
Walsall, Samuel (died in 1615). English clergyman. Walsall
Walsh, John Henry (pseudonym "Stonehenge") (1810–1868). English writer on sporting and miscellaneous subjects. J. H. Walsh, or Stonehenge
Walsh, Robert (1784–1859). English clergyman and writer of travels. Rob. Walsh Walsh, William (1663–1708?). English poet. Walsh
Walton, Izaak (1593–1683). English miscellaneous writer. ("Complete Angler," 1653.) I. Walton
Wandesforde, Christopher (Viscount Castlecomer) (1592–1640). English politician. Wandesforde
Warburton, Eliot Bartholomew George (1810–1852). Irish author. Eliot Warburton
Warburton, William (1698–1779). Bishop of Gloucester. Warburton, or Bp. Warburton
Ward, Adolphus William (1837–). English historical writer. A. W. Ward
Ward, Mrs E. S. See Phelps
Ward, Mrs. Humphry (Mary Augusta Arnold) (1851–). English novelist. Mrs. Humphry Ward
Ward, James. (Contemporary) English philosophical writer. J. Ward
Ward, John (1679?–1758). English miscellaneous writer. John Ward
Ward, Lester Frank (1841–). American botanist and geologist. L. F. Ward
Ward, Nathaniel (died 1652). English-American clergyman. N. Ward
Ward, Robert Plumer (1765–1846). English politician and miscellaneous writer. R. Ward
Ward, Samuel (1577–1640). English clergyman. S. Ward
Ward, Seth (1617?–1689). Bishop of Salisbury. Bp. Ward
Ward, Thomas (1652–1708). English Roman Catholic controversialist. T. Ward
Ward, W. (beginning of 18th century). British biographer. W. Ward
Wardrop, James (died 1869). Scottish surgeon and surgical writer. Wardrop
Ware, William (1797–1852). American clergyman and author. W. Ware
Ware, William Robert (1832–). American architect. W. R. Ware
Warner, Charles Dudley (1829–1900). American essayist and editor. C. D. Warner
Warner, William (died 1609). English poet. Warner
Warren, Henry White (1831–). American bishop and sacramentalist writer. H. W. Warren
Warren, Samuel (1807–1877). English novelist and legal writer. S. Warren
Warton, Joseph (1722–1800). English poet and critic. J. Warton

[illegible], Thomas (1728–1798). English poet and critic. T. Warton

[illegible], George (1732–1799). First President of the United States. Washington

[illegible], Joseph (end of 17th century). English legal writer. J. Washington

[illegible], Edward (1619–1670). English clergyman and antiquary. Waterhouse

[illegible], Samuel (1695–1740). English theologian. Waterland

[illegible], Robert (1838–). American educator. R. Watson

[illegible], Robert (1730–1781). Scottish historical writer. R. Watson

[illegible], Thomas (1804–1892). American botanist. S. Watson

[illegible], Richard (died 1842). Bishop (Roman Catholic) of Lincoln. Bp. Watson

[illegible], Sir Thomas (1792–1882). English physician. Sir T. Watson

[illegible], William, English author. ("Ancient Call to Repentance," 1691.) W. Watson

[illegible], James (1736–1819). Scottish inventor and physicist. J. Watt

[illegible], Henry (1698–1884). English classical and editor. ("A Dictionary of Chemistry," 1868, etc.) Watts [or] Watts, or H. Watts

[illegible], Isaac (1674–1748). English clergyman, theologian, and hymn-writer. Watts

[illegible], Edwin (1818–1869). English poet. Waugh

[illegible], Josiah (died 1862). English publisher and writer. ("Dictionary of Terms in Architecture, etc.," 1840, 4th ed., edited by Robert Hunt, 1873.) Weale

[illegible], Edward (about 1590). English traveler. E. Webbe

[illegible], William (end of 16th century). English critic and poet. W. Webbe

[illegible], Henry William (1783–1818). English writer (editor of "Metrical Romances," 1810). Weber

Webster, Daniel (1782–1852). American statesman and orator. D. Webster

Webster, John (died about 1654). English dramatist. Webster

Webster, Noah (1758–1843). American lexicographer and author. ("An American Dictionary of the English Language," 1828, ed. Goodrich, 1841, ed. Porter, 1864; "Webster's International Dictionary of the English Language," ed. Porter, 1890.) N. Webster

Wedgwood, Hensleigh (1803–1891). English philologist. ("A Dictionary of English Etymology," 3d ed., 1878; "Contested Etymologies," 1855.) Wedgwood

Weed, Thurlow (1797–1882). American journalist and politician. T. Weed

Weeden, William Babcock (1834–). American author. W. B. Weeden

Weever, John (died 1632). English antiquary. Weever

Weigand, Friedrich Ludwig Karl (1867–1930). German philologist. ("Deutsches Wörterbuch," 4th ed., 1881.) Weigand

Weir, Harrison William (1824–). English artist and author. Harrison Weir

Wells, David Ames (1828–1898). American economist. D. A. Wells

Wells, J. Soelberg (1824–1901). English ophthalmologist. J. S. Wells

Welsh, Alfred Hix (1850–). American educator and author. Welsh

West, Gilbert (died 1756). English poet and religious writer. West

Westfield, Thomas (died 1644). Bishop of Bristol. Bp. Westfield

Westminster Assembly's Shorter Catechism. Shorter Catechism

Westminster Confession of Faith (1646). Westminster Confession of Faith

Westminster Review (1824–). English quarterly literary review. Westminster Rev.

Westwood, John Obadiah (1805–1893). English entomologist. Westwood

Whalley, Peter (1722–1791). English clergyman and critic. Whalley

Wharton, Francis (1820–1889). American author. F. Wharton

Wharton, Henry (1664–1695). English antiquary. H. Wharton

Wharton, J. J. S. English legal writer. ("Law Lexicon," 1st ed., 1848; 13th ed., 1883.) J. J. S. Wharton

Whately, Richard (1787–1863). Archbishop of Dublin. R. Whately

Whately, William (1583–1639). English Puritan divine. W. Whately

Wheatly or Wheatley, Charles (1686–1742). English clergyman. ("Illustration of Book of Common Prayer.") C. Wheatly

Wheatstone, Sir Charles (1802–1875). English physicist. Sir C. Wheatstone

Wheeler, J. Talboys (1824–1897). English scholar and historian. J. T. Wheeler

Wheler or Wheeler, Sir George (1650–1723). English antiquary. Sir G. Wheler

Whetstone, George (end of 16th century). English soldier and poet. Whetstone

Whewell, William (1794–1866). English scientific and philosophical writer. W. Whewell

Whichcote, Benjamin (1610–1683). English clergyman and moral writer. B. Whichcote

Whipple, Edwin Percy (1819–1886). American critic. E. P. Whipple

Whiston, William (1667–1752). English theologian and mathematical writer and translator. W. Whiston

Whitaker, Alexander. American colonist and author. ("Good News from Virginia," 1613.) A. Whitaker

Whitaker, John (died 1808). English clergyman and historical writer. J. Whitaker

Whitaker, Tobias. English physician. ("Blood of the Grape.") T. Whitaker

Whitby, Daniel (1638–1726). English theologian. Whitby

White, Andrew Dickson (1832–). American historical writer and diplomatist. A. D. White

White, Gilbert (1720–1793). English naturalist. ("Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne.") Gilbert White

White, John (1590–1645). English political writer. J. or R. White

White, Richard Grant (1821–1885). American author. R. G. White

Whitehead, Paul (1710–1774). English poet and satirist. P. Whitehead

Whitehead, William (1715–1785). English poet and dramatist. W. Whitehead

Whitelock, Whitelocke, or Whitlock, Bulstrode (1605–1675). English statesman and lawyer. Whitelock or Whitlock

Whitgift, John (1530–1604). Archbishop of Canterbury. Abp. Whitgift

Whiting, Nicholas. English writer. ("History of Alexander and Roxana," 1677.) N. Whiting

Whitlock, Richard. English writer. Zoötomia, 1654.) R. Whitlock

Whitman, Sarah Helen (1803–1878). American poet. S. H. Whitman

Whitman, Walt (1819–1892). American poet. Walt Whitman

Whitney, Adeline Dutton Train (1824–). American novelist and poet. Mrs. Whitney

Whitney, Josiah Dwight (1819–1896). American geologist. J. D. Whitney

Whitney, William Dwight (1827–1894). American philologist. Whitney

Whittier, John Greenleaf (1807–1892). American poet. Whittier

Wiclif, John. See Wyclif.

Wilbur, Charles Edwin (1833–1900). American Lutheran writer. C. E. Wilbur

Wilder, Alexander (1823–). American physician and journalist. A. Wilder

Wilder, Burt Green (1841–). American naturalist. B. G. Wilder

Wilhelm, Thomas. American military officer. ("A Military Dictionary and Gazetteer," 1881.) Wilhelm

Wilkes, John (1727–1797). English politician. Wilkes

Wilkins, John (1614–1672). Bishop of Chester. Bp. Wilkins

Wilkinson, James John Garth (1812–1899). English author. J. J. G. Wilkinson

Wilkinson, Sir John Gardner (1797–1875). English Egyptologist. Sir J. G. Wilkinson

Willet, Andrew (1562–1621). English clergyman and theological writer. Willet

William of Malmesbury (died 1142?). English historian. William of Malmesbury

Williams, Sir Charles Hanbury (1708–1759). English diplomatist and author. Sir C. H. Williams

Williams, Helen Maria (1762–1827). English poet and author. H. M. Williams

Williams, John (1582–1650). Archbishop of York. Abp. Williams

Williams, Sir Monier Monier- (1819–1899). English orientalist. M. Williams

Williams, Sir Roger (died 1595?). English military writer. Sir R. Williams

Williams, Roger (1606?–1683?). American colonist. Roger Williams

Williams, Samuel (1743–1815). American clergyman and author. S. Williams

Williams, Samuel Wells (1812–1884). American missionary. S. Wells Williams

Williamson, Thomas (beginning of 19th century). Anglo-Indian writer on field sports. T. Williamson

Willis, Nathaniel Parker (1806–1867). American poet and author. N. P. Willis

Willmott, Robert Aris (1809–1880). English writer on literature. Willmott

Willughby, Francis (1635–1672). English naturalist. Willughby

Wilson, Arthur (died about 1652). English historical writer. A. Wilson

Wilson, Daniel (1778–1858). Bishop of Calcutta. Bp. Wilson

Wilson, Sir Daniel (1816–1892). Scottish Canadian archæologist. Sir D. Wilson

Wilson, George (1818–1859). Scottish chemist and physiologist. G. Wilson

Wilson, Horace Hayman (1786–1860). English Orientalist. ("Glossary of Judicial and Revenue Terms ... of British India," 1855.) H. Wilson

Wilson, John (pseudonym "Christopher North") (1785–1854). Scottish critic and poet. Prof. Wilson or J. Wilson

Wilson, John (end of 17th century). English dramatic writer. John Wilson

Wilson, John Leighton (1809–1886). American missionary. J. L. Wilson

Wilson, Robert (last half of 16th century). English dramatist. R. Wilson

Wilson, Sir Thomas (died 1581). English writer on logic and rhetoric. Sir T. Wilson

Wilson, Woodrow (1856–). American historical writer. W. Wilson

Winchell, Alexander (1824–1891). American geologist. Winchell

Winkworth, Catherine (1827–1878). English translator. C. Winkworth

Winslow, Edward (1595–1655). American colonial governor and author. Winslow

Winslow, Forbes (1810–1874). English physician and medical writer. Forbes Winslow

Winter, William (1836–). American critic and poet. W. Winter

Winthrop, John (1588–1649). American colonial governor and historian. Winthrop

Winthrop, John (1714–1779). American physicist. J. Winthrop

Winthrop, Theodore (1828–1861). American novelist. T. Winthrop

Winwood, Sir Ralph (1563?–1617). English diplomatist. Sir R. Winwood

Wirt, William (1772–1834). American lawyer. Wirt

Wise, John (1652–1725). American clergyman and controversialist. J. Wise

Wiseman, Nicholas (1802–1865). English cardinal. Card. Wiseman

Wiseman, Richard (last half of 17th century). English surgeon. Wiseman

Wiser, D. F. (1805–1858). Swiss mineralogist. D. F. Wiser

Withal or Withals, John (middle of 16th century). English lexicographer. ("A Shorte Dictionarie in Latin and English," printed without date by Wynkyn de Worde; later editions 1554, 1599, etc.) Withals

Wither, George (1588–1667). English poet. Wither

Wits' Recreations (1654). Collection of poems. Wits Recreations

Wodhul or Wodhull, Michael (1740–1816). English poet. Wodhull

Wodrophe, John. English grammarian. ("True Marrow of the French Tongue," 1624.) Wodrophe

Wodrow, Robert (1679–1734). Scottish ecclesiastical historian. Wodrow

Wolcot or Wolcott, John (pseudonym "Peter Pindar") (1738–1819). English satirist. Wolcot

Wolcott, Roger (1679–1767). American colonial governor and author. Roger Wolcott

Wolfe, Charles (1791–1823). Irish poet. Wolfe

Wollaston, T. Vernon (1822–1878). British naturalist. Wollaston

Wollaston, William (1659–1724). English theological writer. W. Wollaston

Wolle, Francis (1815–1887). American botanist. Wolle

Wolsey, Thomas (1471?–1530). English cardinal and statesman. Wolsey

Wood, Alphonso (1810–1881). American botanist. A. Wood

Wood or à Wood, Anthony (1632–1695). English antiquary. Wood, or A. Wood

Wood, Mrs. Henry (1814–1887). English novelist. Mrs. H. Wood

Wood, Horatio C. (1841–). American physician and naturalist. H. C. Wood

Wood, John George (1827–1889). English clergyman and naturalist. J. G. Wood

Wood, Shakespeare ("Words to Accent and Modify," N. ed., 1875.) Shakespeare Wood

Wood, William (died 1731). New England colonial writer. W. Wood

Woodall, John (first part 17th century). English surgeon. Woodall

Woodward, Charles J. (1848–). English physicist. C. J. Woodward

Woodward, John (1665–1728). English naturalist. Woodward

Woodward, Samuel P. (1821–1865). American geologist and archæologist. S. P. Woodward

Woodworth, Samuel (1785–1842). American poet. S. Woodworth

Woolman, John (1720–1772). American philanthropist and Friends' minister. John Woolman

Woolsey, Theodore Dwight (1801–1889). American writer on science, moral law and classical subjects. Woolsey

Woolson, Constance Fenimore (1848–1894). American novelist. C. F. Woolson

Woolton, John (died 1594). Bishop of Exeter. Bp. Woolton

Worcester, Joseph Emerson (1784–1865). American lexicographer. ("Dictionary of the English Language," 1859; with supplement, 1881.) Worcester

Worcester, Marquis of (Edward Somerset) (1601?–1667). English scientist. Marquis of Worcester

Wordsworth, Charles (1806–1892). Bishop of St. Andrews, Scotland. By. Wordsworth
Wordsworth, Christopher (1807–1885). Bishop of Lincoln. By. Chr. Wordsworth
Wordsworth, William (1770–1850). English poet. Wordsworth
Workshop Receipts (1893–1895). By E. Spon, R. Haldane, and C. G. W. Lock. Workshop Receipts
Worthington, John (1618–1671). English theologian. Worthington
Wotton, Sir Henry (1568–1639). English poet. ("Reliquiæ Wottonianæ," a collection of lives, letters, and poems, appeared in 1651.) Sir H. Wotton Wotton, Henry. English clergyman (wrote about 1672). H. Wotton
Wotton, William (1666–1726). English scholar. W. Wotton
Woty, William. English poet (wrote 1761–1774). Woty
Wrangham, Francis (1769–1842). English scholar and poet Wrangham
Wren, Matthew (1585–1667). Bishop of Ely. By. Wren
Wright, Thomas. English author. ("Passions of the Mind," 1601; 2d ed., 1604.) T. Wright
Wright, Thomas (1810–1877). English antiquary and lexicographer. ("A Dictionary of Obsolete and Provincial English," 1857; "Anglo-Saxon and Old English Vocabularies," 1857–73; 2d ed. by Wülcker, 1884.) Wright
Wright, William Aldis (1831–). English scholar and editor. W. A. Wright
Wyatt, Sir Thomas (1503–1542). English poet and diplomatist. Wyatt Wyche, Sir Peter. English translator (wrote 1664–1669). Sir P. Wyche
Wycherley, William (1640?–1715). English dramatist Wycherley
Wyclif or Wickliffe, John (died 1384). English Reformer, translator of the Bible. Wyclif Wyntoun, Wynton, or Winton, Andrew of (last part of 14th and first of 15th century). Scottish poet Wyntoun Yarrell, William (1784–1856). English naturalist.

Yates, Edmund Hodgson (1831–1894). English [illegible]
Yelverton, Sir Henry (1566–1630). English judge.
Yonge, Charles Duke (1812–1891). English classical [illegible] writer.
Yonge, Charlotte Mary (1823–1901). English novelist and [illegible]
York Plays. A series of mystery-plays performed in the 14th, 15th, [illegible] centuries, Oxford ed., 1885.
Youatt, William (1777–1847). English veterinary surgeon.
Youmans, Edward Livingston (1821–1887). American scientist.
Young, Arthur (died 1759). English clergyman.
Young, Arthur (1741–1820). English traveler and agricultural [illegible]
Young, Arthur. English naval official. ("Nautical Dictionary," [illegible] Young, Charles Augustus (1834–). American astronomer.
Young, Sir Charles George (1705–1809). English writer on heraldry.
Young, Edward (1684?–1765). English poet. ("Night Thoughts," 1742–[illegible]
Young, John (1835–). Scottish naturalist.
Yule, Sir Henry (1820–1889). British Orientalist.
Yule and Burnell (Sir Henry Yule; Arthur Coke Burnell). ("A Glossary of Anglo-Indian Colloquial Words and Phrases," 1886.) Yule

Zadkiel. See Morrison.
Zell's Popular Cyclopædia (1871). Edited by L. De Colange.
Ziegler, Ernst (1849–). Swiss anatomist.
Ziemssen's Cyclopædia of Medicine.

In the foregoing list of authorities those titles have been generally omitted which are cited in the Dictionary in full or in a self-explanatory fo cially the titles of daily newspapers, of numerous scientific periodicals, and of "Proceedings" and "Transactions" of learned societi

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE TO PREFACE.

DURING the publication of the dictionary but one change has occurred in the staff of specialis[illegible] tioned in the preface issued with the first part. While the proofs of "T" were coming from the press, Dr. James K. Thacher, who had labored upon the dictionary from its beginning, died, leaving his work upon the last letters of the alphabet unfinished. The task of completing it was taken up by Dr. Thomas L. Stedman, and has been carried through by him.

The dictionary has also received additional aid from many others not mentioned in the preface. Help has thus been given most notably by Prof. Charles A. Young, in many important definitions (in particular those of the words sun, solar, telescope, and lens) and in continuous criticism of the final proofs; by Prof. Thomas Gray, of Rose Polytechnic Institute, in electrical definitions; by Mr. George E. Curtis, of the Smithsonian Institution, and Prof. Cleveland Abbe, in definitions of meteorological terms; by Mr. Edward S. Burgess, Mr. E. S. Steele of the National Museum, Mr. F. V. Coville of the United States Department of Agriculture, Prof. N. L. Britton of Columbia College, and the late Dr. J. I. Northrop, also of Columbia, in botany; by Mr. Leicester Allen, in definitions of mechanical terms; by Prof. S. W. Williston, of the University of Kansas, in medicine and physiology; by Dr. Theobald Smith, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in veterinary pathology and surgery; by Lieut. Arthur P. Nazro, in naval and nautical definitions; by Capt. Joseph W. Collins, of the United States Fish Commission, in material relating to fishing and the fisheries; by Prof. William H. Brewer, of Yale University, in many definitions, particularly those of the gaits of horses; by Mr. A. D. Risteen, in certain mathematical definitions; by Rev. George T. Packard, in the preliminary arrangement of certain literary material; by Mr. Austin Dobson, in the definitions of the names of various forms of verse; by Prof. Douglas Sladen, in the collection of Australian provincialisms and colloquialisms; and in various special matters by Dr. Edward Eggleston, Mr. George Kennan, Mr. George W. Cable, Mr. G. W. Pettes, and many others.

The staff of editorial assistants has been enlarged by the addition of Miss Katharine G. Brewster, and of Rev. George M'Arthur, to whom special recognition is due for his efficient revision of the final proofs.

October 1st, 1891